

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. I. ARTICLES AND SERVICE THEREUNDER.

1. Where a party agreeing to be bound to a solicitor in Ireland paid to him the amount of the stamp duty, Queen's Inn fees, etc., and shortly afterwards paid his apprentice fee, and made the usual affidavit before one of the Masters, under the impression that everything necessary to constitute him an apprentice was performed; he served five years. The solicitor did not pay the stamp duty, or prepare any indenture of apprenticeship until after the five years had elapsed. It was held, he had made a case to be admitted a solicitor of the Court of Chancery in Ireland. In granting the application, the Court could not allow the conduct of its officer to pass unnoticed, but required him to show cause why he should not be struck off the rolls. Re Power, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 175.

2. Application by a person who kept five terms as a law student, served two terms in a solicitor's office before the execution of his indentures, and eighteen after, to be admitted an attorney, refused. Re Tierney, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 178.

3. An articled clerk had neglected to file the necessary affidavit within six months; but the omission "had arisen from inadvertence only":—Held, that this was not a sufficient ground for relieving him from the consequences under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 9. Re Benson, 10 Beav. 435.

4. Where articles were, by a mere slip, not filed within six months, the Court relieved the clerk from the effect of the error. Re Follett, 30 Beav. 629.

5. Where an apprentice to an attorney had not attended any of the courts in Dublin any term in the fifth year of his apprenticeship; but after the fifth year, his master being then dead, attended the courts for two terms without having any master, his application for admission refused. Semble, indentures cannot be assigned after five years from the date thereof. Semble, the sickness and accidents provided for in 13 & 14 Geo. 3, c. 23, refer to the apprentice and not to the master. The terms for attendance must be in the three years next preceding the application for admission. Exp. Roberts, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 507.

6. The Court has jurisdiction, in a proper case, to vacate the enrolment of the indentures of apprenticeship of an attorney. Neither the humbleness of the origin of the applicant, nor his having filled the office of a process server of civil bill process, nor his having been dismissed from that office for having violated a rule of the Assistant Barrister's Court, under the belief that it did not apply to him, nor his having on a particular occasion acted as a bailiff in the execution of a fi. fa., will disqualify him from becoming apprentice to an attorney, his character and conduct being in other respects unimpeached. Re McColgan, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 207.

The Court will not vacate the enrolment of an indenture of apprenticeship to an attorney, on the ground that the benchers were deceived, and ought not to have admitted the party to become an apprentice. S. C. 5 Ir. Eq. R. 481.

7. The Court will not exercise its discretion in relaxing the rule prescribed by the statute concerning the period of an attorney's apprenticeship, when the apprentice had been incapacitated by illness from serving five of the twenty terms, though it was sworn that he had attended his master's office for three years before he was bound, and his master had consented to his being now sworn. Re Dease, 1 L. & T. 654.

Semble. The Court will not take notice, in such cases, of the applicant's family affairs, except where a father has been an attorney and there is danger of the business of the office being lost to the family. Ib.

8. As a general rule, from which there will be no deviation, unless under peculiar circumstances, the Court in computing the period of apprenticeship to an attorney, will not allow credit for time elapsed before the payment of the stamp duty upon the indentures. Exp. Sterne, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 378.

1. An apprentice to an attorney who, during the period of his apprenticeship, filled the office of a salaried clerk in the office of one of the six clerks of the Court of Chancery:—Held, notwithstanding, to be entitled to be admitted a solicitor of the Court. Re Lyons, 1 Dr. & Wal. 327; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 267.

2. No person can be admitted to be an attorney who has not been bound. A person was admitted to be an attorney of this court, who having been bound for five years had only served a few days; it appearing that he was fully qualified, and that inconvenience would otherwise result to the clients of his brother, who had been an attorney, and had recently died. Re Symes, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 339.

3. Where an apprentice to an attorney upon the death of his master entered the office of another attorney for the purpose of completing his apprenticeship, but before his indentures were assigned, a term elapsed; he was, under the circumstances, allowed credit for the term which had so elapsed before the assignment of the indentures, and having served twenty clear terms, inclusive of that term, was admitted an attorney of this court. Re O'Brien, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 480.

4. In computing the period of apprenticeship to an attorney, the Court reckons by terms. Therefore a party who has served for twenty terms, is entitled to be admitted an attorney. Re Powell, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 328.

5. A person who was a student of college at the time he was bound apprentice to an attorney for five years, subsequently graduated, and served for three years after he had taken his degree, but without being bound de novo:—Held, that under the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 48, he might (with his master's consent) be admitted an attorney, although the original term of his apprenticeship had not been completed. Re Collum, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 278.

6. The Court will not swear in an apprentice who had been in attorney's office for five years, where for part of the time he had been upon trial, and was not articulated until afterwards. Re Kirwan, Hay. & J. 726.

7. When a party was only regularly bound in Hilary Term 1830, the Court, under the circumstances, admitted him in the following Michaelmas Term. Exp. Fitzgibbon, Hay. 139. n.

8. A person cannot be admitted as an attorney, unless notice of application have been posted before the essoign day of the term in which he seeks to be admitted. Exp. Thompson, Hay. 206.

9. Nor where the applicant's notice was posted before Trinity Term, and he was prevented by illness from attending until Michaelmas Term, for which term he had not posted any notice. Exp. Black, Hay. 206. n.

10. The Court has no discretion to dispense with the provisions respecting the period of a solicitor's apprenticeship, except, perhaps, to cases of fatality, and therefore under the stat. 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 48, s. 4, refused to admit a graduate on a three years' apprenticeship, commenced more than four years after his decree. Anon., 12 Ir. Eq. R. 237.

11. Under the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 8, it is the duty of an attorney to enrol the articles of his articulated clerk, and where he had omitted to do so the Court dismissed a claim to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the premium. Dufaur v. Sigel, 4 De G. M. & G. 520; 22 L. J., Ch., 678.

12. When a clerk who had articulated himself for three years was absent by reason of illness for sixteen months, and afterwards served thirteen months:—Held, that he could not be examined, and must enter into fresh articles for six months. Exp. Digby, 45 L. J., Ch., 692.

13. Service by a clerk after the expiration of the five years of his articles is not (without any further contract in writing) such service under the contract made by the articles as is required by 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 3, and such contract cannot be extended by parol. Exp. Adams, 25 W. R. 54.

An articulated clerk must not only be bound for five years, and serve five years, but the service itself must be under written articles. S. C. 46 L. J., Ch., 42; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 39; 35 L. T., N. S., 751.

A clerk was articulated in September 1870 for five years, and served up to October 1873, when he was assigned to another solicitor for fifteen months. At the expiration of that period he returned to his first master, and served him under the original articles until the expiration of the five years in September 1875. It having been decided that the fifteen months could not be counted, the clerk continued to serve his first master under a parol contract of service until November 1876, when he applied to be admitted to the final examination:—Held, that he might be examined, but that he must enter into fresh articles for a period of fifteen months before he could be admitted. Id.

14. A clerk, having a connection of his own, derived from a former master, articulated himself to a solicitor, and managed the business introduced by him under an arrangement with the solicitor that he should draw 150*l.* a year out of the profits, and the rest be retained to form the solicitor's share of the capital of a partnership which was to be entered into between them upon the clerk's becoming admitted. On an application by the clerk to be admitted to the final examination:—Held, that he had so far complied with the requirements of the statute as to service, as to be entitled to present himself for examination. Exp. Joyce, 46 L. J., Ch., 295; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 596; 25 W. R. 340.

15. A clerk was articulated to his father in April 1872, for the term of five years, and attended the office regularly for that time, but from Michaelmas 1875, to Michaelmas 1876, his father was absent from ill-health, and business was practically suspended, although the office remained open:—Held, that he might be allowed to go in for his final examination in April 1877, but must enter into fresh articles for a year and serve under them before he could be admitted. Exp. Fereday, 46 L. J., Ch., 504.

16. W. was articulated in 1861 to R., a solicitor, for five years, but left him after two years' service, the articles with R.'s consent being considered as cancelled. In 1864 he was re-articled to R. for the remaining three years, and under these new articles he continued in his service for two years, when he left on account of ill-health and under medical advice. In 1869 he was assigned and re-articled by R. to, and served with, L. for the remaining one year. An application by him that the several periods of service under the three articles might be reckoned as constituting the full five years' service, was granted, it being held that both the first and second articles had been cancelled by mutual consent, within s. 13 of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73. Exp. Williamson, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 581; 35 L. T., N. S., 695; 46 L. J., Ch., 624.

II. PREMIUM.

1. Where a solicitor, to whom a clerk is articled, dies shortly before the expiration of the second year of the articles, a bill will lie, on behalf of the clerk, against the executors of the solicitor, for a return of a proportionate part of the premium of the clerkship. Hirst v. Tibson, 16 Sim. 620; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 308; 13 Jur. 596. Affirmed 2 Macn. & G. 184; 2 H. & Tw. 359; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 441; 14 Jur. 559.

2. A., an attorney, being confined of an illness whereof he died, takes B. as his clerk, and receives with him 120*l.*, and by articles agrees with the father of B. to return 60*l.* of the money if A. died within the year; A. died within three weeks. A.'s executor decreed to pay back 100*l.* Newton v. Rowse, 1 Vern. 460.

3. A clerk was articled to a solicitor at a premium of 150*l.*, and the articles contained a receipt for and a release from the money. Contemporaneously the clerk gave an IOU for, and agreed to execute a mortgage of certain property for securing the money. The clerk voluntarily left the master seven months after the date of the articles. The master brought an action on the IOU, to which the clerk pleaded never indebted, payment, and release, and the master abandoned the action. He then filed his claim to enforce the mortgage security and foreclosure. One of the Vice-Chancellors dismissed the claim, on the ground that the Court would not set aside the plaintiff's own legal bar, but without costs, the defendant undertaking to pay 21*l.* as the proportion of the premium for the time his services lasted. The plaintiff appealed, but it appearing that he had not, in compliance with the provisions of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, made or caused to be made the necessary affidavit to enable the defendant to enrol the articles, the Court dismissed the appeal without costs, without (under the authority of the 62nd section of the stat. 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86) sending the parties to law; and it appearing upon the affidavits of the defendant that there was matter impertinent to the issue between the parties, the Court ordered the defendant (under the authority of the 17th section of the same statute, and the 30th Order of the 7th August 1852) to pay the plaintiff 20*l.* for such impertinent matter, and refused to relieve him from his undertaking to pay the 21*l.* Dufaur v. Sigel, 22 L. J., Ch., 678; 4 De G. M. & G. 20.

4. A ward was articled to a solicitor, under the direction of the Court, and a premium of 300 guineas was paid. Subsequently the ward desired to change his profession, and proposals were accordingly, with that object, brought before the judge in chambers. The solicitor was served with notice of the proceedings and attended. An order was made, by which the articles were ordered to be cancelled, and 100*l.*, part of the premium, directed to be returned by the solicitor. There was no allegation of misconduct on the part of the solicitor:—Held, that the Court had no power to direct the return of any part of the premium. Craven v. Stubbins, 10 Jur., N. S., 1189; 13 W. R. 208; 11 L. T., N. S., 402; 34 L. J., Ch., 126.

5. A premium paid on the occasion of a son being articled to an attorney and solicitor is an advance to the son, within the meaning of the Statute of Distributions. Boyd v. Boyd, 4 L. R., Eq., 305; 36 L. J., Ch., 877.

See also APPRENTICE.

III. PRACTISING IN COMPETITION WITH MASTER.

6. A., on being articled to B., covenanted not to be concerned for any of B.'s clients, and to forfeit 100*l.* for any such breach. A., after being admitted, acted in contravention of this covenant. He was restrained by injunction. Nicholls v. Stretton, 7 Beav. 42. And see S. C. 10 Q. B. 346.

7. A clerk to solicitor, commencing practice for himself, not to be restrained from acting as solicitor for parties against whom his master was employed, upon general allegations of his having in his former service acquired information likely to be prejudicial to the clients of his master. Brieheno v. Thorp, Jac. 300.

8. Articles under which A. had served his clerkship to an attorney, contained a proviso that A. should not practise within a certain district; and also a covenant on the part of his father, that A. should, within a month after he came of age, execute a bond in a specified penalty, to secure his fulfilment of the proviso. A., who was an infant at the time of the execution of the articles, served under them for three years after he attained his full age, but was never called on to execute any bonds; and with a knowledge of the purport of the articles completed his clerkship, and afterwards began to practise as an attorney within the district from which the articles purported to exclude him. A motion for an injunction to restrain him from practising within the district was refused with costs. Capes v. Hutton, 2 Russ. 357.

9. P., a solicitor, having accepted the situation of clerk to E., a solicitor practising at N., entered into a bond with him, which, after reciting that P. had been appointed agent to O., was conditioned to be void if P. should abstain from practising as a solicitor at N., or within thirty miles thereof, without the consent of E., and should not act as O.'s legal adviser, except as E.'s clerk, and should not accept or undertake any other agency or appointment (except such as he then held) without E.'s consent; and, in case the engagement with him should be put an end to or determined, should not continue to act as agent to O. E. afterwards gave P. three months' notice to leave his office, and thus put an end to his engagement. At the expiration of that time P. resigned his appointment as agent to O., but he subsequently resumed it, and he obtained the office of clerk to the magistrates, and other offices. On motion on behalf of E., the Court granted an injunction to restrain P. from acting as agent to O., as clerk to the magistrates, and from otherwise violating the stipulations of the bond. Edmonds v. Pless, 6 Jur., N. S., 1091.

1. A solicitor and his clerk executed a bond, conditioned that if the clerk should carry on the business of a solicitor within the prescribed distance, then, provided he paid 1,000*l.* as liquidated damages, the bond should be void. The clerk commenced business as a solicitor within the prohibited limit:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to an injunction. Howard v. Woodward, 10 Jur., N. S., 1123; 34 L. J., Ch., 47; 13 W. R. 132; 11 L. T., N. S., 414; 5 N. R. 8.

2. A solicitor's clerk, employed at a yearly salary, and who was allowed at the same time to keep his name up at a separate house in the same town as his employer and to practise for himself, having had disputes with his employer, suddenly left him without notice, and set up entirely for himself at the house he had been in the habit of using as his office. A motion to restrain him from so practising was, under the circumstances, refused. Shepherd v. Neve, 22 W. R. 725.

3. The defendant bound himself to a London solicitor by articles for a term, and covenanted that he would not at the expiration of the term, or at any time thereafter, either solely, or jointly with, or as agent for, any other person or persons, directly or indirectly practise the business of an attorney or solicitor within the city of London, or the counties of Middlesex or Essex, nor directly or indirectly act as such attorney or solicitor for any client or clients of the plaintiff, or any partner or partners of the plaintiff, or for any person or persons who should have been a client or clients of the plaintiff, or any partner or partners of the plaintiff, at any time during the term. At the expiration of the term the defendant having commenced business on his own account in Southwark:—Held, that the restriction was not unreasonable, and that the defendant's acting for a petitioner in the London Court of Bankruptcy was a breach of the covenant. May v. O'Neill, 44 L. J., Ch., 660.

IV. OTHER CASES.

4. An articled clerk to an attorney and solicitor is not an apprentice within the meaning of the 49th section of the Bankrupt Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. Esq. Prideaux, Re Bush, 3 Myl. & C. 327. Reversing 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 202; 2 Jur. 366. S. P. Esq. Russell, Re Bush, 3 Mont. & A. 67; 2 Dea. 158; 6 L. J., N. S., Bky., 34.

5. It is the duty of an attorney to enrol the articles of his clerk, and where he had omitted to do so the Court dismissed a claim to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the premium. Dufaur v. Sigel, 4 De G. M. & G. 20; 22 L. J., Ch., 678.

- VII. Law Stationer acting as a Solicitor, 6379.

I. IN GENERAL.

6. A party, under the special circumstances, admitted an attorney nunc pro tunc. Esq. Tanner, 3 Dea. & Ch. 10.

7. The admission of a solicitor, under peculiar circumstances, ordered to be inrolled nunc pro tunc. Anon., 3 Dea. & Ch. 417.

8. An attorney, unable from bodily infirmity to attend to be sworn in, was allowed to be admitted in the Court of Review on an affidavit sworn before a Master in Chancery. Esq. Swain, 1 Dea. & Ch. 15.

9. An attorney may practise, though a bankrupt. Esq. Brown, 2 Ves. J. 68.

10. Notice of motion given by one not allowed to act as a solicitor, not good. Esq. Grosvenor, 3 P. W. 104.

11. Where a father, who never was duly qualified pursuant to the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, after carrying on for some years the business of a proctor conjointly with his son, who was duly qualified, retired, and his son granted him an annuity, payable out of the capital or profits of the business, in consideration of his retiring, and giving up his share in the profits:—Held, that it was not illegal to grant the annuity in consideration of the father ceasing to do that which was illegal; and that the fact that the annuity was to be paid out of the profits of the business did not make the transaction illegal, within the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 8, but that the grant was voluntary, and that the consideration was not good against the son's creditors for value. Edison v. Rothery, 10 Jur., N. S., 943; 12 W. R. 1138; 11 L. T., N. S., 134.

12. A solicitor, duly admitted and inrolled in the Court of Chancery, may practise as a solicitor on the equity side of this court, and recover his costs as such solicitor, without being admitted and inrolled as a solicitor on the equity side of the court. Att.-Gen. v. Malin, Younge 567; 1 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 184.

13. A commissioner in bankruptcy is not bound to hear a person who, although a duly admitted solicitor of the Court, does not appear as the solicitor of the party for whom he appears, but only as the clerk of such solicitor. Esq. Re Broadhouse, 2 L. R., Ch.,

655; 36 L. J., Bky., 29; 15 W. R. 126; 17 L. T., N. S., 126.

B. gave notice to dispute an adjudication which had been made against him, the notice being signed by D. and L., as his solicitors. When the validity of the adjudication came on for argument before the Commissioners, R., who was the managing clerk of D. and L., and who was himself a solicitor of the Court, appeared for the bankrupt. The commissioner, however, declined to hear him, and although the bankrupt, who was in court, said that he wished R. to be heard on his behalf, the commissioner confirmed the adjudication with costs against the bankrupt:—Held, that the commissioner was right in refusing to hear R., so long as he appeared in the character of clerk to D. and L.; but that the bankrupt ought to have been more fully informed of the position in which he stood, and to have had an opportunity of constituting R. his solicitor if he desired to do so. Ib.

II. AMENDING, OR RESTORING NAME TO, ROLLS.

1. Upon the application of a solicitor who had assumed the name of Chamberlain in addition to his own, the Court, being satisfied with the reasons, ordered an entry of the change of name to be made upon the roll of solicitors. Exp. Matthews, 1 W. R. 44; 22 L. J., Ch., 22; 17 Jur. 29; 16 Beav. 245.

2. A court of equity will neither admit a solicitor nor restore him to the rolls without his first having been admitted or restored to the rolls by a Court of common law; and this Court refused to make an order to issue a certificate to allow a solicitor to practise, where two applications, having a similar object, had been refused by a Court of common law, but the petition was ordered to stand over, and leave was given to apply. Re Barber, 23 L. J., Ch., 874; 19 Beav. 378; 2 W. R. 606.

Observation on the serious inconvenience arising from one Court interfering in a matter already determined by another Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. Ib.

3. A solicitor who had been struck off the rolls for misconduct restored after a lapse of ten years, during which, amidst great privation and suffering, he had maintained an irreproachable character, the application being supported by a memorial signed by a very large number of solicitors, and not opposed by the Law Institution, though opposed by one individual solicitor only. Anon., 17 Beav. 475.

III. CERTIFICATE AND RENEWAL THEREOF.

4. Solicitor who had become incapable of practising (without being re-admitted), in consequence of having neglected to obtain a certificate for one whole year, ordered to be re-admitted, on payment of a small fine only, without the arrears of duty. Exp. Murray, T. & R. 56.

5. Where a solicitor has neglected to take out his certificate for more than a year, admission de novo is in no case necessary (the words "null and void" as applied to his admission in the 37 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 31, being used in a qualified sense), and re-admission will restore him to a capacity to practise, unless he has been guilty of some fraud in procuring it. Whether re-admission is necessary in a case where an attorney or solicitor has not taken out his certificate, nor practised for more than a year after his admission, quære. Exp. Chambers, Re Wilton, 2 Keen 497; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 200; 2 Jur. 489.

6. Application to strike out an appearance entered by an attorney after the determination of his certificate for the current year, and before payment of the duty on his fresh certificate, but after it had been issued, refused with costs. Sparling v. Brereton, 2 L. R., Eq., 64; 12 Jur., N. S., 330; 35 L. J., Ch., 461; 14 L. T., N. S., 166; 14 W. R. 515.

A solicitor who has been duly admitted and inrolled, but who has neglected to take out his annual certificate in proper time, is nevertheless competent, while uncertificated, to bind a client ignorant of the want of the certificate, as between such client and third persons. Ib.

7. A solicitor who, by a slip, neglected to produce his certificate to the registrar within a month, as required by 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 21, relieved from the consequences, and it was ordered that the certificate should have effect from the time of stamping the same. Re Smith, 33 Beav. 248.

8. A solicitor, who had ceased to take out his certificate in 1853, with the intention of being called to the bar, which he had abandoned, was allowed to renew his certificate without undergoing an examination in 1863. Re Senell, 32 Beav. 475.

9. A solicitor who did not take out a certificate for eleven years on account of ill-health, but kept up his legal studies and pursuits, was allowed to renew his certificate without examination. Re Elton, 37 L. J., Ch., 482; 16 W. R. 323; 17 L. T., N. S., 487.

10. An application for liberty to renew certificate will not be heard after a similar one has been refused by another Court. Re Barber, 2 W. R. 606.

Solicitors are neither admitted nor restored to the roll in Chancery until they have been admitted or restored as attorneys in a common law court. The same rule applies to an application to renew a certificate. An application by an attorney to renew his certificate having been twice refused by the Queen's Bench, the Court refused to entertain a similar application, though supported by additional evidence since discovered. Observation on the serious inconvenience arising from one Court interfering in a matter already determined by another Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. S. C. 19 Beav. 378; 23 L. J., Ch., 874.

IV. RECOVERY OF BILL OF COSTS WHEN UNCERTIFICATED.

11. Semble, a solicitor on taking out his certificate, according to 37 Geo. 3, c. 90, will be entitled to his costs for business done previously in the same year. Burcott v. Parsons, 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 24.

12. Where an attorney omitted to take out his certificate for more than a year after admission:—Held, that admission de novo was not necessary, but that having been re-admitted without fraud, he was restored to a capacity of acting; but the objection to an order for taxation of his bill on the ground of his being incapable of acting, is a ground of application by petition and not by motion. Exp. Chambers, Re Wilton, 2 Keen 497; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 200; 2 Jur. 489.

1. The 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, The Attorneys and Solicitors Act, s. 26, does not extinguish the debt of a solicitor or an attorney for costs in respect of business done while uncertificated, but only his remedy. Re Jones, 9 L. R., Eq., 63; 39 L. J., Ch., 83; 18 W. R. 159; 21 L. T., N. S., 482.

Therefore, where a client had taken out an order of course for taxation of his solicitor's bill, with the usual submission to pay what should be found due, and the Master had disallowed certain items for business done while his certificate had not been renewed:—Held, that he was entitled to be allowed the items in question. Id.

2. A person who has been ordered to pay costs cannot, on the ground that the solicitor on the other side was uncertificated, refuse to pay the costs. Re Hope, 7 L. R., Ch., 766; 20 W. R. 1026; 47 L. J., Ch., 797.

The 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 26, merely prevents an attorney or a solicitor from maintaining any action or suit for the recovery of his costs in respect of business done by him while uncertificated; but when a client has paid his solicitor his costs of business done while uncertificated, and the client's adversary is ordered to pay his taxed costs, the client is entitled to have the costs so paid to his solicitor included in the taxation. S. C. 27 L. T., N. S., 670.

V. PRACTISING IN ANOTHER SOLICITOR'S NAME.

3. A solicitor may practise in the name of an attorney as his agent in the courts of law, but an attorney at law cannot practise in the name of a solicitor, as his agent in the courts of equity. Hockley v. Bantock, 2 Myl. & K. 437; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 93.

4. A B., a solicitor, agreed to act for C. D., another solicitor, in his personal business on the terms of principal and agent. C. D. neglected to take out his certificate during part of the time:—Held, that the agreement was not invalid, and an order of course to tax was sustained. Exp. Foley, Re Smith, 11 Beav. 456.

5. A solicitor of the Court of Great Sessions in Wales, cannot practise in the name of a solicitor of the Court of Chancery. Turner v. Ford, 1 Myl. & C. 1; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 34.

See also X. II. post.

VI. ATTORNEY ACTING AS SOLICITOR IN COURT OF CHANCERY.

6. No person but a solicitor can be entitled to costs for practising in Chancery, and if a solicitor allows an attorney to practise in his name, neither party can recover costs. Semble, French v. Morgan, 1 Hog. 230.

7. An attorney who practises in the name of a solicitor without having previously obtained his permission to do so, cannot recover any costs from his clients. Lawrence v. Sharp, 1 Hog. 84.

8. After the plaintiff's costs had been taxed and paid, it was discovered that their agent in the cause had never been admitted as a solicitor, and an order was thereupon made that the Master should review his taxation and disallow all such items as did not consist of fees paid to the clerk in court, with a view to having them refunded. Coates v. Hankyard, 1 Russ. & M. 746.

9. Under an award in a cause, which award was afterwards made an order of court, the costs of certain parties were directed to be taxed and paid to them out of the fund; a part of these costs was incurred in proceedings upon a case sent to law; when the bills were carried in for taxation it was discovered that the person who had acted as their solicitor throughout the suit, and who had already been paid in full, was not a solicitor, but an attorney only; the Master thereupon disallowed all the items in the bills, except disbursements to the clerk in court, and his taxation was confirmed on appeal. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Russ. & M. 744; 2 Sim. 247.

10. It appearing upon a reference to tax an agent's bill of costs in a chancery suit, that he never had been a solicitor of the court, the Master was directed to disallow all the items except those for disbursements made to his clerk in court. Sumner v. Ridgway, 1 Russ. & M. 748.

VII. LAW STATIONER ACTING AS A SOLICITOR.

11. Law stationers, not qualified as solicitors or proctors, were accustomed upon the instruction and in the names of London or country solicitors to take the registry of the Probate Division original wills and the engrossments thereof, with the proper affidavits, and if these were in order, to fetch away the probate: if any question arose as to the sufficiency of the documents the stationers communicated it to the solicitors. All the charges between solicitor and client were made by the solicitors, and the stationers charged the solicitors for their clerks' time only:—Held, affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, that the stationers had not acted as solicitors or proctors, and were not liable to the penalties imposed by 23 & 24 Vict., c. 27, s. 26. Law Society v. Waterson, Law Society v. Skinner, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 407; 52 L. J., Q. B., 674; 49 L. T. 141; 31 W. R. 754. Affirming, 9 L. R., Q. B. D., 1; 51 L. J., Q. B., 249; 46 L. T. 187; 30 W. R. 820.

III. Relations between Town Agents and Country Solicitors.

- I. In General, 6380.
- II. Change of, 6380.
- III. Lien of, 6380.
- IV. Account, 6381.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. A country solicitor who is authorised to institute a suit, is justified in employing a London agent for that purpose, in whose name, as agent, the bill may be filed. Solley v. Wood, 16 Beav. 370.

2. If a bill is ordered to be taken off the file, on the ground that the plaintiffs assume to sue in a corporate character, to which they are not entitled, the costs will be ordered to be paid by the town agent of the plaintiffs, and not by their solicitor in the country. Ruthin (Burgesses of) v. Adams, 7 Sim. 345; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 167.

3. Where an affidavit is reported to be scandalous, the agent in London who filed the affidavit is responsible for the costs as between attorney and client, notwithstanding the country attorney may have himself drawn the affidavit. Epp. Wake, 3 Dea. & Ch. 246; Mont. & Bli. 259; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 38.

4. A country client employs an attorney or solicitor in the country in a cause in Chancery; the solicitor employs a clerk in Chancery; the client in the country pays his solicitor, but the clerk in Chancery is unpaid. The client is not bound to pay the clerk in Chancery; but if the latter has any papers in his hands, he may retain them. Farewell v. Coker, 2 P. W. 460.

5. A solicitor assigns his claim for costs to W., and becomes bankrupt, and W. gives notice to the London agents of the solicitor of their claim, and the assignees in bankruptcy petition for payment to them, subject to the London agents' claim:—Held, that the notice to the London agents, as far as costs became payable to them, took those costs out of the order and disposition of the bankrupt, the costs being ordered out of the fund in court. Petition refused. Sharples v. Marsh, 2 W. R. 400.

6. At the request of the client of a country solicitor, R. paid to the solicitor a sum of money in part discharge of costs due to the solicitor in respect of administration suits to which the client was defendant, and the repayment was secured by a mortgage of the solicitor's lien. Afterwards the costs were ordered to be taxed, and paid out of a fund in court to the town agents of the solicitor:—Held, that the costs so ordered to be paid to the agent must be paid to R. in satisfaction of his claim under the mortgage. Cockayne v. Harrison, 15 L. R., Eq., 298; 42 L. J., Ch., 660; 21 W. R. 520.

7. A country solicitor personally attending an appeal instead of employing his London agent, will be allowed the additional charges and expenses thereby occasioned. Re. Foster, Epp. Dickens, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 598; 26 W. R. 915.

8. Co-plaintiffs may employ separate solicitors acting by a common agent. Waldon v. Thompson, 37 L. J., Ch., 751; 6 L. R., Eq., 7.

II. CHANGE OF.

9. A solicitor in the country employed an agent in London to conduct a suit under a special contract. He afterwards obtained an order of course to remove the agent without mentioning the special contract. The order was discharged for irregularity on the motion of the agent. Richards v. Scarborough Market Co., 1 W. R. 250; 17 Jur. 294; 17 Beav. 83; 22 L. J., Ch., 759.

III. LIEN OF.

I. In General, 6380.

II. On Fund in Court or Property Recovered, 6381.

1. In General.

10. A country client employs an attorney or solicitor in the country in a cause in Chancery; the solicitor employs a clerk in Chancery, the client in the country pays his solicitor, but the clerk in Chancery is unpaid. The client is not bound to pay the clerk in Chancery, but if the latter has any papers in his hands he may retain them. Farewell v. Coker, 2 P. W. 460.

11. A clerk in court who lends money to the solicitor is not entitled thereby to detain a client's papers as a pledge. Gray v. Cookeril, 2 Atk. 114.

Where a clerk in court had obtained an order for taxing the costs of the solicitor who employed him, and afterwards another order for payment of the costs of taxation, he was allowed to detain the papers of the solicitor's client till the costs reported due under the first order were paid, but not for the costs of taxation. S. O. Barnard. 264.

12. Lien of the agent in town upon the papers in his hands, for what was due to him, as agent in the cause, from the solicitor in the country. Ward v. Hepple, 15 Ves. 297.

13. Where town agents of country solicitor (since a bankrupt) had received papers from him belonging to his client, for purposes of his client's business, they have a lien against the client for amount of money due from him to solicitor, and from solicitor to them, on account of business done in that cause. And where client had, after the solicitor's bankruptcy, paid the agent his bill to obtain such papers, although an action had been previously commenced against him by assignees for recovery of it, the Court granted and continued an injunction against the action on the ground of agent's lien. Bray v. Hine, 6 Price 203.

14. A London agent of a country solicitor, acting in the ordinary course of business, is always taken to give credit to the country solicitor, not to the country solicitor's client. Waller v. Holmes, 1 John. & H. 239; 6 Jur., N. S., 1367; 30 L. J., Ch., 24; 9 W. R. 32; 3 L. T., N. S., 289.

Therefore the London agent of a country solicitor has no lien for costs on the documents of the country solicitor's client where, though the country solicitor has not paid his London agent, the client has paid the country solicitor's bill. Id.

Where a client has paid the bill of his country solicitor before receiving notice of anything remaining due from the solicitor of the London agent, the latter has no lien on documents which have come into his hands in the course of the suit. Id.

It makes no difference whether the bill has been paid in cash or by set-off in account, if at the time of the lien claimed nothing remains due to the country solicitors. Id.

1. A client paid her country solicitor his bill of costs before receiving any notice that the town agent of the solicitor claimed a lien upon the documents in his possession for a balance alleged to be due to him from the country solicitor on accounts stated between them:—Held, that the town agent's lien did not attach, and that he must deliver up all the documents in his possession. Vyse v. Foster, 32 L. T., N. S., 219. Affirmed 23 W. R. 413.

2. A London solicitor acting as agent for a country solicitor has a general lien against the country solicitor upon any money recovered in an action, for all costs for agency business and disbursements due from the country solicitor, whether in the particular action or in any other proceedings; but as between the town agent and the client, the lien of the former extends only to the costs of the particular action in which he is engaged. Lawrence v. Fletcher, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 858; 27 W. R. 937.

3. A decree was made in the usual form, ordering the payment of costs to the London agents of E. E.'s client had satisfied all claims of E. against him, and now prayed that the costs might be paid to him:—Held, that the order for payment to the London agents gave them no rights of lien or of set-off in respect of the costs, or in any way altered the rights of the principals. Peatfield v. Barlow, 17 W. R. 516; 38 L. J., Ch., 310; 20 L. T., N. S., 217; 8 L. R., Eq., 61.

2. On Fund in Court or Property Recovered.

4. Under s. 28 of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, the town agent held entitled to a charge on all property recovered in three suits for an unascertained balance due to him by the country solicitor. Tardrew v. Howell, 3 Giff. 381; 31 L. J., Ch., 57.

L. was, as town agent, employed by a country solicitor in certain suits, in one of which the country solicitor was himself the plaintiff. An unascertained balance for costs, which were the subject of taxation by a Master of the Court of Common Pleas, was due to L., who had ceased to act as such town agent. The Court was of opinion that the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, applied, and made a declaration that L. was, as town agent, entitled to a charge for what should remain due to him from such country solicitor, in respect of the costs in the suits in which he was employed, upon all sums of money and other property recovered or preserved in the suits, so far as such sums were chargeable to the country solicitor for his costs in respect of any order, either made or to be made, in the suits. S. C. nom. Tardrew v. Howell, Parry v. Howell, 7 Jur., N. S., 1120; 10 W. R. 32; 5 L. T., N. S., 276.

5. When an order of court in the usual form directed payment of costs out of a fund in court to the London agent, it was nevertheless held that the client of the country solicitor might set off a debt due from such solicitor to himself, the client, against the costs. Peatfield

v. Barlow, 38 L. J., Ch., 310; 20 L. T., N. S., 217; 8 L. R., Eq., 61; 17 W. R. 516.

Such an order creates no independent right or lien upon the fund in favour of the town agent as against the principal. Id.

IV. ACCOUNT.

6. A bill was filed by a country solicitor against his town agents for an account of cash transactions between them:—Held, that as the account might have been obtained under the common order for taxation, the bill must be dismissed. Harvey v. Mayhem, 2 W. R. 128.

7. A bill in equity alleged a particular contract as to agency, but charged that the defendant pretended that the contract was one of partnership, and that upon either construction he was liable to account, and prayed for discovery of all matters of business relating to the agency; that he might deliver his bills of costs for taxation, and for an account. Demurrer overruled. Ward v. Lamson, 21 W. R. 88; 8 L. R., Ch., 65; 42 L. J., Ch., 273.

When there is an agreement as to costs, which only goes to the extent of the charges to be paid, the Master may take that into consideration, and a bill in equity is not the proper remedy; but where the agreement goes farther, and there is, on the face of the bill, a dispute as to whether the agreement was one of agency or of partnership, a bill will be sustained. Id.

8. A solicitor agreed to undertake the defence of another solicitor upon agency charges. On special petition, a taxation of his bill was ordered "having regard to the agreement." Re Gedge, 23 Beav. 347.

A solicitor agreed to conduct the defence of another solicitor upon agency terms, in case of the defence being unsuccessful. On entering into the agreement, the latter suppressed from the former the existence of a material correspondence, which was the principal ground of a decree being made against him. But the solicitor, after the discovery, still continued the defence without objection:—Held, that he was not released from the contract. Id.

9. Notwithstanding the definition of the word "client" in s. 3 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1870, that Act does not apply to accounts between country solicitors and town agents. Ward v. Eyre, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 130; 49 L. J., Ch., 657; 43 L. T. 525; 28 W. R. 712.

VII. Authority. Other Cases, 6389.

VIII. Inquiry respecting by Taxing Master. See XVI. XVII. 4 post.

I. WHAT IS AND PROOF OF.

1. As to what constitutes a relationship of attorney and client. Goddard v. Carlisle, 9 Price 169.

2. The retainer of a solicitor need not be in writing, but if he neglects taking that precaution, and his retainer being afterwards questioned there is nothing but assertion against assertion, he must bear the costs of the risk he thus undertakes. Wiggins v. Peppin, 2 Beav. 403.

3. Although an authority may be given to file a bill by parol, yet the solicitor must abide by the consequence if he omit to take a written authority; and where there was assertion against assertion, an order was made to take the bill off the file, and that the solicitor should pay the costs. Martindale v. Lamson, C. P. C. 83.

4. A. and B. sue out a commission as solicitors to the petitioning creditor, and the assignees afterwards appoint C. to act as solicitor, but it is agreed between him and A. and B., with the privity of the assignees, that all three shall jointly act as solicitors and share the profits, and the assignees afterwards recognise the acting of A. and B. as such joint solicitors:—Held, first, that this amounted to a retainer by the assignees of A. and B. as joint solicitors with C.; secondly, that the Court of Review had jurisdiction on the petition of A. and B. (C. having been served with it) to enforce the payment by the assignees of the solicitor's bills of costs; thirdly, that the assignees were liable for the payment of such costs whether they had funds in their hands or not. Exp. Hammond, Re Wooding, 3 Dea. & Ch. 626; 1 Mont. & A. 328; 3 L. J., N. S., Bky., 62.

5. If a solicitor has used the name of a party as plaintiff in a suit with his knowledge, but without his authority, and such party allows the suit to proceed without taking steps to have his name removed from the record, this will not be an adoption of the solicitor, nor equivalent to a retainer of him by the party. Hall v. Laver, 1 Hare 571; 4 Y. & Coll. 218; 5 Jur. 241.

A party to a cause, for whose benefit, in common with others, the cause has been prosecuted, cannot avail himself of the benefit resulting from the suit discharged of the expenses of it, although he may have been made a party without his authority. Ib.

A solicitor who used the names of the parties as plaintiffs in a suit without their consent, was held to have no lien for his general bill of costs on the fund in court. S. C. 4 Y. & Coll. 216.

6. The solicitor of a lessor who has prepared a draft lease cannot recover for his services from the intended lessee, unless there is a privity of contract between them. Re Ipstone Park Colliery Co., Brough's claim, 18 W. R. 285.

It is not sufficient for the lessee to have instructed his own solicitor, and that solicitor to have handed over the work to the lessor's solicitor. Ib.

7. A solicitor had a retainer to act generally for a company, and also a special retainer to conduct a chancery suit on behalf of the company. Being employed by another client to go to America, he collected information on behalf of the company in furtherance of their suit, but without special instructions from the company to do so. On his return to England, he reported to the company what he had done, and they made use of the information he had obtained. He afterwards took three journeys to Paris to conduct negotiations for a compromise of the same suit, without instructions from the company, but with the knowledge of some of the directors, and on two of them he was accompanied by the chairman:—Held, that, under the special circumstances of the case, the solicitor was entitled to charge the company for his professional services in America, and also for his professional services and expenses on his journeys to Paris. Re Snell, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 815; 36 L. T. 534; 25 W. R. 736. Reversing 25 W. R. 40.

8. A letter written by a deceased solicitor, proposing to act as the solicitor of a particular individual, is not receivable in evidence, as having been written by the authority of that individual, on proof merely that there was such a solicitor in practice at the time, that the letter was in his handwriting, and that it came from the custody of the person to whom it purported to be addressed; and, in order to render the letter receivable, it must be proved alimunde that the writer had been duly authorised by the individual for whom he professed to act as solicitor. Bright v. Legerton, 2 De G. F. & J. 606.

Proof of. 9. Issue directed under the circumstances to try whether solicitor authorised to use relator's name, although such relator afterwards acknowledged the authority. Att. Gen. v. Skinners' Co., C. P. C. 1.

10. Two counsel appearing for the same party by different attorneys, petition to stand over, to verify retainer of the attorney by affidavit. Buttsworth v. Clapham, cited 1 Jac. & Walk. 673. n.

Where a solicitor writes a letter, purporting to be on behalf of a client, it is prima facie evidence of authority from the client, and is receivable in evidence against him. S. C. 6 Jur., N. S., 1179; 29 L. J., Ch., 852; 29 Beav. 60. Affirmed 7 Jur., N. S., 559; 30 L. J., Ch., 338.

A letter by a solicitor since deceased, making an offer on behalf of a cestui que trust, will, in a suit by the cestui que trust twenty years after against the trustee, be admitted as evidence, though the cestui que trust denied that the solicitor was employed by him, or that he acted on his behalf, but the value of such evidence is for the consideration of a jury or the Court which has the province of a jury. Ib.

A bill of costs sent to trustees by a solicitor who acted for them will be admitted in a suit by a cestui que trust against trustees for an account as evidence of attendance on the cestui que trust, and of his having knowledge of the business transacted. Ib.

A cash account of a deceased solicitor of trustees is admissible in evidence, in a suit instituted by the cestui que trust, twenty years afterwards, to charge his trustees. Ib.

II. RETAINER BY PARTICULAR PERSONS.

1. Infant, 6383.
2. Lunatic or Incapacitated Person, 6383.
3. Married Woman, 6383.

1. Infant.

1. Infant is bound by conduct of his solicitor in a cause. Tillotson v. Hargrave, 3 Madd. 495.

2. A continued employment of an attorney by an infant client, after the latter comes of age, may amount to an undertaking to pay a prior bill of costs. Guy v. Burgess, 1 Smith 117.

3. A suit was instituted in the name of two infants by their next friend. One came of age, and some time afterwards the next friend obtained an order for changing the solicitors of the plaintiffs. It was discharged with costs. Brown v. Brown, 11 Beav. 562.

2. Lunatic or Incapacitated Person.

4. A solicitor employed on part of a lunatic can have no action against him for his bill of costs. Barnesley v. Powell, Amb. 102.

5. A solicitor, who had been retained to conduct proceedings under a commission of lunacy, and acted on behalf of the committees, was held entitled to stand as a simple contract creditor against the estate after the death of the lunatic, in respect to his costs, although more than six years had elapsed from the order of the Chancellor directing taxation of the costs incurred in reference to the commission, the statute having no operation till after the death of the lunatic. Stedman v. Hart, 2 W. R. 462; 1 Kay 607.

6. A solicitor who has been instructed by a defendant to defend a suit for him can properly continue to do so, although the defendant, through an attack of paralysis, has become incapable of attending to matters of business. Steel v. Cobb, 1 N. R. 302; 11 W. R. 298.

3. Married Woman.

7. A married woman, having separate property, and living apart from her husband, employed the plaintiffs as her solicitors, and promised them, by letter, that she would pay their bills, but did not refer to her separate property:—Held, that that property was liable to pay the bills. Murray v. Barlee, 4 Sim. 82, 95; 9 L. J., Ch., 87. Affirmed 3 Myl. & K. 209; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 184. And see 7 Sim. 194.

8. A retainer by a married woman to a solicitor to act in respect to one portion of her separate estate, operates as a charge upon all property settled to her separate use, and is not confined to the particular property upon which the solicitor is called upon to act. In such a case the solicitor does not lose his lien from the circumstance of the property ceasing to be separate estate of the wife by the death of the husband. Bolden v. Nicholas, 3 Jur., N. S., 884.

Lands belonging to a lady were, upon her marriage, conveyed to such uses as she should by deed or will, notwithstanding coverture, appoint; and subject thereto, to the separate use of herself during the joint lives of herself and husband; remainder to the use of herself for life; remainder over. She employed a solicitor, during her husband's life, first to mortgage the lands, and then to sell the equity of redemption. The sale was not completed during his life, although the mortgage was:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to be paid his costs out of the purchase money (which, according to the contract, was to come to her separate use), when the same was paid after her husband's decease, although she could then have no separate estate. Id.

9. A solicitor who had been employed by a married woman to conduct a suit for judicial separation, which suit ended in a compromise, claimed to prove as a creditor against the estate of the husband for his costs, as necessities supplied to the wife. The Court being of opinion that there was no reasonable ground for the suit, and that the solicitor, though he believed that there was, might, by making proper inquiries, have ascertained that there was not:—Held, that in these circumstances the claim could not be sustained. Re Hooper, Baylis v. Watkins, 2 De G. J. & S. 91; 10 Jur., N. S., 114; 33 L. J., Ch., 300.

[Liability of Separate Estate for Costs.] See HUSBAND AND WIFE, XI. XI. 6.

III. JOINT OR SEVERAL.

10. Circumstances under which the solicitor of an annuitant, selling under a power of sale, was considered also the solicitor of the grantor of the annuity. Re Bloye's Trusts, 1 Macn. & G. 488; 2 H. & Tw. 140; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89; 14 Jur. 49.

11. A solicitor, on the sole retainer of the debtor, prepared a creditors' deed, the first trust of which was to pay the costs of its preparation. The trustees acted, and employed the same solicitor in the trust. The solicitor is entitled to charge the costs of preparing the deed, though retained by the trustees for that purpose. Re Sadd, 34 Beav. 650.

12. The solicitor appointed by the creditor's assignee in bankruptcy is the solicitor of all the assignees in the bankruptcy, but he is not by such appointment constituted the agent of the official assignee. Hughes v. Morris, 9 Hare 636.

13. The solicitor of a lessor who has prepared a draft lease cannot recover for his services from the intended lessee, unless there is a privity of contract between them. Re Ipton's Park Colliery Co., Brough's claim, 18 W. R. 285.

It is not sufficient for the lessee to have instructed his own solicitor, and that solicitor to have handed over the work to the lessor's solicitor. Id.

14. Where, by the constitution of the committee, the acts of the majority of the managing committee of a railway company bound the whole:—Held, that a solicitor, employed by the committee in a suit, instituted against the committee by some of the shareholders for misconduct, was authorised to enter an appearance for any one of the members of the committee. Goodman v. De Beauvoir, 4 Rail. Ca. 380; 12 Jur. 989. Affirmed 12 Jur. 1037.

1. Three petitioners retained the same solicitor in an application to wind up a company. The order was made, and subsequently two of the petitioners severed, and obtained an order of course at the Rolls to change their solicitor:—Held, that the two had no right to act separately, and the order to change solicitors must be discharged. Re Norwich & Norfolk Provident Permanent Building Society, 22 W. R. 854.

2. Two executors in a suit gave a joint retainer to a firm of solicitors. In the course of the proceedings it was certified by the chief clerk that one executor, who had since died insolvent, was indebted to the testator's estate:—Held, that the surviving executor was entitled to be paid out of the estate all the costs for which he was liable, and that the costs incurred for the deceased executor in taking the account of his debt must be set off against the sum found due from him. Watson v. Row, 18 L. R., Eq., 680; 43 L. J., Ch., 664; 22 W. R. 793.

3. To determine the liability for costs of co-plaintiffs in a suit the Court will look into the transaction to see whether the contract, though joint in form, was intended by the parties to be joint and several, and such intention may be presumed from the circumstances. Furlong v. Scanlan, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 202.

Therefore where C. was employed to conduct a partition suit on the joint retainer of M. and S., co-plaintiffs with equal rights as tenants in common, there being no special contract, and it appeared that the benefit of the partition would enure to each of them severally:—Held, that the liability for costs was several as well as joint, and that C. might prove against M.'s assets for the amount. Id.

4. In a suit by a shareholder against the directors, secretary, and the company to restrain an action for calls, to be relieved of his shares on the ground of misrepresentation in the prospectus, and to be indemnified by the directors, the defendants, having all appeared by A., the same solicitor, put in a joint and several answer, signed by one counsel, and joined in their defence, signed three separate retainers to A., all in the following terms:—"You having up to the present time conducted the defence of this suit on behalf of all the defendants, and in pursuance of their instructions in that behalf, we the undersigned do hereby confirm such instructions, and request you to continue such defence, and to take such steps as you may consider necessary in the matter":—Held (affirming the Taxing Master's decision), that the retainers were separate and not joint, and that the assets of the company (in liquidation) were liable for one-ninth only of the costs. Re Allen, Davies v. Chatwood, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 244; 48 L. J., Ch., 358; 27 W. R. 485; 40 L. T. 358.

Taxation.] 5. It is the settled practice in the office of the Taxing Master in Chancery, where in a suit two or more parties have employed the same solicitor in taxing his bill of costs, to allow against each of his clients only such client's proportion of the general costs of the suit, notwithstanding that each client may be liable at law for all the costs upon the joint retainer. Re Colquhoun, 17 Jur. 409; 22 L. J., Ch., 484. Affirmed 2 Eq. Rep. 304; 1 W. R. 195.

6. A solicitor was separately retained by more than one defendant to a suit, and upon the application of one of such defendants his bill of costs was ordered to be taxed; the taxing officer allowed, as against the defendant on whose application the taxation was ordered, only a proportionate part of the charges of proceedings which were common to all those defendants, although those charges were not increased by the proceedings having been taken on behalf of all such defendants:—Upon appeal, first, to one of the Vice-Chancellors, and, secondly, to this Court, the certificate of the Taxing Master was affirmed; but as the second appeal was made at the suggestion of the Vice-Chancellor, it was dismissed without costs. Exp. Ford, 23 L. J., Ch., 515.

IV. AUTHORITY TO INSTITUTE OR CONDUCT LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

1. Sufficiency of Retainer, 6384.
2. Liability of Solicitor for Costs, 6385.
3. Compromise of Actions, 6387.
4. Other Cases, 6388.

1. Sufficiency of Retainer.

7. A solicitor may, in the exercise of the general authority given him by his client, defend a suit, but cannot institute one without a special authority for the purpose. Wright v. Castle, 3 Meriv. 12.

8. A solicitor ought to have a special authority from his client for instituting a suit, but such authority need not be in writing. Lord v. Kellett, 2 Myl. & K. 1.

9. It is not sufficient for a solicitor, before he commences a suit against executors, to obtain an authority from his client to take proceedings to get an account; there must be, in substance, a clear authority to institute a suit. Atkinson v. Abbott, 3 Drew. 251.

10. A solicitor seeking to charge a person with the costs of legal proceedings conducted in the name of another, must support his claim by the clearest and most unequivocal evidence. Re Clark, 13 Beav. 173. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 43; 15 Jur. 1047; 21 L. J., Ch., 20.

11. A solicitor received authority in 1831 to file a bill in an administration suit on behalf of a woman then unmarried. In 1836 he informed her that she and her husband would be co-plaintiffs to a bill in the same suit. In 1849 he wrote to her as a widow, for information, to which she replied, hoping that there might be immediate distribution. The solicitor afterwards filed bills of supplement and revivor in the suit, making her a co-plaintiff:—Held, that he had sufficient authority. Bewley v. Seymour, 14 Jur. 213.

1. Where parties moved to have their names struck out of the record on the ground that they had been used by the solicitor without their authority, and the solicitor could not produce any written authority from them, the Court refused the motion, the facts and documents showing that the parties had been aware of the use of their names, and had allowed a long space of time to elapse without taking any steps. McNally v. Know, 5 L. T., N. S., 186.

2. Liability of Solicitor for Costs.

2. Order to dismiss a bill, with costs to be paid by the plaintiffs' solicitor, the bill having been filed without special authority from the plaintiff. Wright v. Castle, 3 Meriv. 12.

3. Where a solicitor had taken no written authority to file a bill, and the parol one, which he asserted, was denied by the plaintiff, the bill was taken off the file, and the plaintiff ordered to pay the costs of the defendant in the first instance, and the solicitor to pay the costs both of plaintiff and defendant. Martindale v. Lawson, C. P. C. 83.

4. An attorney who makes a person even a formal plaintiff without his express consent, is himself liable for the costs incurred by such plaintiff. Peed v. Cussen, Hayes 66.

5. A bill being filed without the written authority of one of several co-plaintiffs, and the evidence being unsatisfactory as to the retainer; his name was struck out as co-plaintiff, with costs to be paid by the solicitor. Pissner v. Knights, 6 Beav. 174.

Where a solicitor files a bill without a written authority, the onus of proof is cast on him. If there be any doubt on the matter, the Court will hold him liable. Id.

6. A solicitor, after the revocation of his authority, cannot take any further steps, and, if he does, will be answerable for the costs of them, as well as for the costs of any motion to restrain him from proceeding. Freeman v. Fairlie, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 44.

7. A solicitor, taking a proceeding in a suit in the name of a person, without his authority, is personally liable to pay the costs, charges, and expenses occasioned to the other parties thereby; and such a proceeding having taken place in the Master's office, the Court, on the petition of the parties injured, ordered the costs, etc., to be taxed and paid by the solicitor. Malins v. Greenway, 10 Beav. 564; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 26, 331; 12 Jur. 66, 319.

8. If a solicitor gives a relator an indemnity for costs, or uses his name without authority (though afterwards assented to), the Court will order the information to be taken off the file with costs, to be paid by the relator and attorney. Att.-Gen. v. Skinners' Co., C. P. C. 7.

9. Bill filed by solicitor from instructions of brother-in-law of plaintiff, solicitor having never received any communication from plaintiff himself, dismissed, and solicitor ordered to pay costs, plaintiff having absconded before bill was filed. Hall v. Bennett, 2 Sim. & S. 78. See also Betagh v. Burke, 2 Moll. 384. Wade v. Stanley, 1 Jac. & Walk. 674. Eap. Struckey, 2 Cox 283; Dundas v. Dutens, id. 236.

10. The retainer of a solicitor need not be in writing; but if he neglects taking that precaution, and, his retainer being afterwards questioned, there is nothing but assertion against assertion, he must bear the costs of the risk he thus undertakes. Wiggins v. Peppin, 2 Beav. 403; 3 Jur. 721.

11. A suit instituted by a solicitor without authority dismissed on motion with costs of the suit, and of the motion as between solicitor and client. Allen v. Bone, 4 Beav. 493.

12. Where a solicitor carries on suits, and was employed by the assignees, without the authority of the majority in value of the creditors, the estate of the bankrupt is not liable to his bill for such suits. Eap. Whitchurch, 1 Atk. 210.

13. If a bill is ordered to be taken off the file, on the ground that the plaintiffs assume to sue in a corporate character, to which they are not entitled, the costs will be ordered to be paid by the town agent of the plaintiffs, and not by their solicitor in the country. Ruthin (Burgesses of) v. Adams, 7 Sim. 345; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 167.

15. Cause at issue, one of the plaintiffs applies to have name struck out of bill, on ground that he knew not of its insertion. Defendant objected, he being only plaintiff of ability to pay costs. Objection good, and application refused; but solicitor who inserted plaintiff's name ordered to indemnify him. Titterton v. Osborne, Dick. 350.

16. One of several co-plaintiffs concurred in the prosecution of the suit up to a particular period, and then instructed the solicitor of the plaintiffs not to take any further proceedings in the cause. On proceedings being, nevertheless, taken, the dissentient co-plaintiff moved that the solicitor for the plaintiffs might be ordered to indemnify him in respect of subsequent costs of the suit. The motion was refused, with costs. Winthrop v. Murray, 7 Hare 150; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 484; 13 Jur. 955.

17. The mother of an infant employed a solicitor to prosecute a suit on behalf of the infant. The person first named as next friend in the cause died; the mother subsequently discharged the solicitor; and after such discharge, he amended the bill and named a new next friend without the mother's sanction. The Court ordered that, on payment by the mother to the next friend of the costs incurred by him in the suit, the next friend should be removed and another appointed, and that the solicitor should pay the costs of the application and of the new appointment. Lander v. Ingersoll, 4 Hare 596.

18. A bill was filed by a married woman concerning her separate property, in the name of a next friend, who had died two days before the bill was filed. About fifteen months afterwards her solicitor substituted B. as her next friend, without his knowledge. A year later the bill was dismissed for want of prosecution, with costs. Notice of this motion to dismiss the bill was served on the plaintiff's agent, and by him sent by post to B., but not in time to enable him to appear on the motion. This was the first intimation that B. received of the existence of the suit. The solicitor of the married woman had become insolvent, and had absconded to America. B. moved, without serving the solicitor, personally, or by substitution, with notice of the motion, to vary the order dismissing the bill with costs, by ordering that the solicitor should pay the costs. This motion was refused, with costs. Bligh v. Tredgett, 5 De G. & Sm. 74; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 204; 15 Jur. 1101.

1. Bill taken off the file at the expense of solicitor, who had taken no written authority to sue, and whose parol authority was denied. Martindale v. Larson, C. P. C. 83.

2. The names of persons made plaintiffs in a bill, without their authority, ordered to be struck out with costs to be paid by the solicitor, their application, after they were apprised of the fact, having been made without delay. Where persons who have been made plaintiffs without their consent, have, after the fact has come to their knowledge, acquiesced for a considerable period, their names will not, on their application, be struck out of the bill, semble. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Jac. & Walk. 457.

3. A bill was filed in the name of several co-plaintiffs, but, as to one of them, without his authority. His interests being found conflicting with those of the other co-plaintiffs, and not having acquiesced, he obtained an order, after replication, and on motion, that his name might be struck out as one of the plaintiffs, and that his costs of suit and of the application might be paid by the solicitor who filed the bill. Tabbemor v. Tabbemor, 2 Keen 679; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 19.

4. A., who was an equitable mortgagee by deposit of deeds of property belonging to the estate of B., was paid off by C. on an agreement with the executors of B. (as their solicitor stated), that proceedings should be taken in A.'s name to enforce the mortgage security, and thereby to effect a sale of the whole or part of the mortgaged property; and the solicitor of the executors filed a claim for foreclosure in the name of A. against the representatives of B. A. denied that he had given authority to file the claim in his name, and moved that it might be taken off the file:—Held, that there being only assertion against assertion, and the solicitor alone stating that the instructions were given in the presence of A., the case was to be governed by Allen v. Bone (4 Beav. 493), and the claim was dismissed, with costs to be paid by the solicitor. That in such a case the Court could not adjudicate between the solicitor, by whom the claim was filed, and the defendants, the representatives of B., by whom the instructions were given to file the claim in A.'s name; and the Court left the solicitor to any legal remedy he might have against such parties. Crossley v. Croxther, 9 Hare 384; 21 L. J., Ch., 565.

5. Ordered that plaintiff's solicitor personally pay costs of the day, and the claim ordered to be struck out of the paper. Somerville v. Jamieson, 1 W. R. 123.

6. A bill filed by an insolvent as assignee of a debt against trustees of a creditor's deed, but which was filed by a solicitor without the plaintiff's authority or knowledge, ordered to be taken off the file, with costs as against the solicitor; and the defendants are not necessary parties to such an application. Jordain v. Bright, 10 W. R. 380; 6 L. T., N. S., 279.

7. A bill had been filed by one of the directors of an incorporated company, in the name of the company, praying an injunction against the other directors of the company, to restrain them from allotting, or pretending to allot, any shares, from affixing their seal, or otherwise acting or pretending to act in the name of the directors of the company. On motion to take the bill off the file, on the ground that the solicitor had not the authority of the company, it appearing that one director alone had authorised such bill to be filed, without the consent of the other directors:—Held, that such bill should be taken off the file, and the costs of the application and of the suit should be paid by the solicitor filing such bill. Fergus Navigation & Embankment Co. v. Kingdom, 4 L. T., N. S., 262.

8. A., one of five co-plaintiffs, moved to have his name struck out of a bill as having been inserted without his authority. He also asked that the solicitor might pay the costs. After the date of the motion the solicitor died. The co-plaintiffs opposed the motion, and proved that A. had assigned the subject matter in dispute by an instrument not under seal, and had thereby authorised the assignee to use his name:—Held, that the authority in the assignment must have been intended to have some meaning, and the motion refused with costs. Rees v. Rees, 2 Eq. Rep. 234.

9. Where a solicitor files a bill, the onus lies upon him to show that he had the plaintiff's authority for doing so, and if he fails to show such authority, or a subsequent acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to have his name removed from the record, with costs to be paid by the solicitor. Maries v. Maries, 23 L. J., Ch., 154; 2 W. R. 635; 2 Eq. Rep. 361.

10. Solicitors of the assignees of a bankrupt estate instituted a suit in the names of the assignees, but without any written retainer from the official assignee, against a mortgagee of the bankrupt's property to redeem the mortgage, which was dismissed with costs:—Held, on the petition of the official assignee, that although he was cognisant of the existence of the suit, yet as there was no sufficient evidence of his having given a retainer, the solicitors were bound to pay and indemnify the official assignee against the costs. Norton v. Cooper, 3 Sm. & G. 375.

11. A solicitor obtained a retainer to proceed against executors, who had, after a long lapse of time, neglected to prove the will, and had rendered no account, to compel probate of the will, and to take such other proceedings for obtaining an account as might be necessary. He instituted a suit to compel probate, and obtained in it an account which was insufficient. He took then no other steps for three years, and then, without further consulting the client, filed a bill for an account; he had no other authority than that retainer, and the client denied any parol authority to file a bill:—Held, that the retainer did not justify the solicitor, and the bill was dismissed, with costs to be paid by the solicitor, as in Allen v. Bone (4 Beav. 493). Atkinson v. Abbott, 3 Drew. 251.

1. Solicitors instituting a suit in their client's name, without authority, are liable to indemnify him from all costs, and a passive acquiescence by the client in the use of his name does not of itself amount to an adoption of the proceedings. All the partners are equally liable notwithstanding only one of them may have conducted the suit. Re Manby, 26 L. J., Ch., 313; 3 Jur., N. S., 259.

M., a member of a firm of two solicitors, M. & H., in 1847, without any authority given by B., instituted a suit in B.'s name, as one of several co-plaintiffs, and carried it on for nine years, when B., on being served with a subpoena for payment of costs of unsuccessful exceptions, became for the first time aware of the unauthorised use of his name:—Held, upon petition by B. in the suit, that M. was responsible for the costs of the suit from beginning to end, and that H., though not personally cognisant of his partner's misconduct, was also liable, at all events, for costs incurred up to the time when upon the dissolution, in 1849, of the partnership between himself and M., his name ceased to appear on the records of the court as one of the solicitors for the co-plaintiffs in the suit. Ib.

Semble, that if B. had during the course of the litigation become aware of the use of his name, his subsequently omitting to interfere actively to prevent its continuance would not, per se, have been sufficient to relieve the solicitors from liability to him for the costs. Ib.

2. The name of a plaintiff having been inserted on the record without his knowledge, consent, or authority, on motion by the defendants to dismiss for want of prosecution, and on motion by the plaintiff to have his name struck out from the record:—Held, that the solicitors to the record who had purported to act for the said plaintiff, were liable to pay his costs of the motion as between solicitor and client, and also to pay the costs of the defendants of the action and all the motions therein. Nurse v. Durnford, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 764; 49 L. J., Ch., 229; 41 L. T. 611; 28 W. R. 145.

The practice at common law as laid down in Reynolds v. Horrell (8 L. R., Q. B., 398) followed. Ib.

It appearing that the solicitors had inserted the plaintiff's name through the fault of a deceased co-plaintiff:—Semble, they would have a right of proof for the costs they were ordered to pay against his estate. Ib.

3. Where a solicitor has commenced an action in the name of a plaintiff without authority, the proper course is for the plaintiff to serve notice of motion on the defendant, as well as on the solicitor, that the action may be dismissed, and that the solicitor may pay the costs of the plaintiff as between solicitor and client, and the costs of the defendant as between party and party. In cases where no rule of practice is laid down by the new orders, under the Judicature Act, and there is a variance between the old practice of the Chancery and common law courts, that practice is to prevail which is considered by the Court most convenient. Newbiggin-by-the-Sea Gas Co. v. Armstrong, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 310; 49 L. J., Ch., 231; 41 L. T. 637; 28 W. R. 217.

4. When a solicitor acts without authority, he must as a general rule pay the costs thereby occasioned. Re Savage, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 557; 29 W. R. 348.

5. Where an action was commenced on behalf of a married woman by a next friend acting without her authority, the Court, on the application of the defendants, ordered the action to be dismissed, and that the solicitors acting for the next friend should pay all the costs. Schjott v. Schjott, 45 L. T. 333.

6. The rule that proceedings taken by a solicitor without proper authority will be annulled with costs, to be paid by him, does not apply unless he was aware of the circumstances which invalidated his authority; and notice from the other side is not sufficient to fix him with knowledge, if he had good reason to suppose that the facts stated in the notice were not true. Thomas v. Finlayson, 19 W. R. 255.

7. Costs paid under a decree or order, which is afterwards reversed on appeal, must be repaid by the solicitor who received them to the person from whom they were received. Malone v. O'Connor, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 13.

3. Compromise of Actions.

8. An attorney on behalf of his client, the defendant, promises to pay 500*l.* to plaintiff; this being done by the authority of the client, attorney not liable, but only client. Otherwise, if the attorney had no authority from client to make this engagement. Johnson v. Ogilby, 3 P. W. 277. See Exp. Bentley, 2 Dea. & Ch. 578; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 39.

Brokers and factors, who act or agree for their principals, not liable in their own capacities. Id. 279.

9. A party is bound by the consent of his counsel given in court, though they had no instructions to consent, if they were at the time apprised of all those facts of which the knowledge was essential to the proper exercise of their discretion, but he will be relieved from an order made by such consent, if they give that consent in ignorance of material circumstances. How far a party will be affected by the remissness of his solicitor in not immediately objecting to an order, made by consent of counsel in court, when neither the party nor his solicitor was present, and instructions to consent had not been given by either. Furnival v. Bogle, 4 Russ. 142; 6 L. J., Ch., 91.

10. An avoué in Canada has authority to bind his client by any proceeding in the cause, but not by any transaction dehors the cause, such as an agreement to settle. King v. Pinsonneault, 6 L. R., P. C., 245; 44 L. J., P. C., 244; 32 L. T. 174; 23 W. R. 576.

11. A solicitor has authority to enter into an undertaking on behalf of his client, not to issue a writ of fierti facias against the client's debtor, in consideration of the acceleration of payment of the debt. Re Commonwealth Land, Building, Estate, & Auction Co., Exp. Hollington, 43 L. J., Ch., 99; 29 L. T. 502; 22 W. R. 106.

12. An attorney has not, by virtue of his office, an implied authority to compromise an action, but a client may become bound by a compromise entered into by his attorney without his authority, by not repudiating it within a reasonable time. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 24 Beav. 549; 3 Jur., N. S., 1109; 27 L. J., Ch., 35. And see 8 C. at law, 1 C. B., N. S., 364; 3 Jur., N. S., 85; 26 L. J., C. P., 97.

A compromise is nothing more than a sale of the subject matter of the suit by one party to the other; and as an attorney, acting within the scope of his authority, has no power to sell the subject matter of the suit to a stranger, so he has no power to sell it to the other side. Ib.

At the trial of an issue, counsel agreed upon terms of compromise, and it was made a rule of the court of common law. The compromise was unauthorised by the plaintiff, and effected without the instructions of his attorney. There being no subsequent acquiescence, a bill by the defendant in the action for specific performance of the compromise was dismissed. Ib. See 8 C. on appeal, slightly varying the decree, 4 Jur., N. S., 774; 27 L. J., Ch., 491; 6 W. R. 480.

If an agreement to compromise is sought to be enforced in a court of equity, the case will be tried on the ordinary principles which guide the Court in cases of specific performance. 8 C. 6 W. R. 10.

1. A solicitor or counsel has full authority to either compromise or abandon the claims of his client, provided it is in a matter within the scope of the suit. Re Wood, Exp. Wenham, 21 W. R. 104.

Scous, in a collateral matter. Ib.

2. A compromise entered into by a solicitor under his implied authority is not affected by his client's subsequent repudiation, nor by the client's previous express prohibition, unless the opposite party had notice of it. Berry v. Mullen, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 368.

4. Other Cases.

3. Upon enlarging the time for making an award, all parties consenting in court, except one, whose solicitor consented for him:—Held, this did not bind the client, though admitted it would have been binding at law. Colwell v. Child, 1 Ch. Ca. 86.

4. Four plaintiffs instituted an original and two supplemental causes, and three of the same plaintiffs on a subsequent abatement filed a supplemental bill by a new solicitor, making the other plaintiff a defendant, who also appeared by another solicitor. On a petition in the four causes, the solicitor in the last supplemental suit, and not the solicitor on the record in the first three causes, was held entitled to appear for the plaintiffs. Ward v. Swift, 6 Hare 309.

5. After considerable delay in the prosecution of a suit, the solicitor of a deceased party was served with a notice of motion:—Held, that his duty to the Court rendered it proper for him to appear on the motion. Charlie v. Gwynne, 9 Beav. 319.

6. Upon an alleged misjoinder of husband and wife as petitioners, counsel, upon the instructions of the solicitor, undertook to amend by making it the petition of the wife by her next friend:—Held, that the solicitor was not personally responsible for the performance of the undertaking. Re Williams,

12 Beav. 510; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 422; 14 Jur. 561.

7. In a sale under a decree, the solicitor of the plaintiffs, having the management of the sale, is to be considered (as between the vendors and the purchaser) to be the agent of all the parties to the suit. Dalby v. Pullen, 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J., Ch., 74.

8. A proper party to a suit, whose name has been inserted in the bill as a plaintiff, without his own knowledge or concurrence, will not, while the record remains in that state, be allowed to appear by a distinct solicitor. Pyecroft v. Gregory, 2 L. J., Ch., 122.

9. A plaintiff instructed his solicitor to give no further indulgence to the defendants: the solicitor's clerk, who was ignorant of that circumstance, and who was sworn to be ignorant of the practice of the Court, consented in writing, in the name of his master, to alterations made in the title of the answer after it was deposited with the clerk of records and writs. On the application of the plaintiff, the Court ordered the answer to be taken off the file, with liberty for the defendants to re-swear it within three weeks. Raistrick v. Elsworth, 12 Jur. 782.

10. A joint and several answer, filed for two persons by a solicitor having authority from one only, will not be ordered to be taken off the file on the application of one party in the absence of the other. Wiggins v. Peppin, 2 Beav. 403. And see 8 C. 3 Jur. 721.

11. Want of authority to the solicitor to file a bill cannot be raised in opposition to a motion in the cause; it must be made the subject of a substantive motion to stay proceedings or to take the bill off the file: and such a motion may be made by a defendant. Bowen v. Bowen, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 251.

12. A solicitor has authority to enter into an undertaking on behalf of his client, not to issue a writ of fiore facias against the client's debtor, in consideration of the acceleration of payment of the debt. Re Commonwealth Land, Building, Estate, & Auction Co., Exp. Hollington, 43 L. J., Ch., 99; 29 L. T. 502; 22 W. R. 106.

A breach of such an undertaking, by the issue of writs against the debtor, was held to be contrary to good faith, and the solicitor was ordered to pay the expenses of issuing such writs, and of an application to recover them. Ib.

13. A brother and sister entitled, in moieties, to a reversionary interest in a fund in court, mortgaged it to secure a debt of the brother, the sister joining as surety for the brother. The mortgagee obtained a stop order, and afterwards on his marriage assigned the mortgage to trustees, who however neither obtained a stop order nor gave notice to the sister of the settlement. On a petition by the brother, stating that the tenant for life had assigned to him her life interest in his share of the fund and that he had paid a portion of the mortgage, and praying for a transfer of his share of the fund, a solicitor who had acted for the sister, and for the mortgagee on the occasion of the mortgage, took upon himself, without authority, to instruct counsel to appear for the sister and her husband, and also for the mortgagee, who was abroad, and to consent to, or not oppose, the petition. Upon the hearing of this petition the fund was ordered to be and was transferred out of court:—Held, that the mortgagee was not bound by the unauthorised appearance for him. Wheatley v. Bastow, 7 De G. M. & G. 261; 1 Jur., N. S., 1124; 24 L. J., Ch., 727.

1. Where a solicitor has put in a fraudulent defence for his client without the knowledge of the client, the client is not bound by the act of the solicitor. Williams v. Preston, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 672; 51 L. J., Ch., 927; 47 L. T. 265; 30 W. R. 555.

2. An order to attend proceedings obtained by a solicitor without the written authority of his client, will be discharged on the application of that client. Bird v. Harris, 43 L. T. 434; 29 W. R. 45.

3. A solicitor has no implied authority to pledge his client's credit to counsel by an express promise to pay his fees, whether they relate to litigation or not, so as to enable the counsel to sue the client for them. Moatyn v. Moatyn, Ex p. Barry, 5 L. R., Ch., 457; 39 L. J., Ch., 780; 18 W. R. 657; 22 L. T., N. S., 461.

[Entry of Appearance.] See PRACTICE (APPEARANCE).

V. PERSONAL LIABILITY WHEN ACTING FOR CLIENT.

4. In what case an agreement made by a scrivener, on behalf of his client, to compound a debt, shall bind the scrivener, though not the client. Parrot v. Wells, 2 Vern. 127.

5. Semble, the defendant's attorney, having given a written undertaking to pay to the plaintiff whatever the deficit might be on a sale of the mortgaged premises under the decree in a foreclosure suit, will be compelled to perform it, notwithstanding the death of his client. Bailey v. Daniell, Hay & J. 586.

6. A solicitor who attends a sale, and bids for his client, is responsible for the payment of the deposit, and will be attached if it is not paid. Hobhouse v. Hamilton, 1 Hog. 401.

7. A solicitor contracted, in his own name, to purchase a freehold; he resisted the performance of it on the ground that he had acted as the mere agent of a client, and that, it being a case of hardship, damages at law would be an adequate remedy to the vendor:—Held, that he was bound to perform the contract. Saxon v. Blake, 29 Beav. 438.

8. A contract having been entered into by a firm of solicitors acting on behalf of their client, to pay the plaintiff certain sums of money, the plaintiff filed a bill against the client and the solicitors, alleging that the client was bound by the contract, but that the client denied that he was so bound, on the ground that the solicitors had no authority to enter into such contract, and the bill prayed specific performance by the client or otherwise, if it should appear that the solicitors were not authorised, then that the solicitors themselves might be declared personally liable to perform the same. A demurrer to the bill by the solicitors was allowed on the ground that the plaintiff did not himself allege that the client was not bound, and, also, that alternative relief could not be prayed against one defendant in case relief could not be

VI. RETAINER. OTHER CASES.

9. A retainer implies a promise to pay all costs rightly and properly incurred upon the retainer. Bolden v. Nicholas, 3 Jur., N. S., 884.

10. The retainer and employment of a solicitor in such a matter as a bankruptcy, an administration, or winding-up, do not constitute an entire contract so as to deprive the solicitor of his right to payment, except for costs out of pocket, till the whole matter is completed, and successive bills of costs in such a matter are not necessarily to be treated as one bill brought down to the date of the latest delivery. Re Hall and Barker, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 538; 47 L. J., Ch., 621; 26 W. R. 501.

11. Semble, there is no doubt of the unsoundness of the doctrine that A. employing B., a professional lawyer, to do any act for the benefit of C., A. having to pay B., and there being no intercourse of any sort between B. and C., if through the gross negligence or ignorance of B. in transacting the business, C. loses the benefit intended for him by A., C. may maintain an action against B., and recover damages for the loss sustained. If this were law a disappointed legatee might sue the solicitor employed by a testator to make a will in favour of a stranger, whom the solicitor never saw or before heard of, if the will were void for not being properly signed and attested. There must be privity of contract between the parties. Robertson v. Fleming, 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 167.

[Retaining Fee. Currency.] 12. The fees of solicitors and attorneys in Ireland upon retainers, since the 5th January 1826, are within the 4th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 79, and therefore not payable in the present currency. Solicitors and Attorneys in Ireland (case of), L. & G. temp. Sugd. 349.

VII. AUTHORITY. OTHER CASES.

13. An objection to title on purchase having been waived, an offer of compensation made by a clerk of the vendor's solicitor, without express authority, is of no effect. Burnell v. Brown, 1 Jac. & Walk. 168.

14. A vendor instructed her solicitors to sell a house, subject to stipulations, for a fixed sum; and an intending purchaser agreed to give the sum. After some delay, the solicitors of the vendor wrote to the purchaser to say, that they had been instructed "to proceed with the sale to you of these premises. The draft contract is being prepared, and will be forwarded to you for approval in a few days":—Held, first, that this acceptance was conditional upon the terms of the draft contract being agreed to. Chinnoch v. Ely (Marohioness), 11 Jur., N. S., 329; 13 W. R. 597; 12 L. T., N. S., 251. Reversing 13 W. R. 176; 11 L. T., N. S., 536.

Held, secondly, that if such acceptance had been unconditional, it would not have been binding upon the vendor, as it would have been ultra vires the solicitors. Id.

1. The mere fact that a solicitor is in possession of a mortgage deed executed by his client does not authorise him to receive the mortgage money for the client. If the client has not received the money the mortgagee cannot maintain the validity of the mortgage deed by showing that he paid the money to the solicitor, unless he can show that the solicitor was expressly authorised by the client to receive it. Exp. Swinbanks, Re Shanks, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 525; 48 L. J., Bky., 120; 27 W. R. 898; 40 L. T. 825.

A solicitor, having been instructed by a client to raise 400*l.* for him by a mortgage of some houses belonging to him, prepared a mortgage of the property to another client, the deed containing a recital that the mortgagor had applied to the mortgagee for a loan of 400*l.*, which the mortgagee had agreed to lend on the security of a mortgage of the property. The solicitor induced the mortgagor to execute the deed, without receiving the money, and afterwards handed it over to the mortgagee as security for a debt of 300*l.* which he (the solicitor) already owed to the mortgagee, telling him that he had himself made advances to the mortgagor. He had, in fact, advanced the mortgagor 200*l.* The solicitor soon after absconded. It was not shown that the mortgagor had expressly authorised him to receive the mortgage money:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that, even if it was the intention of the mortgagor that the solicitor should be paid the 200*l.* out of the 400*l.* when paid by the mortgagee, the mortgagee was not entitled to hold the mortgage deed as security to the extent of the 200*l.* due from the mortgagor to the solicitor. The deed was accordingly declared void as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor. Id.

V. Change of.

2. Where plaintiff changes his solicitor, the former solicitor has no right to stop him from proceeding till his costs are paid. O'Dea v. O'Dea, 1 Sch. & Lef. 315.

3. Attorney cannot be changed without leave of the Court: whether he can relinquish the suit, though not paid, and as to the effect of security, quære. Conell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. 281.

4. A solicitor may refuse to continue in the conduct of a suit upon sufficient grounds, and, upon his giving up the suit before it is concluded, upon good grounds, he may sue his client for the costs incurred during the time of being employed. Bryan v. Twigg, 3 L. J., Ch., 114.

5. Where a solicitor by arrangement with his client retired from the conduct of a suit in equity, and another solicitor conducted it thenceforth to its conclusion:—Held, on there being a deficiency in the fund applicable to the payment of costs, that the latter solicitor had priority. Cormack v. Beisley, 3 De G. & J. 157.

6. The Order of the 18th October, 1842, is intended to substitute the solicitor for the six clerks, and not to give the solicitor a right to insist, as against his client, upon acting in the cause until removed by the order of the Court. Ward v. Swift, 6 Hare 309.

7. Upon the decease of the solicitor employed by a party to a suit, proceedings taken by a new solicitor employed by him are regular, although the change of solicitor is not authorised by any special order of the Court. Whalley v. Whalley, 17 Jur. 254; 22 L. J., Ch., 632.

8. When a plaintiff in a creditor's suit sells his debt after decree, the purchaser has no right to an order of course to change solicitors. Topping v. Searson, 2 Hem. & M. 205.

The proper course, in such a case, is for the purchaser to bring all the facts before the Court on a motion to obtain the conduct of the cause. Id.

Semble, that the Court would not entertain such a motion where the debt was insignificant, if it was opposed by the principal creditors. Id.

9. An order of course had been obtained at the Rolls to change the solicitor of two of the defendants. The solicitor was a mortgagee of certain sums of money to which these defendants were entitled in the cause, and by the mortgage deed there were special powers given to him to conduct the suit on their behalf. On motion, the order of the Rolls discharged, with costs, as it ought to have been made the subject of a special application. Jenkins v. Bryant, 3 Drew. 70; 18 Jur. 992; 3 W. R. 30; 3 Eq. Rep. 61.

10. A country solicitor agreed to employ a town agent for fifteen years. Before the expiration of the term, he obtained an order of course, in a suit, to change the agent, suppressing the existence of the special contract. The order was discharged for irregularity, with costs. Richards v. Scarborough Market Co., 17 Beav. 83; 17 Jur. 294; 22 L. J., Ch., 759; 1 W. R. 250.

11. Three petitioners retained the same solicitor in an application to wind up a company. The order was made, and subsequently two of the petitioners severed, and obtained an order of course at the Rolls to change their solicitor:—Held, that the two had no right to act separately, and the order to change solicitors must be discharged. Re Norwich and Norfolk Provident Permanent Building Society, 22 W. R. 854.

I. GENERAL DUTIES.

12. When lands are decreed to be sold, the solicitor of the defendant, the inheritor, is bound to give the benefit of his peculiar means of information and assistance in making out title, for which he is to be paid a reasonable compensation. Blennerhassett v. M'Namara, 1 Moll. 52.

1. It is to be presumed that legal advisers, in discharge of their duty to their client, investigate suspicious transactions and satisfy themselves, before they approve them, that it is for the client's benefit to confirm them. De Montmorency v. Devereux, West 64; 7 Cl. & F. 188; 2 Dr. & Wal. 410; 4 Jur. 403. Affirming 1 Dr. & Wal. 119.

2. An attorney is bound to give sufficient advice to his client; and if any advantage of property come to him by his ignorance, or the neglect of his duty, he shall be a trustee thereof for the benefit of the person who would be entitled thereto, if the attorney had known and done his duty. Bulkley v. Wilford, 2 Cl. & F. 177; 8 Bli. N. S. 111.

3. A prudent solicitor never takes an order for time to answer, on the condition of a sergeant-at-arms, in the terms of the 21st Order of December 1833. Holmes v. Baddeley, 7 Beav. 69.

4. Solicitors are justified in obtaining from a witness, prior to his examination, a statement of the facts; but it is improper to obtain a statement upon oath, unless required for the purpose of the cause. Harvey v. Mount, 8 Beav. 439; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233; 9 Jur. 741.

5. Semble, it is a breach of duty in a solicitor, for which he may justly be blamed, if, in dealing with a public company, he places the smallest reliance on any representation of any agent of the company as to its future acts. A solicitor, dealing with a public company, ought never to be satisfied with anything but the most solemnly-executed agreement of the company. Leominster Canal Co. v. Shrewsbury & Hereford Railway Co., 3 Jur., N. S., 930.

6. There is no obligation on an attorney or a solicitor to produce his client for the purpose of being served with process by a third person, and a security obtained by the solicitor from his client during the period of the client's concealment will not be thereby avoided in favour of such third person. Shaw v. Neale, 6 H. L. Ca. 581; 4 Jur., N. S., 695; 27 L. J., Ch., 444.

7. A solicitor, before instituting proceedings for a client, especially on behalf of a wife against her husband, is bound to ascertain how the facts stand, and whether there is a reasonable expectation that the proceedings will be successful. Baylis v. Watkins, 10 Jur., N. S., 114; 33 L. J., Ch., 300; 12 W. R. 324; 9 L. T., N. S., 741.

8. An attorney, not acting as such on a particular occasion for his client, may throw off that character, and exercise his independent rights. Austin v. Chambers, 6 Cl. & F. 1.

9. Duty of solicitors to check useless litigation. Ottley v. Gilby, 8 Beav. 602; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177.

10. If a solicitor institutes unnecessary proceedings, the Court will take care that the client shall not suffer by the course adopted. Wood v. Wood, 4 Russ. 558.

11. In a cause which has been much delayed, the Court will not, at the expense of farther delay, relieve the plaintiff from the consequences of the gross neglect of his solicitor. Turner v. Turner, 1 Swan. 156.

12. A bankrupt having employed A., a solicitor, to procure signatures of creditors to his certificate, and then ceased to employ him, cannot oblige his A.'s clerk to make affidavit of witnessing the signatures without first paying A. his costs for such business. Eap. Shore, Re Lucas, 1 Dea. & Ch., 509; Mont. & B. 268; 1 L. J., N. S., Bky., 115.

13. Solicitor who had instituted suit as plaintiff's solicitor, but was afterwards made defendant, after several years, not having put in an answer, ordered to answer within a week. Mootham v. Hale, 3 Ves. & B. 92.

14. It is the duty of solicitors to have the original documents at the hearing. Gallimore v. Gill, 4 W. R. 773.

Protection by taking Opinion of Counsel.]

15. Counsel's opinion is not necessarily a justification of a solicitor for the course he adopts in the conduct of a suit. Bryan v. Twigg, 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 114.

16. Quare, how far an attorney is justified, as between him and his client, by the opinion of counsel, in prosecuting an action which is unsuccessful, and which the Court considers to have been groundless. Re Clark, 1 De G. M. & G. 43; 15 Jur. 1047; 21 L. J., Ch., 20. Affirming 13 Beav. 173.

An attorney is clearly responsible unless acting on the opinion of counsel. S. C. 13 Beav. 173.

II. ACTING FOR SEVERAL CLIENTS.

17. Practice for one solicitor and clerk in Court to be concerned for all parties, admitted; but disapproved by the Lord Chancellor. Dyott v. Anderson, 3 Ves. & B. 177.

18. A joint and several answer filed for two persons by a solicitor, having authority from one only, will not be ordered to be taken off the file on the application of one party in the absence of the other. Wiggins v. Peppin, 2 Beav. 403; 3 Jur. 721.

19. Co-plaintiffs may employ separate solicitors acting by a common agent. Waldon v. Thompson, 37 L. J., Ch., 751; 6 L. R., Eq., 7.

20. Where, in a mortgage transaction, the mortgagor is himself a solicitor, and prepares the mortgage deed, the mortgagee employing no other solicitor, the mortgagor is considered as the agent or solicitor of the mortgagee in the transaction: and it makes no difference that the mortgagor is not paid by the mortgagee. Hewitt v. Loosemore, 9 Hare 449; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 69; 15 Jur. 1097.

21. Sufficient ground for the interference of equity that a person entrusted to act as attorney for all parties, abuses the confidence placed in him. Costigan v. Hastler, 2 Sch. & Lef. 165.

22. The solicitor appointed by the creditors' assignees is the solicitor of all the assignees in the bankruptcy; but he is not by such appointment otherwise constituted the agent of the official assignee. Hughes v. Morris, 9 Hare 636. See S. C. 16 Jur. 603; 21 L. J., Ch., 761.

23. Quare, whether a solicitor acting for both sides, if he omits to call for payment of the trust-moneys into court, may not be made answerable for any loss occasioned thereby. Gresley v. Heathcote, 3 L. J., Ch., 107.

1. In a transaction where a lease was assigned as a security for a loan, a solicitor, generally acting for the borrower in other cases as well as in this, acted also for the lender, but did not make to the latter any charge for his services:—Held, that he was nevertheless liable to the latter, and his representatives, for a failure of the security occasioned by want of notice to the lessor. Donaldson v. Haldane, 7 Cl. & F. 762.

2. A. purchased an estate from B., and on the completion, one solicitor acted for both parties, and the purchase money was paid into his hands. Afterwards, the purchaser was defeated by C., who had a paramount mortgage. The purchaser presented a petition against the solicitor, asking payment by the solicitor out of the purchase money of the losses occasioned, or that he might indemnify the petitioner. The petition was dismissed with costs, the Court holding, first, that it had no jurisdiction to award compensation or damages in such a case; and, secondly, that the money having come to the hands of the solicitor as agent of the vendor, and not of the petitioner, it could not interfere. Tylee v. Webb, Re Hinton, 14 Beav. 14; 15 Jur. 1023.

3. H. and B. were clients of the same solicitor M., to whom B. gave an authority in writing to sell certain property. Acting on this authority M. entered into an agreement with H. to sell the property to him:—Held (reversing 2 Jur., N. S., 922), that this was a transaction in which there was a necessity for the utmost openness of dealing, and the Court, not being satisfied that this existed in the case before it, refused specific performance of the agreement entered into. Hesse v. Briant, 6 De G. M. & G. 623; 5 W. R. 108.

M., a solicitor, had a written authority from B., his client, to sell certain property for 1,100l. Without the knowledge of B. he had previously written to H., another client, about the purchase of the same by H., but B. had told M. that H. had made a proposal to that effect. On the day when the authority was signed, H. called at M.'s office, where B. was at the time, but retired as H. was announced, and M. then offered H. the property for 1,125l. Four days afterwards a contract for the sale of the same at that amount was signed by M. as agent for B., and by H. as purchaser. M. informed B. next day of the fact of the sale, but did not name H., and it did not appear that B. knew that H. was the purchaser for some weeks afterwards. There was no satisfactory evidence of inadequacy of price. Bill for specific performance of the contract of sale dismissed. Id.

III. ACTING FOR TRUSTEES.

4. It is the duty of a solicitor to inform his client, when a trustee, that if he does not tax his bill of costs, the items not properly chargeable will be disallowed in passing his account. Exp. Flower, 18 L. T., N. S., 457.

5. It is improper conduct in a solicitor acting for a trustee to attempt to protect his client against the just demands of a cestui que trust by throwing formal difficulties in the way of the latter, which the solicitor would not otherwise have insisted on as necessary for the protection of his client. Aylmer v. Winterbottom, 4 Jur., N. S., 19.

Liability of Trustees for Acts of. See TRUSTS, XXII. 1. 4.

IV. ACTING AGAINST FORMER CLIENT OR DISCLOSING HIS AFFAIRS.

6. An attorney, or solicitor, cannot give up his client and act for the opposite party in any suits between them. Cholmondeley (Earl) v. Clinton (Lord), 19 Ves. 261.

Attorney is prevented from communicating his client's secrets, even by striking off the roll: not permitted to give evidence of them. Id. 268.

Solicitors in partnership cannot dissolve their partnership, as against their client, without his consent, so as to enable the retiring partner, as discharged, to act against him. Id. 273.

Practice of solicitors, partners, dividing business, considering one only as agent to the other, disallowed, the client being entitled to their united exertions. Id.

7. Motion to restrain a solicitor from giving evidence of confidential matters, refused; the propriety of his being examined being left to the consideration of the Court before which he might appear as a witness. Beer v. Ward, Jac. 77.

A solicitor who has been discharged, may, upon proof of his misconduct, be restrained from communicating information that came to him confidentially from his client, semble. Id.

8. Injunction decreed to restrain a solicitor from communicating, to a party who was suing a former client, documents or matters of evidence which had come to the possession or knowledge of the solicitor in respect of his employment for such client, and to restrain the party suing from using in his action, or otherwise, any documents or matters of evidence which he had so obtained. Lewis v. Smith, 1 Macn. & G. 417.

9. Refusal by the Court of an application for disclosure by solicitor of his client's address. Clark v. Compton, 4 N. R. 15.

10. A bill was filed by the residuary legatees under a will, against the executors, of whom one was also beneficially interested as a legatee, and had undertaken the sole management of its affairs. The bill charged particular acts of mismanagement, and the appropriation by the managing executor to his own purposes of part of the trust funds. The solicitor for the plaintiffs, having been for several years the friend and solicitor of the managing executor, had become well acquainted with the circumstances of the trust; he had been engaged in recovering money from a debtor to the estate, and had been consulted by the managing executor when one of the residuary legatees, the present plaintiff, had applied for the executorship accounts, which had been delivered under the solicitor's advice.

The solicitor's bill for the matters was made out against the managing executor, not as executor, but personally. The bill was taxed, and an action brought for the amount, which was paid, and the character of solicitor and client thus ceased in 1847. A motion by the managing executor, the former client, for an injunction to restrain the solicitor from acting as the solicitor for the plaintiffs in the cause against him, was dismissed. Parratt v. Parratt, 2 De G. & Sm. 258; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 346; 12 Jur. 740.

1. A clerk to a solicitor commencing practice for himself, not to be restrained from acting as solicitor for parties against whom his master was employed, upon general allegations of his having in his former service acquired information likely to be prejudicial to the clients of his master. Bricheno v. Thorp, Jac. 300.

2. A solicitor who has been discharged by his client, cannot be afterwards concerned against him in the same suit. Hutchins v. Hutchins, 1 Hog. 315.

3. B. E. L. filed a bill for the guardian of a female infant, and acted as the infant's solicitor, until the cause abated by her marriage, when her husband peremptorily refused to revive it: B. E. L. then ceased to act as solicitor in the cause, although his name remained as solicitor upon record, but he prepared the infant's marriage settlement, and after the marriage acted as the husband's solicitor in taking steps with a view to effect a loan of money to pay off all charges on the wife's estate, of which B. E. L. finally offered to take an assignment to himself upon certain terms: the husband having declined the loan upon the terms proposed, B. E. L. filed a bill in the name of C. M. to foreclose a mortgage upon the wife's estate: the statements in the second bill were very similar to those of the first bill, except a charge which was directly contrary to the opinion given by counsel: C. M. had been made a party to the first cause, in which his mortgage, although at one time disputed, was finally fully admitted; B. E. L. had been solicitor to C. M. long before he became concerned for the husband and wife: B. E. L. was restrained at the instance of the husband and wife from acting in the second cause as solicitor for C. M., who was also restrained from employing him. Brady v. Lawless, Sau. & Sc. 365. n.

4. A., a solicitor, had been employed by B. to negotiate and conclude an agreement on her behalf. Disputes then arose between them as to A.'s bill of costs, which B. procured to be taxed and reduced. A suit was subsequently commenced by C. against B., the object of which was to set aside the agreement, and in which A. and D., who had lately become his partners, were solicitors for C. The Court restrained A. and D. from acting as the solicitor of C. in the suit, and restrained A. from communicating to C. any information relating to the agreement that had come to his knowledge confidentially as the solicitor of B. Davies v. Clough, 8 Sim. 262; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 113; 1 Jur. 5. Affirmed 8 Sim. 269. n.

5. The solicitor of a deceased client, and who had also acted as such for his executrix and devisee, was restrained, at their instance, from acting as solicitor for a creditor, in whose name he had filed a bill to raise the amount of a judgment debt out of the estate of the deceased; although such creditor had been the client of the solicitor before he became concerned for the deceased, and although the solicitor contended that he had been discharged, and insisted that it was not in his power to communicate anything which could injure the estate; all material facts and documents having, as he alleged, been put in issue by a bill, previously filed by another creditor of the deceased. It appearing however, from inspection of the two bills, that a document, which the solicitor himself had recommended to be kept secret, was more fully stated in the bill filed by the solicitor than in the bill filed by the other creditor, and that such statement of it must have been made from an inspection of the document:—Held, that the Court will not permit a solicitor to disclose any communications, made to him in that character, and will not speculate about their materiality:—Held, also, that the obligation to keep secret confidential communications does not cease with the death of the client. Biggs v. Head, Sau. & Sc. 335. See also Hobhouse v. Hamilton, id. 359. n. Keon v. Nesbitt, id. 365. n. Waller v. Fowler, id. 869. n.

Semble, there is no substantial distinction between the cases of a discharged solicitor, and of one who refuses to act. Id.

The application to restrain a solicitor may be made by motion in the cause in respect of which such injunction is sought, and need not necessarily be made by petition. Id.

6. The Court refused to restrain, at the instance of an administratrix, a solicitor who had acted on behalf of the administratrix in the affairs of her intestate's estate, from acting as the solicitor of some of the next of kin in a suit for the administration of the estate. Hutchinson v. Newark, 3 De G. & Sm. 727.

7. How far solicitor may, after being concerned for one party, be restrained from being concerned for the opposite party. Robinson v. Mullett, 4 Price 353.

8. The jurisdiction to restrain a solicitor from acting for the antagonist of his former client is founded upon the principle that a man ought to be restrained from doing any act contrary to the duty he owes to another; and will be exercised at the instance of the former client, irrespective of the question whether the solicitor was discharged by him or had discharged himself, whenever the transaction in reference to which the injunction is sought so flows out of or is connected with that in which the solicitor was formerly retained that the same matter of dispute may probably arise. Hutchins v. Hutchins (1 Hog. 315) and Biggs v. Head (Sau. & Sc. 335) approved and adopted. On appeal, the injunction granted by the Vice-Chancellor was disapproved and dissolved by consent, the solicitor undertaking not to disclose his client's secrets. Little v. Kingwood Collieries Co., 20 L. R., Ch. D., 733; 52 L. J., Ch., 56; 47 L. T. 323; 51 W. R. 178. Reversing 51 L. J., Ch., 498.

9. Notwithstanding the rule that a solicitor must not use information acquired in his professional capacity in any subsequent proceedings against his former client, a solicitor, who has acted in the formation of a company and been discharged, may act for a petitioner to wind up the same company, when all the facts upon which the petition is based might have been ascertained by any person in the position of the petitioner. Re Holmes, Re Electric Power Co., 25 W. R. 603.

V. INVESTMENT OF CLIENT'S MONEY.

1. Scrivener, etc., receiving money, and giving a note to place it out at interest, is bound to do so, and is not discharged from paying interest for it, unless his employer accepts the security and interest. Balance of an account, stated by such scrivener, etc., will carry interest. Barrell v. Parker, 2 Ves. 364.

2. Scrivener or attorney puts out his client's money on a security, which he might on the least inquiry have found to be defective, or even where he had notice of ejectment delivered on a prior mortgage, yet could not be charged in equity to answer the money. Luke v. Bridges, Pre. Ch. 146.

3. Solicitor in a cause charged with interest on money directed to be laid out for an infant's benefit, notwithstanding a deed from his grandmother giving other moneys in trust for the infant, and directing that he should not be so chargeable. Brown v. Pring, 1 Ves. 407.

4. A solicitor took an insufficient security for his client, and the nature of the transaction was such as in the opinion of the Court to create a case of combined agency and trust:—Held (under the circumstances), that he was personally responsible for the deficiency, and for the costs of the suit. Craig v. Watson, 8 Beav. 427.

5. A solicitor, being entrusted with moneys from time to time, professed to lay them out upon ample and perfect security, only mentioning that one was reversionary. The solicitor died, and it was discovered that the mortgagors in every case were not worth suing, and two had been bankrupts, and he had himself purchased one security, but as to some railway shares he had been a loser. On claim filed alleging fraud, after six years, and a contention on the part of the general creditors that it was a case for damages for negligence and not for fraud:—Held, that in all the cases in some shape the estate of the deceased solicitor was liable; and although accounts had been rendered and might be regarded as settled, they were still open to surcharge and falsification; and where, as in this case, more than six years had elapsed, the remedy was in equity for gross negligence amounting to fraud. Smithe v. Pocock, 2 W. R. 285; 2 Drew. 197; 33 L. J., Ch., 545; 18 Jur. 478; 2 Eq. Rep. 368.

6. Want of fidelity in a solicitor cannot, upon a question of certificate, be visited with merely slight penalties, and public interest being concerned in the matter, no private dealing (an amount to a condonation of the offence. Exp. Selby, 6 De G. M. & G. 783; 2 Jur., N. S., 29; 25 L. J., Bky., 13.

Where, therefore, solicitors received a client's money, to be invested on good security, and applied it in repaying to one of them a sum which he had advanced on a mortgage of a reversionary interest in a trust fund (a transfer of the security to the client being prepared), and afterwards the transferor, who was one of the trustees of the fund, procured the concurrence of the cestuis que trustent, and also of his co-trustee (to whom he never disclosed the transfer), in selling out the fund, and thus realised the mortgage money, and applied it to his own use, but continued to pay the interest to the client, to whom he represented the mortgage as still subsisting:—Held, the solicitor having become bankrupt, that his certificate had been properly refused; and that the client's having continued to correspond with him after discovering the misconduct, did not alter the case. Ib.

7. A solicitor having received money to invest for a client upon mortgage of a particular property, represented in writing to the client that the money was all invested as arranged, and paid him interest as on the mortgage. After the solicitor's death it was discovered that the solicitor had not effected the mortgage, but had mixed the money with his own, and had invested a larger sum, purporting to be his own money, upon mortgage of the identical property. In a creditor's suit for the administration of the insolvent estate of the solicitor:—Held, under the circumstances, that the solicitor's estate was bound by the representation, and that the client's money was repayable out of the proceeds of sale of the mortgaged estate. Middleton v. Pollock, Exp. Wetherall, 46 L. J., Ch., 39; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 49; 35 L. T. 608; 25 W. R. 94.

8. A party gave a sum of money to a firm of solicitors, to invest upon freehold security. They found a security, and invested the money upon it. The security turned out valueless:—Held, that the giving money to a solicitor for the purpose of general investment does not in itself create the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, so as to make the solicitor liable as trustee for a deficiency in the security. Mare v. Lewis, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 219.

Held, also, that as this was a single isolated transaction, a bill for an account, as between principal and agent, could not be maintained as against the solicitors. Ib.

9. A solicitor invested the money of one of his clients without his knowledge on an improper mortgage security. The client, believing the security to be insufficient, proved against the estate of a partner of the solicitor, which was being administered in Chancery, for the whole amount of the debt, and, under a compromise, received a dividend out of the estate. Afterwards it turned out that the security was sufficient to pay the client in full:—Held, that the dividend must be repaid to the solicitor's estate, and did not enure for the benefit of the subsequent incumbrancers on the mortgaged property. Smyser v. Goodwin, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 351; 45 L. J., Ch., 289; 34 L. T., N. S., 635; 24 W. R. 493.

10. A client, in 1869, entrusted money to a solicitor to invest on mortgage of land, trusting to representations by the solicitor (who acted for both parties), that the property was of fee-simple tenure, and free from incumbrances. The mortgagor died in 1879, and the solicitor died in 1881, when the client discovered that part of the property was only leasehold for lives, and also that the solicitor held a prior mortgage on part of the lands. In an action to make the solicitor's estate liable for the deficiency of the security:—Held, that though on the evidence the solicitor would have had no defence to the action if brought in his lifetime, yet it was not maintainable against his executors. Young v. Wallingford, 52 L. J., Ch., 590; 48 L. T. 756; 31 W. R. 838.

Held, also, that the solicitor's mortgage must be postponed to the plaintiff's mortgage. Ib.

1. Where money is entrusted by A. to his solicitor for investment, but without any particular investment being then in contemplation, and is allowed to remain in the hands of the solicitor, the amount becomes a debt due from the solicitor to A. If the solicitor afterwards misapplies the money, and to cover his fraud obtains from another client, B., upon a false representation, a transfer of B.'s equitable interest under a previously executed mortgage, no money of A. being then paid to B., the transfer thus obtained may, on B. discovering the fraud, be set aside in equity, for no money of A. having been received by B. at the time the transfer was executed, no interest passed to A. by its execution. Wall v. Cookerell, 10 H. L. Ca. 229; 11 W. R. 442; 8 L. T., N. S., 1; 1 N. R. 486.

What circumstances may constitute acquiescence of B. in the solicitor's fraud, and deprive him of the right to relief. Ib.

2. A firm of solicitors received money from R., a client, for the purpose of investment. No investment was made at the time, and the money was employed by them for their own use. After the death of one of the partners his executors commenced a partnership action, in which H., the surviving partner, was appointed one of two receivers. H., without communicating with his co-receiver or with R., put certain deeds forming part of the partnership property into a box with R.'s name outside. R. subsequently obtained possession of these deeds and claimed to retain them as security for the money owing to her by the firm. The articles of partnership contained a clause providing that, on the death of either partner, the surviving partner should, within six months of the next general annual account, pay to the representatives of the deceased partner, his share of the profits of the year, and should execute a bond for payment within two years to them of the share of the capital of the deceased partner:—Held, that H. had no power of giving R. a security upon these deeds, which formed part of the partnership property, and that R. must deliver them up to the receivers in the partnership action. Hills v. Reeves, 30 W. R. 439. Affirmed 31 W. R. 209.

See also X. v. post.

VI. LIEN OF CLIENT.

3. A solicitor deposited some of his own deeds as a security for a sum of money due to two of his clients in a box belonging to them. He retained the box, but after his death it was found that he had abstracted the deeds from the solicitor's other deeds:—Held, that the clients had a lien on all the solicitor's other deeds for their debt. Mason v. Morley, 34 Beav. 475.

4. C., confidential solicitor of H., borrowed money on the security of his mortgage deeds, and purchased an estate. On payment of the mortgage, C. applied the money to the payment of his debt, representing to H. that the money was re-invested:—Held, that H. was entitled to a charge on the estate to the amount of his claim. Hopper v. Conyers, 2 L. R., Eq., 549; 12 Jur., N. S., 328; 14 W. R. 628.

VII. Negligence and Misconduct.

- I. Liability for. In General, 6395.
- II. Action for Negligence, 6397.
- III. Personal Liability for Costs, 6398.

I. LIABILITY FOR. IN GENERAL.

5. If a solicitor, knowing that money in court belongs to one person, presents a petition and obtains payment to another, he is personally responsible. The principle applies, if he has merely a knowledge of circumstances, which, if duly considered, would lead to a knowledge of the facts. Ezart v. Lister, 5 Beav. 585; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 11.

6. An attorney on behalf of his client, the defendant, promises to pay 500l. to plaintiff; this being done by the authority of the client, attorney not liable, but only client. Otherwise, if the attorney had no authority from client to make this engagement. Johnson v. Ogilby, 3 P. W. 277.

7. Attorney as agent, on sale of an estate, not disclosing to the buyer an incumbrance, and leading him to suppose the title would be a good one, held liable to make satisfaction in default of the vendor. Arnot v. Biscoe, 1 Ves. 95.

8. On a contract for purchase, a part of the purchase money was paid as "deposit" to the vendor's solicitor, who paid it away at the desire of the vendor without the concurrence of the purchaser. This created a difficulty in completing the purchase, as a mortgagee of the estate would not join in the conveyance without payment to him of the deposits. In a suit by the purchaser for specific performance, the solicitors were declared liable to make good the money. Wiggins v. Lord, 4 Beav. 30.

9. In 1825 an assignment from provisional assignee to assignee was prepared, but through neglect of solicitor never executed. The provisional assignment ordered to be vacated, and a new assignment executed by the commissioners. It seems the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 56, s. 25, does not apply in such a case. The solicitor, having been paid for the assignment, ordered to refund. Exp. Bennett, Re Stephens, 2 Mont. & A. 306; 1 Dea. 70; 5 L. J., N. S., Bky., 5.

10. The solicitor for some of the defendants was agent for the rest; the former were entitled to move to dismiss, and they moved accordingly, but no order could be made, as the time for the other defendants to answer the amendment had not expired. Motion refused with costs, as the solicitor must have known that the motion could not succeed. Partington v. Baillie, 5 Sim. 667; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 40.

1. On a contract for the sale of part of an estate, the purchaser requiring a fine to be levied of it for the purpose of removing admitted defects in the title, the vendor employed an attorney who was his relation, and had been professionally employed by him on previous occasions, to levy the fine and complete the contract. The attorney advised the levying of a fine of the whole of the vendor's estate, without telling him the effect of it; such fine was accordingly levied, and the vendor died without declaring its uses, and without re-publishing his will, previously made, by which he had devised the whole estate to his wife, who survived him. After the vendor's death the attorney claimed the estate as his heir-at-law, alleging that the will was revoked by the fine, and he brought actions of ejectment to recover possession thereof. The widow filed a bill in Chancery for relief; and on an issue directed by that court, a jury found that the attorney fraudulently omitted to tell the vendor what effect the fine would have upon a devise of the property comprised in it. The Court of Chancery, upon that verdict, decreed the attorney to be a trustee for the devisee of the lands and hereditaments, which so descended to him as heir-at-law. The House of Lords, affirming that decree, further held, that the attorney's alleged ignorance of the effect of a fine on a will of the lands comprised in it, and his omission to inquire whether the consor, his client, had made a will, were such professional ignorance and neglect as afforded a principle by which a court of equity might, independently of the ground of fraud, hold him to be a trustee, for a third person, of any benefit resulting to himself, from his professional ignorance or neglect, to the prejudice of that person. Bulkley v. Wilford, 2 Cl. & F. 102; 8 Bli. N. S. 111.

An attorney shall not be heard to plead ignorance of the effect of a fine on a will; he is bound to have the knowledge and to give the information to his client, and shall not have any benefit from his ignorance. The principles of equity that are applied to trustees are also applicable to persons entrusted with the management of property, in legal proceedings respecting it, even without fraud. S. C. 2 Cl. & F. 181; 8 Bli. N. S. 111.

It is a principle of equity that no professional man shall take advantage of his ignorance or negligence. An attorney should know that a fine would revoke a will, and he as well as a barrister is bound to know the effect of acts which he is often employed to perform. S. C. 2 Cl. & F. 183; 8 Bli. N. S. 111.

It is the duty of an attorney employed to levy a fine, to ask his client whether he has made his will. S. C. 2 Cl. & F. 179; 8 Bli. N. S. 111.

2. A. and B. were in partnership as solicitors. A. received from a client, H., 4,000*l.* to be laid out on good mortgage security, and without consulting H. lent it to B., taking a transfer of a mortgage which B. had for the same amount on a reversionary interest belonging to S. in a sum of stock, and the money was applied for the purposes of the firm. In the next year the stock was sold out, and the proceeds received by B., who was one of the trustees. H.'s 4,000*l.* was never again in any way secured, but the firm at first, and afterwards B., continued to pay him interest for twenty years, as on S.'s security, and represented to him that the money remained on that security. In 1850 H. discovered the truth, but still remained on friendly terms with B. B. became bankrupt in 1854, and the money was lost:—Held, that B. had been guilty of such a gross breach of the obligations of a solicitor to his client—obligations which the interests of society require the Court strictly to enforce—that a certificate could not be granted. Exp. Selby, 2 Jur., N. S., 29; 25 L. J., Bky., 13; 8 De G. M. & G. 783.

The advancing the money to one of the partners was a breach of duty, though this alone might not be enough to disentitle the bankrupt to his certificate, Semble. Id.

Held, that the conduct of the client after discovering the fraud could not have the effect of a condonation, the interests of society being involved. Id.

3. A solicitor was retained by a debtor to prepare a composition deed, the first trust of which was the payment of the costs of preparing the deed. The trustees accepted the trusts, and acted upon the deed. It was afterwards discovered, according to a case decided before the deed was prepared, that the deed was invalid, as not binding non-assenting creditors. The debtor was subsequently made bankrupt. The trustees refused to pay the solicitor's bill of costs, first, on the ground of non-retainer, and, secondly, on the ground of gross negligence; but both objections were overruled. Re Sadd, 11 Jur., N. S., 774; 34 L. J., Ch., 562; 13 W. R. 1009; 12 L. T., N. S., 816.

4. A receiver was appointed by the Court, upon the representation of the plaintiff's solicitor that the receiver had entered into the usual recognisances, which he had not, in fact, done. A loss occurred, in consequence of the receiver's liability being only in the nature of a simple contract debt. The solicitor was, at the instance of a defendant, made personally liable for the loss occasioned by his neglect. Simmons v. Rose, Weeks v. Ward, Re Ward, 31 Beav. 1.

Held, also, that the country solicitor was liable, though the representations were made by his London agents. Id.

5. B., being in pecuniary difficulties, consulted her solicitor as to the best means of raising money. He suggested that leasehold property, which had been settled by her upon trust for herself for life with remainder to her children, might be treated as belonging to her absolutely and be mortgaged. The trustees of the settlement declined to join in raising money, but, knowing all the circumstances of the case; retired from the trust conditionally on other trustees being appointed. This was done, and money raised by the new trustees, the existence of the settlement being concealed from the mortgagees. On a bill by the mortgagee against B., her solicitor, and the old and new trustees, nine years after the discovery of the fraud, praying for a declaration that all were liable to make good the moneys advanced by the mortgagee:—Held, that all were liable as prayed. Clark v. Hoskins, 15 W. R. 1161.

6. When it was sought to restrain a solicitor from proceeding in a suit to recover costs, and to declare him guilty of fraud, on the ground of not having disclosed a will affecting the title in property which his client was about to purchase, it appearing that a copy of the will having been handed to a solicitor who had previously acted for the vendee in the sale:—Held, that fraud should not be presumed against him, notwithstanding the fact that he had prepared an answer to be sworn by the plaintiff in a chancery suit, in which it was expressly stated that the plaintiff made the purchase without any notice of the will. M'Elroy v. Murphy, 22 W. R. 501.

1. The plaintiff advanced money on a mortgage of certain property, on the faith of certain representations made to him by the solicitor, who negotiated the mortgage for him, that the security offered was a good one. These representations were untrue, and were known by the solicitor, when he made them, to be so. The misrepresentation was not discovered until after the solicitor's death, and shortly after that the plaintiff commenced this action against the solicitor's executors to recover the amount lent, and the arrears of interest:—Held, that, although the plaintiff would have had a good claim against the solicitor himself if he had been alive, yet that, never having asserted it in his lifetime, he could not now, after the death of the person who was to blame for the loss, assert it against his representatives. Young v. Wallingford, 52 L. J., Ch., 590; 48 L. T., 756; 31 W. R. 838.

II. ACTION FOR NEGLIGENCE.

2. In an action on the case against an attorney for negligence, the Court held that the cause of action arose at the time the negligence occurred, and not at the time negligence was discovered, or the consequential damages ensued. Smith v. Fbz, 6 Hare 386; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 170; 2 Jur. 130.

3. The plaintiffs lent A. B. money on mortgage on the application of his solicitor, who assured them in writing, that in his opinion he would be able to pay the amount. The plaintiffs, alleging this to be a false and fraudulent misrepresentation, instituted a suit in equity to make the solicitor personally liable:—Held, that their remedy, if any, was at law. Whitmore v. Mackeson, 16 Beav. 126.

4. A solicitor who defends an action brought against him by a client, ought to be able to show grounds of defence not merely available at law, but affording a moral justification of the defence. Exp. & Re Blackhurst, 3 De G. & J. 39.

5. Although relief may be given at the suit of a client against his solicitor for loss sustained by gross negligence, yet where the loss was in respect of a matter of conduct as to which the advice of the solicitor was founded on the opinions of competent surveyors as to the value of the property, and those opinions submitted to the judgment of the client, the Court dismissed the bill; and as fraud and improper motives were charged without evidence to support those charges, the bill was dismissed with costs. Chapman v. Chapman, 9 L. R., Eq., 276; 18 W. R. 533; 22 L. T., N. S., 145.

6. A receiver was appointed by the Court, upon the representation of the plaintiff's solicitor that the receiver had entered into the usual recognisances, which he had not, in fact, done. A loss occurred, in consequence of the receiver's liability being only in the nature of a simple contract debt. The solicitor was, at the instance of a defendant, made personally liable for the loss occasioned by his neglect. Simmons v. Rose, Weeks v. Ward, Re Ward, 31 Beav. 1.

Held, also, that the country solicitor was liable, though the representations were made by his London agents. Id.

7. If a solicitor in a cause, having assumed, improperly, the character of a receiver, neglects to collect the rent, while the parties consider him to be acting as a receiver, he makes himself responsible for any rents lost in consequence of his neglect. Wood v. Wood, 4 Russ. 558.

8. Where an attorney, being employed by masters to take proceedings against apprentices for misconduct, did so specifically on a wrong section of a statute:—Held, such an instance of want of skill and diligence as to render him liable to repay to his clients all damages and costs occasioned by his error. Hart v. Frame, 6 Cl. & F. 193; MacL. & R. 595.

9. An attorney or law agent is only responsible in damages to his client for gross ignorance or gross negligence in the performance of his professional services. A declaration or a summons against an attorney or law agent to recover damages for loss occasioned by his mismanagement of a cause, must charge gross ignorance or gross negligence, or must at least contain allegations of facts from which the inference is inevitable that the defendant has been guilty of one or the other. The law as to both these matters is the same in England and in Scotland. Purves v. Landell, 12 Cl. & F. 91.

10. Allegation by client that costs have been occasioned by solicitor's negligence, is clear case of equitable set-off. Piggott v. Williams, 6 Madd. 95.

11. I never had any doubt of the unsoundness of the doctrine that A. employing B., a professional lawyer, to do any act for the benefit of C., A. having to pay B. and there being no intercourse of any sort between B. and C., if through the gross negligence or ignorance of B. in transacting the business, C. loses the benefit intended for him by A., C. may maintain an action against B., and recover damages for the loss sustained. If this were law, a disappointed legatee might sue the solicitor employed by a testator to make a will in favour of a stranger, whom the solicitor never saw or before heard of, if the will were void for not being properly signed and attested. There must be privity of contract between the parties. Robertson v. Fleming, 4 Macq., H. L. Ca., 167.

12. When it is sought to make a solicitor liable for negligence, that issue must be raised clearly upon the pleadings. Bettynes v. Maynard, 49 L. T. 389; 31 W. R. 461.

13. A bill in equity will not lie against a solicitor for negligence in investigating a title. British Mutual Investment Co. v. Cobbold, 19 L. R., Eq., 627; 44 L. J., Ch., 332; 23 W. R. 487; 32 L. T., N. S., 251.

A bill charged that a solicitor had negligently recommended the plaintiff company to accept a freehold house as security for a loan of 5,000*l.*, and had advised that the mortgagors had the absolute fee simple in the house free from incumbrance, whereas, in fact, they had only an interest in one moiety, and that subject to incumbrances and a contract for sale. The bill prayed that the solicitor might be decreed to make good the 5,000*l.* and costs, and to take over the security from the client. A suit for the realisation of the security was pending, and the mortgagors were bankrupts, so that the actual loss, if any, was not ascertained:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to grant such relief, and that even if such jurisdiction existed there was a discretion to refuse to exercise it in such a case, and a demurrer was allowed. Ib.

1. In the absence of fraud the Court has no jurisdiction to make a solicitor pay the costs of an action rendered necessary by his mistake or carelessness. Clark v. Girdwood, 26 W. R. 90; 47 L. J., Ch., 116; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 9; 37 L. T. 614.

The client's remedy is by an action for damages. Ib.

III. PERSONAL LIABILITY FOR COSTS.

See also BANKRUPTCY, II. vii. 4.

1. Misconduct and Improper Proceedings, 6398.
2. Negligence and Mistakes, 6399.

1. Misconduct and Improper Proceedings.

2. Costs against solicitor for improper petition. Exp. Williamson, Mont. & Bli. 226; 3 L. J., N. S., Bky., 48.

3. Where a bankrupt presented an unnecessary petition, his solicitor was ordered to pay 40*s.* costs. Exp. Parker, Buck. 313.

4. Solicitor ordered to pay all the costs occasioned by his refusing to appear for defendant at the hearing, pursuant to his undertaking, and the costs of the application. Cook v. Broomhead, 16 Ves. 133.

5. An attorney saying he only followed directions in drawing deeds, under fraudulent circumstances, will not excuse him from paying costs. Bennett v. Vade, 2 Atk. 328.

6. A solicitor, assisting his client in obtaining a fraudulent release, is properly made a party, and liable to costs, if the principal be not solvent. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 227.

7. The petition dismissed, and the costs directed to come out of the solicitor's pocket who took the affidavits. Re Hogan, 3 Atk. 813.

8. Semble, if a bill be dismissed at the hearing, with costs, and the plaintiff be then out of the jurisdiction, and the plaintiff's suit be so frivolous and vexatious that the bill could not have been filed bonâ fide in expectation of a favourable decree, or if the solicitor of the plaintiff guarantee his client against the costs of the suit, the Court, upon the petition of the defendants, will compel the solicitor of the plaintiff to pay the taxed costs. Cockle v. Whiting, 1 Russ. & M. 43.

9. If the plaintiff's attorney wilfully in the bill describe the plaintiff as resident within the jurisdiction, when, in fact, he is resident out of the jurisdiction, he will be ordered to pay the costs of the motion to stay the proceedings, until security for costs be given. Know v. O'Brien, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 62.

10. Where unfounded charges of corruption were brought against commissioners by a petitioner, who appeared to be the tool of other parties, the Court ordered the commissioners their "costs, charges, and expenses," and suspended the order until the attorney for the petitioner should show cause why he should not personally pay the costs. Exp. Williams, 3 Dea. & Ch. 103.

11. Solicitor having inserted scandalous matter in an answer, and put counsel's name thereto without authority, committed, and ordered to pay costs. Bishop v. Willis, 5 Beav. 83. n.

12. The attorney for the defendant having been examined as their witness, and having made certain scandalous and impertinent statements in his deposition in reply to the last interrogatory, was compelled to pay the costs of expunging it. Gude v. Mumford, 2 Y. & Coll. 446; 1 Jur. 577.

Semble, that the examiner is not liable for the costs of expunging scandalous and impertinent matter from depositions made in answer to specific interrogatories, nor from depositions made in answer to the last interrogatory, where the witness is an attorney in the cause. Ib.

13. Where an affidavit is reported to be scandalous, the agent in London who files the affidavit is responsible for the costs as between attorney and client, notwithstanding the country attorney may have himself drawn the affidavit. Exp. Wake, 3 Dea. & Ch. 246; Mont. & Bli. 259; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 38.

14. If the solicitor upon whom the subpoena to hear judgment is served refuses to indorse on the original an admission of the service thereof, he will be ordered to pay the costs rendered necessary by such refusal. Ross v. Wood, 2 Dr. & Wal. 490.

15. Upon a taxation, a solicitor put in an insufficient examination. He was ordered, on motion, to pay the costs occasioned thereby, and of the four-day order and of the application. Re Bainbridge, 11 Beav. 620.

16. Though an attorney, by signing his name in conformity with the general order, is not to be considered as guaranteeing the success of a petition in bankruptcy, yet where it appears to have arisen out of his interested views, he will be made to pay the costs of it. Exp. Cuthbert, 1 Madd. 78.

17. A solicitor acted for both parties in the matter of a voluntary settlement, which was set aside for undue influence. He was made a defendant to the suit for that purpose. The Court, though exonerating him from culpability in the matter, made him bear his own costs, because he had not acted with proper prudence in the matter. Harvey v. Mount, 8 Beav. 439; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233; 9 Jur. 741.

18. A solicitor employed in the sale of an estate knew that the title-deeds were in the possession of an adverse party; he however proceeded to prepare and obtain the execution of the conveyance and memorial. The sale went off in consequence of the absence of the title-deeds. He was disallowed the costs of the proceeding, and, the deed being a cloud on the title, he was also ordered to deliver it without being paid the costs thereof. Potts v. Dutton, 8 Beav. 493.

1. Bill by mortgagor against mortgagee and his solicitors, praying to have a sale under the mortgage deed set aside for fraud and oppression, dismissed as against the solicitors, the main charges in the bill against them not having been made out, but without costs, on the ground that they were the substantial movers and authors of the sale, which, as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, was proved not to be sustainable in a court of equity. Matthie v. Edwards, 2 Colly. 465; 10 Jur. 347.

2. An order was made by the Court, in 1858, for the sale by private contract of lands, and an application was made by an illiterate person to the vendor's solicitor, who had the conduct of the sale, to become the purchaser of part of the premises, and a conditional contract was entered into, whereby the vendors agreed to sell and the purchaser to buy the premises. The purchaser also agreed, at his own expense, to obtain an order of the Court confirming the sale, and in default that the vendors might obtain such an order at the purchaser's expense. On the same day the purchaser gave a written retainer to the vendor's solicitor to act as his attorney. The purchaser was a marksman, and both the above instruments were witnessed by the same solicitor. Afterwards an order was obtained confirming the purchase, and ordering payment of the money into court. The purchaser, after the contract, finding that a good title could not be made, failed to pay the purchase money, whereupon another order was obtained for payment, in default of which the purchaser was attached and committed to prison. On motion to set aside the attachment, the vendors and their solicitor opposed the application; but the Court ordered the attachment to be set aside and the prisoner to be discharged, the agreement to be delivered up and cancelled, and the costs of the prisoner throughout the proceedings, and of all parties on the motion, to be paid by the solicitor. Bromage v. Davies, 4 Jur., N. S., 683.

3. Where a solicitor has been retained for the prosecution of a suit, and he has by crassa negligentia in the conduct of the suit caused the suit to be lost, he cannot recover any portion of his bill. Stokes v. Trumper, 2 Kay & J. 232; 3 W. R. 140. S. C. on appeal 3 W. R. 615.

4. In a cause commenced by information, the relations' solicitor intending to cross-examine two defendants who had previously been examined in chief on behalf of a co-defendant, such defendants were, by mistake, examined upon interrogatories for the examination of witnesses in chief on the part of the informant, and, by reason of this mistake, the information was dismissed, with costs:—Held, that the mistake was crassa negligentia on the part of the solicitor, and disentitled him to recover any portion of his bill of costs. Id.

5. When, under an order for the payment of costs in chancery, a writ of fiat facias had been issued and executed by the sheriff, the Court refused to set aside the writ; but, believing it had been issued in bad faith, ordered the solicitor who had taken it out to pay all charges attending its issue and execution, and also the costs of a motion for that purpose. Re Commonwealth Land, Building, Estate, & Auction Co., Exp. Hollington, 22 W. R. 106; 29 L. T., N. S., 502; 43 L. J., Ch., 99.

A solicitor has authority to enter into an undertaking on behalf of his client, not to issue a writ of fiat facias against the client's debtor, in consideration of the acceleration of payment of the debt. Id.

A breach of such an undertaking, by the issue of writs against the debtor, was held to be contrary to good faith, and the solicitor was ordered to pay the expenses of issuing such writs, and of an application to recover them. Id.

6. The Court of Chancery will not order the costs of proceedings to be paid personally by the solicitor conducting them, on account of any misconduct unconnected with those proceedings, or upon an application not giving him proper notice of the charges against him. Re Gregg, and Re Prance, 39 L. J., Ch., 107; 9 L. R., Eq., 137; 18 W. R. 589; 23 L. T., N. S., 234.

7. The Court of Chancery will, in a proper case, order a solicitor to pay the costs of litigation occasioned by deeds improperly prepared by him. Baker v. Loader, 42 L. J., Ch., 113; 16 L. R., Eq., 49; 21 W. R. 167.

8. An agreement had been come to between A. and B. The agreement was broken by B., and, as the claim alleged, the breach was accompanied by false instructions to counsel given by a solicitor, and by the solicitor's false statements upon oath:—Held, on an action for injunction consequent upon the breach by B., that, on the claim as alleged, there was no right of action against the solicitor for costs. Blackburn Union v. Brooks, 25 W. R. 57.

9. Where accounts are being taken in chambers before the chief clerk, either party has a right to have an item which has been found against him adjourned before the judge without taking out a summons for that purpose. And where a question of principle is involved in a particular item it may be necessary to do this. But the ordinary practice is to wait till the account is completed, and then take the adjournment once for all before the judge. If a solicitor were to insist upon his right to take particular items before the judge in an unreasonable manner, the Court might make him pay the costs personally. Upton v. Browne, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 731; 47 L. T. 289; 30 W. R. 817.

2. Negligence and Mistakes.

10. Upon solicitor's appearing to be guilty of a gross neglect, the Court will order him to pay the costs. Fawkes v. Pratt, 1 P. W. 593.

11. Solicitor to fiat must bear any expense which his neglect would cause the estate. Exp. Bennett, Re Stephens, 2 Mont. & A. 308; 1 Dea. 70.

12. Order being rendered nugatory by mistake in the title of the cause, the solicitor was ordered to pay the costs of motion to rectify the mistake. Black v. Creighton, 2 Moll. 552.

1. The solicitor of a party beneficially interested, using the name of a mere trustee, in litigating a question of interest to his client, is bound to put such mere trustee on his guard, as to his responsibility for damages or costs, and, by neglecting to do so, may render himself responsible in default of his principal, without giving any undertaking, or being guilty of any misconduct. Exp. Scallan, 1 Moll. 63.

2. A pauper's solicitor will be ordered to pay the costs of any irregular proceeding. Brown v. Danson, 2 Hog. 76.

3. When in notice of motion on behalf of feme covert, no prochein ami is named, her solicitor will be liable for costs awarded against her. Cox v. McNamara, 1 Hog. 78.

4. Where a motion is made on behalf of a married woman, without a next friend being named, the Court has jurisdiction to make the solicitor who gave the instructions for the motion pay the costs of it. Pearse v. Cole, 16 Jur. 214.

5. In drawing up a decree, the word "inquiry" was erroneously inserted for the word "sale." It became necessary for the defendant to make an application to correct the error:—Held, that the solicitor of the defendant must bear the costs. Re Bolton, 9 Beav. 272; 10 Jur. 22.

6. A solicitor was ordered to pay the costs of an application rendered necessary by his own delay and mistake. White v. Hillacre, 3 Y. & Coll. 278. S. C. nom. White v. Hillane, 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 65.

7. A plaintiff's solicitor held personally liable to the costs of a reference to the Master, to inquire and report whether a purchaser was entitled to any and what compensation, by reason of a misdescription in the rental, caused by his neglect in not examining the tenants' leases lodged in the Master's office. Taylor v. Gorman, 11 & K. 567; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 550.

8. Plaintiff's solicitor ordered to pay the costs of the day, in consequence of his non-attendance in court when the cause was called on. Courtney v. Stock, 2 Dr. & War. 251. S. C. nom. Courtenay v. Stock, 1 Con. & L. 366.

9. When there was a decree with costs in this court, which was subsequently reversed by the Lords, who directed that the bill below should be dismissed with costs, but before the appeal the plaintiff's solicitor had compelled the defendant to pay the costs below, upon receiving the plaintiff's receipt therefor; and the plaintiff had directed his solicitor to retain those costs in his possession for the purpose of defending the appeal:—Held, that the defendant could not, upon the decree of the Lords, compel the solicitor of plaintiff to refund the costs so paid. Smith v. Clarke, 2 Con. & L. 160; 3 Dr. & War. 344; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 423.

10. It is the duty of solicitors not to take office copies without being authenticated; and where the copy of depositions proved to be very incorrect, but was taken and paid for before it was compared or attested, the solicitor was ordered to pay the costs of the day. Morgan v. Roe, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 21.

11. A solicitor having exhibited gross neglect in not carrying out a decree of the Court, he was ordered to pay the costs of the Master's report, together with the costs of the application and order consequent thereon. Ridley v. Tiplady, 1 Jur., N. S., 249; 24 L. J., Ch., 207; 3 W. R. 276; 20 Beav. 44.

12. A solicitor, employed by the relators in an information to conduct their case, causes by mistake two of the defendants to be examined in chief (as if on behalf of the relators), his intention being to cross-examine them. The information, which prayed a decree against all the defendants, was dismissed in consequence of this examination of defendants on behalf of the relators:—Held, upon a claim by the solicitor for his bill of costs against the executor of the relators, that he had shown crassa negligentia and a want of reasonable skill; and his whole claim, the contract to conduct the suit being entire, was disallowed. Stokes v. Trumper, 2 Kay & J. 232; 3 W. R. 503. S. C. on appeal 3 W. R. 615.

13. When persons, even without mala fides, make or adopt a statement, the contrary of which they ought to have known by reasonable diligence to be the truth, and a wrongful order is made by the Court grounded on such statement, all such persons are liable to indemnify the persons who suffer through such an order from all the consequences. Re Spencer, 39 L. J., Ch., 841; 18 W. R. 240; 21 L. T., N. S., 808.

The primary liability in respect of costs falls upon the solicitor, through whose agency the order was obtained, and the primary liability as to the fund lost through the order falls upon those who wrongfully received it. Id.

14. A bill having been dismissed with costs, owing to the plaintiff's solicitor having neglected to instruct counsel or deliver papers, the cause was, on motion supported by affidavit, under the circumstances ordered to be restored upon payment of costs by the plaintiff's solicitor. Birch v. Williams, 24 W. R. 700.

15. A verbally agreed with B., his solicitor, for the sale of land to B. This agreement, which was never reduced to writing, provided that B. should bear all expenses of making out the title, that possession should be at once given, and that the purchase-money should be paid at a fixed future date, with interest in the meantime. B. entered into possession, but took no further steps in completion of the purchase, and, before the purchase-money became due, died. In a suit by A. for specific performance against the executor of B.:—Held, that B., as A.'s solicitor, ought to have had an agreement in writing prepared, and that the executor was bound to complete the purchase and pay the costs of the suit. Brafield v. Scriven, 22 W. R. 202.

16. In the absence of fraud the Court has no jurisdiction to order a solicitor who has made a mistake in the preparation of a document to pay the costs of a suit for its rectification. Clark v. Girdwood, 47 L. J., Ch., 116; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 9; 26 W. R. 90; 37 L. T. 614.

17. The taxing master in taxing a bill of costs between a solicitor and his client has power to disallow the costs of proceedings in an action conducted by the solicitor which were occasioned by the negligence or ignorance of the solicitor. But if the negligence goes to the loss of the whole action, he ought not to disallow them, but to leave the client to bring an action for negligence against the solicitor. Re Massey and Carey, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 459; 53 L. J., Ch., 705; 51 L. T. 390; 32 W. R. 1008.

VIII. Striking off the Rolls and Suspending from Practising.

- I. Jurisdiction. When Exercised, 6401.
- II. Practice on, 6402.

I. JURISDICTION. WHEN EXERCISED.

1. An order of the Recorder's Court in the colony of Sierra Leone, disbaring and striking off from the Rolls a practitioner of that court, for alleged contumelious conduct, on appeal reversed and rescinded. Smith v. Sierra Leone (Justices of), 3 Moo. P. C. 361.

Appeal allowed from orders made by the judges at Sierra Leone, striking a practitioner of the courts in that colony off the rolls of proctors of the Vice-Admiralty Court, and also off the rolls as attorney of the court at Freetown, upon terms, that the petitioner gave notice of the allowance of such appeal to the judges, with liberty to the petitioner to set down his case to be heard ex parte at the expiration of six months after notice served. S. C. 7 Moo. P. C. 174.

Two orders made by the judges at Sierra Leone, striking a practitioner of the courts off the rolls, for alleged misrepresentation, contempt, and misconduct:—Held, on appeal, by the Judicial Committee, to have been improperly made, and ordered to be discharged, and the appellant restored to the rolls. But, under the circumstances of the case, the Judicial Committee directed the appellant to apply to the Court in the colony for such re-admission. Id.

2. Where a party had been duly admitted and practised as a barrister and attorney in a colonial court, and upon his arrest on meane process claimed and was allowed his privilege, but the colonial judge at the same time suspended him from practising in the court, upon grounds stated, but unsupported by evidence, the Judicial Committee rescinded the order as irregular. Re Monckton, 1 Moo. P. C. 455.

3. Solicitor falsely representing that an injunction was granted, liable to damages, to an indictment, and to be struck off the roll. Kimpton v. Ede, 2 Ves. & B. 352.

4. Court will not strike solicitor off the roll at his own request, without affidavit that there is no apprehension another party will apply for the same purpose. Exp. Owen, 6 Ves. 2. S. P. Exp. Foley, 8 Ves. 33.

5. Where a solicitor is guilty of malpractices, he may be degraded by applying to strike him out of the roll. Anon., 2 Atk. 273.

6. A solicitor, guilty of gross fraud towards, and abuse of confidence of, his client, struck off the roll; and in a fit case, such as this, for the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court, the circumstance of the latter having been negotiating for a compromise:—Held, not a ground for refusing the public protection. Re Martin, 6 Beav. 337.

7. On a bill filed by parties interested under a will against the sole acting trustee and executor, and against his solicitor, under whose advice the trust property had been improperly sold out by the trustee, and applied principally to the solicitor's use, praying that the stock might be replaced, the Court at the hearing, after directing certain inquiries, ordered that the solicitor should show cause why, having regard to his answer and the evidence in the cause, his name should not be struck off the roll of solicitors of the Court of Chancery. Goodwin v. Gosnell, 2 Coll. 457; 10 Jur. 422.

A solicitor having advised his client (a person in an humble station of life) to commit a breach of trust by selling out stock of which the client was a trustee, and having himself profited by the breach of trust, was ordered to be struck off the roll unless he showed good cause to the contrary; but having in obedience to the decree in the cause replaced the stock and paid the costs of the suit, the Court (taking into consideration his youth and other circumstances) abstained from further proceeding in the matter, upon his undertaking to pay to the other parties to the suit their costs, charges, and expenses. S. C. 2 Colly. 462; 10 Jur. 422.

8. An attorney or solicitor cannot give up his client and act for the opposite party in any suits between them. Cholmondeley (Earl) v. Clinton (Lord), 19 Ves. 261.

Attorney prevented from communicating his client's secrets, even by striking off the roll; not permitted to give evidence of them. Id. 268.

9. Where a solicitor took upon himself without authority to instruct counsel to appear for parties, one of whom was abroad at the time, and to consent to or not oppose a petition to transfer a fund in court in which the parties had important interests, and upon which petition the fund was ordered to be transferred, and the fund was lost, these circumstances appearing in evidence, although the solicitor was not a party, but only a witness in the cause, the Court directed him to be served with notice to show cause why he should not be struck off the rolls. Wheatley v. Barston, Collins' case, 7 De G. M. & G. 261; 1 Jur., N. S., 1124; 24 L. J., Ch., 727; 3 Eq. Rep. 859.

The solicitor's explanation of his conduct in the above case not being satisfactory, he was ordered to be struck off the roll. S. C. 1 Jur., N. S., 1125; 24 L. J., Ch., 732; 3 Eq. Rep. 865. S. C. nom. Re Collins, 7 De G. M. & G. 558.

Semble, No circumstances can justify a solicitor in instructing counsel to consent, on behalf of a client, to the disposing of funds in Court, in which the client has an interest, without express authority from the client. S. C., 3 Eq. Rep. 865.

10. An attorney on the roll of the High Court of Bengal, prepared a conveyance on behalf of his brother, containing a false recital as to the consideration, knowing the same to be false, and attested the execution of the deed with such false recital, and signed his name as a witness to the receipt of the consideration money, knowing that no consideration had passed or was intended to pass. The deed was duly registered. The Court ordered him to be struck off the roll:—Held, on appeal, that he was properly called upon to explain the circumstances under which the deed was executed; but, that, as there was no evidence that he was guilty of any fraudulent or dishonest intention, and as no dishonest use was attempted to be made of the deed, and as no person had been injured thereby, the circumstances were not sufficient to warrant the order of the Court. Re Stewart, 37 L. J., P. C., 25; 2 L. R., P. C., 88; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 187; 16 W. R. 1000.

1. A solicitor, who had filed a bill for specific performance in the name of the assignee of a bankrupt, without having obtained his consent or retainer, and who had also allowed his client to make an affidavit containing a statement which he knew to be false, was sentenced to be suspended for the space of ten years from practising as an attorney or solicitor. Re Gray, 20 L. T., N. S., 730.

2. Where an attorney has fraudulently obtained and withheld his client's money, the repayment of the money is not a purgation of the offence. If an attorney be called upon to answer matters in an affidavit merely, however dissatisfied the Court may be with his answer, the Court will not order him to be struck off the rolls without giving him an opportunity to be heard. Re H—, 31 L. T., N. S., 730.

Solicitor Trustee. 3. Where a solicitor was a trustee, and had appropriated the trust fund, which was in court, to his own use, the Court ordered him to be struck off the roll. Thorn-dike v. Hunt, 5 Jur., N. S., 879.

4. A solicitor who, being one of the trustees of a settlement, had been guilty of fraudulent misapplication of, and misrepresentation as to, a part of the trust fund, was ordered to be struck off the rolls upon the petition of his co-trustees. In such a case, the fact that the delinquent was not, at the time of committing the fraud in question, acting as the solicitor of the defrauded cestuis que trustent is immaterial. Re Hall, Dolland v. Johnson, 4 W. R. 686.

H., a solicitor, was in 1846 appointed a trustee of a settlement, which was prepared by himself and his partner, who, as alleged, continued to act as solicitors for the cestuis que trustent and for the petitioners. He, in July 1854, received the accountant-general's cheque in payment of a sum which belonged to the parties in a cause, which he paid in to his own bankers to his own account, and subsequently sent to the petitioners a statement, by which he represented that a certain sum had been received and duly invested. In October 1855 he was required to give information respecting the state of the trust fund, and, in reply, he made out and delivered a memorandum, that a sum had been paid to the trustees and invested; but it afterwards turned out that he had made no such investment. On petition presented for that purpose by the co-trustees:—Held, that H. had been guilty of such a misrepresentation, in addition to a breach of trust, that he could not be allowed to remain an officer of the court; and his name was accordingly struck off the roll. S. C. Jur., N. S., 633.

5. A court of equity, ex mero motu, ordered a solicitor trustee who had been guilty of a breach of trust, to show cause why he should not be struck off the roll. Thompson v. Finch, 25 L. J., Ch., 681.

6. A solicitor induced his co-trustee to join him in executing a power of attorney, by which trust stock standing in their joint names was sold, and he obtained from such co-trustee an authority to place the proceeds to his private account at his bankers. The proceeds were subsequently lost through the solicitor's insolvency; and although he was himself entitled to a reversionary interest in a portion of the trust-property, he was struck off the rolls. Re Chandler, 2 Jur., N. S., 366; 25 L. J., Ch., 396; 22 Beav. 253.

II. PRACTICE ON.

7. Though the rule of another court for striking an attorney off the roll be produced, semble, an order nisi only can be obtained in this court in the first instance. Re Mark, 4 Dea. & Ch. 482.

Where it was sworn that an attorney had no place of residence in this country, an order nisi for his being struck off the roll was permitted to be served at his last place of residence. S. C. 4 Dea. & Ch. 28.

8. Application to remove a solicitor from being or acting as a Master Extraordinary of the Court of Chancery, and to strike him off the roll of such court, though it may be properly made, by reason of his conduct in matter of bankruptcy, should not be made in bankruptcy, but should be addressed to the general jurisdiction of the Court. Exp. Lone, 1 G. & J. 78.

IX. Summary Jurisdiction of the Court.

- I. When Exercised, 6402.
- II. Practice, 6406.

I. WHEN EXERCISED.

1. Orders for Payment of Money, 6402.
2. Negligence, 6404.
3. In Other Cases, 6405.
4. Under Debtors Act. See DEBTORS ACT.

1. Orders for Payment of Money.

9. A summary application being made against three attorneys, jointly, to pay over to the assignees a sum of money which they had received as the bankrupt's solicitors under an order of the Court of Chancery:—Held, not sustainable, as they were not all collectively attorneys of this court. Quare, whether such an order would have been made, if they had been all attorneys of this court. Exp. Hicks, 2 Dea. & Ch. 573; Mont. & Bli. 256; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 48.

1. A married woman, to whom a sum of money was payable for her separate use, received a cheque from the accountant-general, and handed it over to her solicitor, who accompanied her. The solicitor was, on motion, ordered to pay the balance to his client, and held, that the onus being on the solicitor to show cause for not paying it over, he could not set up a voluntary agreement to pay her husband's debt. Manhood v. Milbanke, 15 Beav. 36.

2. A purchased an estate from B., and, on the completion, one solicitor acted for both parties, and the purchase money was paid into his hands. Afterwards, the purchaser was defeated by C., who had a paramount mortgage. The purchaser presented a petition against the solicitor, asking payment by the solicitor out of the purchase money of the losses occasioned, or that he might indemnify the petitioner. The petition was dismissed with costs; the Court holding, first, that it had no jurisdiction to award compensation or damages in such a case; and, secondly, that the money having come to the hands of the solicitor as agent of the vendor, and not of the petitioner, it could not interfere. Tylee v. Webb, 14 Beav. 14; 15 Jur. 1023.

As to the summary jurisdiction of the Court over solicitors, where moneys are paid to them by clients in that character. Id.

3. If attorney (being concerned as well for mortgagor as mortgagee) has been appointed receiver of rents and profits of mortgaged estates; and on the order made for delivery of possession, there is found to be a balance remaining in his hands beyond what is sufficient to satisfy the mortgagee; he will be ordered to pay such balance into court, notwithstanding the general report has not yet been made, on which there may possibly be found to be a greater sum of money due to him than the balance in his hands. Lewes v. Morgan, 5 Price 42.

4. By an order of the Court, the costs to be incurred by a married woman suing by her next friend in a future proceeding were ordered to be paid to A. B., her solicitor. Pending the proceedings, A. B. was discharged, and C. D. appointed solicitor. A. B. received the whole costs:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction, on petition, to order A. B. to pay over to C. D. his share of such costs. Exp. Bailey & Hope, Re Barnard, 14 Beav. 18.

5. Where a client had corresponded and dealt exclusively with one only out of a partnership of three solicitors, and remitted a sum of money to that one alone, although desired by him to remit the money to the firm, a motion against all three partners, under summary jurisdiction of the Court to compel them to pay the money, refused as to the two partners who had thus been excluded from the fair means of the knowledge of the remittance. The summary jurisdiction of the Court over its officers extends to relief only in cases of personal misconduct and neglect of duty. Re Lawrence, 2 Sm. & G. 367; 18 Jur. 742; 23 L. J., Ch., 791. S. C. nom. Exp. Burdon, Re Lawrence, 2 W. R. 680; 2 Eq. Rep. 931.

A solicitor who allows his name to be used by others conducting in his name the business of solicitors, incurs the peril of personal responsibility. Id.

Where a solicitor receives money to be paid into court, and neglects to do so, the Court, under its summary jurisdiction, can compel him to repay the money. Id.

A., B., and C., a firm of solicitors, were employed by R. B., a defendant in a suit, to conduct the proceedings on his behalf, but which were conducted by C. only. A. was only a nominal partner, but of this fact R. B. was ignorant. The correspondence was carried on between R. B. and C. only, and though the latter wrote to the former sometimes in the name of the firm, he did so more frequently in his own name; and on one occasion C. said, "Will you send us a crossed cheque, and we will pay it into court." The letter was signed by C. only, and R. B. remitted the cheque to him. C. some time afterwards wrote to R. B., and stated that that sum and another had been paid into court and invested. R. B., in June, 1853, received a letter from C., inclosing a power of attorney, authorising B. and C. (as C. stated) "to receive the principal sum of 800*l.*, due in March last, and paid by us. It will enable us to pay the premiums," etc. The power was executed, and C. obtained payment of the money. The moneys remitted to C. were not applied as they ought to have been. In December 1853 the partnership as to C. was dissolved. On motion by R. B., that A., B., and C. might jointly and severally be ordered, under the summary jurisdiction of the Court, to pay into court within three days the moneys misapplied by C., an order was, under the circumstances, refused as against A. and B. and made as of course against C., but without costs. Id.

6. A receiver having been appointed for the plaintiffs in a cause, paid certain moneys to one of a firm of solicitors of the plaintiffs, who were also his solicitors in the matter. The partner to whom the money was paid misapplied the moneys and absconded, and the plaintiffs moved that the other partners might make good the deficiency:—Held, that the receiver not being a party to the motion, no order could be made. Chater v. Maclean, 1 Jur., N. S., 175; 3 W. R. 261; 3 Eq. R. 375.

Where the other partners disputed their liability for the acts of the defaulting partner:—Held, that no order could be made against them under the general jurisdiction of the Court over solicitors. Id.

7. A solicitor, professionally concerned in a transaction for A., received on his account, in the course of that transaction, a sum of money. Afterwards, it was arranged between A. and B. and the solicitor, that the sum should remain in the solicitor's hands as a security for the payment of the expenses of certain proceedings taken in Parliament by B. to obtain an Act for a divorce. The application to Parliament having failed, and the costs of it not having exhausted the fund:—Held, that, under the summary jurisdiction of the Court over the solicitor, it could order the repayment to A. of the balance. Exp. Wortham, 4 De G. & Sm. 415.

8. A solicitor who has received and has in his hands the money of his client will be summarily ordered to pay over the amount. Re Becke, 18 Beav. 462.

A solicitor received moneys for his client, an administratrix:—Held, that he could not set up proceedings by the next of kin, of whose rights he had notice, as a defence for not paying the administratrix. Ib.

1. Where an executor and a residuary legatee employed a solicitor in the matter of the executorship, and transferred into the joint names of client and solicitor stock to answer a legacy, and subsequently employed the same solicitor in two suits in equity and in an action, in all of which matters costs were incurred, the Court, having, by an order made in both suits, ordered the payment of the legacy out of the fund, and the costs of the parties to the suits to be paid by themselves, refused a motion made on the part of the client, pending an action for the balance of bills of costs, asking that the solicitor might be ordered to join in transferring the balance of the fund, after payment of the legacy, into the client's name, on the ground that the proceedings in respect of which the costs claimed were incurred were closely connected with the purposes for which the fund was invested, and that the claim was one to be settled by a court of law. Re Robinson, 5 Jur., N. S., 1021.

2. A solicitor received from his client a sum of money to pay off a mortgage. He did not so apply it, but claimed a lien on it for his costs. He was summarily ordered to repay the amount to his client, but without interest. Re Cullen, 27 Beav. 51.

3. A solicitor was appointed a member of a committee of a company, with power to compromise two suits. He, with the approbation of his co-committee, compromised them and received the money. A summary application that he might pay over the money or be struck off the rolls was refused with costs. Re Harvey, 27 Beav. 330.

4. The Court will not, in the exercise of its summary jurisdiction over solicitors, call upon a solicitor to account for moneys received by him where they were received by him, not in the character of solicitor to the person making the application, but of solicitor to another person. Dixon v. Wilkinson, 4 De G. & J. 508; 5 Jur., N. S., 1063; 4 Drew. 614.

A. was solicitor to the plaintiff in a cause, and also to the receiver, and the receiver was in the habit of remitting the rents to him:—Held, that A. must be considered to have received the rents as solicitor or agent of the receiver, and that the plaintiff could not call upon him to account for them under the summary jurisdiction. Ib.

Assuming the Court to have jurisdiction to make a solicitor answerable for losses occasioned to his client by mere ignorance, mistake, neglect, or mismanagement, apart from fraud or malfeasance, the Court has a discretion as to exercising or declining to exercise that jurisdiction, according to the circumstances of each particular case. Ib.

Semble, the Court has such a jurisdiction. Ib.

5. An order upon the former solicitor to the creditors' assignee of a bankrupt's estate to pay over money forming part of the estate, and admitted by him to be in his hands, ought not to be made ex parte. Exp. Franco, Re Kemp, 18 W. R. 55; 21 L. T., N. S., 341.

6. An order was made that a solicitor (who was also a trustee of a will) should pay into court trust money which he had by affidavit admitted that he had in his hands, upon motion made by the cestui que trust in a suit to administer the estate of the testator, the notice of motion being entitled in the suit and in the matter of the solicitor. Re Clorikew, Re Howard, 19 W. R. 939; 24 L. T., N. S., 890.

7. When a solicitor made default in the payment of a sum of money which he received on behalf of his client, and an order for payment within a certain date was obtained from the Court, the client undertaking to give credit for any sums due by her, on non-payment of the sum, within the fixed period, an order for an attachment was obtained. The solicitor not having made any affidavit of credits due from the client was not allowed to treat them as a set-off against the sum for non-payment of which the attachment was sought. Anon., 22 W. R. 479.

8. A solicitor was ordered to pay money to a receiver of the Court on pain of sequestration and imprisonment. His property was seized on a fi. fa. under the order, but possession was given up under an agreement:—Held, on breach of the agreement by him, that he could not be attached under the order. Harvey v. Hill, 43 L. J., Ch., 95; 16 L. R., Eq., 324; 28 L. T. 734; 21 W. R. 783.

9. A solicitor, employed to obtain money charged on lands sold in the Landed Estates Court of Ireland, proved the claim, and having drawn out the money by means of a power of attorney, executed by his client under his own advice, failed to pay it over to the client:—Held, that his misconduct was committed in his capacity of solicitor, and that he was accordingly liable to attachment. Re M., 1 L. R., Ir. 67, 188.

For Non-payment of Balances due on Taxation. See XVI. xxv. post.

See also DEBTORS ACT.

2. Negligence.

10. Where a solicitor has been negligent in attending to a client's business, the Court can grant an attachment against him; and courts of law exercise the same summary jurisdiction over attorneys. Floyd v. Nangle, 3 Atk. 568. S. C. nom. Lloyd v. Nangle, Dick 129.

11. The solicitor employed by the bankrupt to procure his certificate, neglecting to obtain the signature of the commissioners to the certificate, which had been long before signed by the proper number of creditors, ordered to deliver up the certificate and affidavits of the bankrupt, and to pay the costs of the application. Exp. Houghton, 1 G. & J. 14.

12. The Court has no jurisdiction to make a solicitor responsible for negligence in the conduct of a suit. Frankland v. Lucas, 4 Sim. 586; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 124.

13. Where solicitors have been guilty of even gross negligence in the conduct of a cause, the Court has no summary jurisdiction to give relief on petition. Dixon v. Wilkinson, 4 Drew.

614. But see S. C. on appeal 4 De G. & J. 508; 5 Jur., N. S., 1063.

3. In Other Cases.

1. The Court will only exercise a summary jurisdiction over an attorney when he is acting in the character of an officer of the Court, and not in an ordinary case of attorney and client. Exp. Bull, 3 Dea. & Ch. 116; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 76.

2. A solicitor is an officer of the Court, and is liable to serious consequences if he neglects his duty of explaining the effect of the bill of sale to the grantor. He is also liable to an action by his client, as well as to proceedings of a penal character. Per James, L. J., in Exp. National Mercantile Bank, Re Haynes, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 52; 49 L. J., Bky., 62; 43 L. T. 36; 28 W. R. 848.

3. The Court will not exercise its summary jurisdiction to compel a vendor's solicitor to perform an undertaking given by him at the sale to do certain acts for clearing the title to the estate. Pearl v. Bushell, 2 Sim. 38.

4. Performance of agreement, to compromise a suit entered into by the solicitor for the plaintiff and the solicitor for the defendant, for payment by the latter of the former's costs, not enforced by order in a summary way. Gilbert v. Cooper, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 265. 15 Sim. 647. n. Reversing 15 Sim. 343.

5. On motion, which was opposed, to enlarge the time for closing evidence until one month after the production, as a witness, of S., an order granting the enlarged time was made, upon the undertaking of both B., the husband of S., and his solicitor, that in the event of S. being produced for examination, no attempt should be made, either directly or indirectly, to discover her place of residence, or in any way to molest her. B. and his solicitor signed the registrar's book at the foot of the undertaking. On the examination of S. before the examiner, the solicitor of B., after the terms of the undertaking had been read to him, served her with a subpoena to attend as a witness in another cause:—Held, on motion to commit the solicitor to prison for a breach of his undertaking, that the service of the subpoena upon S. while before the examiner amounted to an act of molestation; and though the Court did not commit him to prison, yet it ordered him to pay the costs of the application. Lanford v. Spicer, 2 Jur., N. S., 564.

Semble, that S. was not bound to obey the subpoena served upon her. Id.

6. The defendant in an action in this court being in prison for contempt, his solicitors, in order to induce the plaintiff's solicitors to give their consent to his release from arrest, entered into an undertaking, in terms unconditional, to pay an agreed sum as the costs of the application for his committal. This undertaking not having been performed, the plaintiffs moved in this matter for a summary order that the defendant's solicitors should be ordered to pay to the plaintiffs or their solicitors the agreed sum, pursuant to the undertaking, and the costs of that application. There was a conflict of evidence as to whether the undertaking was intended to be unconditional, or conditional only upon its being in accordance with the practice of the Court (which it was now admitted it was not) to make the order for release only on terms of payment of costs:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application; that the application was properly made; that upon the evidence the undertaking was unconditional; and that there must, therefore, be an order in terms of the notice of motion. Re Woodfin and Wray, 51 L. J., Ch., 427; 30 W. R. 442.

7. The Court will interfere to restrain an action at law the bringing of which is against the spirit, although not within the letter, of a former injunction. A solicitor assisting his client in bringing such an action may be called upon by the Court to answer the matters of the affidavits. Brenan v. Preston, 1 W. R. 173.

8. A bill filed without the authority of the plaintiff was dismissed with costs, and the plaintiff was taken under an attachment for non-payment of costs. The Court, on motion, ordered the solicitor to indemnify A., but refused to release A. as against the claim of the defendants:—Held, also, that A. was not, on such application, to be deprived of his right against the solicitor to damages for his imprisonment. Hood v. Phillips, 6 Beav. 176.

9. A. purchased an estate from B., and on the completion, one solicitor acted for both parties, and the purchase money was paid into his hands. Afterwards the purchaser was defeated by C., who had a paramount mortgage. The purchaser presented a petition against the solicitor, asking payment by the solicitor out of the purchase money of the losses occasioned, or that he might indemnify the petitioner. The petition was dismissed with costs, the Court holding, first, that it had no jurisdiction to award compensation or damages in such a case; and, secondly, that the money having come to the hands of the solicitor as agent of the vendor and not of the petitioner, it could not interfere. Tyles v. Webb, Re Hinton, 14 Beav. 14; 15 Jur. 1023.

As to the summary jurisdiction of the Court over solicitors, where moneys are paid to them by clients in that character. Id.

10. A trustee, who is a solicitor, cannot be removed under the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over solicitors, that jurisdiction being exercised only in respect of acts done by a solicitor in that character, or in some relation immediately arising out of it. Re Blanchard, and Re Le Douloet, 30 L. J., Ch., 516; 9 W. R. 647; 4 L. T., N. S., 426.

11. A client agreed in writing to lend his solicitor a sum of money to enable him to make a purchase of land, but if the purchase was not completed, the money was to be at once repaid. The purchase was not made, and the money was not returned. The client applied for an order for re-payment, under the summary jurisdiction of the Court:—Held, that, there being no relation of solicitor and client between the parties in respect of the agreement, no order could be made under the summary jurisdiction of the Court. Re Bryant, 50 L. T. 450.

L. R., Ch. D., 9; 47 L. J., Ch., 116; 37 L. T. 614; 26 W. R. 90.

II. PRACTICE.

1. A solicitor, having answered the matter of a petition against him pursuant to an order of the Court, is not entitled to move that the petition be dismissed with costs, for want of prosecution, until one clear term has elapsed after notice of the answering affidavit. Bucke v. Murphy, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 373; Fl. & K. 173.

2. Solicitor, from whom a sum was found due, ordered to pay all the costs of proceedings to compel payment. Whether it is necessary, in demanding payment by attorney, to leave a copy of the power of attorney, semble not. Re Dufaur & Blakeney, 16 Beav. 113.

3. The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over solicitors, as officers of the Court, for misconduct, is very special, and will not be exercised on an ordinary summons for taxation of a bill of costs. Re Forsyth, 2 De G. J. & S. 509.

On the occasion of a transfer of the securities of first and second mortgages to a third mortgagee, a sum of money was paid to the solicitor acting on behalf of the first and second mortgagees and the mortgagor on account of his costs, and was added to the mortgage debt. Afterwards he sent in his bill of costs to the third mortgagee, which included charges for business done for the mortgagor, and also for business done for the mortgagees in a common law court. The third mortgagee took out a summons for taxation of the bill.—Held, that he could have no relief upon that application, either under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, or under the general jurisdiction of the Court. Id.

4. An application for the Court to exercise its jurisdiction over a solicitor on account of conduct disclosed in an action may be made in the action, and therefore is a further proceeding within Order LI., Rule 1a. Judicature Act. Cave v. Cave, Re Cave, 49 L. J., Ch., 656; 43 L. T. 158; 28 W. R. 764.

5. An order was made that a solicitor (who was also a trustee of a will) should pay into court trust money which he had by affidavit admitted that he had in his hands, upon motion made by the cestui que trust in a suit to administer the estate of the testator, the notice of motion being entitled in the suit and in the matter of the solicitor. Re Clorihen, Re Howard, 24 L. T. 860; 19 W. R. 939.

6. The Chancery Division will exercise the jurisdiction over solicitors conferred on it by s. 87 of the Judicature Act 1873, according to the practice familiar to the Chancery Division, and will not grant a rule nisi. Re Copp, 32 W. R. 25.

Service of Order.] 7. The Court refused to make an order that service of a petition against an attorney for an order to pay certain costs for which he had been declared liable, by leaving a copy at his chambers, should be deemed good service. Re Sandys, 3 Dea. & Ch. 34.

8. Before a motion can be made to compel a solicitor or other officer to answer a petition complaining of his conduct, he must be four days served with it. Pitcairne v. Woodroffe, 2 Moll. 353.

9. An action was ordered to be stayed, and the costs of the defendants to be paid by the plaintiff's solicitor. The order was served by leaving a copy at the office of the solicitor, but was not obeyed. Upon the application of the defendants, the Court made an order for an attachment to issue against the solicitor, and for payment by him of the costs of the application and the attachment as between solicitor and client. Tilney v. Stansfeld, 28 W. R. 582.

10. Service of a notice of motion for a writ of attachment upon the solicitor on the record of the party against whom the attachment is to be issued is sufficient notice to the party, without personal service. Browning v. Sabin, 46 L. J., Ch., 728; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 511; 25 W. R. 602.

11. A notice of motion for a writ of attachment for disobedience to an order made on an original petition need not, as well as the order, be served personally on the respondent to the petition, but may be served by being left at his residence. Browning v. Sabin (5 L. R., Ch. D., 511; 46 L. J., Ch., 728; 25 W. R. 602) explained. Re A Solicitor, or Re Ryan, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 152; 49 L. J., Ch., 295; 42 L. T. 310; 28 W. R. 529.

I. ARTICLES.

12. A. and B., and the son of B., entered into partnership as solicitors, and, by articles, agreed—(2) that the partners were diligently and faithfully to employ themselves in carrying on and managing all the professional business in which they or either of them might be employed or concerned; (5) that B. should use his best endeavours to obtain the appointment of the partnership firm to three offices or clerkships which were then held by B., and such offices should be partnership appointments; (6) that all other compatible offices should be obtained if possible in the name of the firm, and the emoluments treated as part of the profits of the partnership; (15) that if B. or his son should retire, or A. or B. or his son should die, the share of the deceased partner should accrue to the surviving partners; that if B. or his son retired they were to use their best endeavours to secure the practice to the continuing partners, and such retiring partner should not practise within thirty miles; (16) that if either partner should not diligently and faithfully employ himself in carrying on the said partnership practice, and should, on receiving moneys, bills, notes, etc., knowingly or wilfully omit immediately to make entries thereof, or if A. or the son of B. should absent himself more than two months in one year, the others or other of the partners, if they or he should think fit, should be at liberty to dissolve the partnership by giving to the offending partner a notice to that effect, and the partnership should from that time, or the time specified in the notice, be dissolved, in the same manner and with the same consequences as if it had been determined by the voluntary retirement of the offending partner. B. and his son subsequently procured their own appointment, or the appointment of one of them, to the offices or clerkships, and did not endeavour to procure the appointment of A. It was afterwards discovered that B. was greatly involved in debt, and he absconded in January 1849, and did not return to the business. In May 1849 A. served a notice, in the manner pointed out by the articles on B. and his son, to dissolve the partnership from that date; and he then filed his bill against B. and his son to have the dissolution declared by the Court, an injunction to restrain them from practising within thirty miles, and a decree that they should resign the several offices or clerkships:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to dissolve the partnership as to B., but not as against the other partner, the son of B., and that he was not entitled to dissolve it by notice under the sixteenth clause without the concurrence of his co-partner (the son). That B. not having procured, or endeavoured to procure, for the partnership firm the appointments to the several offices or clerkships, so as to give the plaintiff at the dissolution either a share of the profits of the offices, or the chance of competing for them, but such appointments having been procured for B. and his son to the exclusion of the plaintiff, B. and his son were not to be allowed to retain the offices for their exclusive benefit. That inasmuch as from the nature of the offices they could not be sold, nor could any manager or receiver be appointed to carry them on, the defendants ought to be charged with the value of the offices in the partnership accounts. That the plaintiff having given a notice of dissolution (acting under the sixteenth clause), and his co-partner having adopted it, the partnership should be treated as dissolved from the time of the notice, although not with the consequences attaching to a dissolution under the fifteenth clause. That the consequences of a dissolution under the fifteenth clause not having attached, the plaintiff therefore was not entitled to the injunction to restrain the defendants from practising within thirty miles. Smith v. Mules, 9 Hare 556; 16 Jur. 261; 21 L. J., Ch., 803.

1. An agreement between two solicitors in partnership together, that one of them should continue to carry on the business under their joint names, and should be entitled to all the profits thereof, and should grant to the other partner an annuity of 300*l.* during the life of his mother, and in the event of his dying in the lifetime of his mother, should pay to his widow an annuity of 100*l.* during the remainder of his mother's life, and should indemnify him against all liability in respect of his name being used, and that the partnership should cease on the death of the mother of the retiring partner:—Held, not to be void as against public policy, but to be a valid and binding agreement. Aubin v. Holt, 2 Kay & J. 66; 25 L. J., Ch., 36.

Held, also, that the agreement must be considered to mean that an annuity was to be granted by deed, and that the retiring partner was entitled to enforce specific performance of such agreement. Ib.

Held, also, that, as incidental to such relief, the Court would decree an account and payment of the arrears of the annuity, and would not direct the deed to be ante-dated, so as to cover them, and leave the plaintiff to recover at law upon the deed. Ib.

Semble, that the plaintiff ought strictly to have tendered a deed for execution before filing the bill; but, as it was proved that he had made a formal demand for the arrears:—Held, that he was entitled to his costs. Ib.

2. A deed of partnership for life between two solicitors contained a covenant that on the death of either the survivor should, during the joint lives of himself and the widow of the deceased partner, pay such person or persons as the deceased partner should appoint an annuity of 200*l.* per annum, or one-fourth of the annual profits of the survivor, as the survivor should elect, and also provided for the admission, on certain conditions, of a son of the deceased partner into the "partnership business." One of the partners, by an antenuptial settlement made shortly after the execution of the partnership deed, exercised the power of appointment in favour of his wife, and several years afterwards died greatly indebted to the firm. The survivor continued to practise as a solicitor for some years, and realised profits by his business, if estimated without regard to the former business, but they were insufficient to make good the outstanding liabilities of the late partnership, and he became bankrupt without having made any payment to the widow of the deceased partner, or electing between the two modes of payment mentioned in the articles:—Held, that the assignees were entitled to make the election. Esq. Harper, 1 De G. & J. 180; 3 Jur., N. S., 724; 26 L. J., Bk., 74.

Held, secondly, that on their electing not to pay the annuity, the widow had no provable demand, the business carried on by the survivor being, according to the true construction of the deed, a continuation of the partnership, and the payments made on account of the partnership being properly set off against the profits of the sole business. Ib.

II. UNQUALIFIED PRACTITIONER.

3. G., a native of Scotland and resident there, employed F., a writer to the signet, as his professional agent, and F., who had been in the habit of employing P. (a solicitor in England) to act for him in his own affairs, also employed him to act as solicitor for G. in any causes, suits, or matters in which G. was engaged in England, and G. subsequently sanctioned this appointment of P. Some time after, F. ceased to be the agent of G.; but P. continued to act as his solicitor. In the course of litigation between G. and F., the former suspected there was some arrangement between F. and P. to share the profits of the English business; this being denied by F., all objections on that head were abandoned. G. afterwards ceased to employ P. as his solicitor, and F. having afterwards died, the following letters from P. to F. came to light: "27th July 1828. Sir,—In consideration of your having obtained for me the business of the L. family (in which G. was engaged), I oblige myself to pay you one-half of the free profits arising therefrom, and that so long as I shall retain the said business either directly or indirectly." "27th August 1829. Sir,—The within written contract of copartnership I agree shall refer to all business in which I am at present or shall in future be directly or indirectly employed by you, and oblige myself to pay you one-half of the free profits thereof." The bill of costs of P. being submitted for taxation, G., on the above letters, presented a petition praying that the taxing Master might, on taxation, have regard to the agreement contained in the letters, and might be directed to disallow all charges for attendances with F., and all such part of the profits as had arisen from the bills and had been agreed to be given to F., and that G. should be allowed only his share as partner:—Held, that the petition could not be supported: that the agreement was either legal or illegal; if the former, then P. had only charged what he was entitled to charge, and G. had no right to any benefit under the agreement, inasmuch as F. contracted for himself, not for G.; if the latter, then P. could make no charge on G. to which he was not strictly entitled, and G. would have only to pay what he would have had to pay if there had been no contract. Gordon v. Dalzell, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 206; 16 Jur. 186.

The stat. 22 Geo. 2, c. 46, being penal, must be construed strictly, and though a person not duly sworn, etc., as thereby provided, acting as a solicitor, is liable to be struck off the rolls; yet neither on authority nor principle is the client entitled in such a case to any benefit. If P. allowed F. (an unqualified person) to use his name, he renders himself subject to the penalty; but if P., being himself qualified, transacts the business, the statute is inapplicable; and as P., being a duly qualified solicitor, would be entitled to charge, there would be nothing to prevent his giving a share of the profits to any third party whatever, and therefore to F. Even if the agreement were legal, and F. could not on that account enforce payment, the client could not claim the benefit of it, and require a deduction from the bills of costs of the share agreed to be given to F. Ib.

1. Granting a moiety of the profits of the business of an attorney to an unqualified person, for the mixed consideration of the goodwill of the business, which descended from father of grantor, and the advancement of money and family affection, is not contrary to the policy of the 22 Geo. 2, c. 46, s. 11. Candler v. Candler, 6 Madd. 141; Jac. 225.

2. But it is otherwise to enter into partnership with an unqualified person. Tenak v. Roberts, cited 6 Madd. 145.

An agreement to share profits, and act as a writer in the office, but not to be considered as a partner, is, in fact, a partnership, and within the above statute. Ib.

3. A partnership between a solicitor of a superior Court, and a solicitor of an inferior Court, in which both undertook to divide the profits of their general business, to recommend clients to the other, and to keep the partnership secret, is illegal. Giffellan v. Henderson, 2 Cl. & F. 1.

4. The mischief against which s. 32 of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, was directed is the practice of acting as an attorney or solicitor without being duly qualified. And the offence prohibited is not the mere permitting your name as an attorney or solicitor to be made use of in an action or suit "upon the account or for the profit of an unqualified person," but doing it in such a manner as thereby to enable such unqualified person to appear, act, or practise in any suit at law or in equity. Scott v. Miller, 1 Johns. 220; 5 Jur., N. S., 858; 28 L. J., Ch., 584.

An agreement by an attorney with a certificated conveyancer, that in case the latter should introduce to the former any matters of professional business, for which the attorney would have a claim for costs, he would pay to the conveyancer a commission, is not, on the part of the attorney, such a permitting of his name to be made use of upon the account or for the profit of an unqualified person as was intended to be provided for by 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 32. Ib.

Such an agreement would not subject the parties to penalties for common barratry. Ib.

III. GOODWILL AND PROFITS.

5. Where articles of partnership between London solicitors provided that either partner might retire, and that in that case the continuing partner should pay the retiring partner for his share and goodwill the fair marketable value, and the retiring partner should not practise within one hundred miles of the General Post Office, but should use his best endeavours to promote the interests of the existing partners:—Held, that the goodwill must be taken to mean only the interest which the retiring partner would have had if he had remained in the partnership till the expiration of it by effluxion of time. Austin v. Boys, 2 De G. & J. 626.

The term "goodwill" seems wholly inapplicable to the business of a solicitor, which has no local existence, but is entirely personal, depending upon the trust and confidence which persons may repose in his integrity and ability to conduct their legal affairs. Ib.

F., H., and B. carried on the business of solicitors in partnership. A. was afterwards admitted as a partner, and in 1838 F. retired; he reserved to himself the right of introducing T. as a partner. In 1846 H., B., and A. entered into new articles of partnership, the term of which was extended to 1853, and articles were inserted for the valuation and purchase of the share of any retiring or deceased partner during the term; these articles were made subject to the right reserved by F. of introducing T. In 1848 H. died, and his widow was paid the value of his share. In 1849 F. introduced T. as a partner. A memorandum was then drawn up, without reference to the articles of 1846, declaring that from September 1850, T. should have one-fifth of the profits until September 1853, from which date he was to take an equal share in the profits; the partnership to continue for ten years from the 1st September 1850. A clause was afterwards added, that in the event of the death or retirement of either of the senior partners before the 1st September 1853, his two-fifths should be divided into thirds, two-thirds to be taken by the surviving senior partner, and one-third by T. A., in connection with his signature to this memorandum, wrote that it was not to annul or prejudice the articles of 1846. In August 1853, A. signified his intention of retiring from the business, and he claimed the value of his share of the partnership and of the goodwill. Upon a bill filed by A., to have the value of his share in the business and the goodwill thereof ascertained:—Held (affirming 24 Beav. 598; 3 Jur., N. S., 1285; 27 L. J., Ch., 243), that A., by his notice, had dissolved the partnership; that the two days intervening between the notice and the determination of the partnership under the articles of 1846 could give no marketable value to the goodwill in the business, and that A. was only entitled to the profits during the continuance of the partnership. 8 C. non. Austen v. Boys, 4 Jur., N. S., 719; 27 L. J., Ch., 714.

1. Specific performance of an agreement to purchase the business of an attorney refused, upon a bill by the vendor; there being no express stipulations by which the Court might be enabled to carry it into effect on his part, in return for the defendant's purchase-money; and there being no conditions generally applicable to transactions of this nature, so as to come within the description of "usual clauses" to be inserted in an instrument to be drawn up in pursuance of the agreement. Bacon v. Farlow, 1 Meriv. 459.

Quære, whether such an agreement, if legally a valid agreement, is of such a nature as is capable of being enforced in equity. Id.

2. An agreement by a solicitor, made for valuable consideration on the sale of his business, not to practise as solicitor in any part of Great Britain for twenty years without the consent of the purchaser, held valid, and an injunction granted to restrain the seller accordingly from practising, and from endeavouring to induce any persons who were clients of the former and present firm to cease to employ the latter. An injunction was also granted to restrain the seller from detaining or destroying certain papers and documents belonging to the firm which he had got in his possession. Whittaker v. Hone, 8 Beav. 383.

Profits. 3. Prima facie, the emoluments derived from offices of the character of a clerkship to the guardians of a union do not fall within the ordinary description of profits of an attorney. Collins v. Jackson, 31 Beav. 645.

The profits of the offices of clerkship to poor law guardians, of superintendent registrar of births, deaths, and marriages, treasurer of turnpike trust, stewardship of a manor, treasurership of a charity, and receivership of tithes, at a fixed salary:—Held, to form part of a partnership between solicitors. Id.

4. Where two separate solicitors are retained by the same clients in the same business, the presumption of law is, that as their liability is joint, the profits are to be equally divided; and this presumption is not removed by the delivery of separate bills of costs where the solicitors have conducted different parts of the business irrespective of the quantity of work performed by each. Robinson v. Anderson, 7 De G. M. & G. 239; 20 Beav. 98.

Where the contrary is alleged, the burthen of proof is on him alleging it. Where, therefore, the evidence in favour of an agreement for a different division was not stronger than that against it, the Court decided in favour of equality. Id.

Where two solicitors, who are not then in partnership, are employed in the same matter for a client, as in the defence of an action, the prima facie inference of law is, that they are partners as to that particular matter, and entitled to an equal share of the joint profits.

5. Two solicitors are partners under articles which provide that certain offices shall be conducted by one alone, but that the profits of such offices shall be divided equally, and this is done at the instance of the employer. One partner dies, and, in taking the partnership accounts, the surviving partner carries in a claim for sums due from the deceased partner in respect of the above offices which he had paid. This is objected to as a private and not a partnership debt, and, on that question:—Held, that the offices were personal, and no action by or against the partnership would lie in respect of them; therefore the claims were not partnership claims. Alston v. Sims, 8 W. R. 431; 1 Jur., N. S., 438; 24 L. J., Ch., 583.

6. In 1852, the plaintiff and his partners and K. agreed to co-operate as joint solicitors to a new scheme of railway, and any profits which might arise from the business of getting up the company, and obtaining the Act of Parliament, should be equally divided between the plaintiffs' firm and K. The provisional committee of the company, in 1853, passed a resolution that the plaintiffs' firm and K. should continue to act as solicitors, on the understanding that they should have no personal claim against any member of the committee. The plaintiff and K., in March 1855, made a proposal to the directors of the company, which was accepted, that they should be allowed 1,500*l.* in paid-up shares, in addition to their disbursements, such 1,500*l.* to be received in full for all professional business up to that time, but to be subject to revision in case the line should be completed, in which case they had an equitable claim for such portion of the preliminary expenses as might be fairly applicable to any extension of the railway. In July 1855 the directors paid to the plaintiff and to K., on account of past disbursements, 150*l.* and 100*l.* The works of the railway were, in 1856, suspended for want of funds. After negotiations for providing additional means, C. & A. found the money for the purchase of the land; and the works were resumed, the money being found by K. and the engineer. An arrangement was then entered into between the plaintiff, K., and C. & A., that C. & A. should transact the conveyancing business of the company for the mutual benefit of themselves, the plaintiff, and K., and that the profits should be divided equally. In obtaining another Act of Parliament for a fresh project in connection with the railway, K. used his own name alone, and the plaintiff did not transact any portion of the business or find any money. In 1859 the plaintiff pressed the company for payment on account of his share of the costs incurred in obtaining the first Act of Parliament and subsequent professional business, and he made a proposal, which was not accepted; but the company paid to the plaintiff 450*l.* in cash and 740*l.* in paid up shares, and the plaintiff, in May 1859, executed to the company a release of all claims. The plaintiff shortly afterwards received from the company 500*l.* in paid-up shares. After the receipt of the plaintiff's proposal in 1859, the directors ceased to treat him as a solicitor of the company, and in consequence of the plaintiff having pressed for payment, K. would have nothing more to do with him, and he stated that he was not aware that the plaintiff had the slightest claim upon him. In 1860, the plaintiff gave notice to K. to furnish accounts, and that he claimed to be entitled to one moiety of and in all sums due and owing from the company in respect of all professional business transacted by K., either in his own name or in their joint names, on behalf of the company, of which company he and K. were the joint solicitors. K. submitted that all questions as to the interests of the plaintiff and himself in the business transacted between the date of the Act and March 1855 were disposed of by the operation of the memorandum, and that such memorandum of March 1855, coupled with the release of May 1859, and the payments to the plaintiff, had settled all questions between the plaintiff and the defendant K. up to that time, and he denied that a partnership had been constituted:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that he and K. were entitled to share equally in all profits derived, or to be derived, from all business transacted by them, or either of them, for the company from 1852, to the date of the decree, except that as to all conveyancing business transacted for the company by the plaintiff since May 1857, the plaintiff was entitled to one-third part of the profits to the 30th June 1859. Hanslip v. Kitten, 8 Jur., N. S., 835, 1113; 7 L. T., N. S., 291.

1. Two sets of parties having projected a railway on a similar line, agreed to consolidate the project, and appointed, as solicitors of the proposed company, the plaintiff and defendant, whom they had respectively consulted prior to the consolidation. The two solicitors accepted the appointment without making any definite arrangement as to the division of the business, or of the emoluments of the office, and a much larger portion of the work was done by the defendant than by the plaintiff. In a conversation between them about six months after the appointment, and before the principal part of the business was transacted, the plaintiff stated, as the result of his inquiries into the practice in like cases, that the allowance for office expenses and personal trouble in such limited partnerships between solicitors was made by each party retaining, besides his expenses and disbursements, from 10 to 25 per cent. on the amount of the net charges for the business done, and which principle he considered satisfactory; and the defendant, in reply, observed, that there could be no misunderstanding about it between honourable men. Upon a bill by the plaintiff, claiming an account and division of the profits of the business done by the company, upon the footing of an equal co-partnership, and offering to allow 25 per cent. upon the work done separately to the partner who did it; the Court, under the circumstances, made a decree accordingly. Webster v. Bray, 7 Hare 159.

2. A., a person qualified to be admitted, but not admitted, an attorney, having as he alleged projected a railway, and procured the appointment of Messrs. B., solicitors, to be solicitors to the promoters of the undertaking, entered into an agreement in writing with Messrs. B., by which it was agreed that for a certain time after A.'s admission as an attorney the profits of the business done for the promoters, or for the company when created, should be divided in a certain proportion between A. and Messrs. B., with a proviso for an allowance to Messrs. B. in the event of the business being conducted by them with the aid of their establishment to a greater extent than by A. and his establishment, and with another proviso that no participation of profits should be claimable by any partner of A., it being declared to be the intention of the parties to confine the same to A. personally for his life and continuance in professional practice. Afterwards A. was admitted an attorney, but he never practised or had an establishment for purposes of practice:—Held, that a suit by A. for specific performance of the agreement and an account and payment of profits could not be maintained. An agreement relating to solicitors' business to be done for the promoters of the D. railway, and the company when created, was to be applied (according to one of its clauses) to any branch railways that might be joined with and enter into the said main line, and also any collateral lines and undertakings that might emanate from the D. Company; the promoters of the D. Railway were amalgamated by Act of Parliament with the promoters of the L. railway so as to form the G. N. Company:—Held, that the agreement was not to be applied to solicitors' business done for the G. N. Company. Ord v. Johnstone, 4 W. R. 37; 1 Jur., N. S., 1063.

IV. DISSOLUTION.

3. Solicitors in partnership cannot dissolve their partnership as against their client without his consent, so as to enable the retiring partner as discharged to act against him. Cholmondeley (Earl) v. Clinton (Lord), 19 Ves. 273.

Practice of solicitors, partners, dividing their business, considering one only as agent to the other, disallowed, the client being entitled to their united exertions. Id.

4. A partnership between two solicitors for their joint lives may be dissolved instantaneously, if one of the parties fraudulently sells out trust funds and applies the produce to his own use. Essell v. Hayward, 30 Beav. 158; 29 L. J., Ch., 806; 8 W. R. 593.

5. Where a firm of solicitors, having moneys in their hands belonging to a client, dissolve partnership, and he subsequently demands the money of one partner, who, by an arrangement between themselves, had undertaken to pay it, that is not such a dealing as to discharge the liability of the other partner, assuming that the client knew of the dissolution and arrangement. Re Hindmarsh, 8 W. R. 203.

1. One of two solicitors in partnership obtains an order in the name of a client; the partnership is dissolved, and the client and the other partner come as co-petitioners to discharge the order, and for other relief:—Held, that it was a misjoinder for such other partner to unite in it. Sangar v. Gardiner, C. P. C. 119.

2. P. and D., in the year 1814, commenced a partnership as solicitors. W. was a client of the firm, and employed D. as his private agent to receive his rents. The partnership was dissolved in 1817, when W. was indebted to the firm for a bill of costs, in a sum of 867*l.*, and D., upon a settlement of the partnership between him and P., was found indebted to P. in a sum of 750*l.*, for which he gave security, and agreed to assign to P. the outstanding partnership debts. Of this settlement, debt, and agreement, notice was given to W. in 1821. During the partnership, and afterwards, D. had received moneys on account of W. beyond the amount of the bill of costs: there was no evidence of any direction given by W. to D. to apply the moneys received by D. on his account to the payment of the bill of costs, nor of any settlement of accounts between W. and D.; but it was in evidence, that, upon one occasion, W. said to D., that he had better keep some money of W.'s which he had in his hands, as he might want it. A bill in equity, filed by P., stating these facts, and that D. had possession of the partnership books, to which P. had not access; that D. had refused to concur with him in suing W. at law, or to permit the use of his name for that purpose; and that, by collusion between W. and D., the moneys of W. received by D. had, as they pretended, been applied to payment of the partnership debt, and praying an account and payment of the debt, was dismissed by the Master of the Rolls; but on appeal to the Lord Chancellor this order was reversed, and a decree for account and payment made against the executors of W., and this decree was affirmed on appeal. Nottidge v. Pritchard, 8 Bl. N. S. 493; 2 Cl. & F. 379.

V. LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF CO-PARTNER.

3. Where the tenant for life of settled estates obtained an Act for selling and investing the proceeds in other lands, to be settled to the same uses, but by fraud obtained an order by which part of the proceeds was paid to him. A., B., and C. acted as his solicitors in every proceeding, one only being aware of the fraud:—Held, that the other partners, and all other parties to the transaction, were liable, jointly and severally, to make good the amount in a suit by the remainderman after the death of the tenant for life. Brydges v. Branfill, 12 Sim. 369; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 249; 6 Jur. 310.

4. Where the name of a partnership firm of solicitors appears upon the records of the court as solicitors for a party to the suit, each individual member of the partnership is, prima facie, liable and responsible for any misconduct. Norton v. Cooper, 3 Sm. & G. 375.

5. Q. having a mortgage on lands belonging to H., sells under a power contained in his mortgage deed. R. & Co. act as solicitors for Q. and H.; and all incumbrances prior to and including Q.'s are paid off, there being a surplus in his hands. When the purchase is completed, Q. hands to S., a partner in the firm of R. & Co., such surplus in the form of a cheque, with the direction that S. should act as his solicitor, and that he (Q.) should act on his advice, S. returning for answer that he (Q.) had nothing to do with the disposition of that cheque, but that it was his (S.'s) affair. S. had previously taken two opinions of counsel on the point, whether Q. could safely hand over the surplus to H. by reason of a judgment registered to L., and which had been held valid at law; and one of those opinions was that he could, the other that he could not; and S. communicated to Q. the first opinion, but concealed the second. L. filed a bill against H. on the question, whether his judgment was a charge upon the land, and it was held by V.-Ch. Kindersley that it was; but on appeal to the House of Lords that decision was reversed, and Q. was held liable for the surplus in his hands. S. and Q. being dead, Q.'s representative filed the present bill against R. & Co., as the surviving partners of S., for the recovery of such sum, and the costs in the suit of L. v. H., on the ground of the fraudulent concealment of the second opinion, and that Q. had entrusted him, S., with the conduct of the affair, which S. had accepted:—Held, that R. & Co. were liable, and decree made accordingly with costs. Ren v. Lane, 5 W. R. 110; 3 Jur., N. S., 125.

Held, also, that although there might be a good ground of action at law for damages, yet that the fiduciary relation which existed by reason of the handing over the surplus to S. rendered this court the proper and best tribunal to procure relief. Id.

6. A. and B., partners, were solicitors to the commission. More than six years back they received various sums of money on account of the estate, having a set-off in respect of their bill of costs, but which bill they did not deliver to the assignee within six years. Beyond the six years, A. and B. (upon an agreement that A. should pay all the debts) dissolved partnership, and the assignee, with knowledge of this fact, continued to employ A. alone as the solicitor to the commission, and no attempt was made to charge B. with the moneys received by A. and B. till very lately, viz., when an official assignee was appointed; nor had B. ever acknowledged any liability to account:—Held, first, that as between B. and the creditors, neither the Statute of Limitations, nor laches, nor other conduct of the assignee would operate as a bar, A. and B. being solicitors to the commission. But, secondly, that as the assignee was able to recoup the estate, he could not, under such circumstances of conduct on his part, call on B. to account. A. had become bankrupt. Semble, nevertheless, that he or his assignees were necessary parties. Exp. Gould, Re Robertson, 4 Dea. & Ch. 547; 2 Mont. & A. 48; 4 L. J., N. S., Bky., 7.

7. Two solicitors having entered into partnership, each of them continued to attend to the business of his former clients, but on the partnership account; and one of the partners having proposed to invest a sum of money belonging to a client in a certain mortgage, the proposal was agreed to by the client, and the money was paid to the joint account of the partnership at their bankers for the purpose of the investment. The negotiations for the mortgage were broken off by the proposed mortgagor, but the partner by whom the proposal had been made to the client untruly represented to the client that the mortgage had been effected, and thenceforward continued to pay the interest as if it had actually been done. Although the banking account was kept in the name of the firm, the moneys standing to the account belonged exclusively to the partner who committed the fraud; he alone attended to and had the control of the account, and the fraud was unknown to the other partner. Five years after the receipt of the money from the client the partnership was dissolved, and ten years after the dissolution of the partnership the partner who committed the fraud became bankrupt, and the client, who from the time of the dissolution until the bankruptcy had continued to employ him as his solicitor, discovered the fraud. The client then filed his bill against the other partner to recover the money:—Held, that the defendant was originally liable to the plaintiff for the money received by the firm; that his original liability was continued as well after as before the dissolution of the partnership by the fraudulent representations of his former partner, and that in equity the limitation in bar of the claim did not begin to run in favour of the defendant until the time when the client discovered the fraud; that the fraud and misrepresentation of one of the partners entitled the client to relief in equity against the other, not only if the case was one in which the client might have recovered in an action at law against such other partner, but also if the remedy at law against the other partner was barred by lapse of time. Blair v. Bromley, 5 Hare 542; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 105; 11 Jur. 115. Affirmed 2 Ph. 354; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 495; 11 Jur. 617.

1. Sums of money were from time to time remitted by a receiver in a cause to a firm of solicitors, A., B., & C., as agents of the receiver, to be paid into court to the credit of the cause. The firm also acted professionally in the cause for the plaintiff, who was beneficially interested in the remittances. A. misappropriated those remittances, and absconded. Upon a petition by the plaintiff, seeking to charge B. and C. with the sums misappropriated by A.:—Held, that he was not entitled, upon such petition, to the relief thereby sought. Dixon v. Wilkinson, 5 Jur., N. S., 1063; 4 De G. & J. 508. And see S. C. 4 Drew. 614.

The Court has jurisdiction to charge solicitors with losses sustained by their clients from misconduct in the prosecution of suits. Semble. Id.

2. Where a firm of solicitors received from a client a sum of money for which a receipt was given in the name of the firm, stating that part of the money was in payment of certain costs due to the firm, and that the residue was to make arrangements with the client's creditors, and the solicitor misappropriated the money:—Held, that the transaction with the client was within the scope of the partnership business, and that the partners in the firm were jointly and severally liable to make good the amount. Atkinson v. Maohreth, 2 L. R., Eq., 570; 35 L. J., Ch., 624; 14 W. R. 883; 14 L. T., N. S., 722.

Held, also, that all the partners were necessary parties to a suit for that purpose. Id.

3. Where a partner in a firm of solicitors in negotiating a mortgage falsified the abstract of title delivered to the mortgagees for the purpose of concealing prior encumbrances, and substituted in the schedule of the draft of the mortgage deed for an unencumbered farm the name of a farm which he knew to be encumbered:—Held, on a claim by the mortgagees to prove against the estate of one of the other deceased partners for any deficiency in their security, that the profits of the transaction being for the general benefit of the firm, all the partners were liable for the fraudulent act of the partner. Sawyer v. Goodwin, 15 W. R. 1008; 36 L. J., Ch., 578; 16 L. T., N. S., 622.

4. Three unmarried women, trustees of a fund of stock, unlawfully associated their solicitor, A., who was partner in the firm of A. & B., as a trustee with them. The four together unlawfully sold out the stock for the purpose of investing it on mortgage in the name of A. alone. The money was paid to the bankers of the firm to the credit of the partnership account, and the trustees consented to and adopted an investment of a sum of the same amount shortly afterwards made by A. in his sole name, and a declaration of trust thereof was subsequently executed by A. In course of time this security was realised, and the money was received by A., and not re-invested. The partnership was dissolved. A. became bankrupt, and it was then first discovered that the money was not invested. Within six years after A.'s bankruptcy, the three women, who had married after the stock was sold out, concurred with their husbands in filing a bill to recover the fund from B., which was dismissed with costs, it being held that the money was for a time in the hands of the partnership only for the purpose of being invested in the name of A., and that having been done, their professional duty was discharged, and that the money had been lost ultimately by a breach of trust of A., and not a breach of his duty as solicitor. Coomer v. Bromley, 16 Jur. 609; 5 De G. & Sm. 532.

5. A client of a firm of solicitors was in the habit of writing to B., one of the partners, solely and individually, and of receiving letters from B. in reply, generally written in B.'s name only. Upon one occasion B. wrote asking the client to send a cheque to "us," meaning the firm, for the purpose of payment into court. The client sent the money to B. only. This and other remittances were misapplied by B., and the partnership was afterwards dissolved as to him. Motion, on behalf of the client, that the partners (one of whom was nominal only) might jointly and severally be ordered to pay into court within three days, under the summary jurisdiction of the Court, the sum misapplied by B., though an order of course against B., refused against the other two partners, but without costs. Exp. Burdon, Re Lawrence, 2 W. R. 680; 2 Eq. Rep. 931; 2 Sm. & G. 367; 18 Jur. 742; 23 L. J., Ch., 791.

A solicitor, who allows his name to be used by others, conducting in his name the business of solicitor, incurs the peril of personal responsibility. Id.

1. A receiver in a cause, under an order to make payments and hand over the balance to the plaintiffs, remits money to his solicitors, who are also solicitors for the plaintiffs, and the money is lost by the absconding of one of the firm. One of the solicitors, having retired from business and sold his share, allows his name to be used and an annual certificate to be taken out for him. Motion is made for payment into court by the firm (and entitled in the matter of the firm) of the sum lost:—Held, that the Court could not exercise its summary jurisdiction, the receiver having remitted the money to the firm as his own solicitors, and not appearing on the motion; and this reason applied more strongly to the retired partner. Motion dismissed without costs. Chater v. Maclean, 3 W. R. 261; 1 Jur., N. S., 175; 3 Eq. Rep. 378.

2. Trust money was sent to A. (one of a firm of solicitors, who was himself one of two trustees) for investment on mortgage. The money was paid into the bankers to the account of the firm, and was afterwards drawn out by A., and never invested:—Held, that the other member of the firm was liable. Eager v. Barnes, 31 Beav. 579; 7 L. T., N. S., 408.

3. One of three trustees for sale was also the solicitor employed in the matter, and he alone received the purchase-money, and neglected to apply it. The conveyance was executed, and the receipt signed by all three trustees:—Held, that the solicitor was not the agent of the other trustees, so as to make the receipt by him the receipt of all; and the other trustees having joined merely for the sake of conformity, were not chargeable. Re Fryer, 3 Kay & J. 317; 3 Jur., N. S., 485; 26 L. J., Ch., 358.

4. A being entitled to a fund in court, gave the firm of solicitors who had acted for him in the matter a joint and several power of attorney to receive the money from the accountant-general. A. sent the power to B., one of the partners, who received the money, and signed the receipt in his own name. B. paid the money into his own private banking account, and shortly afterwards absconded with it. The letters on the subject of the power of attorney, and the costs of stamping it, were charged for in the bill of costs of the firm. Upon a bill seeking to make S., the other partner, liable to repay the money, but not paying for an account:—Held, that the money must be treated as having come into the hands of the firm in the course of their business as solicitors; and that S. was liable for its repayment with interest. St. Aubyn v. Smart, 5 L. R., Eq., 183; 17 L. T., N. S., 439; 16 W. R. 894. Affirmed 3 L. R., Ch., 646; 19 L. T., N. S., 192; 16 W. R. 1095.

Held, also, that the Court had jurisdiction to give relief, though the bill did not pray for an account, both under its general jurisdiction over solicitors and because B. had been guilty of fraud. Id.

5. Money received by one member of a firm of solicitors in the course of the management and settlement of the affairs of a client of the firm, is money paid to the firm in the course of their professional business; and, consequently, the members of the firm are liable to make good any loss occasioned by the negligence or dishonesty of their partner by whom such money was received. Dundonald (Earl) v. Masterman, 7 L. R., Eq., 504; 38 L. J., Ch., 350; 17 W. R. 548; 20 L. T., N. S., 271.

6. When a client has entrusted a firm of solicitors with moneys for investment on his behalf, he is at liberty, in the event of their misapplication of the moneys, to sue all or any one or more of the members of the firm, their liability being both joint and several. Plumer v. Gregory, 43 L. J., Ch., 616; 18 L. R., Eq., 621; 31 L. T., N. S., 80.

In order to render one partner in a firm of solicitors liable for the misapplication of money entrusted by a client of the firm to the other partner, it must be shown that the money was received by that other partner in the ordinary course of business, for the purpose of being invested on a specific security. S. C. 43 L. J., Ch., 803.

A mere general statement to the client by the partner who receives the money that the money is to be lent on security to another client is not sufficient to bind the other partner; the receipt of money for the purpose of laying it out generally not being part of a solicitor's business, or within the scope of a solicitor partnership. Id.

7. Trustees deposited with a solicitor certain bonds payable to bearer. His partner had no actual knowledge of this, but letters referring to the bonds were charged for in bills of costs delivered by the firm; letters referring to the bonds were also copied into the letter book of the firm; and cheques for money received as interest on the bonds were drawn on the account of the firm. The solicitor made away with the bonds:—Held, that, under the circumstances, his partner was liable. Dundonald (Earl) v. Masterman (7 L. R., Eq., 504) referred to. Cleather v. Twisden, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 731; 49 L. T. 633; 32 W. R. 198. Reversed 78 L. T. Journ. 148.

8. A solicitor invested the money of one of his clients without his knowledge on an improper mortgage security. The client, believing the security to be insufficient, proved against the estate of a partner of the solicitor, which was being administered in Chancery, for the whole amount of the debt, and, under a compromise, received a dividend out of the estate. Afterwards it turned out that the security was sufficient to pay the client in full:—Held, that the dividend must be repaid to the solicitor's estate, and did not enure for the benefit of the subsequent incumbrancers on the mortgaged property. Smyther v. Goodwin, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 351; 45 L. J., Ch., 289; 34 L. T., N. S., 635; 24 W. R. 493.

pointed one of two receivers. H., without communicating with his co-receiver, or with R., put certain deeds forming part of the partnership property into a box with R.'s name outside. R. subsequently obtained possession of these deeds, and claimed to retain them as security for the money owing to her by the firm. The articles of partnership contained a clause providing that, on the death of either partner, the surviving partner should, within six months of the next general annual account, pay to the representatives of the deceased partner his share of the profits of the year, and should execute a bond for payment within two years to them of the share of the capital of the deceased partner:—Held, that H. had no power of giving R. a security upon these deeds, which formed part of the partnership property, and that R. must deliver them up to the receivers in the partnership action. Hills v. Reeves, 30 W. R. 439. Affirmed 31 W. R. 209.

1. It is no part of a solicitor's business to receive, on behalf of his clients, money coming to them upon payment of a mortgage debt, nor to retain such money for the purposes of investment generally. Therefore, where money had been received by R., one of a firm of solicitors, and misapplied by him after his representation that it had been reinvested on a mortgage security, payments purporting to be in respect of interest being made by him up to his death:—Held, that the surviving partner was not liable to make good the loss, on the several grounds: that the transaction was not within the ordinary business of a solicitor; that he had no knowledge or means of knowledge as to the receipt and appropriation of the money by his partner; and that it did not appear that the guilty partner had received the money upon the faith (at the time) of its being reinvested upon a specific security. Bourdillon v. Roche, 6 W. R. 618; 27 L. J., Ch., 681.

2. The practice of the solicitors having the conduct of a sale to pay the deposits into court for the auctioneer is within the ordinary business of a solicitor. An auctioneer sent the deposits received on a sale to the solicitors of the plaintiff who had the conduct of the sale, to be paid into court. This deposit was received by one of the members of the firm, and misappropriated. On the question whether the auctioneer should not have himself paid this deposit into court, and whether he was not therefore liable to pay it over again:—Held, that the receipt and payment into court of the auctioneer's deposit was within the ordinary business of the solicitors to the party having the conduct of the sale, and that the innocent members of the firm were therefore liable for the defalcation of their partner. Biggs v. Bree, 51 L. J., Ch., 263; 46 L. T. 8; 30 W. R. 278. Affirming 51 L. J., Ch., 64; 45 L. T. 648; 30 W. R. 132.

3. M., a member of a firm of two solicitors, M. & H., in 1847, without any authority given by B., instituted a suit in B.'s name, as one of several co-plaintiffs, and carried it on for nine years, when B., on being served with a subpoena for payment of costs of unsuccessful exceptions, became for the first time aware of the unauthorised use of his name:—Held, upon petition by B. in the suit, that M. was responsible for the costs of the suit from beginning to end, and that H., though not personally cognisant of his partner's misconduct, was also liable, at all events, for costs incurred up to the time when upon the dissolution, in 1849, of the partnership between himself and M., his name ceased to appear on the records of the court as one of the solicitors for the co-plaintiffs in the suit. Re Manby, 3 Jur., N. S., 259; 26 L. J., Ch., 313.

Semble, that if B. had during the course of the litigation become aware of the use of his name, his subsequently omitting to interfere actively to prevent its continuance would not, per se, have been sufficient to relieve the solicitors from liability to him for the costs. Id.

Bills of Exchange.] 4. A bill of exchange received by a partner in a solicitor's firm from a client is, prima facie, to be deemed to be received on behalf of the firm; and if the solicitors allege the contrary, they are bound to prove it by clear evidence. Moore v. Smith, 14 Beav. 393.

By the decree, the plaintiffs' costs (£319l.) had been ordered to be paid to her solicitors, out of a fund in court, in which she was interested; but the plaintiff having, in the course of the proceedings, given to one of the firm of solicitors a bill for 300l., which they had passed away, the order for the payment of the 319l. was stayed. Id.

5. L., a partner in a firm carrying on the business of solicitors, gave, without the knowledge of his partners, a promissory note in the joint name of the firm, as security for a sum of money advanced to him by C., and applied the money to his own private use. The partners filed their bill against C. and L. for the delivery up of the note, and, on L. becoming bankrupt, brought his assignees before the Court by supplemental bill. The assignees, by their answer, submitted their interest in the suit to the judgment of the Court:—Held, first, that, under the circumstances of the case, the note was not binding on the partners, either as between them and L., or as between them and B.; secondly, that it was a case in which L.'s assignees ought neither to pay nor to receive costs. Smith v. Coleman, 7 Jur. 1053.

I. IN WHAT CASES.

6. A demurrer to a bill by a solicitor for payment of his costs and for an account was allowed, there not being those peculiarities in the circumstances of his claim to justify the entertaining such a suit, the remedy being at law. Allison v. Herring, 9 Sim. 583; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 223.

7. Court refused an order for account for an attorney's bill taxed by prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas. Osbaldiston v. Cross, 2 Com. 612; 2 Eq. Abr., 8 P. L. 21.

8. Bill for general account lies against a solicitor and agent taking security without a settlement of accounts. Detillin v. Gale, 7 Ves. 584.

1. An account of all the dealings and pecuniary transactions of a solicitor not connected with the bills of costs cannot be obtained upon a petition for the taxation of costs. The account directed on petition being limited to moneys paid or duly appropriated towards satisfaction of the bills. Re Smith, 4 Beav. 309.

2. Settlement of accounts between attorney and client is not conclusive, the nature of their connection taking their accounts out of the general rule of equity. Lewes v. Morgan, 5 Price 42.

3. Demurrer to a bill by a solicitor for an account between himself and his client in respect of moneys received and paid and of loans made by the former for and on behalf of the latter, and of bills of costs due from the former to the latter, allowed, as not amounting to a case of mutual account. Padwick v. Hurst, 18 Jur. 763; 23 L. J., Ch., 657; 18 Beav. 575.

Upon demurrer, a general allegation that accounts are of a complicated nature is not sufficient, unless supported by specific allegations of facts showing their complex character. Id.

4. A bill or claim for an account filed against a confidential agent cannot be resisted on the ground that the defendant has also been employed as a solicitor in the same matter. Oddy v. Secker, 2 Sm. & Gif. 193.

5. A bill was filed by a solicitor against a person employed as his occasional clerk, and in that character receiving and paying moneys for him, and claiming against him a sum for services, the master having paid from time to time moneys to and for the clerk. The bill prayed an injunction to restrain an action brought by the clerk for the balance of the account:—Held, that this was not such an account as to require the interference of equity, and the injunction was refused. Fluker v. Taylor, 3 Drew. 183.

6. A party gave a sum of money to a firm of solicitors, to invest upon freehold security. They found a security, and invested the money upon it. The security turned out valueless:—Held, that the giving money to a solicitor for the purpose of general investment does not in itself create the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, so as to make the solicitor liable as trustee for a deficiency in the security. Mare v. Lewis, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 219.

Held, also, that as this was a single isolated transaction, a bill for an account, as between principal and agent, could not be maintained as against the solicitors. Id.

7. An account settled between a client and her solicitor, including arranged bills of costs, decreed to be opened and the bills referred for taxation in an action instituted nearly two years after such settlement, on the grounds of undue influence, and that the charges were improper and excessive, and that much of the business done was unnecessary, and ought not to have been done. Watson v. Rodwell, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 625; 47 L. J., Ch. 418; 26 W. R. 524.

Operation of the Statute of Limitations.]

8. Where solicitors of a company, after an order to wind up, delivered up documents to the official manager, on his undertaking that they should be paid out of the first moneys in their hands, and allowed nine years to elapse before delivering their bill (the official manager having until then had no funds in his hands):—Held, that the claim was not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Gloucester, Aberystwith, Central Wales Railway Co., 2 Giff. 47; 6 Jur., N. S., 116; 29 L. J., Ch., 383.

9. Bills of costs examined after a long period, and even after payments made. Newman v. Payne, 2 Ves. J. 202; 4 Bro. C. C. 350.

10. The ordinary relation of a solicitor to his client in questions of account is not of such a fiduciary character as to bar the Statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1, c. 16. Watson v. Woodman, 24 W. R. 47; 20 L. R., Eq., 721.

II. HOW TAKEN.

11. In taking an account of the pecuniary transactions between an attorney and his client, the production of a bond entered into by the latter is not sufficient evidence of a debt to that amount, and actual payment must be proved. Lewes v. Morgan, 3 Y. & J. 230. S. C. nom. Morgan v. Evans, 8 Bli. N. S. 777; 3 Cl. & F. 159.

12. Where an account is decreed to be taken of the dealings and transactions between an attorney and his client, in the course of which the attorney has taken securities from the client, the attorney must not only prove the securities, but likewise the consideration for which they were given. Therefore, where a promissory note was given by the client to his attorney under circumstances of great suspicion, but the client was unable for want of witnesses to prove fraud in the attorney, the Court, upon decreeing an account between the parties, directed an inquiry as to whether the attorney could by any, and what affirmative evidence prove the consideration for the note. Jones v. Thomas, 2 Y. & Coll. 498.

13. It is the duty of a solicitor to keep clear and distinct accounts. Re Clark, 13 Beav. 173. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 43; 15 Jur. 1047; 21 L. J., Ch., 20.

14. There were numerous money transactions between N., a solicitor, and D., his client. Before 1825 they settled their accounts on two or three occasions, whenever it appeared convenient. From 1824 to 1846 there was a sum of 5,000*l.* placed in D.'s hands by N., for which D. gave his bond, and there were other sums secured by D.'s promissory note. D. gave N. moneys as he asked for them in gross sums, nothing being said as to their appropriation. Upon D.'s death, a bill for an account being filed against his executors:—Held, that the account should be taken without appropriating any sum credited to either party in satisfaction of interest; that no balance should be struck before the end of the account; and that every sum credited to either party should carry interest from the date at which it was credited. Napper v. Dendy, 5 W. R. 4.

15. Where advances have been made by a solicitor to his client, by way of loan, the client being in distress, a general account will be ordered of such transactions. Hicks v. Morland, 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 206.

1. Solicitor who advanced money to infant for subsistence of his family, and acted as his confidential adviser, is in nature of guardian to him, and an account settled between them within a month after infant became of age, and without latter having any assistance, was opened, notwithstanding vouchers were delivered up. Revett v. Harvey, 1 Sim. & S. 602; 2 L. J., Ch., 39.

2. As to the form in which settled accounts between attorney and client should be delivered. Johnes v. Lloyd, 10 Price 62.

3. Acknowledgment by consor of judgment, in reply to inquiry by intended assignee, that the sum secured by the judgment is justly due to the consee, shuts out the equitable defence which the consor may have had against the consee, subject, however, to inquiry as to the bona fides of the transaction. Hickson v. Aylward, 3 Moll. 1.

The general expressions of Lord Redesdale, in Lewes v. Morgan (3 Y. & J. 230), are not to be construed to mean that accounts settled between parties standing in the relation of solicitor and client are to be disregarded. It would be absurd that a solicitor, however accurately his accounts were settled, and however plainly his books show prima facie that the accounts were regular, should more than any other man be put to vouch his account over again. Id. 15.

4. The solicitor of an administratrix receiving money belonging to the estate of the intestate is not a trustee for the estate; and if he makes payments out of it for the use of the administratrix, which are either previously directed, or subsequently adopted by her, he will be charged only with the balance actually in his hands. Watkins v. Maule, 1 L. J., Ch., 82.

5. A. placed moneys in the hands of her solicitor, who acted also for her as a money scrivener, undertaking to find securities for her. He placed the moneys out on insufficient securities, misrepresenting to her their character:—Held, that as against him, if living, it would have been, and as against his estate after his death it was not, a matter for an action for negligence, but a matter of account between principal and agent, and the client had a right to reject the charge for disbursements on insufficient securities. Smith v. Pococke, 2 Drew. 197; 18 Jur. 478; 23 L. J., Ch., 545.

6. The summary jurisdiction by petition at the Rolls does not exclude the right of a client to file a bill against his solicitor for a general account. O'Brien v. Lewis, 9 Jur., N. S., 321.

7. Where directors of a company carry on business unauthorised by the deed of settlement, and moneys have been paid by the company to the solicitors on account of costs generally, the solicitors have no right post litem motam to appropriate such payments to the costs incurred in respect of the unauthorised business, but, on the contrary, the Court will appropriate the payments to the costs which the company was liable to pay. Re Phoenix Life Assurance Co., Ex p. Howard and Dolman, 1 Hem. & M. 433.

8. H. by agreement with J. became solicitor on the record in certain suits, and an arrangement was made that moneys received by him as such solicitor should be applied to meet some fees to counsel due from J. The moneys were so received and applied after J.'s death. J.'s estate was insolvent, and a summons was taken out by his executor for payment of these sums:—Held, that as H. had received these moneys as solicitor on the record and by express agreement with J., he was entitled to retain them, subject only to an account. Jeyes v. Jeyes, 45 L. J., Ch., 245; 34 L. T., N. S., 167.

Settled Account, Opening, Surcharging, or Falsifying.] See ACCOUNT, II. 2.

XII. Books.

9. The sale of the books of a solicitor who has been adjudicated a bankrupt is not authorised by the 137th section of the 24 & 25 Vict., c. 134; and, therefore, where a sale by auction of the book debts and books of a firm of bankrupt solicitors had been directed by the assignees, it was held to be improper, on the ground that the affairs of the clients of the bankrupts might be made public. Ex p. Roberts, Re Holden, 10 Jur., N. S., 28; 33 L. J., Bky., 8.

The ownership of a solicitor in the books relating to his business is subject to his client's right to have them protected from publication. S. C. 12 W. R. 183; 9 L. T., N. S., 469.

10. Where partnership has expired by efflux of time, and in a suit for an account, etc., a receiver has been appointed before decree, the Court will not compel defendant (the former managing partner) to deliver up to receiver, for the purpose of making out bills of costs, partnership books and accounts which have remained in his hands, and title-deeds belonging to a third person which came into possession of co-partners as solicitors, such defendant offering the receiver free access thereto, and to assist in making out such bills. Davie v. John, McClell. 206; 15 Price 446.

I. AGREEMENTS AS TO COSTS.

1. In General, 6417.
2. Construction of and Effect of on Taxation, 6419.

1. In General.

1. An attorney, executor to will, refusing to prove will, unless a large stated allowance was given to him, and which was agreed to, suing for the allowance it was refused him by the Court. Pomfret v. Murray, 9 Mod. 230.

2. A petition presented by a member of the provisional committee to compel a solicitor, who had received a gross sum of money under an agreement, in full of all demands, from the acting committee, to deliver a bill, costs, etc., for the purpose of taxation. Ordered, under the circumstances, to stand over without prejudice to any suit, and with liberty to institute one, and generally to apply. Exp. Bass, Re Stephen, 4 Rail. Ca. 275.

This was varied by ordering delivery and taxation. S. C. id. 723.

3. An agreement by a client residing in Ireland with her solicitor there that, if he would employ a solicitor in London to obtain letters of administration necessary to her obtaining a fund out of Chancery, she would pay him a commission of 10 per cent. on the fund, and also reimburse him the payment to the London solicitor:—Held, to be an agreement against public policy, which the Court would not enforce. Strange v. Brennan, 15 Sim. 346; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 389; 10 Jur. 649. Affirmed 2 Coop. C. C. 1.

4. In proceeding under the Solicitors Act, the Court is not authorised to interfere with a special agreement between solicitor and client, the legal effect of which is to alter the ordinary relation between solicitor and client, to supersede the authority or discretion of the Court, by giving to either party more or less than is warranted by the rules of the Court, or by providing for the settlement and payment of the bill in a special manner. Re Eyre, 2 Ph. 367; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 277. Affirming 10 Beav. 569; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 62.

5. Messrs. S., solicitors, promised, by letter, to conduct the professional business in which F. might be concerned, "personally or otherwise," upon the terms of receiving agency charges. F. was a solicitor, but he had omitted to take out his certificate; at that time he was interested in a suit which he had procured to be instituted against himself, for the purpose of administering the estate of a testatrix, whose executor he was, and in whose estate he was beneficially interested. Upon the completion of this business, Messrs. S. obtained the whole of the money belonging to F. out of court; they repudiated the letter, and insisted upon their right to costs as between solicitor and client; they also refused all accounts, and never delivered any bill of costs. Upon a bill by F.:—Held, that the letter was a valid agreement; that Messrs. S. were not entitled to higher charges because F. was uncertificated; that his being uncertificated was immaterial, as such an agreement was legal if made with any client; that the transaction was such that it could not be taxed under the common order; and that it was necessary to file a bill and abandon the common order which had been obtained for taxation: and a reference was directed to the taxing master to tax the bill of costs as between principal and agent. Foley v. Smith, 0 L. J., N. S., Ch., 621.

F. had also mortgaged his interest to Messrs. S., to secure a sum of 150*l.*, which they were to pay for F.; but though they omitted to make the payment, and retained that, with other money, in their hands, the Court treated it as an ordinary sum of money in hand, and declined to direct the taxing master to allow the plaintiff interest upon those sums, though the mortgage which was to include them was bearing interest. Id.

6. An agreement to pay costs is an agreement to pay taxed costs; and a third party paying a solicitor's bill of costs, in order to compromise a suit, stands in the same situation with respect to the right of claiming taxation as the solicitor's client. Vincent v. Venner, 1 Myl. & K. 212; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 49.

7. The solicitor who had projected, and at his own expense brought forward, a scheme for making a railway, entered into an agreement with the persons who became the provisional committee for prosecuting the undertaking that the costs and expenses should be paid by such solicitor and projector, and that the members of such provisional committee should not be personally liable to him for such costs and disbursements, but that the same should be paid out of the fund to arise from the deposits to be paid on the shares:—Held, that this agreement was not illegal as between the provisional committee and the shareholders, regarded as trustee and cestui que trust, inasmuch as the trustee was entitled to be indemnified by his cestui que trust in respect of the costs and expenses properly incurred. Whether the contract to pay future costs out of the deposits was illegal as between the solicitor and client, attending to the fact that the client, being a trustee, might properly stipulate that he should not be personally liable for the costs to be incurred, but that the same should be paid exclusively out of the trust fund. Quere. Parsons v. Spooner, 5 Hare 102; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 155; 10 Jur. 423.

8. A letter from a client, wishing to change his solicitor for another solicitor, stating the amount of property in the suit and his own circumstances, and stating that the client is wholly unable to pay his solicitor's bill, and offering the conduct of the suit to the new solicitor, followed by a letter from the solicitor agreeing to act for the client in the suit, is not sufficient to constitute an agreement by the solicitor to look to the property for satisfaction of his costs, and to exonerate the client from liability. Bryan v. Twigg, 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 114.

A dismissal of a bill in Chancery, at the hearing, affords a presumption that the suit was improperly instituted, but is not a case for a reference to a Master for inquiry. Id.

9. An agreement by a solicitor to take a gross sum from his client in lieu of costs is not void, though regarded by the Court with jealousy. Re Whitcombe, 8 Beav. 140; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 19.

10. The settlement of a solicitor's bill by the client for a fixed sum is valid, and will not be disturbed by the Court when it has been entered into fairly, and with proper knowledge on both sides. Several years after a solicitor had ceased to act for his client, an agreement was entered into between them for the delivery up of the client's papers, in consideration of a fixed sum to be paid to the solicitor when the Court of Chancery should declare that he was one of the next of kin of E. S., and entitled to a fund in court. No bill was delivered, and five years afterwards the right of the client was established:—Held, that the agreement was valid, there having been no fraud or undue pressure, the client having had the full benefit of the agreement, and it being impossible to replace the parties in their original position. A husband agreed to pay a sum of money on his being held next of kin of A. B., and entitled to his property. The wife was, and claimed to be, such next of kin. The husband having succeeded in right of his wife, the Court held that there was an error and mistake in the agreement, which ought to be rectified, and decreed the husband to make the payment. Stedman v. Collett, 17 Beav. 608; 18 Jur. 457.

1. In proceedings to recover an estate, A. became greatly indebted to his solicitor; an agreement was entered into between A. and his brother B., by which A. agreed to relinquish his interest in the estate to B., in consideration of B. undertaking to pay the costs already incurred, with interest:—Held, that solicitor being no party to the agreement, could derive no benefit from it. Moss v. Bainbridge, 18 Beav. 478.

In the course of a protracted litigation B. had become indebted to his solicitor in 9,377*l.* (as was alleged), of which 4,696*l.* had been paid out of pocket. The solicitor agreed to accept 3,500*l.* in full for his costs, unless the client recovered the estate, in which case the client agreed to pay the full sum of 9,377*l.* The client did not dispute the validity of the agreement until seven years after, when the litigation had been successful. The Court upheld the agreement. Ib.

A client, by letter, undertook to pay his solicitor interest on balance appearing against him from time to time, upon the principle of annual rests:—Held, that the agreement was unilateral and not binding; and that even if it had been duly signed by both parties, it was not such an agreement as could be enforced between solicitor and client, being entered into while that relation was subsisting between them. Ib.

A client signed an agreement by which he charged his estate with the bill of costs due to his solicitor, with lawful interest, on the principle of annual rests:—Held, first, that it was voluntary; and, secondly, that having regard to the fiduciary relation between the parties it could not be maintained. Ib.

The necessary requisites stated for supporting such an agreement assuming it not to be usurious. Ib.

The Court looks with jealousy upon a transaction between a solicitor and his client, and throws the burden of proving that it is proper on the solicitor. Ib.

2. A client, when he retained a solicitor, expressed himself dissatisfied with the usual mode of remunerating solicitors, but no definite arrangement was made as to any other mode of remuneration. Subsequently, the solicitor, in a letter to the client, stated that "until I have the pleasure of seeing you, and of finally making some general and well-understood arrangement with you on the subject of costs, it shall be understood on my part, that, beyond costs out of pocket, I have no claim upon you personally." No arrangement was ever made, though the subject was often alluded to by the solicitor:—Held, that this did not amount to a concluded agreement by the solicitor to claim nothing as of right but costs out of pocket. Wilson v. Emmett, 19 Beav. 233.

3. An agreement of the assignee to allow the solicitor interest on the amount of his bill of costs does not bind the bankrupt's estate; nor does the resolution of creditors, at a meeting held for this purpose, bind those who are absent. Exp. Phillips, 1 Dea. 368; 2 Mont. & A. 526.

4. An agreement between a solicitor and a client without the intervention of any other solicitor, to allow the solicitor interest on his bill of costs, cannot be maintained independently of subsequent acquiescence, unless it appears that he informed the client that the law allowed no such charge. Lyddon v. Moss, 4 De G. & J. 104; 5 Jur., N. S., 637.

But where the relation of solicitor and client had ceased after such an agreement had been made, and the client subsequently (having in the meantime had proper advice upon the subject of the agreement) entered into a second agreement with the solicitor in part founded on the former, which she did not seek to impeach till fourteen years after its date:—Held, that there had been such delay and acquiescence as to preclude any title to relief. Ib.

5. Agreement by a solicitor to receive a fixed sum for costs for business hereafter to be done is not binding on the client, who is, notwithstanding payment under it, entitled to an order for the delivery of a bill of costs, and its taxation. Re Newman, 30 Beav. 196.

6. By an agreement between a solicitor and his client, it was stipulated that the former should have 5*l.* per cent. commission on the gross amount of property recovered by him for the latter, in addition to his costs:—Held, that the stipulation was contrary to the policy of the law, and that the solicitor must refund the amount received by him for commission, though included in a settled account. Pinos v. Beattie, 32 L. J., Ch., 734; 9 Jur., N. S., 1119; 11 W. R. 979.

7. The solicitor of the city of London entered into an agreement with the corporation to transact their legal business at a fixed annual salary, including all emoluments, he being bound to account for all his receipts and payments, and to hand over to the corporation all costs recovered by him in excess of his disbursements and salary. By the agreement, he was also precluded from transacting business for any other client:—Held, that this agreement was not opposed to the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 32, or to the policy of the law. Galloway v. London (Mayor), 36 L. J., Ch., 978; 4 L. R., Eq., 90; 15 W. R. 1032; 16 L. T., N. S., 407.

8. An agreement beforehand between a solicitor and his client to pay a specific sum in lieu of costs is illegal. Re Brady, 15 W. R. 632.

9. A preliminary agreement between a solicitor and his client on obtaining a loan on mortgage, no bill of costs having been delivered, illegal, and the delivery of the bill and taxation ordered more than twelve months after completion of the transaction and payment of the balance to the client. Re Camley, 18 W. R. 1125.

A solicitor lent his client 200*l.* on promissory note. The note was made out for 210*l.*, the addition being alleged to be for costs on the transaction:—Held, that the client was not precluded from requiring a bill of costs, showing how the sum of 10*l.* was made up, by the lapse of nearly three years and subsequent money transactions between the parties. Ib.

1. By an agreement between clients and solicitors, it was agreed that, in the event of the solicitors succeeding in recovering certain property for the clients, they should receive 10 per cent. on the value of the property. The agreement was submitted to the Master before the solicitors had taken any steps in the matter, and the Master required the opinion of the Court to be taken thereon under the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1870, s. 4:—Held, that the opinion of the Court on the validity or fairness of the agreement could not be required under s. 4, before any money was payable under the agreement. Anon., 1 L. R., Ch. D., 573; 45 L. J., Ch., 47; 24 W. R. 38.

2. A document containing the terms of an agreement as to the amount of costs payable by a client to his solicitor, signed by the client only, is not an agreement in writing within s. 4 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1870. Exp. Pitt, Re Raven, 45 L. T. 742; 30 W. R. 134.

3. Where an agreement has been made for the remuneration of a solicitor and the solicitor alleges that the remuneration was for non-professional work, the persons chargeable cannot obtain the common ex parte order for the delivery and taxation of the bill of costs. The Solicitors' Remuneration Act 1881, s. 8, has made no difference in the practice in this respect. Re Inderwick, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 729; 50 L. T. 221; 32 W. R. 541.

Preliminary Expenses on Formation of Joint Stock Company.] See COMPANY, I.

2. Construction of and Effect of on Taxation.

4. The jurisdiction as to taxation given by the Solicitors Act (6 & 7 Vict., c. 73) extends only to the ascertainment by the ordinary rules of practice of the quantum payable by one party to the other. It does not authorise the Court to determine whether a special agreement exists as to the mode of taxation, or the manner in which the costs, charges, and expenses are to be settled and paid. Re Rhodes, 8 Beav. 224; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 97.

5. Upon a petition for taxation, the Court has no jurisdiction to determine the construction of a disputed special contract as to the costs. Re Thompson, 8 Beav. 237; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 137; 9 Jur. 169.

6. A solicitor acted for clients under a special agreement as to costs, which was doubtful:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to determine the construction and effect of the special agreement on petition. Re Beale, 11 Beav. 600.

7. The Court has no authority, upon a petition by a client against his solicitor, to give relief founded on a special agreement. Alexander v. Anderson, 6 Beav. 405.

8. Messrs S., solicitors, promised, by letter, to conduct the professional business in which F. might be concerned "personally or otherwise," upon the terms of receiving agency charges. F. was a solicitor, but he had omitted to take out his certificate; at that time he was interested in a suit which he had procured to be instituted against himself, for the purpose of administering the estate of a testatrix, whose executor he was, and in whose estate he was beneficially interested. Upon the completion of this business, Messrs S. obtained the whole of the money belonging to F. out of court; they repudiated the letter and insisted upon their right to costs as between solicitor and client; they also refused all accounts, and never delivered any bill of costs. Upon a bill by F.:—Held, that the letter was a valid agreement; that Messrs S. were not entitled to higher charges because F. was uncertificated; that his being uncertificated was immaterial, as such an agreement was legal if made with any client; that the transaction was such that it could not be taxed under the common order; and that it was necessary to file a bill and abandon the common order which had been obtained for taxation; and a reference was directed to the taxing master to tax the bill of costs as between principal and agent. Foley v. Smith, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 621. Affirmed by the Lords Justices, 25th May 1852.

F. had also mortgaged his interest to Messrs S. to secure a sum of 150*l.*, which they were to pay for F.; but though they omitted to make the payment, and retained that, with other money, in their hands, the Court treated it as an ordinary sum of money in hand, and declined to direct the taxing master to allow the plaintiff interest upon those sums, though the mortgage which was to include them was bearing interest. Ib.

9. An agreement was signed between a solicitor and his clients by which the former was to take a sum agreed on, in full of all demands. An order of course afterwards obtained for the taxation of his bill was discharged for irregularity. Re Mackrill, 11 Beav. 42.

10. Settlement of a bill of costs between a solicitor and client upon a special agreement precludes an order being made upon petition for taxation; the agreement must first be set aside by suit before the matter can be re-opened. Re Whitcombe, 8 Beav. 140; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 19.

11. A solicitor entered into a special agreement with his client for interest on his bill, with annual rests, and for a charge on the estate recovered:—Held, that this was not a proper case for an order of course for taxation, and such an order was discharged. Re Moss, 17 Beav. 59.

12. An agreement to charge only costs out of pocket does not preclude a taxation. A solicitor in 1849 agreed to charge sums out of pocket only, provided the client was unable to recover the proper costs in the business. A taxation was ordered of a bill for business in 1853 in the usual terms, and without determining any question as to the agreement. Re Ransom, 18 Beav. 220.

1. Where there is an agreement by a solicitor with his client to charge only costs out of pocket, the Master will, under the common order in equity for taxation, have regard to such agreement. Re Philp, 2 Giff. 35; 6 Jur., N. S., 1024; 29 L. J., Ch., 866.

2. G., a solicitor, agreed to conduct the defence to a suit of S., a solicitor, upon terms that if the case of S. failed he would accept usual agency fees. The case of S. failed entirely from the two letters which had been subsequently, though not at the time of the agreement, communicated to G., who continued to conduct the defence without observation. G. had sent in his bill of costs, made out as between solicitor and client. Taxation ordered upon the scale of agency charges only. Re Gedge, 23 Beav. 347.

3. Where a common order for taxation had been obtained, and an application for its discharge was made on the ground of the existence of a special agreement as to the costs, the Court refused to discharge it, the solicitor having before the order improperly refused a copy of the agreement to the client, who was an illiterate person. Re Ingle, 25 L. J., Ch., 169; 1 Jur., N. S., 1059.

II. SECURITY FOR PAST COSTS.

4. Bond obtained from the infant's grandmother for the amount of bill of fees and disbursements, directed to stand as a security for money justly due on account, and the bill ordered to be taxed. Brown v. Pring, 1 Ves. 407.

5. Bill for general account lies against a solicitor and agent taking security without a settlement of accounts. Detillin v. Gale, 7 Ves. 584.

6. Securities taken by an attorney from his client during the time of their connection as such for a present, the balance of accounts settled, for money lent and laid out, costs, and business done, and the price of a horse sold, void as to the present; and the plaintiff submitting to pay what should be actually due, the accounts were opened as to the whole; the horse being sold, soon after he was purchased from the attorney, for a price much less than was then stipulated, inquiry into his value directed. Newman v. Payne, 2 Ves. J. 199; 4 Bro. C. C. 350.

7. Where a solicitor made an absolute conveyance to himself of 1,000*l.* from the plaintiff's wife, whilst she was parted from her husband, the consideration expressed in the deed being for service done and favours shown; on bill brought to set aside the deed as obtained by fraud, decreed, on all the circumstances of the case, that the deed should stand only as a security for such sum as was justly due to defendant. Sanderson v. Glass, 2 Atk. 296.

If an attorney pendente lite prevail on a client to agree to an exorbitant reward, the Court will either set it aside entirely, or reduce it to the standard of those fees to which he is properly entitled. Id.

8. Mortgage by client to attorney, for costs due, and to become due:—Held, valid security for the costs then due only. Williams v. Piggott, Jac. 598. S. P. Jones v. Tripp, Jac. 322.

9. Attorney cannot take mortgage from client for amount of future bill; but scous for disbursement, and money to be advanced. Pitcher v. Rigby, 9 Price 79.

10. An account settled and a security taken by a solicitor from his client, though to be viewed with jealousy, is not to be treated as a nullity. Jones v. Roberts, 9 Beav. 419.

11. Principles on which the Court acts in sustaining securities given by a client to his solicitor for bills of costs and moneys advanced. Hiles v. Moore, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 385.

12. Where the trust deed did not authorise the solicitor to charge costs against his cestui que trust, securities obtained by him from his cestui que trust, for untaxed costs and advances, were set aside, and ordered to stand as securities for the sum really due, notwithstanding letters from the cestui que trust recognising the right of the solicitor to charge such costs; the solicitor not having informed his client that he was entitled to any remuneration for his services in the trust, and the letters having been written under his influence. But the rule being a hard one, and the conduct of the cestui que trust exceptional, the relief was given without costs. Gomley v. Wood, 3 J. & L. 678; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 418.

13. Semble, it is no objection to an equitable mortgage given for costs due, that they were not ascertained or delivered. Exp. Boville (2 Mont. & A. 382. n.), observed on. Bristow v. Warner, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 246.

14. A solicitor being indebted to A., and having a sum due to himself from a client, prevailed upon the client to give A. a common money bond for 3,000*l.*, such bond to be taken in part satisfaction of the money due from the client. A. not knowing at the time of the bond being given that the costs had not been taxed, a bill by the client against the solicitor and A. to have the costs taxed was dismissed with costs as against A. Harrison v. Wiltshire, 9 Sim. 255; 2 Jur. 679.

15. Bonds in penalties payable with interest taken by an attorney from his client, pendente lite, for untaxed costs, shall only stand as securities for such sum of money as shall, upon taxation, appear to be due, without interest thereon. Fowler v. Moore, 2 Jones 415.

16. C. for many years employed D. as his attorney, and in the course of those years became largely indebted to D., for business done and money lent. From time to time D. delivered accounts to C., but received no payments of any considerable amount from his client. C. afterwards employed other attorneys. Ultimately C., being threatened with an execution by a judgment creditor, applied to D. for his assistance, who procured the money for him by way of mortgage, but stipulated that the mortgage should stand as a security for his own debt, as well as the judgment debt. C., having assented to this arrangement, executed the mortgage deed, and also a deed of trust of even date, which was prepared jointly by D. and the other attorneys of C., by which it was agreed that the mortgage should stand as a security for the amount of D.'s debt to be settled by arbitration, and that in such settlement no prejudice should arise to D. by reason of the lapse of time:—Held, that this transaction did not amount to the receiving of a gratuity by an attorney from his client, and consequently, in the absence of fraud, was sustainable in a court of equity. Cheslyn v. Dalby, 2 Y. & Coll. 170.

A security which has been given to an attorney by his client for a debt really due, or as a reward for services already rendered, will not be set aside in equity. Id.

1. Where an attorney had taken a mortgage from his client for his bill of costs in preparing that and another mortgage, and the client, before the attorney's mortgage was executed, assented to the bill, but afterwards, on coming to redeem, questioned its accuracy; the Court directed the Master to examine the bill, with a view to ascertain the reasonableness of the charges, without entering into evidence as to whether the business charged for had been actually done. Wragg v. Denham, 2 Y. & Coll. 117; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 38.

2. Where a security is expressed to be given for costs generally, quære, can it be sustained to the extent of such costs as have been incurred at the time of the execution of such deed. Uppington v. Bullen, 2 Dr. & War. 184; 1 Con. & L. 291.

3. Quære, as to the validity of a mortgage for untaxed costs, and the right to charge interest thereon from the date of the mortgage deed. Lawless v. Mansfield, 1 Dr. & War. 557; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 113.

4. The plaintiff was solicitor for D., and at the time of his death D. was indebted to him for costs. On D.'s death he became solicitor for his executor, the defendant, who, being indebted to the plaintiff for costs of his testator, and further costs as executor, handed over to him the title deeds of certain leasehold premises of the testator, which had been left on special trusts, together with a letter making an equitable mortgage; there were funds applicable to the costs, which were misapplied:—Held, that the executor having committed a breach of trust in mortgaging, the solicitor dealing with him was affected by it, and could not recover without an inquiry as to the state of the assets, and semble was in no better condition than the executor himself would be. Purcell v. Buckley, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 55.

5. Bill to set aside a security for a sum therein expressed to be due, but which was in fact the estimated amount of past costs in a suit, executed by a client in favour of his then solicitor pending the suit, and without the intervention of another legal adviser, dismissed with costs; there being no evidence of pressure or improper conduct on the part of the solicitor, and no evidence or averment of any specific error in the bill of costs; and it appearing that the defendant had delivered the bill of costs at the time agreed on between him and the plaintiff, and five years and a half before bill filed, and that the plaintiff had had ample opportunity for discovering errors, if any. Blagrove v. Routh, 2 Kay & J. 509. Affirmed 3 Jur., N. S., 399; 26 L. J., Ch., 86; 5 W. R. 95.

The proposition in Lawless v. Mansfield (1 Dr. & War. 611), that a general charge is sufficient to open accounts between a solicitor and his client, is in conflict with the rule of the Court of Chancery in England, which is, that if the party seeking to set aside a security for the amount of a bill of costs relies on fraud, or error amounting to evidence of fraud in the bill of costs, he must aver and prove the specific items upon which he means to rely to be fraudulent or erroneous. Id.

6. After a long and unsuccessful litigation to recover an estate, a younger brother of the unsuccessful party, and the next to him in an entail claimed in the estate, entered into an agreement with him to pay what should be due in respect of the solicitor's bills of costs, with interest, on the principle of annual rents, and to commence a new litigation at his own risk in the name of the elder brother, who agreed on these terms to relinquish the estate to the younger brother. Shortly afterwards an agreement was entered into between the solicitor, who was also to conduct the new litigation, and the elder brother, that the solicitor should be paid in respect of the old costs a specified sum, being less than the costs out of pocket, unless the brothers, or one of them, came into possession of the estate, in which event the elder brother agreed that he or the younger brother would pay in respect of the old costs another specified sum, being the full amount of the bills, with interest calculated on the principle of annual rents. The bills had not been taxed, but had been examined, though not minutely, by a friend of the client, who had been a solicitor. The new litigation was conducted by the solicitor with his own capital. It succeeded, and the brothers came into possession of the estate. Seven years after the agreement with the solicitor had been entered into, they sought to set it aside, on the ground of undue influence and insufficient advice:—Held, that the agreement ought to be upheld. Moss v. Bainbridge, Bainbridge v. Moss, 6 De G. M. & G. 292.

Before the new litigation was completely closed, but after a successful verdict in it, the younger brother, on the eve of making an antenuptial settlement, signed a memorandum of agreement between himself, the elder brother, and the solicitor, whereby the brothers charged the estate with payment of all sums of money and bills of costs owing to the solicitor by both or either of the brothers, with lawful interest, on the principle of annual rents. At that time the relation of solicitor and client, though not dissolved, had been loosened by differences between the solicitor and the brothers, and the influence arising from that relation did not subsist in its full force. The solicitor made no attempt to prevent the brothers from consulting other solicitors; and in fact the solicitor of the intended bride intervened, though not as the solicitor of the intended husband:—Held, first, that the agreement was not usurious. Id.

Held, secondly, that it was not merely voluntary, and that whether the term as to annual rents could have been maintained or not, the solicitor was entitled to abandon it, and enforce the rest of the agreement. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the former agreement, as to the old costs, was binding on the younger brother under the latter agreement. Id.

Held, fourthly, that interest was payable on the old costs for the interval between the dates of the two agreements, as well as during the rest of the time. Ib.

1. A. having paid off a debt secured by mortgage upon real estates, in the equity of redemption, of which his wife was, at the date of their marriage, entitled to a life interest to her separate use; afterwards, without her priority, assigned the mortgage to the solicitor of himself and wife, as security for a debt due to such solicitor for costs principally incurred in a suit in which he acted; first, for the wife before her marriage, and afterwards for both the husband and wife:—Held, that such assignment was a valid security as against the wife's life interest in the hereditaments assigned. Nelson v. Booth, 3 Jur., N. S., 951; 27 L. J., Ch., 110; 5 W. R. 722.

The solicitor, having subsequently purchased from the original mortgagee for 40*l.* a debt, for costs, of 175*l.*, which the latter would have been entitled to have added to his mortgage debt, was held entitled as against the wife to the benefit of such purchase, but to the extent only of securing himself in respect of the debt due to him from the husband. Ib.

2. Where a solicitor has taken a mortgage from his client to secure the payment of costs, he is entitled to maintain a bill for foreclosure, though an order for taxation has been obtained against him at the Rolls, and no bill of costs has been delivered. Thomas v. Cross, 10 Jur., N. S., 1163; 13 W. R. 166; 11 L. T., N. S., 430.

The 37th section of the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 73, is no bar to such a suit. Ib.

The client of a solicitor gave him a mortgage to secure previous advances and costs. Having subsequently discharged him from being his solicitor, he obtained an order at the Rolls for delivery and taxation of his bill of costs, whereby the solicitor was prohibited from commencing any suit in respect of the bill pending the reference; but he did not serve it properly on the solicitor, and took no steps to enforce it. Upwards of six months after the order was obtained, the solicitor filed a bill to enforce his security:—Held, that the order was no bar to the suit. S. C. 5 N. R. 148.

A suit to foreclose the equity of redemption in property mortgaged to secure costs is not a suit "for the recovery of fees," within the meaning of the 37th section of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act; and a solicitor is not thereby debarred from commencing such a suit, though he has not delivered his bill of costs; nor will the proceedings be stayed, till the requisites of the Act be complied with, in a case where there are subsequent incumbrancers. Waugh v. Waddell (16 Beav. 521), commented on. S. C. 5 N. R. 148.

III. SECURITY FOR FUTURE COSTS.

3. Attorney cannot take a mortgage from client for amount of future bill, but secus for disbursements and money to be advanced. Pitchoe v. Rigby, 9 Price 79.

4. Generally, a bond, taken by a solicitor from the client in the progress of a cause, is subject to taxation. Plenderleath v. Fraser, 3 Ves. & B. 175.

5. Though the Court will open a solicitor's bill, and order taxation, after several years, and a security given, or even payment, upon gross errors, fraud, or pressure, where nothing appeared but a trifling inaccuracy, and under other favourable circumstances, the Court would not restrain proceedings upon a security obtained while business was depending. Cooke v. Setree, 1 Ves. & B. 126.

6. A solicitor having taken a judgment of his client for 400*l.* whilst the cause was depending, also several extraordinary charges appearing in his bill, though adjusted and allowed seventeen years ago, referred to be taxed, and judgment and other securities to be delivered up. Drapers' Co. v. Davies, 2 Atk. 295.

7. A security taken by a solicitor for future costs is not valid. Booth v. Creswicke, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 217; 8 Jur. 323.

8. A deed executed by a client to his solicitor, in which the consideration is untruly stated, will not be permitted to stand. Uppington v. Bullen, 2 Dr. & War. 184; 1 Con. & L. 291.

A solicitor will not be permitted to take a security for costs to be incurred; and there is no distinction between advances of money for the purposes of the cause and other costs. Ib.

Semble, such a transaction is maintenance. Ib.

Semble, that, if the security be taken for cash advances as well as prospective costs, no distinction can be made in favour of the former. Ib.

Quere, whether, when a security is given for past and future costs, it can be sustained as to the former, although void as to the latter. Ib.

9. Where a client gave to his solicitor a mortgage to secure costs then incurred, and thereafter to be incurred, with interest thereon from the time of taxation; and there were subsequent costs to a large amount, and afterwards the solicitor died; on motion by the client that the personal representative of the late solicitor should be ordered to hand over the title-deeds, etc., to the new solicitor, the client offering to confirm the mortgage as to the subsequent costs:—Held, that a security for costs to be incurred is void, as being against public policy, and therefore incapable of confirmation after the subsequent costs have been incurred, although a valid security for such costs may then be given; and consequently that, in this case, the lien was not avoided; and the papers should not be taken by the client from the personal representative of his late solicitor (who preferred the lien to a new security), until the costs for which no valid security had been taken were paid. Willons v. Tandy, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

10. A solicitor cannot receive a deposit of title-deeds as security for future bills. Exp. Laing, Re Duddridge, 2 Mont. & A. 381.

11. Mortgage by client to attorney for costs due and to become due:—Held, a valid security for the costs then due only. Williams v. Piggott, Jac. 598.

12. Held, that an attorney cannot take a mortgage from his client for securing future costs. Jones v. Tripp, Jac. 322.

13. A mortgage was executed by N. to R., at that time N.'s attorney, to receive what was then due to R., and also future advances. This deed was made a first charge on N.'s property, and who had previously been N.'s attorney obtained against N. a rule absolute for payment of costs found due on the Master's allocatur; he registered this rule, and thus became a second incumbrancer. R. then became largely N.'s creditor for costs subsequently incurred:—Held, on an order allowing S. to redeem R., that these subsequent costs could not be taken into the account. Shar v. Neale, 6 H. L. Ca. 581; 4 Jur., N. S., 695; 27 L. J., Ch., 444.

A solicitor, pending his employment, took security for costs from a poor and an illiterate client:—Held, that assuming a judgment creditor of the client had the same rights as the latter, still that, after ten years' acquiescence, the accounts would not be opened. S. C. 20 Beav. 157; 1 Jur., N. S., 666; 24 L. J., Ch., 563.

The plaintiff, a solicitor, obtained from his client securities on his real estate, whilst he wilfully obstructed the defendant (the former solicitor) in obtaining a final order for payment of his taxed costs, which would have enabled him to obtain a charge under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 18:—Held, that the plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to the benefit of his securities. Id.

1. A solicitor took a deposit of a policy of assurance from a client to secure costs, but without a memorandum to that effect. Subsequently a mortgage was executed, assigning the policy as a security for sums already advanced and thereafter to be advanced, but it made no mention of the costs:—Held, that the deposit for costs merged in the subsequent mortgage, and that after the payment of the sums advanced by way of loan the solicitor had no further lien on the proceeds of the policy. Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, Re Annesley, 2 Eq. Rep. 1257; 2 Drew. 289.

2. A. contracts to sell to B. estates for 17,000*l.*, B. agreeing therewith to pay certain specified debts of A., and among the rest his solicitor's bill, before a certain day, or to hand over to A. the purchase money. B. executes a bond for the payment of the solicitor's bill after the day has elapsed, and a bill is filed by A.'s executrix against B. for the payment of his purchase money into court, and the money is paid in. The solicitor commences an action against B. upon his bond:—Held, that B. cannot have the amount of the bond paid out of court, but the executrix of A. ordered to lend her name to tax. Williams v. Williams, 1 Jur. 839.

3. The Court will not set aside a charge given by a client to his solicitor, without the intervention of any other legal adviser, to secure payment of costs in a suit expressed to be due to the solicitor who was acting for him in suits then pending, there being no evidence of any pressure upon the client, nor any averment of fraud or error in the charges, while the client has not filed his bill till six years after executing the charge, and five years and a half after he has had the bills of costs in his possession. Hooper v. Cooke, 25 L. J., Ch., 467; 2 Jur., N. S., 527.

4. Decree to set aside a mortgage taken by a solicitor from his client to secure a sum consisting partly of a gross sum agreed to be paid for professional services, and as to the rest of the balance recited to be due, or a settlement of accounts, where it appeared that the client, from his situation as to ill health, was unable to take an active part in managing his own affairs, and where there was no evidence of any improper statement or examination of the accounts. The mortgage was declared to stand as a security only for what should be found justly due on taxation of the bills of costs, and on an account of all dealings and transactions. Morgan v. Higgins, 1 Giff. 270; 5 Jur., N. S., 236.

5. It is not competent for a solicitor to take a security for, or apply a security already taken to, the payment of costs which may be subsequently incurred. Re Foster, Exp. Walker, 6 Jur., N. S., 686; 29 L. J., Ch., 625.

6. Property was mortgaged by a client to his solicitor as security for costs incurred and to be incurred. The client became bankrupt, and his assignee applied to set aside the mortgage, and to have the bills taxed. The Vice-Chancellor (13 L. T., N. S., 746) refused the application, on the ground that a solicitor might arrange with his client to accept a stated sum for costs, and so avoid the expense of taxation; but a letter being produced, which was read as a waiver of any objection to a taxation:—Held, on appeal, that the order must be discharged, and a general taxation directed. Re Thompson, 14 L. T., N. S., 6.

7. A company employed a solicitor, who was not its ordinary solicitor, in a particular matter, and at his request gave him a mortgage of part of its property to secure the payment of his costs. The mortgage was not registered under the Companies Act 1862, s. 43:—Held, that it was the duty of the solicitor to see that the mortgage was registered, and that as he had not done so, he could not claim the benefit of it in the winding up of the company. Re Patent Bread Machinery Co., Exp. Valpy, 7 L. R., Ch., 289; 20 W. R. 347.

8. A debtor filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition. B. was appointed receiver, and took possession of the stock-in-trade of the bankrupt. By an extraordinary resolution, which was duly registered, the creditors accepted a composition of 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, to be paid in three instalments. When two instalments had been paid and the third provided for by promissory notes, B., who had previously given up possession of the stock-in-trade, sent in a bill of costs to the debtor for 400*l.* He agreed to the amount, entered into a covenant under seal to pay it, and by the same instrument assigned his stock-in-trade to B. by way of bill of sale. B. subsequently took possession of part of the property under the assignment. Thereupon the debtor moved in the Court of Bankruptcy for an order for B. to bring in a bill of costs to be taxed, to deliver up the property, and that the bill of sale might be delivered up to be cancelled:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. Exp. & Re Lyon, 41 L. J., Bk., 41; 7 L. R., Ch., 494; 20 W. R. 566; 26 L. T., N. S., 491.

IV. ASSIGNMENT OF COSTS.

9. A solicitor's lien is a dormant security, in which it differs from a mortgage; but a solicitor may assign a debt due to him for costs, with the benefit of any lien he may have upon any document for such costs. The claim is equally valid whether the deeds are in the actual possession of the solicitor or of his assignee; and such lien may pass to the solicitor's assignee, if the deeds were handed over in the solicitor's presence, and at his request, to his assignee, without his actually touching them. Bull v. Faulkner, 2 De G. & Sm. 772; 13 Jur. 93.

1. A solicitor assigns his claim for costs to W., and becomes bankrupt, and W. gives notice to the London agents of the solicitor of their claim, and the assignees in bankruptcy petition for payment to them, subject to the London agents' claim:—Held, that the notice to the London agents, as far as costs became payable to them, took those costs out of the order and disposition of the bankrupt, the costs being ordered out of the fund in court. Petition refused. Sharples v. Marsh, 2 W. R. 400.

2. In June 1854 T., a solicitor, assigned to A., for value, the costs payable to him in an administration suit in which he acted as solicitor for the plaintiff; and gave notice of such assignment to all proper parties. By the order on further directions made in the suit in August 1854 a fund was directed to be paid into court, out of which the plaintiff's costs were thereby also directed to be paid to T. In October 1854 T. became bankrupt, but the fund was not paid into court until January 1855:—Held (contrary to 23 Beav. 391; 3 Jur., N. S., 403; 26 L. J., Ch., 288, but on different facts), that the fund was not in the order and disposition of T. at the time of his bankruptcy, with the consent of the true owner, and that A. was entitled thereto. Day v. Day, 1 De G. & J. 144; 3 Jur., N. S., 782; 26 L. J., Ch., 585.

3. Until the Court has made an order for the payment of costs out of a fund in court, the solicitor has no lien on such fund for such costs; therefore, when the solicitor to a party in a suit assigned the costs due and to become due to him in the suit, and subsequently became insolvent, and an order was afterwards made for the payment of the costs out of a fund in court, and the official assignee in insolvency of the solicitor claimed the costs as against the person to whom they had been assigned, as being under the order and disposition clause, on the ground that (though notice had been given to the solicitors for the plaintiff in the suit) no stop order had been obtained on the fund in court:—Held, that it was not necessary to get a stop order on the fund in court, and therefore, that the person taking under the assignment was entitled to the costs. Lord v. Colvin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 82; 10 W. R. 420; 6 L. T., N. S., 211.

V. INDEMNITY BY, FOR COSTS.

4. If a solicitor gives a relator an indemnity for costs, or uses his name without authority (although afterwards assented to), the Court will order the information to be taken off the file with costs, to be paid by the relator and attorney. Att.-Gen. v. Skinners' Co., C. P. C. 7.

5. The solicitor for the petitioning creditor, on the commission being superseded, writes to the bankrupt, "I am ready, and hereby offer, to allow and pay the costs" incurred by the bankrupt in petitioning for the supersedeas:—Held, that the solicitor was personally liable on this undertaking, and that the bankrupt might petition for an order on the solicitor to pay these costs, notwithstanding a subsequent commission had issued against him, under which he had not obtained his certificate, his assignees disclaiming all interest in the matter. Exp. Bentley, 2 Dea. & Ch. 578; 2 L. J., N. S., Bk., 39. See Johnson v. Ogilby, 3 P. W. 277.

6. R. and C., at H. and T.'s request, paid to H. and T.'s country solicitors 350*l.* in part discharge of costs incurred by H. and T. in certain administration suits. Thereupon the country solicitors by indenture assigned to R. and C. certain documents on which they had a lien, and covenanted that they would hold any charging order they might obtain from the Court of Chancery for payment of their costs, in trust to indemnify R. and C. By a subsequent order of the Court the costs were to be taxed and paid out of funds in court to the town agents of the country solicitors:—Held, that the costs must be paid to R. and C. in satisfaction of their claims under the indenture. Cockayne v. Harrison, 42 L. J., Ch., 660; 15 L. R., Eq., 298; 21 W. R. 520.

7. Before the 33 & 34 Vict., c. 28, s. 16, it was improper for a solicitor to give his client a guarantee against the costs of a suit, either previously to its institution or during its continuance. Fielden v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Co., 22 L. T. 511; 18 W. R. 729.

But circumstances might be such as to allow of his doing so in the latter case without rendering himself personally liable to the other side. Id.

8. A solicitor, who, in order to induce a plaintiff to go on with a suit, agrees to indemnify him against the costs, thereby makes the suit his own, and becomes liable to pay the costs of the defendant; and this notwithstanding that by the abatement of the suit by the death of the plaintiff before the hearing and the non-revivor of his executor, the remedy against the plaintiff's estate may be gone. Fielden v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Co., Re Jones, 6 L. R., Ch., 497; 40 L. J., Ch., 113; 19 W. R. 361; 23 L. T., N. S., 655.

VI. LIEN OF, ON COSTS.

9. A solicitor has a lien upon costs ordered to be paid to his client upon a petition in bankruptcy, although there be no fund in court; nor can the client release the benefit of the order to the prejudice of the solicitor. Exp. Bryant, 2 Rose 237.

10. Where costs are ordered to be paid to the client, solicitors need not wait the result of process to compel the payment of such costs, but may insist upon the immediate benefit of the lien. Pounset v. Humphreys, C. P. C. 142.

11. A solicitor's lien for his costs upon costs ordered to be paid to his client by the opposite party in the suit remains notwithstanding he has ceased to be the client's solicitor in the suit, and notwithstanding that he has taken the client's body in execution under a judgment against him for the amount of the solicitor's costs. O'Brien v. Lewis, 3 De G. J. & S. 606; 4 Giff. 396; 9 Jur., N. S., 764; 32 L. J., Ch., 665; 11 W. R. 973; 8 L. T., N. S., 683; 2 N. R. 536, 156.

I. WHAT PROPERTY SUBJECT TO.

1. In General, 6425.
2. Funds in Court, 6425.
3. Land before Solicitors Act, 6426.
4. Under Solicitors Act, 6426.
5. Recovery under Solicitors Act. What is, 6427.
6. Of Infant, 6429.
7. Of Lunatic, 6429.
8. Of Married Woman, 6430.

1. In General.

1. A solicitor's lien for costs is not confined to deeds and papers, but extends to other articles delivered to him for the purpose of being exhibited to witnesses on the trial of an action. Frimell v. King, 15 Sim. 191.

2. Chattels personal, not under the control of the Court of Chancery nor in possession of the plaintiff's solicitor, are not subject to a lien for his costs in the suit in which they are recovered. Savage v. James, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 357.

3. In equity the costs are arranged according to the equities of the parties, and the solicitor's lien is only upon the balance, under that arrangement. Taylor v. Popham, 15 Ves. 72.

4. The solicitor's lien for costs is subordinate, and to be postponed to the equities between the parties. Gwynn v. Krous, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 274.

5. The lien of solicitors cannot interfere with the equities between the parties. Bartree v. Watson, 2 Keen 713; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 183.

6. A solicitor who receives rents in a cause, without the authority of the Court, will be ordered to pay them over to the receiver, and cannot retain them on the ground of lien, or set them off against costs alleged to be due to him from the plaintiff. Wickens v. Townshend, 1 Russ. & M. 361.

7. A solicitor, who is in disburse for his client, has a right to be paid out of a duty decreed to an administrator, and has a lien upon it before the bond creditors of the deceased; nor can the administrator controvert this rule, by insisting on applying the assets in a course of administration. Turvin v. Gibson, 3 Atk. 720, 727.

8. Solicitor prosecuting to a decree has a lien on the estate recovered, in the hands of the person recovering, for his bill; but not in the hands of the heir. But if the suit be revived, the lien revives. Barnesley v. Powell, Ambl. 102.

2. Funds in Court.

9. A solicitor, having declined to act for his client, has no lien for his costs upon a fund in court. Cresswell v. Byron, 14 Ves. 271.

10. The general lien of a solicitor for costs due by his client does not extend to a fund which the client can reach without the assistance of the solicitor, or the use of the papers in his possession. Hodgens v. Kelly, 1 Hog. 388.

11. A solicitor has no lien on a fund received by his client, for compromising a suit, where it is clear that the result of the suit, if successfully prosecuted, would not have been to realise a fund on which such lien might attach. Townsend v. Reads, 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233.

12. The fund in court being decreed to the assignees of a party who, in the course of the cause, had become bankrupt, the solicitors employed by him during part of the proceeding have a lien for their costs. Pounsett v. Humphreys, C. P. C. 142.

13. The employment of a solicitor in business relating to the trust estate by the authority of the trustee, or of some of several cestuis que trustent, gives the solicitor no lien or charge upon the trust estate, or upon the shares of the other cestuis que trustent, for costs incurred in relation to the trust. Hall v. Laver, 1 Hare 571; 4 Y. & Coll. 218; 5 Jur. 241.

14. The solicitor's lien for costs is subordinate, and to be postponed to the equities between the parties. Gwynn v. Krous, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 274.

15. In equity the costs are arranged according to the equities of the parties, and the solicitor's lien is only upon the balance, under that arrangement. Taylor v. Popham, 15 Ves. 72.

Solicitor's lien for costs upon a fund of assets appropriated was subject to a debt in respect of which the testator as a surety was creditor of the client to a greater amount. S. C. 13 Ves. 59. Reversed 15 Ves. 72.

16. The lien of solicitors cannot interfere with the equities between the parties. Bartree v. Watson, 2 Keen 713; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 183.

A sum was found due from the plaintiff to the defendant, and on the other hand the defendant was ordered to pay the costs of suit:—Held, that the lien of the defendant's solicitor for his costs extended only to the ultimate balance due from the plaintiff, after deducting the costs payable to him by the defendants. Id.

1. A solicitor's lien is not a general lien on a fund in court, though brought in by his exertions, but only on what may, on the issue of the suit, be belonging to his client. Re Downes, 4 Drew. 427; 28 L. J., Ch., 561.

Therefore, where, by the exertions of a plaintiff's solicitor, a fund was ordered to be brought into court on which the defendant had a primary claim, and afterwards the plaintiff changed his solicitor, and the parties were proceeding without bringing the fund into court to divide it under compromise, without paying the plaintiff's original solicitor:—Held, that he had no lien on the fund; but it was ordered that no order should be made by compromise or otherwise for payment of any money to the plaintiff without notice to the plaintiff's original solicitor. Id.

2. Solicitors have no right to look for their costs to a fund in court not belonging to their clients. Chick v. Nicholls, 26 W. R. 231.

Where, therefore, in an administration suit the estate in court was exhausted by creditors, so that nothing was left for the testator's representative, and she became insolvent, a motion that her costs of suit might be retained out of the fund in court, so that her solicitors might be paid, was refused. Id.

3. Lien before Solicitors Act.

3. An attorney or a solicitor has no lien on an estate recovered for a client in respect of the costs and expenses incurred in recovering it. He has a lien only on the papers in his hands. Shaw v. Neale, 6 H. L. Ca. 581; 4 Jur., N. S., 695; 27 L. J., Ch., 444; 6 W. R. 635: Affirming 20 Beav. 157; 1 Jur., N. S., 666; 24 L. J., Ch., 563; 3 W. R. 350.

An attorney held an assignment of two terms to attend the inheritance of an estate recovered by him for his client. On a rule being made to tax his costs, it was part of the rule that the Master should decide whether, and if so upon what terms, the attorney should execute to his client assignments of these terms. The Master having made his allocatur, directed that the attorney should, on payment of what was due, or on security for the same being given to his (the Master's) satisfaction, execute assignments of these terms at the cost of the client:—Held, that this did not constitute a change in the estate so as to give the attorney a priority from the date of the allocatur, or that the Master had no power to direct that these terms should stand as a security for the amount of the costs. Id.

The taxing master's certificate is not an order for the payment of money within the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 18. Id.

An agreement, pending a litigation, that a solicitor shall be entitled to compound interest on his demand, cannot be supported. In 1851 A. and B. agreed to charge their real estates, with the amount of costs due to their solicitor, with annual rests. The solicitor instituted a suit to enforce the lien, and the client presented a petition for taxation. The Court made the usual order for taxation, with a direction to the Master to ascertain the amount due in 1851, but held itself incompetent, on this occasion, to deal with the question of lien. Re Moss, 17 Beav. 346.

4. Under Solicitors Act.

4. The lien of a solicitor, upon property preserved in a suit, is not affected by the fact that when the accounts are taken, it appears that nothing is due to his client. Bailey v. Berchall, Barnes v. Ratcliffe, Bailey v. Ratcliffe, 5 N. R. 237; 2 Hem. & M. 371; 11 Jur., N. S., 57.

5. The charge for costs to which a solicitor is entitled under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 23, extends to the property of his own client only, and not to that of other persons. Berrie v. Howitt, 9 L. R., Eq., 1; 21 L. T., N. S., 414; 39 L. J., Ch., 119.

By a settlement, real estate was assured to the use of A. for life, with remainder to his children, as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of his children as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders in tail between them. In a suit to which B. was a defendant, an appointment by A. was set aside, so that the property was left to devolve according to the limitations of the settlement in default of appointment, and B. became thereby entitled to an estate tail in certain undivided shares of the property. B. afterwards died a bachelor, and without having executed a disentailing deed; and the shares to which he was entitled devolved, under the settlement, upon the plaintiff and two defendants to the suit as tenants in common in tail:—Held, that under these circumstances, B.'s solicitor was not entitled to a charge for costs under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, on B.'s shares of the settled property. Id.

6. Under s. 28 of the Act 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, the Court can declare a solicitor entitled to a charge for costs on the whole of the property recovered or preserved through his instrumentality, and not merely on his client's interest in that property. Berrie v. Howitt (9 L. R., Eq., 1) not followed. Charlton v. Charlton, 52 L. J., Ch., 971; 49 L. T. 267; 32 W. R. 90.

7. The charge declared in pursuance of the 28th section of the Solicitors Act 1860, on the property recovered or preserved in favour of the solicitor employed, is in the nature of salvage, and may be made on the interest of persons who did not employ the solicitor and who were not parties to the suit, if they adopt the benefit obtained in the suit. It makes no difference that the persons whose interests are charged are infants, but the Court will not make the order until the infants have an opportunity of being heard on it. Greer v. Young, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 545; 52 L. J., Ch., 915; 49 L. T. 224; 31 W. R. 930.

P. and Y. were trustees under the will of G. P. misapplied some of the trust funds and died. The suit of M. v. P. was brought for the administration of P.'s estate, and a proof was carried in by Y. on behalf of the trust in respect of the breaches of trust by P. Afterwards the action of G. v. Y. was brought by some of the cestuis que trustent under G.'s will to establish the liability of Y. and to appoint new trustees, in which a small dividend was recovered from Y.'s estate. The solicitor who acted for the plaintiffs in G. v. Y. applied for a charging order for his costs on the dividend recovered from P.'s and Y.'s estates, which was opposed by the new trustees on behalf of the infant cestuis que trustent:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to a charge upon the dividend recovered in the action from Y.'s estate, as against the infant cestuis que trustent, but not on the dividend recovered from P.'s estate, as it was not recovered in the action. Id.

1. An action was brought by a husband against his wife and another person for a sum of money invested in a building society, which the husband alleged to have been fraudulently transferred by his wife to the other person. The building society were also made defendants to the action and appeared. Judgment was given for the defendants. Upon petition presented under the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1860 by the solicitor to the defendants other than the building society:—Held, that he was entitled to a charge upon the whole sum invested, as being the amount "recovered or preserved" to them. Porter v. West, 50 L. J., Ch., 231; 43 L. T. 569; 29 W. R. 236.

2. A firm of solicitors were employed throughout the proceedings in an action for partition and sale of certain hereditaments of which the defendants were in possession, and for an account of the rents and profits of one-third part thereof for six years prior to the issue of the writ. By the decree the plaintiffs were declared entitled to one-third part of the hereditaments, and to an account and payment by the defendants of one-third of the said rents and profits, and the premises were ordered to be sold, and the plaintiffs' costs up to and including the hearing were ordered to be costs in the action. The account was not completed and the property was not sold when the plaintiffs threatened to change their solicitors and to compromise the action. The share of the plaintiffs in the property and rents was insufficient to pay the plaintiffs' costs. On a petition by the plaintiffs' solicitors asking for a declaration that they were entitled to a charge on the whole property in respect of the plaintiffs' costs, as such costs had been made costs in the action:—Held, that no order having been made for payment of the costs of the action out of the proceeds of sale, the Court could not anticipate such order, and that the solicitors could only be treated as having a lien on the plaintiffs' share recovered by them in the action. An injunction was granted to prevent the plaintiffs from receiving any money in the action, or by way of compromise, without notice to the solicitors. Lloyd v. Jones, 27 W. R. 665; 40 L. T. 514.

3. An undischarged bankrupt, without the knowledge of the trustee in his bankruptcy, brought an action, claiming (inter alia) remuneration for services rendered by him as an architect to the defendant, and damages for wrongful dismissal. The defendant, without admitting any legal liability to the plaintiff, paid 360*l.* into court. The plaintiff took out a summons to have the money paid out to him, but before the summons was heard the action came to the knowledge of the trustee, and he obtained an order joining him as co-plaintiff in the action, on the ground that the remuneration and damages claimed were his property. The bankrupt's solicitor then applied for a charging order on the 360*l.* in respect of his costs, charges, and expenses, of or in reference to the action:—Held, that the bankrupt's solicitor was entitled to a charging order for his costs up to the time of the intervention of the trustee. Emden v. Carter, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 311; 51 L. J., Ch., 371; 45 L. T. 328; 30 W. R. 17. Reversing 44 L. T. 840; 29 W. R. 840.

4. The principle of 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, is analogous to the principles of salvage, and gives a charge on the property preserved, irrespectively of any question as to who is the owner of it; and the fact that the client by whom the solicitor was retained is not the beneficial owner of the whole property is immaterial. Bulley v. Bulley, 38 L. T., N. S., 401; 26 W. R. 638; 47 L. J., Ch., 841; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 479. Affirming 38 L. T., N. S., 95; 26 W. R. 310.

Therefore, when a solicitor has been retained by a person interested in an estate, as to two-fifths in his own right, and as to three-fifths as a trustee for others, and the whole estate has been preserved, the Court will make an order as against the cestuis que trustent charging the whole property preserved; and this charge will not be incumbered or affected with any equities that may exist between such trustee and his cestuis que trustent, even though the trustee were a defaulting trustee or bankrupt. Id.

5. A plaintiff in a suit instituted to set aside a conveyance of real estate sold his interest in the property, and the suit was compromised, and a conveyance of the property made to the purchaser, who obtained an order dismissing the bill:—Held, that the plaintiffs' solicitor was entitled to a charge for his costs upon the property as against the purchaser. Jones v. Frost, Re Fiddey, 42 L. J., Ch., 47; 7 L. R., Ch., 773; 27 L. T. 465; 20 W. R. 1025.

6. The creditors of a debtor having agreed to accept a composition secured by sureties, the debtor and one of the sureties placed funds in the hands of the debtor's solicitor, for the purpose of paying the composition. The solicitor sent round a circular to the creditors informing them they could be paid at his office on a certain day. Before that day the debtor absconded, leaving the solicitor's bill of costs unpaid:—Held, that the solicitor held the funds as trustee for the creditors, and that he was not entitled to any lien on them for his costs. Re Clark, Exp. Newland, 25 W. R. 275; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 515; 35 L. T., N. S., 916.

5. Recovery under Solicitors Act. What is.

7. A bill was filed alleging that the defendant had built so as to obstruct the plaintiffs' ancient lights, and was proceeding to build so as further to obstruct them, and asking for an injunction against further building, and a mandatory injunction to pull down part of what had been built. An interlocutory injunction was granted against building higher, and the suit was afterwards compromised on the terms that the building should remain of its then height. The defendant having become bankrupt, his solicitor petitioned to have his costs made a charge on his property to which the suit related:—Held, that no property had been recovered or preserved within the meaning of 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28. Foxon v. Gascoigne, 9 L. R., Ch., 654; 43 L. J., Ch., 729; 22 W. R. 989; 31 L. T., N. S., 289. Affirming S. C. sub. nom. Fox v. Gascoigne, 30 L. T., N. S., 743.

A suit which only relates to an easement is not a suit in which it can be said that property is recovered or preserved, even though a mandatory injunction for pulling down buildings is refused. Ib.

1. When a suit is instituted for the preservation of property, and a receiver is appointed, there is a preservation of property within the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, and the solicitors are entitled to a charge upon their client's interest in the property. Twynham v. Porter, 19 W. R. 151; 23 L. T., N. S., 551.

In a suit by a cestui que trust against a trustee of landed estate, praying for an account and a reconveyance, a receiver was ordered to be, and afterwards was, appointed, adversely to the defendant. Notice of motion for decree was served, but before the time for closing evidence had arrived, the plaintiff, without consulting her solicitor, and without his knowledge, entered into an agreement with the defendant for a compromise of the suit on the terms, first that a sum of cash should be paid to the plaintiff, then that the mortgages on the property should be paid off, and then that the costs of all parties, estimated at a fixed sum, should be paid. Upon hearing of the compromise, the plaintiff's solicitor applied to the plaintiff and to the defendant's solicitor for the terms of it, but was refused all information:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to a first charge for the amount of his taxed costs as between solicitor and client, upon the property of the plaintiff, as having been recovered and preserved through his instrumentality. S. C. 11 L. R., Eq., 181; 40 L. J., Ch., 30.

2. A solicitor instituted an administration suit on behalf of a cestui que trust against a sole trustee, obtained a common decree with a direction for the appointment of a new trustee, and procured an account to be brought into chambers by the defendant. The plaintiff then abandoned the suit. On a petition by the solicitor that his costs might be made a charge on the plaintiff's interest in the trust estate, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28:—Held, that no property had been preserved or recovered on which the costs could be made a charge. Pinkerton v. Easton, Re Pinkerton, 42 L. J., Ch., 878; 16 L. R., Eq., 490; 21 W. R. 943; 29 L. T., N. S., 364.

3. A defendant in a foreclosure suit established his right to a second mortgage on certain property:—Held, that it was property recovered or preserved by the instrumentality of a solicitor to which the solicitor was entitled to a declaration of charge under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28. Scofield v. Lockwood,

4. A reference to arbitration having been made in an action, the arbitrator awarded that a certain sum should be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, and the award was confirmed by the Court. An order was made, on the application of the defendant's solicitor, under the 3rd section of the Act 39 & 40 Vict., c. 44, declaring him entitled to a lien for the costs of the defendant in the action upon the amount awarded, as property recovered or preserved for the defendant through the instrumentality of the solicitor, and directing the plaintiff to pay thereout to the solicitor the amount of such costs when taxed. M'Alahey v. M'Alahey, 9 L. R., Ir., 165.

5. A solicitor is entitled to a charge for his costs on property the subject of a successful suit conducted by him against an incumbrancer, although the incumbrance is entirely valueless, provided it formed a cloud upon the title. It is no objection to an application for such a charge that it is made in a suit which is no longer pending, and which was never brought to a hearing, nor that the property had been sold before the application of the solicitor. Jones v. Frost, Re Fidley, 7 L. R., Ch., 773; 20 W. R. 1025; 27 L. T., N. S., 465. Affirming 20 W. R. 793.

6. A solicitor for a party in an administration suit who cannot otherwise obtain payment of his bill may apply by petition to have his costs taxed, and for a charge for them on dividends payable to his client under an order made in the suit, although there may have been no real question at issue between the parties to the suit, or although, so far as there has been any such question, the decision in the suit may have been given wholly or in part in favour of the opposite party. Smith v. Winter, Exp. Hartley, 18 W. R. 447.

7. An undischarged bankrupt commenced an action for the purpose of recovering moneys alleged to be due to him for remuneration for his personal services as an architect, rendered since the bankruptcy, and for damages for wrongful dismissal since that date, and also for further relief of a personal character which it was possible, but not probable, that he might obtain. The defendant denied the whole claim, but paid money into court. The plaintiff took out a summons to withdraw the money so paid in. The trustee in his bankruptcy took out another summons to withdraw the money, and also, before this case came on for hearing, a further summons, upon which being heard, the trustee was added as a co-plaintiff, and given the conduct of the action on the ground that the bulk, if not the whole, of the money which might be recovered in the action, would, if recovered, pass to the trustee for the benefit of the creditors. The solicitor acting for the bankrupt took out a summons under the Solicitors Act 1860 (23 & 24 Vict., c. 127), s. 28, by which he asked for an order charging upon the fund in court his costs of or in reference to the action:—Held, that the fund paid into court had been "recovered or preserved" through the instrumentality of the solicitor, within the meaning of s. 28 of the Solicitors Act 1860, and that such solicitor was entitled to a charging order on the money in respect of his costs down to the time when the trustee intervened, but not as to his costs incurred in opposing the trustee's claim to intervene. Emden v. Carter, 45 L. T. 328; 30 W. R. 17; 19 L. R., Ch. D., 311; 51 L. J., Ch., 371. Reversing 44 L. T. 840; 29 W. R. 840.

6. Of Infant.

1. A suit was instituted in equity by a next friend on behalf of an infant to recover real estate and a fund in court. The costs were directed to be paid by the defendant, but in consequence of his insolvency they could not be recovered from him. The Court, on petition for that purpose, directed that the fund in court should be applied in payment of the costs pro tanto, the proceedings taken by the next friend being for the benefit of the infant, but refused to make an order declaring that the residue of the costs were, under the 28th section of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, a charge on the real estate recovered, as that Act applied only to suits instituted by persons sui juris. Bonser v. Bradshaw, 7 Jur., N. S., 231; 30 L. J., Ch., 159; 9 W. R. 229; 3 L. T., N. S., 545.

2. The Court will not hear an application by a solicitor for an order to charge the real estate of an infant with the costs of a suit instituted for its recovery, unless the application is substantially opposed on behalf of the infant. Bonser v. Bradshaw, 10 W. R. 481.

3. Where a solicitor was employed by the next friend in establishing an infant's title to land, the infant having attained his majority, the Court, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, declared on petition so much of the costs as remained unpaid a charge on the land recovered. Bonser v. Bradshaw, 4 Giff. 260; 9 Jur., N. S., 1048; 9 L. T., N. S., 194.

4. Lien on fund recovered of costs of proceedings under the Declaration of Titles Act (25 & 26 Vict., c. 67), on behalf of an infant. Pritchard v. Roberts, 17 L. R., Eq., 222; 43 L. J., Ch., 129; 22 W. R. 259; 29 L. T., N. S., 883.

5. It is not merely when there is an adverse claim to property recovered or preserved in a suit through the instrumentality of a solicitor for his client that the solicitor is entitled to a charge on the property for his costs, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28; but he may also obtain such a declaration where the suit is a friendly one and instituted on behalf of an infant. Baile v. Baile, 41 L. J., Ch., 300; 13 L. R., Eq., 497; 20 W. R. 534; 26 L. T., N. S., 283.

A bill was filed by the maternal grandmother of an infant tenant in tail, as his next friend, praying the appointment of a guardian to him and his brothers and sisters; directions for his maintenance and education, having regard to the circumstances of the family, accounts, and a receiver. The solicitor employed by the next friend died pending the suit, and within six years from the presentation of the petition a petition was presented by the personal representative of the solicitor for a declaration as to, and a charge for, his costs:—Held, that the solicitor was employed for the infant; that the property was preserved for the infant through the instrumentality of the solicitor; that the infant had, as a matter of fact, adopted the suit after attaining his majority; that the Statute of Limitations was not a bar to the petition; that it was well presented by the legal personal representative; and that the petitioner was entitled to the relief for which she prayed. Id.

6. The charge declared in pursuance of the 28th section of the Solicitors Act 1860, on the property recovered or preserved in favour of the solicitor employed is in the nature of salvage, and may be made on the interest of persons who did not employ the solicitor and were not parties to the suit, if they adopt the benefit obtained in the suit. It makes no difference that the persons whose interests are charged are infants, but the Court will not make the order until the infants have an opportunity of being heard on it. Greer v. Young, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 545; 52 L. J., Ch., 915; 49 L. T. 224; 31 W. R. 930.

7. Of Lunatic.

7. Committee of a lunatic has a lien on the lunatic's estate: the solicitor employed by the committee declared to stand in his place. Barnesley v. Powell, Amb. 102.

8. Solicitor has a lien on funds of a lunatic. Exp. Price, 2 Ves. 407.

9. A solicitor, who had been employed in prosecuting a commission in lunacy, presented a petition in 1860, applying, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 29, for an order charging his costs on the real estates of the lunatic, who had died in 1853. An order had been obtained for taxation in February 1854; the taxation was completed in 1855, and in 1857 his bill had been delivered to the persons at whose instance the commission had been prosecuted:—Held, that the right to recover such costs having accrued at latest when the order for taxation was made, the solicitor's claim as against the lunatic's estate was barred by lapse of time, and that he could only recover from certain subsequent rents of which he was mortgagee. Re Cumming, Exp. Turner, 6 Jur., N. S., 1129; 30 L. J., Ch., 29; 9 W. R. 213; 2 De G. F. & J. 376.

10. Where C. B., the first tenant in tail in possession, was a lunatic, the second tenant in tail in remainder an infant, and E. C., the third tenant in tail in remainder, being made a party to the suit, by her answer did not disclaim, but said that she made out the interest which she claimed by referring to the statements in the plaintiffs' bill in which such interests were stated to be correctly set forth, and the prayer of the bill was for a conveyance of the shares, when allotted, to the parties nominatim, including E. C., the Court held that E. C. was not an unnecessary party; but inasmuch as E. C. could not derive any present benefit from the suit, her costs up to the hearing were decreed to be a charge upon the fourth part which should be allotted to the lunatic, in respect of which E. C. was interested. The costs of C. B., the lunatic, and of the infant tenant in tail in remainder, were also decreed to be a charge upon the lunatic's fourth part of the estates. Singleton v. Hopkins, 1 Jur., N. S., 1199.

Quere, whether a Vice-Chancellor has in such a case jurisdiction to make an order charging a lunatic's estate with costs. Id.

8. Of Married Woman.

1. Pending a reference for the taxation of a solicitor's bill against a married woman, the solicitor cannot maintain a suit to enforce a lien for his bill of costs on her separate estate. Waugh v. Waddell, 16 Beav. 521.

2. A solicitor was retained by a wife in the successful defence of a suit instituted by her husband to set aside a settlement, whereby he covenanted to pay her an annuity for her separate use without power of anticipation, and assigned property to trustees to secure the annuity. Upon a petition by the solicitor to charge under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, the annuity with his costs incurred on her behalf:—Held, that the married woman was competent to employ a solicitor for the purpose of defending such a suit; that the right of a solicitor under the Act to a charge upon the property preserved by his exertions was paramount to the restraint on anticipation. Re Keane, Lumley v. Desborough, 40 L. J., Ch., 617; 12 L. R., Eq., 115; 24 L. T., N. S., 780; 19 W. R. 1025.

Held, also, that the charge was limited to the annuity and did not extend to the trust fund upon which it was secured. (Varying 19 W. R. 498; 24 L. T., N. S., 57.) Id.

II. FOR WHAT COSTS.

1. In General, 6430.
2. Under Solicitors Act, 6430.

1. In General.

3. The solicitor's lien on a fund recovered applies in equity to the defendant's solicitor as well as the plaintiffs. Townsend v. Reade, 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233.

4. Solicitor has no lien on fund decreed to be paid to his client beyond his costs in that suit. Lann v. Church, 4 Madd. 391.

5. Whether a solicitor's lien for his costs on a fund in court is general; or is confined to costs of the particular suit, quere. Solicitor having in his possession the instrument on which his client's right to the fund rests, he has a general lien on the fund. Worrall v. Johnson, 2 Jac. & Walk. 214.

Solicitor's lien does not extend to debts that are not due to him in his professional character. Id.

6. When a pauper obtains a decree for debt and costs, his solicitor has a lien on the sum recovered for divers costs, though the sum is deficient for payment of plaintiff's demands. Quin v. Bodkin, 2 Hog. 240.

7. A solicitor's lien upon the fund is not a general lien; it extends only to costs in the cause, and costs immediately connected with costs in the cause; as, for instance, the costs of successfully protecting a solicitor's right to the costs in a cause. Lucas v. Peacock, 9 Beav. 177.

8. The lien of a solicitor upon a fund recovered in a suit which he has conducted is confined to the costs of that particular suit, and therefore, semble, a solicitor who, in relation to the same estate in which the same parties are interested, has brought an ejectment and a suit in equity, has no lien upon the fund recovered in the suit for his costs of the ejectment. Hall v. Laver, 1 Hare 571; 4 Y. & Coll. 218; 5 Jur. 241.

9. A solicitor has a lien for his costs on a fund in court, produced by his exertions; and, therefore, where on a bill for discovery in aid of a defence at law an injunction was granted on terms, one of which was the payment of money into court, and an answer was afterwards filed, and the action at law being subsequently tried, a verdict was found for the defendant, it was:—Held, that the solicitor for the defendant in equity had a lien on the fund for the costs of the discovery. But where the solicitor putting in the answer was removed, and his demand paid, and another solicitor employed, it was considered that the fund was exonerated to that extent, and the latter solicitor had not any lien for the costs of the former solicitor, though paid by him. Irving v. Viana, 2 Y. & J. 70.

10. Although the solicitor of a defaulting receiver cannot have the costs of his proceedings until the sum found to be due from the receiver, with interest, shall have been paid in; yet, when at his own proper costs, and under the orders of the Court, the solicitor of the receiver brought certain actions at law against defaulting tenants and their sureties, etc.:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to be paid the costs of such proceedings out of the funds in court. M'Bride v. Clarke, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 203.

11. Where a security is realised in a suit by means of the production of a document, upon which a solicitor, then acting as such, has a lien, his lien upon the fund realised is confined to the costs of that suit. It is the same too when the document is voluntarily produced by a solicitor not at the time acting as a solicitor to the party; but in such a case he might if he chose have made his own terms with his former client before producing the deed. Boxon v. Bolland, 4 Myl. & C. 354; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 123; 3 Jur. 884; 4 Jur. 763.

Such a lien can be enforced actively. Secus, as to his general lien upon his client's papers which applies to all his bills of costs, but is merely a right to retain the papers and cannot be actively enforced. Id.

2. Under Solicitors Act.

12. Under the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, an attorney can only have a charge upon property recovered or preserved by him for his client in respect of the costs in the particular suit, matter, or proceeding in which they were incurred and not for general costs. Exp. Thompson, 3 L. T., N. S., 317.

1. Where costs were incurred for proceedings in a foreclosure suit, and for proceedings in actions of ejectment, and on indictments in reference to the mortgaged property, the Court, on a petition by the solicitor for the plaintiff, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, refused to make a charging order for more costs than those incurred in the proceedings for foreclosure. Wilson v. Round, 4 Giff. 416; 10 Jur., N. S., 34; 12 W. R. 402; 9 L. T., N. S., 675; 3 N. R. 288.

2. When the Court makes an order under the Solicitors Act (23 & 24 Vict., c. 127), s. 28, declaring a solicitor entitled to a charge upon the property recovered or preserved in an action, it is the duty of the judge to limit the order to costs properly incurred in recovering or preserving the property. An undischarged bankrupt, without the knowledge of the trustee in his bankruptcy, brought an action, claiming, inter alia, remuneration for services rendered by him as an architect to the defendant, and damages for wrongful dismissal. The defendant, without admitting any legal liability to the plaintiff, paid 360*l.* into court. The plaintiff took out a summons to have the money paid out to him, but before the summons was heard the action came to the knowledge of the trustee, and he obtained an order joining him as co-plaintiff in the action, on the ground that the remuneration and damages claimed were his property. The bankrupt's solicitor then applied for a charging order on the 360*l.* in respect of his costs, charges, and expenses of or in reference to the action:—Held, that the bankrupt's solicitor was entitled to a charging order for his costs up to the time of the intervention of the trustee. Emden v. Carte, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 311; 51 L. J., Ch., 371; 45 L. T. 328; 30 W. R. 17. Reversing 44 L. T. 840; 29 W. R. 840.

3. The Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1860 is intended for the benefit and protection of solicitors only, and the Court will not sanction the use of it for the purpose of enabling parties to an action to charge the property recovered or preserved in the action with the payment of costs for which they themselves are liable, and which they are able to pay. Harrison v. Cornwall Minerals Railway Co., 53 L. J., Ch., 596; 50 L. T. 452; 32 W. R. 748.

4. The costs of proceedings under the Declaration of Titles Act (25 & 26 Vict., c. 67), on behalf of an infant, together with the costs of a partition suit and of suit to obtain a declaration of lien, are costs for which the solicitor has a lien on the fund recovered. Pritchard v. Roberts, 17 L. R., Eq., 222; 43 L. J., Ch., 129; 22 W. R. 259; 29 L. T., N. S., 883.

5. Solicitors who had obtained a charging order for costs due to them were not allowed the costs of appearing by counsel at the hearing on further consideration. Mildmay v. Quicke, 25 W. R. 788.

III. LOSS OF AND PRIORITIES.

1. In General, 6431.

2. By Execution, 6432.

3. Under Solicitors Act, 6432.

1. In General.

6. Voluntary release by a party to his adversary, not to defeat the clerk in court for his lien for costs. If the suit had ended on a bonâ fide compromise for a reasonable consideration paid, it would have been otherwise. Anon., 2 Ves. 25.

7. An attorney who claims a lien for his costs upon the title deeds of a freehold estate decreed to be sold, which lien was acquired by him prior to the institution of the suit, will be ordered to deposit them in court, without prejudice to his lien, or to his making it available against the purchase money of the lands; and having established his claim, he is entitled to be paid it out of the purchase money of the estate. Is he so entitled to be paid in priority to the demand of a judgment creditor, whose judgment was acknowledged prior to the acquisition of the lien by the attorney, quære. Little v. Little, 2 Jones 270.

8. Though order be made on petition in bankruptcy directing costs to be paid to the petitioner personally, solicitor does not lose his lien for his costs. Exp. Bryant, 1 Madd. 49.

9. Payment by an executor, under an order, of money into court, does not deprive him of his lien on it for costs. Blenkinsop v. Forster, 3 Y. & Coll. 205; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 8.

10. Lien of solicitor upon fund in court, which is the result of the proceedings, cannot be defeated by the subsequent insolvency of the client. Exp. Moule, 6 Madd. 462.

11. Semble, that where a solicitor has a lien for costs on a fund in the hands of a third party, a notice of such lien is not alone sufficient to make the third party responsible for paying over the fund, without providing for the costs, if the solicitor has had an opportunity of taking other proceedings to secure the fund, and has neglected to do so. Townsend v. Reade, 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233.

12. The lien of a solicitor for his costs on a fund recovered by his exertions cannot be affected by an assignment of the fund by the client, nor by a stop order obtained by the assignee. Haymes v. Cooper, Cooper v. Jenkins, 33 Beav. 431.

A solicitor's lien for costs upon a fund in court, recovered by his exertions, is independent of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127; and he is entitled to priority in respect thereof over a judgment creditor who has obtained a charging order before the solicitor. S. C. 10 Jur., N. S., 303; 33 L. J., Ch., 488; 12 W. R. 539; 10 L. T., N. S., 87; 3 N. R. 627.

13. An order obtained under the 61st section of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 125, attaching a fund in the hands of a garnishee to answer a judgment debt, will not displace the prior lien for costs of a solicitor who has given notice to the garnishee. Simpson v. Prothero, 3 Jur., N. S., 711; 26 L. J., Ch., 671.

By an order made in a suit 600*l.* is ordered to be paid by C. D. to E. F. A. B., who has acted as solicitor in the suit for E. F., claims a lien upon this money for his costs, and serves C. D. with notice not to part with it. Subsequently to this notice an order is obtained at common law directing C. D., as garnishee, to pay the 600*l.* to G. H., as judgment creditor, towards satisfying a judgment debt due from E. F.:—Held, that A. B. did not thereby lose his lien. S. C. 5 W. R. 814.

1. On the 10th March F. commenced an action against H. On the 13th it was agreed that H. should deposit in the hands of R., H.'s attorney, a cheque for the full amount claimed, such cheque to be a security for any amount which F. might recover in any proceeding on that claim, H. undertaking that there should be assets to meet it whenever presented, and that he would not under any circumstance stop the cheque. On the 26th May judgment was signed by F. for 103*l.* and costs, but the amount of costs was not then ascertained. On the 28th May H. commenced an action against F. on a bill for 92*l.*, to which he pleaded a set-off of the larger amount of 103*l.* On the 14th November F. became bankrupt. On the 17th December the amount of costs was taxed, and the amount recoverable on the judgment fixed at 108*l.*, which was afterwards reduced by payments to 88*l.* On the 18th December H. applied to prove under F.'s bankruptcy for the 92*l.*, and on the 15th January following the commissioner directed a set-off of the 88*l.* against the 92*l.*, and admitted H. to prove for the balance. R. had been throughout the solicitor of F., and afterwards of his assignees, and went straight from the court to the bank and cashed the cheque, on which he claimed to have a lien for his costs in F.'s action to the extent of the 88*l.*:—Held, on a bill in equity by H. to have the whole amount of the cheque brought back by F., that F. had not lost his lien; and the bill was dismissed with costs. Hanson v. Reece, 3 Jur., N. S., 1204; 27 L. J., Ch., 118; 6 W. R. 46.

Semble, that after an arrangement pending litigation, by which a fund or a security is placed in the hands of an attorney of either party to attend the result, and a bond fide compromise of that litigation takes place between the parties without the intervention of the attorney, the latter does not lose his lien for his costs upon such fund or security. Id.

2. The creditors of a debtor who had filed a liquidation petition resolved to accept a composition, payable in two instalments, the second instalment being secured by the joint and several promissory note of two sureties. No trustee was appointed. The debtor's solicitor registered the resolution, and he, by means of money supplied to him by the debtor, paid the creditors the first instalment. A sum sufficient to provide for the payment of the second instalment was placed in the solicitor's hands, partly by the debtor, but mainly by one of the sureties. The debtor gave the surety a bill of sale as security for the amount which he advanced. The solicitor sent a circular to the creditors, stating that he should be prepared on a specified day to pay them the second instalment at his office. He after this paid some of the creditors, but most of them were left unpaid. One of the latter applied to the Court for an order that the solicitor should pay him. The solicitor claimed a lien on the moneys in his hands for costs due to him by the debtor, who had absconded:—Held, that he had constituted himself a trustee of the money for the creditors, and that the Court had jurisdiction to order him to pay the applicant his proportion of the second instalment, which he was accordingly ordered to pay, with costs. Re Clarke, Ex p. Newland, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 515; 35 L. T. 916; 25 W. R. 275.

Where Set-off between Debts and Costs.] See PRACTICE (COSTS).

2. By Execution.

3. The solicitor is not deprived of his lien on the funds in court, for his costs in the cause, by having issued an attachment against his client, and committed him to gaol for non-payment of his bill; but the costs which he may receive in the cause are to be taken in discharge of the attachment, pro tanto. Davies v. Bush, Younge 353.

4. The stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, ss. 16, 18, does not deprive a solicitor, who has attached his client for non-payment of costs, of his lien upon the fund which the solicitor has recovered. An attachment of the client for the non-payment of costs is not a waiver of the lien of the solicitor on the fund which he has recovered in the suit in which the costs were incurred. The solicitor, after the death of his client, retains his lien on the fund which he has recovered, and is not left merely to his rights as a general creditor on the estate of his client. The lien of a solicitor on the fund is not impeded by the fact that the order of the Court directs the fund to be paid to the client without reserving the right of the solicitor. Lloyd v. Mason, 4 Hare 132; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 257; 9 Jur. 772.

5. The execution of a writ of attachment for costs does not deprive the party issuing it of any lien or right of set-off he may possess for the payment of such costs. Bantree v. Watson, 2 Keen 713; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 183.

6. A solicitor does not lose his lien on costs ordered to be paid to his client by taking the client in execution under a ca. sa. for non-payment of costs. O'Brien v. Lewis, 9 Jur., N. S., 764; 32 L. J., Ch., 665; 11 W. R. 973; 8 L. T., N. S., 683; 4 Giff. 396; 3 De G. J. & S. 606; 2 N. R. 536, 156.

3. Under Solicitors Act.

7. Where a solicitor had obtained a right to charge his costs under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, upon certain real property:—Held, that his right was paramount to that of the creditors of the client (who was dead), under a decree for sale made in a suit to administer his real and personal estate. Wilson v. Round, 3 N. R. 288; 4 Giff. 416; 10 Jur., N. S., 34; 12 W. R. 402; 9 L. T., N. S., 675.

8. The plaintiffs in a suit mortgaged their interests in the estate, the subject of the suit, to two of the defendants. This mortgage was sent to the solicitor of the plaintiffs for his perusal and approval on their behalf, and he sanctioned their executing it. Nothing was said by either party about any claim by the plaintiffs' solicitor for the costs of suit. The solicitor afterwards obtained a charging order for them under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, on the interests of the plaintiffs:—Held, that as mortgagees had notice of the suit, they must be presumed to have known the rights of the solicitor of the plaintiffs, and that his charge ought not to be postponed to the mortgage, he not having been guilty of any misrepresentation or concealment. Faithfull v. Evans, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 495; 47 L. J., Ch., 457; 26 W. R. 270; 37 L. T., N. S., 805.

1. Salvage actions were brought against an Italian vessel, and she was sold by order of the Court. After the salvors had been remunerated, the balance of the fund in court was insufficient to satisfy the costs of the solicitors who had appeared in the above actions for the parties interested in the ship, and who sought to enforce their claim for such costs by virtue of 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, as well as the claim of the Italian consul in respect of the expenses of sending the crew back to Italy. It was proved that by the law of Italy such expenses and the keep of the master and crew ranked next to the salvage payments:—Held, that the claim of the Italian consul had priority to that of the solicitors. The Livietta (No. 2), 8 L. R., P. D., 209; 52 L. J. P. 81; 49 L. T. 411; 5 Asp. M. C. 151.

2. In a suit for the administration of a testator's estate, an order was made for the taxation of the costs and payment to the plaintiff's solicitor personally of the plaintiff's costs out of a fund set apart for that purpose. The plaintiff sold his life interest in the estate with the knowledge of his solicitor, who did not then raise any claim upon it for his costs. The plaintiff subsequently, and before any of the costs were taxed, changed his solicitor. The solicitor then took out a summons for a charging order, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, upon the plaintiff's interest in the funds in court. It was not the practice for the masters to give a warrant for taxation to any solicitor not acting for a party to the cause:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to a charging order, with liberty to apply to the judge as to enforcing it by sale or otherwise. Pilcher v. Arden, Re Brook, 47 L. J., Ch. D., 479; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 317; 38 L. T., N. S., 111; 26 W. R. 273. Affirming 26 W. R. 163.

3. In a suit by a cestui que trust against a trustee of landed estate, praying for an account and a reconveyance, a receiver was ordered to be, and afterwards was, appointed, adversely to the defendant. Notice of motion for decree was served, but before the time for closing evidence had arrived, the plaintiff, without consulting her solicitor, and without his knowledge, entered into an agreement with the defendant for a compromise of the suit on the terms, first, that a sum of cash should be paid to the plaintiff, then that the mortgages on the property should be paid off, and then that the costs of all parties, estimated at a fixed sum, should be paid. Upon hearing of the compromise, the plaintiff's solicitor applied to the plaintiff and to the defendant's solicitor for the terms of it, but was refused all information:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to a first charge for the amount of his taxed costs, as between solicitor and client, upon the property of the plaintiff, as having been recovered and preserved through his instrumentality. Thynnam v. Porter, 11 L. R., Eq., 181; 49 L. J., Ch., 30.

4. A solicitor's lien for costs upon a fund in court, recovered by his exertions, is independent of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127; and he is entitled to priority in respect thereof over a judgment creditor who has obtained a charging order before the solicitor. Haynes v. Cooper; Cooper v. Jenkins, 10 Jur., N. S., 303; 33 L. J., Ch., 488; 12 W. R. 539; 10 L. T., N. S., 87.

5. A judgment creditor of the defendant in a partnership action obtained a garnishee order nisi to attach all moneys in the hands of the receiver in the action appearing to be due to the defendant on taking the accounts. On the following day, and before service of the order nisi, the defendant's solicitors obtained, on a summons served on the receiver, a charging order intitled in the action, declaring that they were entitled to a charge for their costs upon all moneys coming to the defendant under the action. On the next day the garnishee order nisi was served on the receiver, and was subsequently made absolute:—Held, that the solicitors were entitled to their costs in priority to the claim of the creditor under the garnishee order both under the Solicitors Act and independently of it. Hamer v. Giles, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 942; 48 L. J., Ch., 508; 27 W. R. 834.

6. Where in a partnership action a receiver who was appointed at the instance of the plaintiff realised the assets and paid into court a fund representing the proceeds of such realisation:—Held, that the solicitors of the plaintiff were entitled to a lien on the fund for their costs in priority to the creditors of the partnership. Hamer v. Giles (11 L. R., Ch. D., 942) explained. Jackson v. Smith, Ex p. Digby, 53 L. J., Ch., 972; 51 L. T. 72.

In the absence of evidence that the plaintiff was himself unable to pay the costs, the order ought not to direct the costs to be raised out of the fund, but should merely give liberty to the solicitors to apply as to raising them. Id.

Semble, the Court in such a case would not make an order declaring the lien in the absence of the creditors. But where one of the creditors was present, and the case was argued on his behalf, the Court appointed him to represent all the creditors. Id.

2. Order under Solicitors Act. How Obtained, 6434.
3. Other Remedies, 6434.

1. Time for Application to the Court.

7. The attorney for the plaintiff died during the progress of the suit, and a new attorney was thereupon appointed. More than six years afterwards, funds were brought into court by the receiver in the cause:—Held, that the personal representative of the deceased attorney had a lien on the funds for the costs of the suit due to the attorney at the time of his decease. Kellett v. Kelly, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 31.

8. Where costs are ordered to be paid to the client, solicitors need not wait the result of process to compel the payment of such costs, but may insist upon the immediate benefit of their lien. Pounset v. Humphreys, C. P. C. 142.

1. A lunatic died in June 1853. In February 1854 an order in lunacy was made, by which it was declared that the costs incurred in prosecuting the commission had been incurred for the benefit of the lunatic, and the bill was directed to be taxed. The taxation was completed in February 1855, and after this the solicitor who had been employed in prosecuting the commission delivered for the first time a signed bill of costs. In October 1860 the solicitor presented a petition to have his costs raised out of property of which the lunatic, who left issue, had been tenant in tail:—Held, that under the proviso contained in 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 29, the application was too late. Re Cumming, Ex p. Turner, 2 De G. F. & J. 376; 6 Jur., N. S., 1129; 30 L. J., Ch., 29; 9 W. R. 213.

2. Order under Solicitors Act. How Obtained.

2. When a solicitor applied to the Court of Chancery to have it declared that he is entitled to a charge upon property which has been recovered or preserved by him for his client in a suit in which he has been employed, he must make the application to the judge to whose court the suit is attached, and it must be entitled in that suit as well as in the matter of the solicitor. Heinrich v. Sutton, Re Fidley, 25 L. T., N. S., 643; 6 L. R., Ch., 865; 19 W. R. 1075.

3. Upon a petition by a solicitor for a charging order under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, upon property preserved in an action instituted in the Chancery Division in the Liverpool District Registry, and attached to the court of the V.-Ch. Hall, but which had been tried by a judge and jury at Liverpool:—Held, that the judge before whom the action had been tried, and who had dealt with the substantial question in the case, was the judge to whom the application ought to be made, the judge of the Chancery Division to whose court the action was attached having no jurisdiction to hear the petition. Owen v. Henshaw, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 385; 47 L. R., Ch., 267; 26 W. R. 188.

4. A declaration giving a solicitor a charge for his costs upon property recovered or preserved in a suit may be made upon a petition presented in the suit after an order has been made dismissing the bill upon a compromise. Jones v. Frost, Re Fidley, 42 L. J., Ch., 47; 7 L. R., Ch., 773; 27 L. T. 465; 20 W. R. 1025.

5. A petition for the purpose of obtaining a declaration under the statute 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, must be entitled in the suit, notwithstanding that the bill has been dismissed, and that the parties to the suit, whom it will become necessary to serve, are numerous. Re Keane, 19 W. R. 429.

6. Under the Judicature Act, Order LI., Rule 1a, a judge, to whom an action has been transferred for trial, has authority to hear a petition by a solicitor under the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1860, for costs incurred in recovering property in the action. Porter v. West, 50 L. J., Ch., 231; 43 L. T. 569; 29 W. R. 236.

7. An order giving a solicitor a charge under section 28 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1860, for his costs as between solicitor and client, on property recovered by him for his client in an action, is sufficient if intitled in the action; it may be obtained either on summons or petition, and need not be intitled either in the matter of the Act or of the solicitor. Hamer v. Giles, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 942; 48 L. J., Ch., 508; 27 W. R. 834.

8. An application by a solicitor, under section 28 of the Solicitors Act of 1860, for an order charging his costs upon the interest of a party to an action in a fund in court, is, notwithstanding section 39 of the Judicature Act 1873, properly made by a petition in the action. But the other parties to the action ought not to be served with the petition. Brown v. Trotman, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 88; 48 L. J., Ch., 862; 28 W. R. 164.

9. An order had been made for the payment of the costs, charges, and expenses of all parties to a petition to appoint new trustees in the room of others who had disclaimed, such costs to be paid out of the trust estate to the London agent of the petitioner's solicitor. On an application that the amount of these costs (which had been taxed but not paid in consequence of the trust estate not having been realised) should be declared to be a charge on the trust property:—Held, that the petitioner having already obtained an order for these costs, the Court could not, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, declare the amount to be a charge on the estate. Re Viney, 18 L. T., N. S., 851.

10. Practice as to attorneys applying to be paid their costs out of the funds decreed to their clients. Anon., 5 Ir. Eq. R. 38.

11. Lien of a solicitor upon a fund in court for his costs of suit protected by a stop order. Hobson v. Shearwood, 8 Beav. 486.

12. Interpleader on an attorney's claim of lien upon a sum awarded as damages under a judgment obtained by the client against the plaintiff. — v. Bolton, 18 Ves. 292.

13. Where an administrator has recovered a chattel interest in lands, by a decree in equity declaring his costs to be duly charged on the estate, his solicitor cannot file a petition in his own name to realise his own portion of those costs. Re M'Allister, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 134.

14. An attorney has a lien for his costs on a judgment recovered by his client, and the Court will lay hold of the fund where it exists, and when it does not thereby set aside any arrangement of the parties. Slator v. Sunderland (Mayor), 9 L. T., N. S., 422.

15. A solicitor who had established in a suit the claim of his client to a sum of money, and was unable to obtain payment of his taxed costs or to serve a writ upon his client for that purpose:—Held, upon application ex parte, to be entitled to an interim order to restrain the payment to the client by the accountant-general of a dividend in the suit until a petition to establish a lien for costs could be served and heard, the solicitor giving the usual undertaking as to damages. Gerrard v. Daves, Re Daves, 18 W. R. 32; 21 L. T., N. S., 322.

16. Where costs are ordered to be paid to the client, his solicitor need not wait the result of proceedings to compel the payment of such costs, but may insist upon the immediate benefit of his lien. Pownsett v. Humphreys, C. P. C. 142.

1. Where an attorney applies to be paid his costs out of a fund allocated to his client, he ought to state, in his affidavit, that he distinctly informed his client of his intention so to apply. Redmond v. Gormley, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 698.

2. By the decree, the plaintiff's costs (319*l.*) had been ordered to be paid to her solicitors, out of a fund in court, in which she was interested; but the plaintiff having in the course of the proceedings given to one of the firm of solicitors a bill for 300*l.*, which they had passed away, the order for the payment of the 319*l.* was stayed. *Moon v. 3. Deeds deposited with a solicitor for a particular purpose, and, after that had failed, permitted to remain with him, are subject to the general lien. Exp. Pemberton, 18 Ves. 282.

4. Attorney's lien generally on papers in his possession not limited to the occasion on which they were delivered, without special agreement. Exp. Sterling, 16 Ves. 258.

5. A solicitor is entitled to a general lien for costs on papers deposited with him by his client for a particular purpose only, unless that general lien is excluded by a special agreement. Colmer v. Edo, 40 L. J., Ch., 185; 19 W. R. 318; 23 L. T., N. S., 884.

6. A client wrote a letter to her solicitors authorising them to sell the property of hers of which they were legal mortgagees by transfer, and to pay off the money due thereon and on the transfer to them, and "all expenses due to you":—Held, that this memorandum gave the solicitors no charge in respect of their general bill of costs not relating to the mortgage. Champney v. Burland, 19 W. R. 913.

7. An attorney holding deeds of a bankrupt in his custody, at the date of the adjudication, has a general lien thereon for professional services. Re May, 1 N. R. 243.

A bankrupt's attorney, holding title deeds of the bankrupt without any written memorandum, cannot sustain a claim as equitable mortgagee in respect of such deeds, against the oath of the bankrupt. Id.

Solicitor claims lien for costs, and failing to sustain his case as equitable mortgagee, entitled to costs of proceedings to substantiate his claim without apportionment. Id.

8. A solicitor was instructed to prepare a mortgage, and the title deeds of the property were deposited with him for this purpose by the mortgagor. He was also acting as solicitor for the mortgagee, and when the mortgage was executed he continued to hold the deeds on behalf of the mortgagee. The mortgagor filed a liquidation petition, and the solicitor was employed on behalf of the trustee. The trustee sold the equity of redemption and the solicitor received the purchase money:—Held, that the solicitor had a lien on the deeds against the mortgagor, and was entitled to retain out of the purchase money the amount of costs due to him from the mortgagor. Re Messenger, Exp. Calvert, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 317; 45 L. J., Bk., 134.

9. On a lease being granted, the lessee deposited it with the lessor's solicitor (who acted for the lessor and lessee), together with a bill of exchange as a security for the costs of preparing the lease, which the lessee was to pay. The lessee afterwards mortgaged the term, and the defendants (who were his solicitors on that occasion), in order to obtain the lease, paid the bill of costs of the lessor's solicitors, and received from them, without any authority from the lessee, the lease and the bill of exchange:—Held, first, that without express contract the defendants acquired no lien on the bill of exchange beyond the amount which they had paid to the lessor's solicitors. Secondly, that evidence of an express contract would not support such a lien without proof that the defendants had explained to their client, the lessee, his rights, independently of express contract. Gibson v. May, 4 De G. M. & G. 512.

1. Solicitor has lien on papers delivered to him as such, but not on those delivered to him as steward. Champernown v. Scott, 6 Madd. 93.

2. Whether the proceedings under a commission of bankruptcy, that has been superseded, are subject to the solicitor's lien, quære. Exp. Shaw, Jac. 270; 1 G. & J. 124.

3. A solicitor has no lien upon the will of his client, and cannot refuse to produce a deed executed by the client in his favour, containing a reservation of a life interest, and a power of revocation. Balch v. Symes, T. & R. 87. And see Tyler v. Drayton, 2 Sim. & S. 309.

4. Whether an attorney's lien upon papers extends to the original will of his client, quære. Ordered to produce it before the examiner, and for the hearing of the cause, without prejudice. Georges v. Georges, 18 Ves. 294.

5. An attorney has a lien on all the papers of a bankrupt client received by him before the bankruptcy; and he may prove the debt, though he holds the papers. Exp. Bush, 7 Vin. Abr. 74, pl. 8.

6. The lien of a solicitor in the cause:—Held, not to entitle him to withhold an original order of the Court, in which there was accidental error that required correction. Bird v. Heath, 6 Hare 236.

7. A clerk in court has a lien upon the fund in court, and also upon the decree and other documents in the cause in respect of his fees and disbursements. Potter v. Hyatt, 5 Y. & Coll. 112; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 37.

8. Upon an Act of Bankruptcy, by lying two months in prison, joint and separate commissions issued; the former being established, and the latter superseded, the attorney employed by the bankrupt in sustaining the latter against the former, has no lien upon papers delivered to him by the bankrupt, after the arrest; and upon petition of the joint creditors, he was ordered to deliver them up. Exp. Lee, 2 Ves. J. 285.

9. A solicitor has a lien for his costs on all papers that come into his hands for the purpose of business, though not papers in the cause in which he makes the demand. Exp. Nesbitt, 2 Sch. & Lef. 279.

10. An infant tenant in tail filed a bill by his next friend against his trustee, who was in possession of the title deeds of the estate. The defendant deposited the deeds in court for the inspection of the plaintiff. No decree was made, and when the infant came of age he repudiated the suit. The defendant then moved to have the deeds delivered up to him:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the order, notwithstanding the opposition of the next friend. In the same case the defendant, having obtained possession of the deeds, gave them up to the plaintiff, who immediately mortgaged them. After they had been delivered to the mortgagee, the plaintiff's solicitor on the record presented a petition claiming a lien on the deeds for the costs incurred in the suit on behalf of the plaintiff:—Held, that he had no such lien. Dunn v. Dunn, 3 Drew. 17; 18 Jur. 1068; 3 Eq. Rep. 129. Affirmed 3

W. R. 199; 1 Jur., N. S., 122; 24 L. J., Ch., 581; 7 De G. M. & G. 635.

(b) When not Held by Solicitor as such.

11. A. and B., solicitors in partnership, had a bill of costs against C. On their dissolution of partnership, those costs were transferred to A. Afterwards A., at the request of the client, paid a debt for which she had deposited title deeds, and took possession of and afterwards retained the title deeds. He afterwards continued to act as her solicitor, and costs were incurred:—Held, that as to the joint bill of costs, there could be no lien in favour of A., if otherwise, there would have been lien; and as to his separate bill of costs, he had taken the deeds as mortgagee and not as solicitor, and therefore had no lien for costs. Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, 2 Drew. 409.

12. On a lease being granted, the lessee deposited it with the lessor's solicitor (who acted for the lessor and lessee), together with a bill of exchange as a security for the costs of preparing the lease, which the lessee was to pay. The lessee afterwards mortgaged the term, and the defendants (who were his solicitors on that occasion), in order to obtain the lease, paid the bill of costs of the lessor's solicitors, and received from them, without any authority from the lessee, the lease and the bill of exchange:—Held, first, that without express contract the defendants acquired no lien on the bill of exchange beyond the amount which they had paid to the lessor's solicitors. Secondly, that evidence of an express contract would not support such a lien without proof that the defendants had explained to their client, the lessee, his rights, independently of express contract. Gibson v. May, 4 De G. M. & G. 512.

13. Solicitor has not a lien on papers delivered to him as a steward. Champernown v. Scott, 6 Madd. 93.

(c) Documents Held by Solicitor of Executors or Administrators.

14. The solicitor of the executrix and devisee paying a sum of money in exoneration of an adverse claim on part of the testator's estate, does not, as against creditors of the testator, necessarily, and by force of the transaction alone, acquire a lien upon the estate or on the title deeds for the sum which he so paid. Christian v. Field, or Chambers, 2 Hare 177; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 97; 5 Jur. 1130.

The solicitor of the executrix having paid a sum which was due to a third party, who had a lien on title deeds belonging to the testator's estate for the amount, gave a receipt for the deeds in the name of the executrix, and as her solicitor carried into the Master's office her examination, in which the sum he had so paid was stated to have been paid by the executrix, and was allowed accordingly:—Held, that the solicitor must in such circumstances be presumed to have made the payment on the behalf and on the personal security of his client, and that he could not claim a lien upon the deeds for the amount. Id.

1. A solicitor employed by an administrator in the affairs of the administration, and also on his own account, having in the course of that employment obtained possession of documents relating to the intestate's leasehold estate, and having, by his client's directions, deposited deeds relating to part of that property with the executor of a deceased party, who was entitled to a distributive share of the intestate's estate, claimed, for his bill of costs due from the administrator, a lien on other documents in his possession relating to the same property as that to which the deeds related which were so deposited:—Held, that the security having been effected by the agency of the solicitor, without any reservation on his part in favour of his lien, he had no lien against the party entitled to the benefit of the security. Hicks v. Keate, 3 Jur. 1024.

2. Where papers had come into the hands of a solicitor prior to the institution of the suit (which was for an administration of a testator's estate), and he claimed a lien on them for other business relating to the administration, besides that done in the suit, a motion by a creditor for a reference, as to whether the solicitor had a lien on the papers, and that he might deliver them up to the receiver, or deposit them in court, was dismissed. Warburton v. Edge, 9 Sim. 508; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111; 3 Jur. 166.

A solicitor who had acquired the possession of deeds, etc., relating to the estate of a party deceased, for general purposes, was held, on the petition of the plaintiff in a creditors' suit, to have a general lien (beyond costs in the suit) on the documents prior to any general creditor of the estate; and the Court cannot, on petition in the suit by the plaintiff or receiver, order any taxation of the solicitors' costs. Id.

3. In an administration suit, instituted by an infant cestui que trust under a will against the executors, one of the executors admitted that part of certain sums advanced by him on mortgage formed part of the trust estate. An order was made in the suit for the completion of contracts for sales of the mortgaged property which had been entered into by the executor. Under this order the purchase moneys were paid into court to the credit of the cause. The order directed the executor to execute the conveyances, and deliver the title deeds to the petitioners; but the executor's solicitors refused to give up the deeds, claiming a lien upon them for costs due from the executor and advances made for the maintenance of the plaintiff:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction on petition to order the solicitors to deliver up the deeds. Francois v. Francois, 2 De G. M. & G. 73. And see S. C. 3 De G. M. & G. 108.

4. An administration suit was instituted against an executrix, who was also tenant for life, by parties entitled in remainder. The executrix died during the suit, intestate. The suit was revived against the administrator de bonis non of the testator, and a common administration decree taken against him, but it was not revived against the personal representative of the executrix. The executrix had placed in the hands of her solicitor deeds and papers relating to the estate, and he claimed a lien upon them for costs incurred in relation to the suit. Upon bill filed by the administrator de bonis non for delivery of the documents to him:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls (1 Jur., N. S., 486; 3 W. R. 352; 20 Beav. 185) that the solicitor had no lien upon them, and must deliver them up. Held, on appeal, that it could not be decided whether any lien existed until it had been ascertained whether the executrix was a debtor to the estate, which could not be ascertained in the present suit, nor in any proceeding to which the personal representative of the executrix was not a party. Turner v. Lettis, 1 Jur., N. S., 1057; 24 L. J., Ch., 688; 3 Eq. Rep. 846; 3 W. R. 494.

Held, also, that unless the estate of the executrix was indebted to that of the testator, her estate was entitled to a lien on the deeds for her costs, and that the solicitor had a lien to that extent. S. C. 7 De G. M. & G. 243.

(d) Documents belonging to Joint Stock or Limited Companies.

5. The directors of a provisionally registered railway company paid to solicitors employed by the company a sum of money in respect of their bill of costs, which was not then delivered, and which when delivered fell short of the sum paid. The balance was claimed by the assignees of another solicitor, who had acted jointly with the former, in respect of certain extra costs not included in the bill; and the first-mentioned solicitors also claimed a lien in respect of subsequent costs:—Held, irrespectively of these claims, that the balance was not in the hands of the solicitors as "agents or trustees" for the company, so as to give jurisdiction to the Master, under the 66th section of the Winding-up Act of 1848, to direct it to be paid to the official manager. Hollinsworth's case, Re Direct London & Exeter Railway Co., 3 De G. & Sm. 102.

6. Although the Winding-up Act authorises the Master to require every person to produce documents relating to the company in his possession, without any express reservation of the rights of the lien, this Court cannot interfere to destroy or injure the lien of the solicitors, nor advisedly order the production of documents on which they have a lien. Potter's case, Re Oxford and Worcester Extension and Chester Junction Railway Co., 1 De G. & Sm. 728; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 247; 13 Jur. 691.

The Master made an order for delivery up of certain papers, deeds, etc., on which the solicitors of the company claimed a lien for costs. Order of the Master discharged:—Held, that the words of the 28th and 66th sections of the Winding-up Act 1848 are controlled by those of the 58th. S. C. 5 Rail. Ca. 628.

7. Where the directors of a company carry on a business not authorised by the deed of settlement, and costs are thereby increased, the solicitors of the company have no lien for their costs on the papers of the company. Re Phoenix Life Assurance Co., Ex p. Howard and Dollman, 1 Hem. & M. 433; 11 W. R. 984; 8 L. T., N. S., 728.

Where, in such a case, moneys have been recovered in any of the actions, although the solicitors would have a lien for their costs on such moneys while in their hands, yet after they have paid over such moneys to the company, and allowed them to be incorporated with the general assets, they have no lien on those assets in respect of such costs. Id.

1. The general principle that an official liquidator can retain no part of the company's estate without an order of the Court applies equally to the lien of his solicitors for costs on the company's moneys recovered by his exertions. Such moneys must, in the first instance, be paid into court. Re Union Cement & Brick Co., 26 L. T., N. S., 240.

A liquidator is not entitled to make any payment to his solicitor without the sanction of the Court; nor may such solicitor set off his costs against funds recovered through his own exertions. All moneys must, in the first instance, be paid into court. S. C. 20 W. R. 361; 26 L. T., N. S., 240.

2. An official liquidator cannot, by contract or otherwise, give to his solicitor any lien for costs in the winding-up upon any of the documents relating to the winding-up which are included in Rule 58 of the General Order under the Companies Act 1862. Exp. Pulbrook, Re Union Brick & Cement Co., 17 W. R. 758; 20 L. T., N. S., 649. Affirmed 21 L. T., N. S., 46; 17 W. R. 946; 4 L. R., Ch., 627.

An official liquidator discharged his solicitor. At that time the solicitor had in his custody documents relating to the winding-up of the company, and included in Rule 58 of the General Order under the Companies Act 1862:—Held, that the solicitor had no lien for costs upon these documents, and that he must deliver them up to the official liquidator. Id.

3. The Court has jurisdiction, under the Companies Act 1862, s. 115, to order, at the instance of the official liquidator, production of documents relating to a company in process of liquidation, which are in the possession of the solicitor to the company, notwithstanding the claim of the solicitor to a lien which may be prejudiced by such production. Re South Essex Estuary Reclamation Co., Exp. Payne, 38 L. J., Ch., 305; 17 W. R. 275.

4. In winding up a company the costs of the petition are the first charge on the estate, and next to them are the costs of the winding-up, including the bill of costs of the solicitor employed, which bill must be paid before any payment is made by way of remuneration to the official liquidator. Re Freehold Land and Brickmaking Co., Exp. Massey, 21 L. T., N. S., 195; 39 L. J., Ch., 492.

5. A. was appointed solicitor of a company. B. entered into partnership with him, and they acted as joint solicitors for the company until it was wound up, when they acted for the liquidators. After the dissolution of their partnership, B. acted separately for the liquidators:—Held, that B. had no lien for costs on the documents of the company in his possession. Re County Life Assurance Co., 38 L. J., Ch., 231.

6. Solicitors of a company who, upon the occasion of the directors conveying all the property of the company to two of their body upon trusts to secure the repayment of moneys borrowed upon debentures, prepare a mortgage deed and act for the company and the trustees, have no right of lien for the payment of their costs. Re Mason and Taylor, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 729; 48 L. J., Ch., 193; 27 W. R. 811.

7. The liquidators of a company brought an action against S., in which he obtained judgment with costs. S. was indebted to the company in a larger amount on a bill of exchange. The costs of S.'s attorney in the action being unpaid, they proceeded in his name to levy execution. The execution was stayed under an interim order in the winding-up, a sum being retained by the liquidators sufficient to meet the costs for which the judgment had been signed. Stuart, V.-Ch., held that the solicitors' lien could not prevail against the right of set-off, and granted an injunction to restrain S. from proceeding with the execution, and discharged the liquidators from retaining the sum set apart:—Held, on appeal, that, apart from the Companies Act 1862, s. 163, there was at common law no right to set off the debt on the bill of exchange against the judgment; that the solicitors had a lien on what could be recovered by the execution, and that they had the same right against the sum set apart which represented the proceeds of the execution. Re Bank of Hindustan, China, and Japan, Exp. Mackrill Smith, 3 L. R., Ch., 125; 37 L. J., Ch., 186; 16 W. R. 170; 17 L. T., N. S., 339.

Held, also, that if the Companies Act 1862, s. 163, applied to such a case and made the execution void, the Court would put the defendant and his solicitors in the same position as if the execution was not so restrained; and, therefore, that the solicitors must be paid their costs out of the sum set apart. Id.

8. An order having been made for winding-up a company, applications were made by the official liquidator against B., a solicitor employed by the company before the winding-up, that B. might be ordered to deliver up the following documents: (1), The share register and minute book, which were in B.'s hands before the commencement of the winding-up; (2), other documents which came to B.'s hands after the presentation of the winding-up petition, but before the winding-up order; (3), documents relating to allotments of shares which had come to B.'s hands before the presentation of the petition. B. resisted the applications on the ground that he claimed a lien. Chitty, J., ordered that all the documents should be delivered to the liquidator, subject to the lien, if any, of B.:—Held, on appeal, that the order was right as regarded the share register and minute book, for that the directors had no power to create any lien on them which could interfere with their being used for the purposes of the company:—Held, also, that the order was right as to class 2; for that a solicitor could not assert against documents which came to his hands pending the winding-up any such lien as would interfere with the prosecution of the winding-up:—But held, that the order for delivery of class 3 must be discharged, for that the winding-up order could not defeat any valid lien existing at the time when the winding-up petition was presented. Belamy v. Krench (8 L. R., Ch., 918) and Boughton v. Boughton (23 L. R., Ch. D., 169) distinguished. Re Capital

3. On Change or Discharge of Solicitor.

- (a) On Discharge of Solicitor by Client, 6439.
- (b) On Solicitor Discharging Himself or Becoming Incapacitated from Acting, 6440.
- (c) On Change of Solicitor by Order of Court, 6442.
- (d) On Change in or Dissolution of Partnership, 6442.

(a) On Discharge of Solicitor by Client.

1. A party changing his solicitor, the former solicitor has a lien for his costs upon papers in his hands, but cannot otherwise stop the progress of the cause till he is paid. Morreweather v. Mellish, 13 Ves. 161.

2. Party may discharge his solicitor; but he has a lien for his costs upon papers in his possession, but cannot, except by retaining them, prevent the progress of the cause until he is paid. Thort v. Dayrell, 13 Ves. 195.

3. If a solicitor, whom his client had ceased to employ, by the production of a deed in his hands belonging to the client, and upon which he claims a lien as solicitor, enables the client to recover a fund in a suit, his lien over the fund so realised is confined to the costs of that suit, but is a lien which he is entitled actively to enforce. Secus, as to his general lien upon his client's papers, which applies to all his bills of costs, but is merely a right to retain the papers, and cannot be actively enforced. Boxon v. Bolland, 4 Myl. & C. 354; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 123; 3 Jur. 884; 4 id. 763.

4. Solicitor in a suit, who had been discharged by the client, but had not delivered his bill of costs within the proper time, ordered, under the circumstances of the case, to deliver the papers and documents in his possession, relating to the suit (without prejudice to his lien), to the new solicitor. Cooper v. Hewson, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 515; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 446; 7 Jur. 760.

5. If a client by his conduct makes it impossible for his solicitor to continue any longer connected with him, and the solicitor in consequence refuses to continue the connection, he will be considered as if discharged by his client, and will not be ordered to give up the client's deeds and papers until his costs are paid, but he must produce them to be used at the hearing, and for inspection. Steele v. Scott, 2 Hog. 141.

6. A solicitor, discharged by his client or his representatives, is not bound to produce the papers in his possession for the purposes of the cause, his bill of costs not being paid. Lord v. Wormleighton, Jac. 580.

7. When the majority of several parties who have employed the same solicitor substitute another solicitor, they are entitled to the custody of the papers. Janson v. Davison, 1 Jur. 352.

8. By the direction of A., a bill was filed for the administration of a testator's assets, in which A. and his infant brother and sister, by A. as their next friend, were plaintiffs; D., their elder brother, who had an interest adverse to theirs, and was one of the defendants, acted as solicitor in the country for the plaintiffs, and the suit was conducted by his town agents. After the sister had attained her full age, D. died, having appointed her his executrix. A. gave notice to the persons who had been the town agents of D., not to take any proceedings in his name, and the sister appointed them to act as solicitors for her:—Held, that A. was not entitled to have the papers connected with the cause delivered over to him, though he offered to satisfy any lien which might be claimed against them. The sister filed a bill of revivor after the death of D., and made A. and his infant brother defendants. A. and the brother, after notice of that bill, filed another bill of revivor; this second bill was ordered to be taken off the file, and the Court held that an alleged defect of parties, in the frame of the first bill of revivor, afforded no reason for allowing the second bill of revivor to remain on the file. Livesey v. Livesey, 1 Russ. & M. 10.

9. Where a solicitor, whom his client has ceased to employ, produces a deed of the client, upon which the solicitor claims a lien for antecedent costs, and thereby enables the client to recover a fund in a suit in which the solicitor has acted, his lien upon that fund is confined to the costs due to him in the suit in which the fund was so recovered. Re Bayly, Exp. Humphrey, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 315.

10. Messrs. G., solicitors, having been requested by P., another solicitor, on behalf of a client for whom they had hitherto acted, to deliver up all deeds belonging to the client on the usual terms, sent the deeds to a relative of the client, who held a power of attorney from him, with the bill of costs, the amount of which they retained out of moneys in their hands belonging to the client, and they then informed P. that they had no deeds in their possession, and no bill of costs against the client. An order of course was then taken out by P., on behalf of the client, for taxation and delivery up of deeds and papers, but it was not complied with, and a writ of attachment was issued against Messrs. G.:—Held, that they were not justified in refusing to deliver up the papers, or to give in their bill for taxation. Re Gregg, and Re Prance, 9 L. R. 137.

11. The trustee of a bankrupt's estate appointed a solicitor, whose appointment was duly confirmed, and who transacted considerable professional business for the trustee as such. After several years the trustee was removed by the creditors, and a new trustee appointed, who called upon the solicitor to hand over all documents relating to the estate to himself or to his solicitor. The solicitor of the old trustee opposed this application on the ground that he had a lien on them for his costs:—Held, that he had a lien upon all documents the fruits of his own labour or expense. Exp. Yalden, Re Austin, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 129; 46 L. J., Bky., 59; 35 L. T., N. S., 720; 25 W. R. 134.

12. Upon an application for delivery over of all documents in a discharged solicitor's possession made by clients undertaking to pay into court a sum amply sufficient to secure the solicitor in respect of all demands, the Court will make the order asked for provided that circumstances of pressing necessity are shown. Re South Essex Equitable Investment and Advance Co., 46 L. T. 280.

1. Where a solicitor agrees with his client to carry on a suit in Chancery without requiring to be supplied with funds up to the hearing, that means the original hearing; and subsequently to that period he has a right to refuse to proceed without funds; but he has no right to withhold the papers from another solicitor to conduct an appeal. Webster v. Le Hunt, 9 W. R. 804.

2. A solicitor for a plaintiff in a cause obtained an order, which he passed; he was then discharged by the plaintiff, and a new solicitor appointed in his stead. The discharged solicitor refused to produce the order to be entered, on the ground that he had a lien for his costs in the same suit, and other costs. Upon motion by plaintiff for production, that the order might be entered:—Held, that lien cannot be allowed to intercept the completion of an order of the Court which has been passed, and the discharged solicitor was directed to produce the order for entry, upon payment of 20s. costs. Clifford v. Turrill, 2 De G. & Sm. 1; 12 Jur. 428.

3. After a suit was instituted the plaintiff became bankrupt. His assignees continued the suit, employing a different solicitor. A decree was taken by consent. On drawing up the decree the registrar required production of certain documents which were referred to in the decree, and which, being in the hands of the solicitor to the original plaintiff, had not been produced at the hearing. The solicitor refused to produce them, claiming a lien for costs:—Held, that he was bound to produce them. Simmonds v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 38 L. J., Ch., 87; 3 L. R., Ch., 797; 16 W. R. 1100; 19 L. T., N. S., 235.

4. A solicitor, who has been employed in a suit for the administration of an estate, and is discharged during the course of the suit, cannot, on the ground of lien, retain documents belonging to the estate, so as to embarrass the proceedings in the suit. Balaney v. French or Efrench, 43 L. J., Ch., 312; 22 W. R. 177; 29 L. T., N. S., 706; 8 L. R., Ch., 918; 28 L. T., N. S., 618.

5. Traders, before their bankruptcy, deposited their books with a solicitor, with a view to his effecting for them a compromise with their creditors. Terms were arranged, but the bankrupts were unable to comply with them, and the solicitor refused to act further in the matter. Adjudication in the bankruptcy followed, and the solicitor, although ordered to deliver up to the official assignee the books of the bankrupts in his hands, refused to do so, alleging a lien on them for costs. A commissioner in bankruptcy ordered him to be committed for contempt:—Held, on appeal, that the solicitor was entitled to the lien which he claimed. Re Leah, Exp. Jabet, 6 Jur., N. S., 387.

6. The solicitor for the parties to an administration action will not, on a change of solicitor, be allowed to assert his lien for costs on papers in his possession in such a way as to embarrass the proceedings in the action. On the contrary, he must produce the papers when they are required for the carrying on of the proceedings. Re Boughton, Boughton v. Boughton, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 169; 48 L. T. 413; 31 W. R. 517.

7. A demand for papers must be made by one duly authorised to give a receipt for them. Re Dias, 9 L. J., Ch., 183.

8. The Court will, before the completion of the taxation, order the delivery up of papers by a solicitor to his client, either upon payment into court of the amount claimed, or in case it appears from the solicitor's own account that a balance is due from him to his client. Re Bevan and Whitting, 33 Beav. 439.

(b) On Solicitor Discharging Himself or Becoming Incapacitated from Acting.

9. A solicitor declining to be farther concerned in a cause is not entitled to compel payment of his costs, by refusing to permit such inspection of the papers in his hands, or such production of them before the Court or the Master, as may be necessary in the conduct of the cause. Commerell v. Poynton, 1 Swan. 1.

10. If a solicitor withdraws from the conduct of a suit he cannot claim to retain the papers necessary for the prosecution of it, till his costs are paid, but will be ordered to deliver them up, without prejudice to his lien, to the new solicitor of the party. Colegrave v. Manley, T. & R. 400. S. C. nom. Colegrave v. —, 2 L. J., Ch., 39.

A solicitor who has declined to proceed with a cause, will be ordered, though his bill of costs is not paid, to deliver up the papers to the present solicitor of the party, the latter undertaking to hold them, subject to the former solicitor's lien, for what shall be found due to him on the taxation of the bills. An offer on the part of the former solicitor, after the motion made, to proceed with the cause, will not prevent the Court from ordering him to deliver up the papers on the terms mentioned above. Id.

11. After demurrer allowed, the plaintiff's solicitor refused to proceed until the payment of his bill:—Held, that he was bound to deliver over the papers to the new solicitor of the plaintiff, on the usual undertaking as to lien and redelivery, but that the party ought, under the circumstances, to undertake to prosecute the case with due diligence. Cane v. Martin, 2 Beav. 584; 4 Jur. 500.

12. Solicitor refusing to act longer in cause, ordered to permit client to inspect papers in his possession at all reasonable times, without any undertaking on his part to proceed to taxation of bill. Moir v. Mudie, 1 Sim. & S. 282; 1 L. J., Ch., 218.

13. A solicitor, having declined to act for his client, has no lien for his costs upon a fund in court. Cresswell v. Byron, 14 Ves. 271.

14. An attorney who refused either to proceed with a case, unless furnished by the plaintiff with the necessary funds for that purpose, or to hand over the papers to another attorney, unless repaid the costs out of the pocket, ordered, upon the petition of the plaintiff (his former client), to hand over to the new attorney such papers and documents connected with the cause, as, upon inspection, the latter might deem necessary to enable him effectually to prosecute the suit; the petitioner consenting that the respondent should have a lien upon any funds that might be thereby realised; and the new attorney undertaking to proceed without delay to bring the cause to a termination, unless counsel should otherwise advise, and in such case undertaking to hand back to the respondent all deeds and papers, immediately on receiving such advice. Strangways v. Harman, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 467.

1. Order made on a solicitor, who withdrew from the conduct of the plaintiff's cause, that he should deliver up to the plaintiff's new solicitor the briefs of the pleadings, counsel's opinions thereon, office copies of the several answers, and all such other papers and documents, connected with the cause, as, upon inspection, such new solicitor might deem necessary for the hearing; without prejudice to any right of lien for costs, and upon an undertaking to return them undefaced within ten days after the hearing. Heslop v. Metcalfe, 3 Myl. & C. 183; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 49; 1 Jur. 816.

A solicitor, who has so acted as, in the opinion of the Court, to have discharged himself, will be ordered, though his bills of costs are not paid, to deliver up the papers in the cause to the present solicitor of the client; such solicitor, and also the client, undertaking to hold them subject to the former solicitor's lien for his costs. An offer, on the part of the former solicitor, after proceedings had been taken in the cause by the new solicitor, to proceed with the cause, will not prevent the Court from ordering him to deliver up the papers on the terms above mentioned. S. C. 8 Sim. 622.

2. Agent of a solicitor held by the irregularity of his conduct to have discharged himself, and ordered, before taxation on payment of his bills to deliver up all papers, etc., on an undertaking of the principal to redeliver them as the Court should order. Re Smith, 4 Beav. 309.

3. A solicitor who withdraws from the conduct of a suit, because his client will not furnish him with the funds necessary for carrying it on, has no such a lien for costs already incurred, as will entitle him to withhold from his client and his new solicitor such of the client's papers as are necessary for the effectual prosecution of the cause. Heslop v. Metcalfe (3 Myl. & C. 183) considered, and similar order made. Rutledge v. Rutledge, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 290.

4. A dispute having arisen as to the mode and extent of a solicitor's remuneration, he refused to proceed in the cause until it had been settled. The solicitor was ordered to deliver up the papers in the cause to the new solicitor, upon his undertaking to proceed with due diligence, and to hold them subject to existing lien thereon. Wilson v. Emmett, 19 Beav. 233.

A solicitor having discharged himself must give up the papers to the new solicitor without his lien thereon being discharged by payment, and only without prejudice to it, and according to the terms of the order in Heslop v. Metcalfe (3 Myl. & C. 183). Id.

5. Where a solicitor discharged himself from acting as solicitor to a party to a cause, and retained the papers for the purpose of having his bill of costs taxed, and his former client refused to pay the bill of costs, the common order for delivery was made subject to lien, and on the undertaking to return them; but the order was made without costs on account of the former client's refusal to pay the bill of costs. Walker v. Beanlands; Beanlands v. Walker, 15 W. R. 168.

6. Where a solicitor agrees with his client to carry on a suit in Chancery without requiring to be supplied with funds up to the hearing, that means the original hearing; and subsequently to that period he has a right to refuse to proceed without funds; but he has no right to withhold the papers from another solicitor to conduct an appeal. Webster v. Le Hunt, 9 W. R. 804.

7. When a solicitor applied to his client for funds to carry on a suit, and upon the client not furnishing any, declined to continue to conduct the litigation, and the client appointed fresh solicitors.—Held, that this was a discharge by the solicitor, and that he might be called upon to deliver to the new solicitors the papers relating to the matters in the suit, on their undertaking to hold them without prejudice to his lien, and to return them undefaced within twelve days after the conclusion of the suit, and to allow the former solicitor access to them for the purpose of carrying on an action for his costs. Robins v. Goldingham, 13 L. R., Eq., 440; 41 L. J., Ch., 813; 25 L. T., N. S., 900.

8. Although a solicitor who discharges himself cannot set up a lien for costs as a reason for not delivering up papers necessary to enable his client to proceed with pending matters in litigation to which they relate, yet a solicitor who has been discharged by the client may set up such lien, and will not be ordered to produce or to deliver up to the client the papers on which he claims the lien, although his not doing so will embarrass the client in prosecuting or defending his claim. Such lien is a general one, and extends to all costs due from the client to the solicitor. Re Faithfull, 6 L. R., Eq., 325; 18 L. T., N. S., 502.

When Incapacitated from Practising. 9. A solicitor, who had been the solicitor of the plaintiff in the cause, being detained in prison for debt, ordered to deliver up to another solicitor appointed by the plaintiff the proceedings in the cause, notwithstanding he had become a mortgagee of three-fourths of the fund in question in the suit. Scott v. Fleming, 9 Jur. 1085. S. C. nom. Scott v. Fenning, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 88.

10. A solicitor, in custody for debt, being by the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 31, incapacitated from practising, was ordered to deliver up his client's papers in pending suits, without payment of his costs, but to be held subject to his lien. Re Williams, 28 Beav. 465.

A solicitor allowed himself to be arrested for debt and detained in prison. A client, for whom he was acting in a suit, presented a petition for delivery up of her papers, upon which he claimed to have a lien for costs:—Held, that he was not entitled to any such lien, although he alleged, and there was reason to believe, that his imprisonment had arisen from the default of the client to pay expenses out of pocket, which she had agreed to do. S. C., 6 Jur., N. S., 908.

11. The non-delivery of documents left by an insolvent solicitor with counsel and law stationers, and retained by them for non-payment of fees and charges:—Held, not a breach of an order upon the solicitor to deliver up to a new solicitor all deeds and documents in his possession or power, relating to the affairs of his client in the suit. Re Williams, 3 De G. F. & J. 104; 7 Jur., N. S., 323; 30 L. J., Ch., 610; 9 W. R. 393; 4 L. T., N. S., 103.

1. Where a solicitor fairly carries on a suit, and there is no proof of misconduct or refusal on his part to proceed, although he becomes embarrassed and is changed, before final decree, that does not disentitle him to his lien for costs. Re Smith, 9 W. R. 396; 4 L. T., N. S., 43.

Lien. 2. A. was a partner in a mercantile firm, and was also a partner in a firm of solicitors. The mercantile firm alone was made bankrupt:—Held, that the assignees were not entitled to the delivery to them, by the firm of solicitors, of the papers of the mercantile firm, until their lien on them had been satisfied. Re Moss, 35 Beav. 526; 2 L. R., Eq., 345; 12 Jur., N. S., 557; 35 L. J., Ch., 554; 14 W. R. 814; 14 L. T., N. S., 536.

A solicitor was also a partner in a mercantile firm, which became bankrupt:—Held, that the bankruptcy of the mercantile firm operated as a discharge of the solicitor's clients, so as to entitle them to the delivery of their papers upon terms, before the satisfaction of the lien. Id.

(c) On Change of Solicitor by Order of Court.

3. A solicitor, from whom the conduct of a cause has been taken by the Court, must give the new solicitor an opportunity of making himself acquainted with the documents common to the cause, and the free use of such as are required for its prosecution. Bennett v. Baator, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 137; 4 Jur. 50.

4. Order made on a solicitor, who had been by an order of the Court discharged from acting as the plaintiff's solicitor in the suit, to deliver up to the plaintiff's new solicitor all abbreviated and office copies of pleadings, and all other papers and documents, and copies of papers and documents, and also all letters and copies of letters relating to or concerning the suit, or which may or might have been used in relation thereto, etc., without prejudice to any question of lien for costs, and upon an undertaking by the plaintiff and his new solicitor not to part with any of them without the consent of the discharged solicitor or the order of the Court, and to abide by such order as the Court might make in respect thereto. Nainby v. Solomons, 7 Jur. 527.

5. An assigned solicitor of a pauper, in consequence of delay in the prosecution of proceedings in the suit, was ordered to be discharged and to deliver up to the new solicitors all the papers, subject to his lien for what might be found due to him for costs upon taxation. Hannaford v. Hannaford, 19 W. R. 429; 24 L. T., N. S. 86.

(d) On Change in or Dissolution of Partnership.

6. A solicitor's right of lien will not be affected by the circumstance of his taking a partner. Pelly v. Watham, 7 Hare 351; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 281; 14 Jur. 9.

7. After A. had employed Messrs. B. and C. as his solicitors, they took D. into partnership with them, and A. employed the new firm; in the course of that employment papers belonging to him came into their possession:—Held, that B. and C. had no lien on the papers for costs which A. owed them before they took D. into partnership. Re Forshaw, 16 Sim. 121; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 61.

8. One of two solicitors who were partners became bankrupt; the assignees excluded the other from interfering with the affairs of the partnership: the Court, nevertheless, refused to order the assignees to deliver to him the papers belonging to the clients of the firm, without consent of his clients. Davidson v. Napier, 1 Sim. 297.

9. M., one of the partners in a trading firm, also carried on business as a solicitor in co-partnership with L. The solicitor's firm was employed by the trading firm. The trading partners became bankrupt, but the business of the solicitors' firm was continued by L. alone. The assignees of the bankrupts employed fresh solicitors. Before the bankruptcy, one of the partners in the trading firm retired:—Held, first, that the bankruptcy of the trading firm was a discharge of the solicitors by their clients, and that the solicitors were entitled to their lien. Re Moss, 2 L. R., Eq., 345; 12 Jur., N. S., 557; 35 L. J., Ch., 554; 14 W. R. 814; 14 L. T., N. S., 536; 35 Beav. 526.

Held, secondly, that the retiring partner in the trading firm was discharged by the dissolution of the solicitors' partnership, caused by the bankruptcy of the trading solicitor, and was entitled, on the usual undertaking as to payment of the solicitors' costs, to have all papers which belonged to him alone delivered up to him. Id.

10. Where a party has employed as his solicitors in a cause a firm of two solicitors in partnership, the retirement from the business of one of such partners, under an arrangement with the other, operates as a discharge of the client by the solicitors, and the client is thereupon entitled to require that the papers in the cause, necessary for its prosecution, shall be delivered up to his new solicitor, upon the usual undertaking for saving the lien of the discharged solicitors. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 2 Hare 587; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 397; 7 Jur. 573.

11. A firm of solicitors having declined to act for their client during the continuance of a suit, and refused to give up the deeds, etc., in their possession, alleging that they had a lien for costs incurred to them, and also to their predecessors in the firm before the commencement of the suit, these costs having been previously taxed, an order was made upon motion for the deposit of the deeds in the Master's office. Gregory v. Crosswell, 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 300.

12. A dissolution of a firm of solicitors amounts to a discharge of the client. Ramlinson v. Moss, 7 Jur., N. S., 1053; 30 L. J., Ch., 797; 9 W. R. 733; 4 L. T., N. S., 619.

If a solicitor discharging a client has a lien on the papers relating to a matter in progress such papers must nevertheless be given up to his successor, the lien reviving on the completion of the business. Ib.

A client employing a firm of solicitors is entitled to the services of all the members of the firm, and a dissolution of partnership amounts to the discharge of the client. For the purpose of completing any business in hand at the time of discharging a client, the papers must be given up to his new solicitor, the lien of the former solicitor reviving on the completion of the business. The former solicitor is entitled to have a schedule of the documents so handed over, and the expense of preparing such schedule must fall upon the person requiring the papers. S. C. 80 L. J., Ch., 797.

4. Production of Documents as Evidence or for Benefit of Third Parties.

1. Whenever a client is bound to produce a deed for the benefit of a third person, so also is his solicitor, though the latter may have a lien on it for costs against his clients. Furlong v. Howard, 2 Sch. & Lef. 115.

2. A defendant was decreed to deliver up certain deeds to the plaintiff; the deeds were in the possession of the defendant's solicitor, who claimed a lien on them for costs; but the Court, on motion, ordered him to deliver them up, and to pay the costs of the motion. Bell v. Taylor, 8 Sim. 216.

3. Solicitor refusing to allow deed in his possession to be proved on behalf of plaintiff, because he had lien on it for costs due from defendant; ordered to produce deed at his own expense, and pay all costs consequential on his refusal. Brassington v. Brassington, 1 Sim. & S. 455.

4. Where a party, claiming by title paramount to client, enforces the production of the papers, semble, the benefit thereby incidentally accruing to parties deriving under the client cannot be taken from them, and the solicitor's lien is lost. Blunden v. Desart, 2 Dr. & War. 405; 2 Con. & L. 111; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 261. Reversing Fl. & K. 572; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 52.

5. A solicitor who obtained possession of a lease from a client which was claimed by a third party, cannot refuse to answer a bill, filed against him upon an allegation that the information respecting the matters inquired into was obtained either in the character of solicitor, or as a creditor of his client, neither will his claim to be a purchaser for value without notice, in respect of a lien claimed upon the lease for a debt incurred by his client, prevent his being required to answer the bill. Thomas v. Rawlings, 28 L. J., Ch., 829.

6. Solicitor employed in the sale of an estate knew that the title deeds were in the possession of an adverse party; he however proceeded to prepare and obtain the execution of the conveyance and memorial. The sale went off in consequence of the absence of the title deeds. He was disallowed the costs of the proceeding, and, the deed being a cloud on the title, he was also ordered to deliver it without being paid the costs thereof. Potts v. Dutton, 8 Beav. 493.

7. A party ordered to produce papers which are in the hands of his solicitor, must pay his bill of costs if he cannot otherwise procure them. Exp. Shaw, Jac. 272.

8. A defendant before answer became bankrupt. He put in his answer stating that certain books and letters were in the possession of his solicitor, who claimed a lien on them, and that he could not obtain possession thereof. The Court ordered the defendant to produce them, with liberty to apply in case of need. Rodick v. Gandell, 10 Beav. 270.

9. A defendant, by his answer, stated that a certain deed was in the possession of the personal representative of a solicitor who claimed a lien on it. The Court ordered him to produce it, with liberty to apply, if production or inspection of the deed was refused by the party who had it. Monsel v. Lindsay, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 144.

10. Two defendants, one of whom was a solicitor, admitted by their answer that documents were in their power; their solicitor, with his partner, claimed a lien upon them for costs; and on a motion that the defendants should pay the costs in order to facilitate the production of the documents, the Court declined to make the order. Wroughton v. Barolay, 11 Jur. 274.

11. Where documents belonging to a trust are in the hands of the solicitor to the trust, who claims a lien upon them, a trustee defendant cannot by answer refuse to disclose the deeds on the ground that the solicitor claims his lien, and will not produce them. The course is for the trustee to obtain an extension of time to put in his answer, which extension of time will be from time to time prolonged, until the trustee can pay off or procure a waiver of the lien. Goodchap v. Wearings, 16 Jur. 586.

12. Claim of lien by solicitor for professional charges held to be no ground of objection to an order upon him to produce deeds in possession before the examiner, with a view to their being used as evidence between third parties. Hope v. Liddell, 1 Jur., N. S., 665; 24 L. J., Ch., 691; 3 W. R. 581; 3 Eq. Rep. 790. Affirming 20 Beav. 438; 1 Jur., N. S., 665; 24 L. J., Ch., 691.

Quære, whether the solicitor can object to production under such an order, on the ground of want of service upon, or of notice to the person or persons to whom, subject to his lien, the deeds required to be produced belong. Ib.

A deed containing a recital alleged to be material to the case of the defendants in a suit was in the custody of the solicitor of some of the parties to the deed, and he claimed a lien on it in respect of the costs of its preparation. On his being called as a witness by the defendants, who were not his clients or parties to the deed, to produce it:—Held, that he could not refuse to do so by reason of his lien. S. C. 7 De G. M. & G. 331.

13. A solicitor a defendant in a suit cannot refuse to produce documents belonging to his client, on the ground that he has a lien upon them, and that the party seeking inspection claims under his client. Lockett v. Cary, 10 Jur., N. S., 144.

14. A witness is bound to produce a document in order that it may be given in evidence, notwithstanding he may have a lien on it. Re Cameron's Coalbrook Railway Co., 25 Beav. 1.

Distinction between the production of documents at the instance of the party who created the lien, and of a stranger, and between production and parting with the possession. Id.

1. A defendant was committed for the non-production of documents admitted by him to be in his possession or power. It afterwards appearing that prior to the suit they had been deposited with a third party, who claimed a lien thereon which the defendant was unable to satisfy, he was discharged from custody without producing them. North v. Huber, 29 Beav. 437.

2. Solicitors employed by the husband to prepare a marriage settlement:—Held, not bound to produce it to the trustees until their bill had been paid. Re Gregson, 26 Beav. 87.

3. Documents in the possession of a former solicitor of a plaintiff who claimed a lien for costs upon them will not be ordered to be produced for the defendant's inspection. Kettlemell v. Barston, 20 W. R. 621.

4. In an action by a married woman against her husband and the trustees of her marriage settlement, the solicitor who prepared the settlement was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and required to produce the settlement under a subpoena duces tecum. The solicitor objected to produce it on the ground that it had not been paid for, and asserted a general lien on it. The settlement was prepared on the instructions of the wife in contemplation of her marriage in 1873; i.e., between the dates of the Married Women's Property Act 1870 and the Amendment Act 1874:—Held, that the solicitor was bound to produce it. Fowler v. Fowler, 50 L. J., Ch., 686; 44 L. T. 799; 29 W. R. 800.

5. The solicitors for the trustees of an estate which is under the administration of the Court have not, after their discharge, such a lien for costs and for money advanced in the suit as will enable them to refuse the production of documents which are required by the receiver for the management of the estate. Belaney v. French or French, 8 L. R., Ch., 918; 28 L. T., N. S., 618; 43 L. J., Ch., 312; 22 W. R. 177; 29 L. T., N. S., 706.

6. A defendant, shortly after filing an affidavit as to documents, entered into liquidation of his affairs by arrangement. Some time afterwards he changed his solicitors. The plaintiff applied for production of the documents, which the defendant resisted on the ground that they were in the possession of his former solicitors, who claimed a lien on them:—Held, that an order for production must be made, with liberty to apply in case the defendant found it impossible to produce the documents, the plaintiff not to attach the defendant without leave of the Court. Vale v. Oppert, 10 L. R., Ch., 340; 44 L. J., Ch., 579; 23 W. R. 780; 33 L. T., N. S., 41. Affirming 44 L. J., Ch., 258; 32 L. T., N. S., 86.

A solicitor cannot set up a lien acquired in a cause as against the right of other parties in the cause to production. Id.

5. Production to Assignees or Trustees in Bankruptcy.

7. If a solicitor refuses to deliver the proceedings to the assignee, the order is of course with costs. Re Crome, Re Wharton, Mont. & Bli. 90.

8. Solicitor is bound to produce papers of his client for him, or in bankruptcy for his assignees, though not employed by them in the cause, for the purposes of which he received them; but not bound to deliver them up, or produce them in any other business, without payment. Ross v. Laughton, 1 Ves. & B. 849.

9. The Court has jurisdiction in bankruptcy to order the papers deposited by the bankrupt with his attorney, in actions commenced before the bankruptcy, to be delivered up to the assignees, provided they are necessary to the administration of the estate. But where assignees wanted such papers for the purpose of instituting criminal proceedings against the bankrupt, the Court refused to make the order and dismissed the petition with costs. Exp. Innes, Buck 337.

10. The right of assignees to inspect or take a copy of a title deed of the bankrupt's property in the hands of his solicitor is no higher than the right of the bankrupt himself; and therefore, where the assignees petitioned that the solicitor might produce or give an attested copy of such document, on being paid only the portion of his costs relating thereto, and the costs of the production or copy, the petition was dismissed with costs. Exp. Underwood, Re Hemsworth, 1 De G. 190; 9 Jur. 632.

11. Traders, before their bankruptcy, deposited their books with a solicitor, with a view to his effecting for them a compromise with their creditors. Terms were arranged, but the bankrupts were unable to comply with them, and the solicitor refused to act further in the matter. Adjudication followed, and the solicitor, although ordered to deliver up to the official assignees the books of the bankrupts in his hands, refused to do so, alleging a lien on them for costs. A commissioner ordered him to be committed for contempt:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to the lien which he claimed. Exp. Jabet, 6 Jur., N. S., 387.

13. A solicitor, claiming to have a lien on a deed of the bankrupt for professional business done for him, was summoned to attend before the commissioner acting in the prosecution of the fiat, to be examined touching the estate of the bankrupt, and to produce the deed. The solicitor obeyed the summons and produced the deed when the commissioner, being of opinion that he had no lien, ordered him to deliver up the deed to the solicitor of the fiat, and, on his declining to do so, unless his lien was first discharged, directed an officer of the court to seize the deed:—Held, that the commissioner, in making such order, exceeded his jurisdiction. Exp. Llewellyn, Re Wright, 8 Jur. 816.

Where the claim of a solicitor to a lien on a deed of the bankrupt is disputed, the remedy of the assignees for recovering the deed is by an action of trover. Id.

14. A bankrupt, upon consulting his solicitor before his bankruptcy, but after an act of bankruptcy committed, of which the solicitor had no notice as to the state of his affairs, told him that his cash-book contained all his receipts and payments, and that anything else he wanted would be found in the office. He afterwards sent by post the key of a drawer in the office to his solicitor, who subsequently removed the papers and documents in the drawer, and also a tin box containing papers, etc., from the bankrupt's office to his own. The bankruptcy occurred a few days after the removal, whereupon the solicitor claimed a lien upon the papers and documents for his bill of costs:—Held, that he was entitled to such lien for his taxed costs, down to the date of the filing of the petition. Re Markby, 11 L. T., N. S., 250.

1. A solicitor is not, on the ground of his lien on documents of a bankrupt in respect of professional services before the bankruptcy, entitled to refuse to produce such documents for examination by the trustee. Re Toleman and England, Exp. Bramble, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 885; 42 L. T. 413; 28 W. R. 676.

2. S. and M., solicitors, obtained possession in the course of business of certain deeds and documents the property of W., whose solicitors they were, and retained possession of same, subject to a lien for costs due by W. to them. W. was subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt, and his assignees applied for an order that S. and M. should deliver up to them the deeds and documents so in their possession. The Court refused the application. Re Watters, 7 L. R., Ir., 531.

3. A trustee was removed from his office and a new trustee appointed. The old trustee's solicitor, on being applied to, gave up all the account books of the estate, but refused to deliver up certain documents and papers on which he had expended labour as solicitor, and upon which he claimed a lien for costs. Thereupon the new trustee applied to the Court for an order upon the old trustee and his solicitor to deliver up all documents relating to his office as trustee:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to a lien on the documents which he had retained, and that the old trustee was not bound to discharge that lien by paying the costs out of his own pocket. Exp. Falden, Re Austin, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 129; 46 L. J., Bky., 59; 35 L. T. 720; 25 W. R. 134.

6. Delivery up to Client on Payment of or Giving Security for Costs.

4. Order, without cause in court, upon general jurisdiction over solicitor, that he shall deliver his bill for purposes of getting from him title deeds deposited with him for suffering recoveries, etc. Exp. Uabridge (Earl), 6 Ves. 425.

5. A solicitor, having a lien upon a deed for his costs, will not be ordered to furnish them, nor deliver up the deed without getting an express undertaking that his costs will be paid when taxed. McKenny v. Chambers, Jon. & C. 105.

6. Where a solicitor has in his possession deeds and papers belonging to his client, which he refuses to part with, the Court has jurisdiction to order the solicitor to deliver the deeds and papers, and also his bill of costs, the party offering to pay what the Master shall find to be due to him, though there is no cause pending, and though no part of the costs has been incurred in respect of any action or suit in law or equity. Re Murray, 1 Russ. 519.

7. Where a party has a pressing necessity for papers in the hands of his solicitor, the Court will order them to be delivered up, upon a deposit being made, sufficient to cover the amount of the solicitor's bill and the costs of the taxation. Clutton v. Pardon, T. & R. 304.

8. A solicitor, who had by deposit of his client a lien on deeds for costs and other moneys, was ordered to deliver them up to his client on payment into court by the latter of a sum sufficient to cover the demand, and the usual taxation was directed. Mills v. Finlay, 1 Beav. 560.

9. Where the committees of a lunatic had been authorised by the Court to raise money by a mortgage of his estate, but were unable to do so, in consequence of some of title deeds being in the hands of solicitors, who claimed a lien upon them, but the items of their accounts were disputed, the Court ordered that the mortgages should be at liberty to pay to the committees a sufficient sum to discharge the lien on the title deeds, without prejudice to their right to have the accounts investigated. Re Davies, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 456; 7 Jur. 584.

10. In a suit instituted against a solicitor, who had also acted in the capacity of steward for an account, and for delivery of title deeds, the Court upon motion ordered the deeds to be delivered up to the plaintiff, upon payment into court of so much of the balance claimed by the answer, as was not covered by any security. Baleh v. Symes, T. & R. 87. See Tyler v. Drayton, 2 Sim. & S. 309.

Where a deed is sought to be impeached, the plaintiff is entitled to have it produced, and the defendant cannot resist the production upon the ground of lien. Id.

11. A solicitor prepared and obtained the execution of a conveyance, knowing the title deeds were in the possession of an adverse party. The sale went off in consequence of absence of title deeds, and the conveyance, being a cloud on the title, was ordered to be delivered up by the solicitor without payment of his costs. Potts v. Dutton, 8 Beav. 493.

13. An order of course to tax directed, that, on payment, all the papers, etc., of the client should be delivered up. The solicitor claimed a special lien on some of the papers beyond the costs. A motion to discharge the order was refused, because, if the solicitor had such special lien, he would be protected when application was made to the Court, for the delivery of the papers. Re Teague, 11 Beav. 318.

14. Though there is no cause pending, the Court will order a solicitor to deliver up deeds and writings in his possession, the party undertaking to pay him the costs justly due to him; and, as incident to that jurisdiction, it will order the costs to be taxed, though no part of the costs relates to suits or actions. Re —, 4 L. J., Ch., 207.

1. Where a solicitor refuses to deliver up deeds and papers in his possession, except upon payment of his bill of costs, the Court has jurisdiction to order taxation of such bill, and the delivery up of the deeds and papers, upon payment of the taxed costs, though the costs have been incurred in respect of conveyancing and other general business, and not in respect of the prosecution or defence of any suit or action. Re Rice, 2 Keen 181; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 291; 1 Jur. 351.

2. The lien of a solicitor on the papers of his client for the amount of his bill is equivalent to a contract; and, therefore, a solicitor will not be ordered to deliver up such papers until he is actually paid; and, semble, that payment into court of a sum of money is not sufficient to entitle the client to demand the papers; but semble also, that, if the solicitor's withholding a document would occasion the loss of the property to which it relates, the Court will make such an order as, without prejudicing the solicitor's lien, will allow of the documents being made available for the purpose of securing the property. Richards v. Platel, Cr. & Ph. 79; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 375; Jur. 884.

3. It requires a strong case to induce the Court to take the papers from a solicitor; still this Court has authority to compel the production of the deeds upon the money being brought into court. Blunden v. Desart, 2 Con. & L. 111; 2 Dr. & War. 405; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 221. Reversing Fl. & K. 572; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 57.

4. The omission by a client to file a certificate of taxation of a solicitor's bill within the four days prescribed by the order of 29th October 1692, does not render the order a nullity, but the client's representatives, after his death, may, notwithstanding the omission, obtain an order under the summary jurisdiction, for the delivering up of the client's papers on payment of the amount of the bill as taxed; and an action by the solicitor on the bill, after such taxation, is a contempt, and will be restrained by injunction at the instance of the representatives. Re Campbell, 3 De G. M. & G. 585; 17 Jur. 1171; 22 L. J., Ch., 865.

5. The Court will, before the completion of a taxation, order the delivery up of papers by a solicitor to his client, either upon payment into court of the amount claimed, or in case it appears from the solicitor's own account that a balance is due from him to his client. Re Bevan, 33 Beav. 439.

6. A solicitor ordered, pending a taxation of his bill, to deliver over his client's papers, on the client undertaking to produce them, and giving security for the amount claimed. Re Jewitt, 34 Beav. 22.

7. Upon an application for delivery over of all documents in a discharged solicitor's possession made by clients undertaking to pay into court a sum amply sufficient to secure the solicitor in respect of all demands, the Court will make the order asked for provided that circumstances of pressing necessity are shown. Re South Essex Equitable Investment and Advance Co., 46 L. T. 280.

8. Where a solicitor had been appointed clerk to a local board, with a salary, for conducting the legal as well as the ordinary business of the board, it was held by the Vice-Chancellor, upon an interlocutory motion—in an action for mandamus to compel production of papers, that, whatever claim the clerk might have against the board for payment of costs in respect of professional services, he had no right, being in the relation of servant to the board, to refuse production of the legal papers or other documents claimed by the board as belonging to them:—But held, by the Court of Appeal, that as such an order would prejudice the clerk's lien, it could not be made before the trial of the action without payment into court of a sum sufficient to meet the amount claimed by the clerk, upon which he was to have the same lien as upon the papers; and the Court ordered that upon that being done the clerk should deliver up to the plaintiffs all books and papers claimed in the action. Newington Local Board v. Eldridge, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 349.

9. In making an order for taxation under the Solicitors Act, 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 38, it is discretionary with the Court whether or not to add the order for the delivery up of papers. Exp. Jarman, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 835; 46 L. J., Ch., 485.

A solicitor delivered to his client a bill of costs incurred in pending suits, in which he afterwards, with his client's knowledge, incurred further costs. While the suits were still pending, the client obtained an order of course for taxation and delivery up of papers, whereupon the client delivered a bill for the further costs. On a motion to discharge the order on the ground that the solicitor had a lien on the papers for further costs:—Held, that the order should be amended so as to include both bills. Id.

Semble, that the proper form of order in such a case would be a simple order for taxation, without ordering the papers to be delivered up. Id.

10. By an order for taxation, the solicitor was ordered, on payment, to deliver over the papers. Having made default, he was ordered to pay the costs of a motion to compel him, though he had delivered them up after the notice of motion, but before it had been heard. Re Minter, 19 Beav. 33.

7. Production of Orders or Decrees.

11. A clerk in court and solicitor refusing to continue the conduct of a cause until his fees are paid; ordered to produce an office copy of the bill to be marked by the six clerk, so that an answer might be called for. Mayne v. Hawkey, 3 Swan. 93.

12. The solicitor in a cause will be ordered to produce an original order of the Court, for the purpose of correcting an accidental error, notwithstanding that he claims a lien on the papers in the cause. Bird v. Heath, 12 Jur. 861.

13. An order was made for the payment out of court of a sum of money to a married woman for her separate use. The solicitor who had the charge and carriage of the order refused to produce it to the registrar, to enable him to countersign the cheque of the accountant-general, except upon condition of his being paid thereout a sum of money which, he alleged, he had advanced to the lady, or become security for, upon the faith of his being repaid out of the money. Upon motion, he was directed to produce the order, and to pay the costs of the motion. Benyon v. Aspllett, Re Sidney, 8 Jur., N. S., 759.

1. A plaintiff in a suit became bankrupt, and the suit was revived by his assignee, who employed a different solicitor. A decree was afterwards made:—Held, that the solicitor of the original plaintiff must produce the documents in his possession which were necessary for drawing up the decree, notwithstanding his lien on them for costs, even though the documents were not strictly in evidence in the cause. Simmons v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 3 L. R., Ch., 797; 16 W. R. 1100; 19 L. T., N. S., 235; 38 L. J., Ch., 87.

[Of Proceedings in Bankruptcy.] See BANKRUPTCY, II. vii. 3.

8. Order on Executors of Deceased Solicitor.

2. This Court has not jurisdiction to order the personal representatives of a deceased solicitor to deliver up title deeds on which they claim a lien. Allen v. Jervoise, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 583.

3. The Court will not order the personal representative of a deceased solicitor to deliver the papers in the cause of another solicitor, without payment or security for payment of the solicitor's bill. It seems that the summary jurisdiction of the Court extends to the representatives of a solicitor. Redfearn v. Sowerby, 1 Swan. 84; 1 Wils. 96.

4. A client cannot compel the executor of his attorney to produce his papers, etc., in court, though only for the purpose of using them there, unless the testator's bill of costs be paid or secured. Magrath v. Musherry, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 477; Vern. & Scriv. 171.

5. Except against the personal representative of the solicitor, the Court has no summary jurisdiction to take the client's deeds, lodged with the solicitor, out of his hands, upon an offer to pay all his costs due; as such an order can be only made upon a person with whom the Court can settle. If any other person has the deeds, the client must file a bill against him. Ashley v. Busteed, 2 Moll. 489.

9. Mortgage Transactions.

6. The attorney of the mortgagor, to whom, pending a suit to foreclose the mortgage, the title deeds of the mortgaged premises have been delivered by the mortgagor, for the purpose of procuring a loan of money, has no lien upon them for his costs in that transaction as against the mortgagee. Hutchinson v. Joyce, 2 Jones 122.

7. The owner of lands, subject to a mortgage of the year 1777, and to judgments confessed in and subsequently to the year 1820, deposited, in March 1819, the title deeds with his solicitor. In a suit instituted by the judgment creditors, it was decreed that those lands should be sold to pay off the mortgage, and that the title deeds should be lodged in the office without prejudice to any lien which the solicitor might have thereon for costs, which was done accordingly. The lands were sold and the deeds handed to the purchaser:—Held, that the solicitor had no lien on the deeds, having no right to retain them as against the mortgagee. Taylor v. Gorman, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 330. Affirmed 7 Ir. Eq. R. 259.

Held, also, that his lien on the deeds was not transferred to the surplus funds of the sale, remaining after payment of the mortgage. Id.

8. A mortgagor, who had borrowed the title deeds from an equitable mortgagee, to enable him to sell the property, handed them to his solicitor in order to complete. The mortgagee acquiesced in the sale:—Held, that the solicitor had a lien on the deeds for his costs of the transaction only, but not for his other claims for costs against the mortgagor. Young v. English, 7 Beav. 10; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 76.

9. Where the committees of a lunatic had been authorised by the Court to raise money by a mortgage of his estate, but were unable to do so, in consequence of some of the title deeds being in the hands of solicitors, who claimed a lien upon them, but the items of their accounts were disputed, the Court ordered that the mortgagee should be at liberty to pay to the committees a sufficient sum to discharge the lien on the title deeds, without prejudice to their right to have the accounts investigated. Re Davies, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 456; 7 Jur. 584.

10. A solicitor, who was employed by an administrator, as well in the affairs of the administration as on his private account, having in the course of that employment, obtained possession of several documents relating to the intestate's leasehold estate, and having, by the direction of his client, deposited certain deeds relating to a portion of such property with the executor of a deceased party, who was entitled to a distributive share of the intestate's estate (for the purpose of securing the payment of certain legacies given by her will), claimed for his bill of costs, due from the administrator, a lien on other documents in his possession, relating to the same property as that to which the deeds related which were so deposited:—Held, that the security having been affected through the agency of the solicitor, without any reservation on his part in favour of his lien, he had no right to derogate from that security by withholding any document necessary to give effect to it, and that therefore he had no lien on the documents in his possession as against the party entitled to the benefit of the security. Hicks v. Keate, 3 Jur. 1024.

11. A., being seised in quasi fee of an estate pur autre vie, granted a mortgage thereof in 1814. In 1824 A. obtained a renewal from the head landlord, and deposited the indenture of renewal with his solicitor, who, in a foreclosure suit by a mortgagee, insisted upon retaining the indenture by virtue of a lien thereupon for costs incurred since 1814:—Held, that he was not entitled to that lien as against the right of the mortgagee. Smith v. Chichester, 2 Dr. & War. 393; 1 Con. & L. 486; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 580.

12. A mortgagor instructed his solicitor, to whom he was indebted in a bill of costs, to prepare a conveyance of the mortgaged property. They did so, and sent the engrossment to the mortgagee's solicitors, with an intimation that they had a lien on it, and a request that the mortgagee's solicitors would hold it on account of the mortgagor's solicitors. The engrossment was executed by the mortgagees. The mortgage money was not paid, but the mortgagor sold the property to purchasers, who agreed to pay it:—Held, that the mortgagor's solicitors had a lien on the engrossment, and that such lien was not prejudiced by their having parted with the engrossment under the above circumstances, nor by the execution of it as a deed, nor by a promissory note delivered to the solicitors not covering their whole demand, and that the purchaser had been properly restrained by injunction from proceeding at law to recover the deed. Watson v. Lyon, 7 De G. M. & G. 288; 24 L. J., Ch., 754; 3 W. R. 543.

1. A bill of costs for preparing a mortgage security delivered to a mortgagor by a firm of solicitors, one of whom was the mortgagee:—Held, not to be mortgagee's costs. Gregg v. Slater, 2 Jur., N. S., 246; 25 L. J., Ch., 440.

2. A solicitor acting for a mortgagee must deliver up the title deeds of the mortgagor which he holds for the mortgagee on payment of the mortgage debt and mortgagee's costs, and cannot claim a general lien on such deeds for costs due to him from the mortgagor, in respect of business previously done by him as solicitor for the mortgagor. Re Moseley, 15 W. R. 975.

3. A solicitor acting for mortgagee as well as mortgagor in the preparation of a mortgage thereby loses his lien on the title deeds in his possession for costs due to him from the mortgagor, even though the costs were incurred prior to the mortgage and the title deeds never left the solicitor's office. Exp. Quinn, Re Nicholson, 53 L. J., Ch., 302; 49 L. T. 811; 32 W. R. 296.

4. A solicitor who acts for both parties to a mortgage cannot, after the execution of the mortgage, claim a lien on the title deeds of the property for any costs due from the mortgagor. Re Snell, 25 W. R. 823; 46 L. J., Ch., 627; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 105; 37 L. T., N. S., 350.

A company having issued a debenture loan, a deed was prepared by their solicitor mortgaging their property to two of the directors as trustees for the debenture holders, the same solicitor acting also for the trustees. The mortgage contained a power of sale and the usual covenant against incumbrances. The company afterwards passed a resolution for a voluntary winding-up, whereupon the trustees, acting under their power of sale, contracted to sell the mortgaged property to a purchaser, and applied to the solicitor for the company's title deeds, which were in his possession. He however refused to give them up, claiming a lien upon them for costs incurred by the company prior to the mortgage. Upon a petition by the trustees and a debenture holder praying that the solicitor might be ordered to deliver up the title deeds to them:—Held, that the solicitor was not entitled to a lien on the deeds, and that they must be delivered up to them. Id.

A solicitor acting for mortgagee as well as mortgagor in the preparation of a mortgage thereby loses his lien on the title deeds in his possession for costs due to him from the mortgagor, unless such lien is expressly reserved, even though the mortgagee may have known that the solicitor had such lien as against the mortgagor. Id.

5. A mortgage deed and the title deeds to the mortgaged property were deposited by the mortgagees with their solicitors for safe custody. Afterwards the mortgagor instructed the same solicitors to sell the property, and they employed an auctioneer for the purpose, and made use of the deeds in preparing particulars and conditions of sale. The property was put up for sale, but was not sold. The mortgagor then filed a liquidation petition, and the trustee contracted to sell the mortgaged property:—Held, that the solicitors had no lien on the deeds as against the trustee in respect of their costs of the abortive sale. Exp. Fuller, Re Long, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 617; 50 L. J., Ch., 448; 44 L. T. 63; 29 W. R. 448.

6. A solicitor was instructed to prepare a mortgage, and the title deeds of the property were deposited with him for the purpose by the mortgagor. He was also acting as solicitor for the mortgagee, and when the mortgage was executed he continued to hold the deeds on behalf of the mortgagee. The mortgagor filed a liquidation petition, and the solicitor was employed on behalf of the trustee. The trustee sold the equity of redemption and the solicitor received the purchase money:—Held, that the solicitor had a lien on the deeds against the mortgagor, and was entitled to retain out of the purchase money the amount of costs due to him from the mortgagor. Re Messenger, Exp. Calvert, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 317; 45 L. J., Bky., 134; 34 L. T. 920.

Lien on Mortgage Deed given by Client to his Solicitor. 7. A client mortgaged property, which was at the time subject to a first mortgage, to his solicitors, who prepared the mortgage deed. Afterwards the mortgagor made a third mortgage to another person:—Held, in an action by the solicitors against the first and third mortgagees and the mortgagor, that they were entitled only to their ordinary costs as mortgagees, and that they had no lien on the mortgage deed for the costs of its preparation or other costs due to them from the mortgagor. Sheffield v. Eden, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 291; 27 W. R. 477; 40 L. T. 283.

8. A solicitor obtained from his client, who had no other professional assistance, a mortgage deed, under circumstances which, as the client alleged, amounted to pressure and surprise. The deed was prepared by the solicitor at the expense of his client:—Held, that, under the circumstances, he could not be permitted to stand upon his rights as mortgagee for the purpose of resisting production of the instrument in question. Davis v. Parry, 6 W. R. 174; 27 L. J., Ch., 294; 4 Jur., N. S., 431.

10. Priorities.

9. A solicitor may detain title deeds as against client till payment of his bill, but not against persons who have antecedent rights. Marsh v. Bathoe, Ridgw. P. C. 256.

1. Solicitor has no lien against remainderman on deeds put into his hands by tenant for life. Exp. Nesbitt, 2 Sch. & Lef. 279.

2. A solicitor cannot, by his lien, have a better right to the client's title deeds than the client himself had at the time of the costs being incurred. Smith v. Chichester, 2 Dr. & War. 393; 1 Con. & L. 486; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 580.

3. By settlement a sum of 2,500*l.* was charged on an estate for lives renewable for ever for the issue of the marriage, subject to appointment, part of which was appointed to one of the children on her marriage, and then settled; the residue was never appointed. After the death of the first settlor, A., the solicitor of B., the other child of the marriage, acting under a power of attorney, obtained a renewal, and instituted a suit in his name to raise his portion of the unappointed charge, but did not prosecute it. On the death of B., A. obtained limited administration to him, and, with the parties entitled to the daughter's share of the charge, filed a bill to raise the charge, when a receiver was appointed and funds got in. The lands being sold in a creditors' suit, and the settlements lodged in the office by order, without prejudice to A.'s lien:—Held, that A. had no lien for costs on the deeds, as B., through whom he got them, had no exclusive right to them, and that there could not be any lien transferred to the funds. Molesworth v. Robbins, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 1; 2 J. & L. 358. Affirmed 8 Ir. Eq. R. 223.

4. A solicitor, without notice of an incumbrance, either legal or equitable, prior to his possession of the title deeds of the property affected by it, has no right of lien on the deeds as against the incumbrancer. Polly v. Wathen, 7 Hare 351; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 281; 14 Jur. 9.

Where a solicitor, under such circumstances, is also mortgagee of the property, with priority of another incumbrancer, the right of lien does not extend beyond his claim as mortgagee. Id.

A. was an equitable mortgagee of lands, the legal estate being at the time of the mortgage outstanding in a third person. The title deeds of the estate, subsequently to the equitable mortgage, came into the custody of solicitors for carrying out a sale for the mortgagor of the property comprised in the equitable mortgage, and who claimed a lien upon them for costs incurred by the mortgagor before and after the sale:—Held, upon appeal, affirming the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, that the solicitor could have no lien of a higher nature on deeds in his possession belonging to his client than the interest which the client himself had, and that the solicitor could not claim any greater right as against third parties, and that the right of the solicitor could be only to retain the deed, subject to all the rights, legal and equitable, affecting them in the hands of the mortgagor, and that that right was subject to a prior right in the equitable mortgagee. 8 C. 1 De G. M. & G. 16; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 105; 16 Jur. 47. Affirming 7 Hare 351; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 281; 14 Jur. 9.

5. When a judgment was obtained against a client subsequently to the deposit of his title deeds with his solicitor, and costs had become due for professional services rendered to the client both before and after the date of the entry of the judgment:—Held, that the solicitor's lien could not prevail against the judgment creditor for any portion of the costs incurred after the date of the judgment. Blunden v. Desart, 2 Dr. & War. 405; 2 Con. & L. 111; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 221. Reversing Fl. & K. 572; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 53.

A solicitor's lien for his costs upon his client's deeds and papers, prevails generally for all costs, and is binding upon the representatives of the client. Id.

The character of an incumbrance, the result of contract, does not belong to the solicitor's lien. Id.

6. A. is employed for some time by Messrs. B., as their attorney, and in the course of such employment, a considerable debt becomes due to him; Messrs. B. contract to sell an estate to C., who pays to them a part of the purchase money, and A. is employed in preparing the contract, and making out the title. The solicitor of C. prepares the draft of the conveyance, which is sent to A., and approved by him on behalf of Messrs. B., and the engrossment is afterwards executed by Messrs. B., and delivered by them to A., for the purpose of being handed over to C., on payment of the remainder of the purchase money; before this is done, Messrs. B. become bankrupts, and the contract is rescinded:—Held, that A. has no lien on the deeds for the debt due to him from Messrs. B., but that C. is entitled to have the deeds delivered to him. The rules with respect to lien are the same in equity as at law. Owenham v. Esdaile, 2 Y. & J. 493.

7. The solicitor of the plaintiff in a foreclosure suit, in which a decree for sale before the Master was made by consent, prosecuted the suit to the settlement of the particulars and conditions, and appointment of the day of sale, when the plaintiff and the defendant (by his solicitor), having notice of the claim of the plaintiff's solicitor for the costs of the suit, compromised the suit on the terms of paying the plaintiff a certain sum in discharge of the debt and costs, part of which sum was immediately paid to the plaintiff. Upon the petition of the plaintiff's solicitor, the Court ordered the costs of the plaintiff's solicitor in the suit to be taxed, and paid by the plaintiff and defendant, or one of them. White v. Pearce, 7 Hare 276; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 462; 13 Jur. 999.

8. P. was entitled under a will to a life interest in 10,000*l.* He retained a solicitor to institute a suit for administration of the testator's estate. Orders had been made in the suit directing the costs of all parties to be taxed and paid out of funds in court amounting together to about 100,000*l.*, but this had not been done. P.'s life interest in the 10,000*l.* was transferred to a society, with notice that P.'s costs due to the solicitor had not been paid. More than two years had elapsed since the first order to tax and pay costs, but the solicitor's bill had not been delivered:—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to a charging order under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 28, upon the life interest in the 10,000*l.*, and also to retain the papers in the suit until he was paid. Pulcher v. Adren, Exp. Brook, 26 W. R. 163; 47 L. J., Ch., 479; 7 L. R., Ch., 318; 38 L. T., N. S., 111.

1. A solicitor's lien on a policy of assurance is not lost by want of notice to the assurance company against assignees who give notice. West of England Bank v. Batchelor, 51 L. J., Ch., 199; 46 L. T. 132; 30 W. R. 364.

2. A trustee under a will committed a breach of trust by lending trust moneys to his co-trustee upon a mortgage for a term of years. An administration suit was instituted, and he was ordered to pay the money into court. He sold part of the mortgaged property under a power of sale in the mortgage, and on the application of two of the cestuis que trustent the proceeds were paid into court, subject to an order that they were not to be paid out without the consent of the purchaser. The trustees' solicitors refused to give up the mortgage deeds unless upon payment of their bill of costs:—Held, that the circumstances of the realisation of the trust fund by the trustees' solicitors, and of the cestuis que trustent availing themselves of that realisation, did not entitle the trustees' solicitors to a lien on the deeds or on the fund in court, as against the cestuis que trustent, but that they could have no higher claim against the deeds or the fund than that of their client, the trustee. Francois v. Francois, 3 De G. M. & G. 108. And see S. C. 2 De G. M. & G. 73.

3. R. S. devised his real estate, subject to his debts and legacies, to his only son, J. S., in tail, and died in 1773. In 1802 J. S. deposited the title deeds with his solicitor, and prior to the year 1813 incurred costs to a large amount, in suffering a recovery, and in the causes of A., B., and C. (the testator's younger children), instituted to raise charges to which they were entitled under the will, etc. In 1813 M., a specialty creditor of the testator on whose debt J. S. paid interest until 1811, filed his bill against J. S. and A., B., and C., etc., praying for the execution of the trust for payment of debts, and that his demand might be deemed charged on the testator's real estate. J. S. suffered the bill to be taken pro confesso, against him, and died insolvent before the final decree. Some time before, the solicitor of J. S. became concerned in this cause for the representatives of B., and now refused to bring in the deeds for a sale under the decree, until J. S.'s costs incurred between the years 1802 and 1813 should be first paid. A., B., and C. were reported in priority to M., for whose demand the residue of the fund would be insufficient:—Held, that the costs now demanded, if rendered necessary by the will, should have been claimed upon the hearing of the cause, and provided for by the decree; and that, therefore, the claim could not now be entertained:—Held, also, that as it did not appear that any of the costs had been incurred before the title deeds came into the solicitor's possession, and as he had full notice of the will when the costs were incurred, he was bound by the trust, and had not any lien upon the deeds as against M., the specialty creditor of the testator, who had proceeded bonâ fide and with due diligence. Morgan v. Scott, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 128.

11. Discharge of Lien.

(a) In General, 6450.

(b) By taking Other Securities, 6450.

(a) In General.

4. When a party claiming by title paramount to the client, enforces the production of the paper, semble, the benefit, thereby incidentally accruing to parties deriving under the client, cannot be taken from them, and the solicitor's lien is lost. Blunden v. Desart, 2 Dr. & War. 405; 2 Con. & L. 111; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 221. Reversing Fl. & K. 572; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 53.

5. By the decree in the cause, certain of the defendant's estates were directed to be sold to meet the plaintiff's claim. Pending the preliminaries for a sale, the plaintiff's solicitor gave notice to the defendant that they claimed a lien against the plaintiff in respect of their costs. The suit was afterwards compromised, the defendant paying a certain sum to the plaintiff:—Held, upon petition of the plaintiff's solicitors, that they were entitled to be paid their taxed costs of suit, and of the petition, by the plaintiff and defendant, or one of them, not exceeding in the whole the sum paid by the defendant upon the compromise. White v. Pearce, 7 Hare 276; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 462; 13 Jur. 999.

6. A solicitor to whom a judgment has been assigned in trust for his client, afterwards assigning to a trustee of a settlement upon the marriage of his client's grandson, parts with his lien upon all documents relating to the title to the judgment of those claiming under the settlement. Fitzgerald v. Birmingham, 1 Con. & L. 405.

7. On payment of his costs, a solicitor's lien on documents of his client in his possession ceases; he is then bound to deliver them up on his client's demand, and cannot refuse delivery because third persons claim an interest in them. Re Emma Silver Mining Co., Re Turner, 24 W. R. 54.

8. The plaintiffs were solicitors employed by S. to sell a house belonging to him, which was mortgaged together with other property to L. and R. The mortgagees agreed to release the house from their mortgage, in order to facilitate the sale, on receiving 398*l*. The plaintiffs prepared the engrossments of the deeds of reconveyance, which they sent to the solicitors of the mortgagees for execution, with a letter stating that they claimed a lien on them for costs due from S., and desiring that the deeds might be held on their account. The mortgagees executed the deeds, which were retained in the hands of their solicitors as security for the 398*l*. till it should be paid. S. afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, in a suit against his assignees—first, that the plaintiffs had not a mere dormant lien on the deeds, but a lien coupled with an agreement; secondly, that their lien on the engrossments was not lost by sending them to the mortgagees' solicitors, nor by their execution. Watson v. Lyon, 3 W. R. 543; 7 De G. M. & G. 288; 24 L. J., Ch., 754.

(b) By taking Other Securities.

9. Solicitor's lien is superseded by taking a security. Balch v. Symes, T. & R. 92. See Tyler v. Drayton, 2 Sim. & S. 309.

10. Solicitor's lien on papers superseded by taking security. Conell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. 275.

11. If a solicitor takes a promissory note for his costs payable on demand, he loses his lien. Roberts v. Jefferys, 8 L. J., Ch., 136.

1. A solicitor, having a lien for costs on title deeds, took from the client a bond conditioned for the amount of the costs, with interest at 5 per cent., and regularly received the interest for several years afterwards, but still retained the deeds. In a general creditors' suit subsequently instituted, it appeared that the entire estate of the client would be insufficient for creditors whose securities were prior to the bond, but should have been postponed to the lien. The solicitor stated on oath that he accepted the bond only as a collateral security, and never intended to give up his lien:—Held, that having taken a security for the amount of the costs, with interest, the lien was gone. Quære, whether the mere taking a security for the amount of costs, without more, extinguishes the lien. Brownlow v. Keatings, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 243.

2. A firm of solicitors prepared and engrossed a reconveyance from a mortgagee to their client, the mortgagor in consideration, stated in the deed, of 3984. This deed was sent by the firm to the mortgagee's solicitors, with a letter desiring that it might be held by them on the account of the senders, who had a lien upon it for costs. The 3984. was not paid, and the mortgagee's solicitors retained the deed. The firm of solicitors received a promissory note, upon which part of the costs were paid. The land was sold, subject to the mortgage. The firm of solicitors filed a bill against the mortgagee and the purchaser for the delivery up of the deed:—Held, that they were entitled to hold the deed against the mortgagor; and that the taking of the promissory note for part of the debt due to them did not affect their lien for the money not covered by it. Watson v. Lyon, 24 L. J., Ch., 754; 7 De G. M. & G. 288; 3 W. R. 543.

12. Lien. How Enforced.

3. If a solicitor, whom his client has ceased to employ, by the production of a deed in his hands belonging to the client, and upon which he claims a lien as solicitor, enables the client to recover a fund in a suit, his lien over the fund so realised is confined to the costs of that suit, but is a lien which he is entitled actively to enforce. Scous, as to his general lien upon his client's papers, which applies to all his bills of costs, but is merely a right to retain the papers, and cannot be actively enforced. Brown v. Bolland, 4 Myl. & C. 354; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 123; 3 Jur. 884; 4 Jur. 763.

4. The Court will entertain a bill by a solicitor, seeking to enforce a lien against certain title deeds in respect of his bills of costs, a decree for an account having been made in a suit instituted by the client against the solicitor, but under which decree the Master was not at liberty to take into the general account what was due to the solicitor in respect of his bills of costs. Hector v. Jolliffe, 6 Jur. 120.

5. On a bill filed by a solicitor, seeking to establish a lien for costs upon a policy of assurance which a client had placed in his hands professionally, and upon which the Court had, in another cause, directed an action to be brought, a special injunction was obtained, restraining all proceedings upon the policy; but this injunction was dissolved, upon appeal, the Lord Chancellor holding that the plaintiff's proper course was to make an application in the other cause. Whether such a lien could be enforced by suit, and if so, to what extent, quære. Stedman v. Webb, 4 Myl. & C. 346; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 193; 3 Jur. 213.

13. Delivery or Production. How Enforced.

6. Where, upon an application for taxation under the Solicitors Act, it appears probable that, upon grounds not determinable under that jurisdiction, payment ought not to be made without further investigation, this Court may properly abstain from ordering payment, or from ordering the delivery up of deeds, till the questions which cannot be determined under that jurisdiction have been properly investigated and determined elsewhere. Re Dalby, 8 Beav. 469.

7. Order, without cause in court, upon general jurisdiction over solicitor, that he shall deliver his bill for purposes of getting from him title deeds, deposited with him for suffering recoveries, etc. Exp. Unbridge (Earl), 6 Ves. 425.

8. Solicitor claiming lien on deed cannot be compelled to produce it at hearing of cause, without subpoena duces tecum. Busk v. Lewis, 6 Madd. 29.

9. Where a solicitor has in his possession deeds and papers belonging to his client, which he refuses to part with, the Court has jurisdiction to order the solicitor to deliver the deeds and papers, and also his bill of costs, the party offering to pay what the Master shall find to be due to him, though there is no cause pending, and though no part of the costs has been incurred in respect of any action or suit in law or equity. Re Murray, 1 Russ. 519.

10. In an administration suit instituted by an infant cestui que trust under a will against the executors, one of the executors admitted that part of certain sums advanced by him on mortgage formed part of the trust estate. An order was made in the suit for the completion of contracts for sales of the mortgaged property, which had been entered into by the executor. Under this order the purchase moneys were paid into court to the credit of the cause. The order directed the executor to execute the conveyances, and deliver the title deeds to the petitioners, but the executor's solicitors refused to give up the deeds, claiming a lien upon them for costs due from the executor, and advances made for the maintenance of the plaintiff:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction, on petition, to order the solicitors to deliver up the deeds. Francis v. Francis, 2 De G. M. & G. 73. And see S. C. 3 De G. M. & G. 108.

11. The old practice must be followed to compel a solicitor to deliver over documents to his client, where the application is "in the matter;" and the 12th Order of August 1841 is inapplicable to such a case. Re Taylor, 10 Beav. 221.

12. Summary order made upon petition under 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, for delivery by the assignees of a bankrupt solicitor who had employed a

London agent of papers belonging to the petitioner before payment of the agent's costs. Such a petition should be entitled in the matter of the agent as well as of the country solicitor, but does not require to be entitled in the matter of the Act. Re Walton, 4 Kay & J. 78.

1. Where a Court orders a solicitor to deliver up papers to be afterwards returned to him, the time for delivery is within three days, and the time for return of them ten days after the purpose is answered for which they were delivered up. Webster v. Le Hunt, 9 W. R. 827.

2. Where a solicitor's bill of costs or the delivery of documents in his possession, is required on other grounds than those relating to taxation, the application may be made by way of petition, notwithstanding the General Order of the 17th April 1867. Re Justice, 16 W. R. 821.

Costs of Application. 3. After the usual order for taxation of a solicitor's bill and for delivery up of papers on payment, and the bill having been taxed and paid, a demand was made for the papers. Default having been made, and notice of a motion to compel delivery by a given day having been given, the motion stood over, and the papers were in the meantime delivered:—Held, nevertheless, that the solicitor must pay the costs of the motion. Re Minter, 19 Beav. 33.

II. DEPOSIT IN COURT.

4. A solicitor will not be ordered to bring into court the deeds of his client. M'Cann v. Beere, 1 Hog. 129.

5. Where a solicitor receives in his professional character muniments of title from his client, the Court has jurisdiction, under a decree binding the client, to order his solicitor to bring in the deeds of his client in his possession, although he never appeared in the cause, and it is uncertain what time the deeds came into his possession. Hargrave v. Holland, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 137.

6. The plaintiff was trustee for sale of real estates. The decree directed the estates to be sold, and the title deeds (which were in the possession of the plaintiff's solicitor for the purpose of the suit) to be deposited. The solicitor refused to produce them, and claimed a lien on them for his costs of the suit; but the Court ordered him to deposit them. Baker v. Henderson, 4 Sim. 27.

7. After a decree for a sale, the solicitor of one of the defendants, a mortgagee, who had been paid off, but had not reconveyed, having the mortgage deed in his possession, being made a party by supplemental bill, and having admitted by his answer that he held the deed, having a lien thereon for costs incurred by the mortgagee, his client; on motion against the solicitor by plaintiff, ordered, that he should bring in the deed without prejudice to any claim he might have against his own client. Plumtre v. O'Dell, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 113.

8. An attorney who claims a lien for his costs upon the title deeds of a freehold estate decreed to be sold, which lien was acquired by him prior to the institution of the suit, will be ordered to deposit them in court, without prejudice to his lien, or to his making it available against the purchase money of the lands; and having established his claim, he is entitled to be paid it out of the purchase money of the estate. Is he so entitled to be paid in priority to the demand of a judgment creditor, whose judgment was acknowledged prior to the acquisition of the lien by the attorney, quære. Little v. Little, 2 Jones 270.

9. On a petition, that certain bills of costs of a solicitor might be taxed after the amount had been paid and the papers had been delivered up:—Held, that the papers (which had been delivered up on the faith of a settlement), being necessary for the purpose of enabling the solicitor to support the bill of costs, must be placed in the Master's office for a limited time for inspection, and be subject to the solicitor's right of lien; but that the bill of costs be then taxed. Re Downes, 5 Jur. 984.

10. An executrix, who was also tenant for life under the will, died pending a suit for the administration of the testator's estate. The solicitor who had acted for her in the suit claimed a lien for his costs on deeds belonging to the estate. The suit was prosecuted against the administrator de bonis non of the testator in the absence of any representative of the deceased executrix:—Held, that the solicitor must bring the deeds into court, but subject and without prejudice to his claim of lien against the remainderman. Turner v. Lotts, 3 W. R. 352; 1 Jur., N. S., 486; 20 Beav. 185. And see S. C. on appeal, 3 W. R. 494; 1 Jur., N. S., 1057; 24 L. J., Ch., 638; 3 Eq. Rep. 846; 3 W. R. 494; 7 De G. M. & G. 243.

III. RIGHT TO LETTERS OF CLIENT, AND COPIES.

11. On payment of a solicitor's bill, the client is entitled to the possession of letters written to the solicitor by third parties, relating exclusively to his client's business, but not to copies of letters written by the solicitor to third parties, unless they are paid for by the client. Re Thompson, 20 Beav. 545; 1 Jur., N. S., 718; 24 L. J., Ch., 599; 3 W. R. 474.

Semble, that a solicitor is entitled to retain the original letters written to him by his client. Id.

12. Letters received by a solicitor from his client, and copies of letters addressed by a solicitor to his client, are the property of the solicitor. Re Wheatcroft, 46 L. J., Ch., 669; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 97; 26 W. R. 69.

13. Where the solicitor of a company writes a letter apparently on behalf of the company, he has no such property in it as to entitle him to prevent its publication, although he swears that it was written in his private capacity. Howard v. Gunn, 32 Beav. 462.

I. STATUTE 5 & 6 VICT., C. 73. RETROSPECTIVE EFFECT.

1. Retrospective operation of the Solicitors Act, 5 & 6 Vict., c. 73, to make taxable bills not previously liable to taxation incurred before, but remaining unsettled at, the time of the passing of the Act. Re Rhodes, 8 Beav. 224; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 97.

2. The 5 & 6 Vict., c. 73, applies to bills of costs, although incurred prior to the Act, and although no part would have been before the Act taxable; where a special agreement covers only part of the bill, it is competent to the Master to proceed with the taxation, and without a special order; if the agreement is valid, and goes to the whole, as it would preclude taxation, the validity must first be decided, and quære, if the Master is authorised to decide as to the validity, and whether, if to be brought before the Court, upon petition, or by bill. Re Eyre, 2 Ph. 367; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 277. Affirming S. C. 10 Beav. 569.

3. The 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, as regards taxation, is retrospective with respect to bill previously taxable, and also as to bills thereby made taxable, provided the latter remain unpaid at the passing of the Act. Re Lees, 5 Beav. 410; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 151.

Payment, before the Act came into operation, of a previously taxable bill, would not preclude taxation under the Act upon a proper application made in due time. But payment before the Act came into operation of a bill not previously taxable, precludes taxation. Id.

II. JURISDICTION OF COURT OF CHANCERY.

4. Court refused to order account of attorney's bill taxed by prothonotary of Common Pleas. Osbaldiston v. Cross, 2 Com. 612.

5. Order directing taxation of a solicitor's bill for business done in the Court of Great Sessions, discharged; the Court not assuming jurisdiction for that purpose alone. Esp. Partridge, 3 Swan. 398.

The Court has no jurisdiction to order the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs, for business done in a cause in the Court of Great Sessions in Wales, where there is no detention of title-deeds, nor any other matter besides costs in dispute. S. C. 2 Meriv. 500.

6. The Vice-Chancellors have jurisdiction, under Lord Langdale's Act, upon petitions for delivery and taxation of bills of costs. Re Mole, 1 Coop. C. C. 53.

7. The Master has no jurisdiction to tax costs under the 201st General Order, except with the consent of both solicitor and client. Massey v. Millar, Sau. & Sc. 425.

8. The Master's office is the proper place for the taxation of a bill of costs, etc., and a party acting adversely has no right to object to taxation by a clerk in court. Bricknell v. Stanford, 2 Jur. 1010.

9. Parties agreed to compromise a suit, and the trustee's costs were to be deducted out of a fund in his hands. By an order of the Vice-Chancellor, of England, the compromise was confirmed. It appeared to be the agreement between the parties that costs should be taxed in the cause. An application to the Master of the Rolls for taxation under the statute was refused with costs. Re Howard, 8 Beav. 424.

Jurisdiction of the Vice-Chancellor, under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 75, to order the taxation of bills of costs. Id.

10. Under the Solicitors Act, 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, references for taxation may be made by the Vice-Chancellors as well as by the Lord Chancellor, and Master of the Rolls. Re Carew, 8 Beav. 128.

11. When the common order for taxation has been obtained, not made in a suit or matter, but under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37, all special applications connected therewith must be made to the Master of the Rolls, even though the Chancery proceedings in respect of which the order has been made may have been depending in some other branch of the Court, and orders may have been made therein. Re Bell, 2 Hem. & M. 501.

A Vice-Chancellor has no jurisdiction to discharge or vary a common order for taxation made by the Master of the Rolls, on a petition of course, merely intitled "In the matter of C. B., a solicitor," although the bill to be taxed relates to suits laid before the Vice-Chancellor. Secus, if the petition of course had been intitled in the suits. S. C. 12 W. R. 1076.

12. Charges in a solicitor's bill for obtaining an order from a judge at chambers for leave to enter satisfaction in the Common Pleas Office upon a bond given by the client to the Crown for malt duties:—Held, not to be for "business transacted in a Court of law," so as to oust the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls to order taxation of such bills; for that purpose, the business must be some proceeding either in a suit or with a view to a suit. Whether proceedings for the purpose of entering satisfaction on a judgment, with a view to the sale of an estate, would come within that description, quære. Re Gaitkell, 1 Ph. 576; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 450; 9 Jur. 909.

1. An application in a cause by a client, to tax a solicitor's bill, is not within the General Orders of May 1837. Robins v. Mills, 1 Beav. 227; Bingham v. Hallam, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 104.

2. The decision in Robins v. Mills (1 Beav. 227) is inapplicable where the merits of the cause must enter into the discussion. Webb v. Grace, Re Vines & Hobbs, 12 Beav. 489.

3. Two suits, attached to the V.-Ch. E., were compromised; in one there was an order to dismiss on the payment of costs, and the other was stayed only. The costs of both were paid under pressure, and there were overcharges:—Held, that the Master of the Rolls had jurisdiction to order a taxation. Re Elmalie, 12 Beav. 538.

4. The Court will not interfere with the taxation of costs in an action on the ground that a party is charging for costs which he has never incurred. Such a matter is solely within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of common law. Elborough v. Ayres, 18 W. R. 913; 39 L. J., Ch., 601; 23 L. T., N. S., 68.

5. By the combined operation of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1843 (6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37), and the Judicature Act 1873, s. 16, as modified by the County Courts Act 1856, s. 36, the costs as between solicitor and client in a county court action in which the claim exceeds 20*l.* may be taxed in the High Court of Justice; consequently, the costs as between solicitor and client in a county court administration action may be taxed in the Chancery Division. Re Worth, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 521; 50 L. J., Ch., 262; 44 L. T. 462; 29 W. R. 371.

III. IN DISTRICT REGISTRY.

6. When an administration decree directed accounts and inquiries to be taken in the district registry, and ordered that upon the result being reported the action should be heard in London on further consideration, the Court refused to allow the costs of the action to be taxed in the district registry. Irlam v. Irlam, 24 W. R. 949.

7. Except under very special circumstances the costs of actions commenced and carried on in a district registry ought to be taxed in London. Day v. Whittaker, 25 W. R. 767.

IV. WHAT BILLS ARE TAXABLE.

1. In General, 6454.

2. Parliamentary and Electioneering Business, 6455.

1. In General.

8. Proceeding before Lord Chancellor as exercising the visitatorial power upon a royal foundation, is not within 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 23, to taxation of bill of costs. Exp. Dann, 9 Ves. 547.

9. The fees of the steward of a manor, who is a solicitor, but acts in the character of steward only, are not taxable under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73. Allen v. Aldridge, 5 Beav. 401; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 155; 8 Jur. 435.

This statute does not authorise the taxation of every pecuniary demand or bill of solicitor, for every species of employment, in which he may happen to be engaged. Id.

A bill may be taxed, though no part of the business was transacted in any court of law or equity: but such business must be connected with the profession of an attorney or solicitor, business in which the attorney or solicitor was employed, because he was an attorney or solicitor, or in which he would not have been employed if he had not been an attorney or solicitor, or if the relation of attorney or solicitor and client had not subsisted between him and his employer. Id.

10. The Court has jurisdiction to order taxation of solicitor's bill and delivery up of papers, upon payment of the costs so taxed, although no part of such costs has been incurred in respect of any suit, but are for conveyancing and other general business. Re Rice, 2 Keen 181; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 291; 1 Jur. 351.

11. A railway company having taken lands occupied by D.'s tenant, and the parties not agreeing to the compensation offered, steps were taken for holding an inquisition, in which one solicitor acted for D. and the tenants, but the company afterwards acceded to the valuation made for the tenant. A verdict was taken by consent for D., and the company gave a written undertaking to pay any sum to which the solicitor was entitled as solicitor for D. and his tenants, on same being ascertained by the proper officer under their act of incorporation. They took a conveyance from D., the costs of which and of making title were taxable in Chancery under their Act. The costs of ascertaining the compensation for the tenants should properly, under it, have been settled with their claim by justices of the peace, and the costs of an inquisition were taxable in a law court. The solicitor, having furnished a separate bill of costs for D. and the tenants, to which the company objected, petitioned for taxation, and to enforce payment:—Held, that the costs of D. only could be taxed or enforced in this court, and that the undertaking gave no jurisdiction as to the costs of the tenants. Drogheda (Marquis) v. Great South & Western Railway, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 103.

12. The bill of costs of a mortgagee's solicitor, for business done in relation to the mortgage, and the sale of the mortgaged estate, is taxable at the instance of the mortgagor, under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, though no part of the business may have been transacted in any court of law or equity. Re Lees, 5 Beav. 410; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 151.

13. The costs incurred by trustees in paying money into court under the Trustees Relief Act, and also the costs of their appearing on paying it out, are subject to taxation. Re Hue, 5 Jur., N. S., 1235; 28 L. J., Ch., 893; 27 Beav. 337.

14. Costs in a cause must be submitted to taxation. King v. King, 1 Jur., N. S., 972.

15. When one solicitor asks another to look up some old deeds in his possession, and offers to pay his costs, the bill for these costs is taxable. Re Bowen, 41 L. J., Ch., 327; 20 W. R. 395.

16. Costs of a sequestration as between solicitor and client will not be taxed. Re Shapland, Eep. Hunt, 23 W. R. 40.

1. Bills of costs assumed to be taxable in equity where the solicitor had retained them in his possession, and declined to produce them. Re Loughborough, 23 Beav. 439.

2. Parliamentary and Electioneering Business.

2. No jurisdiction for taxing a solicitor's bill of costs for obtaining an Act of Parliament. Exp. Whorler, 3 Ves. & B. 21.

Taxation of a solicitor's bill in the House of Lords, only through the recognisance. Id. 22.

3. A bill by solicitors employed by a committee in soliciting and opposing bills in Parliament, procuring evidence, and employing surveyors, and receiving moneys only on account of their bill of costs, praying an account and payment of the balance due to him:—Held, to amount to a bill for taxation and payment, and demurrer allowed. Allison v. Herring, 9 Sim. 593.

4. In a bill of 344l., only 3l. 3s. 7d. was for business not connected with soliciting a new bill in Parliament:—Held, that notwithstanding the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 69, and 12 & 13 Vict., c. 78, for regulating the taxation of parliamentary bills of costs, and referring them to an officer of the Houses, a court of equity was not deprived of its jurisdiction to order taxation. Re Strother, 3 Kay & J. 518; 3 Jur., N. S., 736; 26 L. J., Ch., 695.

5. Candidates at a general election for members of Parliament employed a firm of solicitors as their election agents:—Held, that the employment was professional, and that their bill of costs was subject to taxation, within the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73. Re Osborne, 4 Jur., N. S., 296; 27 L. J., Ch., 532; 25 Beav. 353; 6 W. R. 401.

6. Where, for a parliamentary election, a solicitor was employed as canvassing agent, other persons being employed as legal agents:—Held, that his bills were not liable to taxation under 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37. Re Oliver, 15 W. R. 331; 36 L. J., Ch., 261.

7. The court of a revising barrister for the registration of voters under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 18, is not a "court" of law within the meaning of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37, and therefore the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to tax a solicitor's bill of costs for electioneering business is not ousted if the bill contains an item for business done in such a court. Re Andrews, 17 Jur. 1145; 17 Beav. 510; 23 L. J., Ch., 129; 2 W. R. 46.

A bill of costs having been made out by a solicitor in the expectation that it would not be taxed, leave was given to present a petition to amend. Id.

8. A solicitor, who was appointed returning officer for the election of a school board under the Elementary Education Act 1870, sent in a bill of his charges in the form of a solicitor's bill of costs, including both the election charges proper and attendance at the board after the election was over:—Held, that, as he had by the form of his bill of costs constituted himself solicitor to the board, the bill was liable to taxation. Re Jones, 13 L. R., Eq., 336; 41 L. J., Ch., 367; 20 W. R. 895.

V. BILL OF COSTS, DELIVERY OF.

1. Form and Signature, 6455.
2. Amendment, 6456.
3. Delivery. To Whom, 6456.
4. Order for Delivery, 6456.
5. Other Matters, 6457.

1. Form and Signature.

9. Solicitor brings a bill for his fees. Plea of statute, 3 Jac., that the plaintiff had not signed his bill, good plea. Norris v. Bacon, 1 Vern. 312.

10. Delivery of a bill of costs unsigned, but accompanied by a letter signed by the solicitor, and referring to the bills, held a sufficient compliance with the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37. Re Bush, 8 Beav. 66; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 6.

11. The provisions of the thirty-seventh clause of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, for the authentication by signature of a solicitor's bill of costs, are intended for the protection of the client only; and therefore where a bill has been delivered without such authentication, that circumstance is no objection to an application by the client for its taxation. Re Pender, 2 Ph. 69; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25; 10 Jur. 891. Affirming 8 Beav. 299; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 277; 9 Jur. 339.

In general it is an objection to an order of course for taxation, that it contains a direction, on payment of the bill, which the order itself directs to be taxed, to give up more papers than the solicitor is bound to give up. But under the peculiar circumstances of this case, such an order was held not irregular. Id.

12. A solicitor and agent of a company retained parliamentary agents on behalf of the company. The bill of costs was delivered to the solicitor, but the directors of the company obtained an order for taxation:—Held, that such order was irregular. Re Sudlow, Exp. Dover & Deal Railway Co., 11 Beav. 400; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 182.

13. A bill containing entries of various attendances, charges, and disbursements, but with a lump sum only charged at the end of the bill, is not a sufficient signed bill on which to found an action within 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37. Wilkinson v. Smart, 24 W. B. 42; 33 L. T., N. S., 573.

14. The solicitor of a railway company in his bill charged 500 guineas, in a lump sum, for attendances and correspondences for a period of above one year. The bill was ordered to be taxed:—Held, that the solicitor might supply a detailed statement of the items comprised in the general charge exceeding that amount, but he could not increase his demand beyond 500 guineas. Re Tilleard, 32 Beav. 476.

15. A bill of costs for professional work done in part by one firm of solicitors and in part by another firm who have succeeded to the practice of the first firm is properly signed and delivered so as to enable the new firm to sue for and recover the whole costs, if, though itself unsigned, it is delivered together with a letter signed by the new firm referring to the bill. Professional work was done by a firm, which consisted at first of R. & P., and afterwards of P. & G., practising under the name of R., P., & G., the business and debts of R. & P. having been transferred to R., P., & G. Bills for the costs of the whole work were delivered unsigned, but enclosed with a letter signed by R., P., & G. referring to the bills:—Held, that the bills were properly signed and delivered to enable R., P., & G. to sue for and recover the whole amount—as to the earlier items, as assignees of R. & P.; as to the later items, in their own right. Penley v. Anstruther, 52 L. J., Ch., 367; 48 L. T. 664.

2. Amendment.

1. A solicitor, having delivered his bill, is bound by it, and the taxation must be on that bill; he is not entitled as of course to reduce his demand, or to reserve the power of adding to the charges. Re Curcen, 8 Beav. 436; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 372.

2. A solicitor having knowingly, in his bill of costs, fixed the rate of his charges for business, cannot afterwards, on a taxation, be allowed to increase it. Re Watters, 9 Beav. 299.

Pending a taxation, leave given, upon special application, to carry in an additional bill for specified items of under-charge and omission, arising from error and mistake. Id. And see id. 302. n.

3. No alteration allowed in a bill of costs after the service of the copy thereof, without the permission of the Remembrancer, and notice to the other party. Bourne v. Farran, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 659.

4. Upon an application to tax a paid bill, the solicitor will not be permitted to add to any under-charges contained therein, but the taxation must be had on the bill as delivered and paid. Re Wells, 8 Beav. 416; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215; 9 Jur. 820.

5. A solicitor cannot make nor has the taxing master any jurisdiction to permit any alteration or amendment to be made in a delivered bill, except by consent. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 519.

6. By error and mistake, some items were omitted from, and others undercharged and overcharged in a bill of costs referred for taxation. On petition to the Master of the Rolls by the executor of the solicitor, liberty was given to insert the omitted items, and increase those undercharged; but he was not allowed to decrease the overcharges, and the costs of the application were ordered to be paid by the petitioner. Re Whalley, 20 Beav. 676.

7. Application of a solicitor, after an order for taxation, to withdraw a non-taxable item from his bill, refused. Re Blakesley and Beswick, 32 Beav. 379.

8. A solicitor, after delivering his bill of costs, may, before being served with an order for taxation, withdraw it, and substitute another bill of a reduced amount. Re Chambers, 34 Beav. 177; 5 N. R. 298.

A solicitor delivered his bill, which was objected to as excessive. He admitted that he had charged more than the Master would allow, and stated the circumstances under which he made the charges. Before service of the warrant to tax, and without knowing that any order had been obtained, he withdrew the bill and substituted a reduced bill. The Court allowed the second bill to be substituted for taxation, on payment of the costs incurred up to the delivery of the substituted bill. 8 C. 11 Jur., N. S., 230; 34 L. J., Ch., 292; 13 W. R. 375; 11 L. T., N. S., 726.

9. Upon a taxation between party and party in equity, the bill of costs may be added to or varied after it has been brought into the office, at any time before the taxation is concluded; but the practice is different upon a taxation under the Attorney and Solicitors Act, 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73. Davis v. Dysart (Earl), 21 Beav. 124; 1 Jur., N. S., 1153; 25 L. J., Ch., 122; 4 W. R. 41. Affirmed 25 L. J., Ch., 322; 8 De G. M. & G. 33.

10. The solicitor of a railway company in his bill charged 500 guineas, in a lump sum, for attendances and correspondences for a period of above one year. The bill was ordered to be taxed:—Held, that the solicitor might supply a detailed statement of the items comprised in the general charge exceeding that amount, but he could not increase his demand beyond 500 guineas. Re Tilleard, 32 Beav. 476; 9 Jur., N. S., 1217; 32 L. J., Ch., 765; 11 W. R. 476; 8 L. T., N. S., 142.

11. A solicitor who has delivered his bill to the person chargeable therewith cannot afterwards avoid taxation by withdrawing it and delivering an amended bill, even though the person chargeable sent back the original bill, with suggested alterations, which were partly acquiesced in. Re Heather, 5 L. R., Ch., 694; 39 L. J., Ch., 781; 18 W. R. 1079.

12. A solicitor cannot, upon objection being taken to the charges made in a bill of costs delivered by him, withdraw it and substitute another, unless the charges objected to were inserted upon misrepresentation or by mistake or accident, and unless such circumstances can be proved, the original and not the substituted bill must stand for taxation. Re Heather (5 L. R., Ch., 694) followed. Re Chambers (34 Beav. 177) explained. Re Holroyde and Smith, 43 L. T. 722; 29 W. R. 599.

13. An order was made to amend a bill of costs referred but not lodged for taxation, by striking out an item inserted in it by mistake. Re Abbott, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 200.

3. Delivery. To Whom.

14. Delivery of a bill of costs to an agent of the client, appointed for that purpose, held sufficient. Re Bush, 8 Beav. 66; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 6.

15. The delivery of a solicitor's bill of costs, on which to found a taxation of it, must be a delivery to the party chargeable with the payment of it; that is, to the client. Re Abbott, 4 L. T., N. S., 576.

Where, therefore, a bill of a mortgagee's solicitor was delivered to the solicitor of the mortgagor for taxation:—Held, to have been an improper delivery for the purpose. Id.

4. Order for Delivery.

16. A solicitor will be compelled to make out his costs, and furnish an account of credits to his client, though insolvent; but if he swears that a balance is due to him, he will not be compelled to tax his costs, until a week after his client shall deposit the necessary stamp duty for the taxation. Mutany v. Dillon, 1 Hog. 292.

1. A solicitor, on payment of his costs, undertook to deliver his bill, but he neglected. On a petition presented more than twelve months after, the Court, under its general jurisdiction, ordered the delivery with costs. Re Foljambe, 9 Beav. 402.

2. A gross sum was paid to a solicitor in discharge of his claim, but no bill of costs was delivered:—Held, that the client was entitled to have a bill of costs delivered. Re Blackmore, 13 Beav. 154; 15 Jur. 784.

The solicitor of trustees and executors received payment of his bill of costs out of the estate:—Held, that a residuary legatee was entitled to have a copy of the bill delivered on payment of the costs of it. Ib.

The Court, notwithstanding there was not such pressure or such allegations and proof of overcharges as have been usually relied on in such cases, ordered the taxation of a solicitor's bill after payment. Ib.

3. Order, without cause in court, upon general jurisdiction over solicitor, that he shall deliver his bill for purposes of getting from him title deeds deposited with him for suffering recoveries, etc. Exp. Uzbridge (Earl), 6 Ves. 425.

4. An ex parte order for the delivery of a bill of costs discharged with costs; the allegation of the professional employment being denied by the solicitor. Re Eldridge, 12 Beav. 387.

5. A solicitor was ordered to deliver his bill for taxation. Upon a motion to commit for the non-delivery, he swore he had no documents nor memoranda from which he could make out his bill. The Court made no order on the motion. Re Ker, 12 Beav. 390.

6. The proper mode of enforcing the delivery of a solicitor's bill is to serve the order with a proper indorsement, under the 23rd Consolidated Order, r. 10; and upon default, an attachment will issue as of course. Re Bowen, 9 Jur., N. S., 612; 11 W. R. 607.

7. To obtain a four-day order against a solicitor for the non-delivery of his bill, it must appear that the previous order has been personally served. Re Wisemold, 16 Beav. 357.

8. A party in a cause, who has obtained and served, according to the 12th Amended Order of August 1841, an order that his solicitor shall deliver his bill of costs within a month, which is disobeyed, is entitled, under the 15th Order of August 1841, to enforce obedience by the writ of attachment. Lane v. Oliver, 2 Hare 97; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 144; 6 Jur. 1080.

9. The proper mode of enforcing the delivery of a solicitor's bill is to serve the order with a proper indorsement under the 12th Amended Order of the 11th April 1842, and upon default being made, an attachment will go as of course. Re Belton, 25 Beav. 368.

10. An order on a solicitor to deliver his bill requires personal service. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 510.

11. An order was made upon a solicitor for delivery of his bill within fourteen days. He was unable to comply, and on a motion for the second order, he asked for further time.

It was given, but he was ordered to pay the costs of the motion. Re Dendy, 21 Beav. 565.

12. Summary order upon a petition under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37, against assignees in bankruptcy of a country solicitor, who had employed a land agent to deliver their bills of costs, and against the agent to deliver his bill of costs and petitioner's papers in his possession. Re Walton, 4 Kay & J. 78.

Such petitions should be intitled, in the matter of both solicitors; but a petition in the matter of a solicitor need not be intitled, in the matter of the Act. Ib.

13. Variation in common form of the order of course to deliver and tax a solicitor's bill. Re Smith, 19 Beav. 329.

14. A solicitor of a mortgagor ordered, upon petition, to deliver to a mortgagee a copy of his bill of costs, in pursuance of his undertaking. Re Bailey, 34 Beav. 392.

15. An order to deliver a bill of costs within fourteen days after notice was served, on June 30th, without the indorsement as to liability to attachment. The order was again served, properly indorsed, on July 19th:—Held, that an attachment might issue for disobedience to it. Re Gregg, and Re Prance, 39 L. J., Ch., 107; 9 L. R., Eq., 137; 18 W. R. 589.

16. Where a solicitor's bill of costs, or the delivery of documents in his possession, is required on other grounds than those relating to taxation, the application may be made by way of petition, notwithstanding the General Order of 17th April 1867. Re Justice, 16 W. R. 821.

17. A bill by a country solicitor against a London solicitor, alleging that he had made a special agreement with the plaintiff to transact certain business for him on agency terms, and charging that the defendant falsely pretended that the agreement was one not for agency but for partnership in the particular business. The bill charged that, on either construction of the agreement, the plaintiff was entitled to an account, and prayed that the defendant might deliver his bills of costs as the plaintiff's agent, and also for a general account of all dealings and transactions between them. The defendant demurred, on the ground that the proper remedy of the plaintiff was by petition under 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37:—Held, that the demurrer ought to be overruled. Ward v. Lawson, 8 L. R., Ch., 65; 42 L. J., Ch., 273; 21 W. R. 88.

18. An order of course requiring a solicitor to deliver his bill of costs within fourteen days, not being obeyed, the next order is, that he may deliver it within four days or stand committed. Re Baxter, 11 Beav. 37.

5. Other Matters.

19. A solicitor who delivers an unsigned bill of costs is bound by it; but his client may either treat it as a nullity or waive the want of signature, and adopt it; though after such waiver, the client cannot treat the bill as non-delivered. Re Gedye, 14 Beav. 56; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 410; 15 Jur. 851.

20. In a suit instituted by a solicitor for payment of costs due to him from a client, it appeared by the answer that he had not delivered a signed bill, conformably to the Act of Parliament. A bill duly signed was subsequently delivered, and that fact was put in issue by a supplemental bill. Semble, the defect in title of the plaintiff, as it stood at the institution of the suit, was not cured; but held, that the objection, not having been urged at the original hearing, could not be taken at the hearing on further directions. Pritchard v. Draper, 1 Russ. & M. 191; Taml. 332.

1. Before the New Orders, where an order directed that a Master should tax costs, in case the parties differed about the same, the party claiming the costs was at liberty to proceed, in the first instance, to have the costs taxed before the Master, without previously delivering a bill to the party required to pay the same, or to his solicitor. Audrey v. Hoper, 5 Russ. 1.

2. Where a solicitor has been retained for and undertaken a particular business his bill of costs for carrying that business, through to its conclusion is but one bill. Stokes v. Trumper, 2 Kay & J. 232.

VI. AGENCY BILLS.

3. Statute of Taxation does not apply to country agency. Binsted v. Barefoot, Dick. 112.

4. Order on the application of a solicitor to tax his own agent's bill. Cornor v. Hake (2 Cox 173) overruled. Beam. Costs 308.

5. The Court has jurisdiction to order an agent's bill of costs to be referred for taxation, on the application of the solicitor who employed him; and in a case where the amount of the bill exceeded the amount of moneys received by the agents in that character, and retained by them, by a sum of 1*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* only, the taxation of the bill was ordered, upon payment or tender of that sum to the solicitor of the agents. Jones v. Roberts, 8 Sim. 397; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 156; 2 Jur. 30.

6. This Court has authority to refer for taxation the bill of costs of a solicitor who acts as agent for another. Toghill v. Grant, 2 Beav. 261; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 298.

7. The taxation of the bill of costs of the agent of a solicitor, upon the footing of a special agreement requiring the Master to depart from the ordinary rules of taxation, cannot be obtained upon petition. Re Smith, 4 Beav. 309.

In general, a solicitor cannot obtain the taxation of his agent's costs, without bringing the amount into court; but, under special circumstances, that condition will be dispensed with or the amount limited. Id.

8. An order for the taxation of an agent's bill cannot be obtained as of course by a solicitor, nor can the rule for bringing the amount of the agent's bill into court upon such application be dispensed with, except under special circumstances. Lees v. Nuttall, 2 Myl. & K. 284; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 124.

9. A solicitor cannot obtain the taxation of his agent's bill, without bringing the amount into court. Osile v. Christian, T. & R. 324.

10. The bill of town agent of attorney cannot be ordered to be taxed on motion of client. Wildbore v. Bryan, 8 Price 677.

11. A, a solicitor, being one of three mortgagees, arranged with another solicitor, B., to "act as his agent" in the matter of the mortgage, on agency terms. B. accordingly acted, and sent in his bill prepared as between solicitor and client, which was paid by the mortgagees. B. allowed A. 100*l.* as his share of the profits. After this, on the application of second incumbrancers, the bill was taxed:—Held, that the taxing master was right in taxing it on the principle of solicitor and agent, for the agreement between A. and B. was valid, though it inured to the benefit of the mortgagees; and that the bill was properly taxable, at the instance of the second incumbrancers, as between them and B. Re Taylor, 18 Beav. 165; 18 Jur. 666; 23 L. J., Ch., 857; 2 W. R. 249.

12. A bill was filed by a country solicitor against his town agents for an account of cash transactions between them:—Held, that as the account might have been obtained under the common order for taxation, the bill must be dismissed. Harvey v. Mayhem, 2 W. R. 128.

13. A solicitor agreed to undertake the defence of another solicitor upon agency charges. On special petition, a taxation of his bill was ordered "having regard to the agreement." Re Gedye, 23 Beav. 347.

A solicitor agreed to conduct the defence of another solicitor upon agency terms, in case of the defence being unsuccessful. On entering into the agreement, the latter suppressed from the former the existence of a material correspondence, which was a principal ground of a decree being made against him. But the solicitor, after the discovery, still continued the defence without objection:—Held, that he was not released from the contract. Id.

14. Messrs. S., solicitors, promised, by letter, to conduct the professional business in which F. might be concerned, "personally or otherwise," upon the terms of receiving agency charges. F. was a solicitor, but he had omitted to take out his certificate. At that time he was interested in a suit which he had procured to be instituted against himself, for the purpose of administering the estate of a testatrix, whose executor he was, and in whose estate he was beneficially interested. Upon the completion of this business, Messrs. S. obtained the whole of the money belonging to F. out of court; they repudiated the letter, and insisted upon their right to costs as between solicitor and client; they also refused all accounts, and never delivered any bill of costs. Upon a bill by F.:—Held, that the letter was a valid agreement; that Messrs. S. were not entitled to higher charges because F. was uncertificated; that his being uncertificated was immaterial, as such an agreement was legal if made with any client; that the transaction was such that it could not be taxed under the common order; and that it was necessary to file a bill and abandon the common order which had been obtained for taxation: and a reference was directed to the taxing master to tax the bill of costs as between principal and agent. Foley v. Smith, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 621.

F. had also mortgaged his interest to Messrs. S., to secure a sum of 150*l.*, which they were to pay for F., but though they omitted to make the payment, and retained that with other money in their hands, the Court treated it as an ordinary sum of money in hand, and declined to direct the taxing master to allow the plaintiff interest upon those sums, though the mortgage which was to include them was bearing interest. Id.

1. The solicitor of a defendant in the cause, and who is himself a defendant in the same cause, and appears by a second solicitor, cannot be allowed more than one bill of costs, if it appears that the second solicitor has, either before or after his retainer, agreed to allow his client, the first solicitor, a portion of the profits of his costs in the cause. If, in the judgment of the taxing master, there be ground to suspect that an arrangement has been made between solicitors in the cause, by which a portion of the profits of the bill of costs is to be paid to another, it is in the discretion of the taxing master to require affidavits from the solicitors as evidence of the facts; and, if such an arrangement should appear, the bills of costs ought to be taxed as in case of agency. A., B., and C. were defendants in the cause, against whom the bill was dismissed with costs. B. and C. acted as the solicitors of A., and appointed D. to act as their own solicitor in the same cause. After the retainer, an agreement was entered into between B. and D., whereby D. agreed to allow B. and C. a portion of the profits of his bill of costs:—Held, that the agreement constituted D., in substance, an agent for B. and C., and that the separate bills of costs of B. and of C. and D. were properly taxed as a joint bill, and that all such costs as would not have been allowed in a case of agency were properly disallowed. Deere v. Robinson, 7 Hare 283; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 405.

2. A. employed B., a writer to the signet, as his law agent in Scotland; and on the recommendation of B., he employed C. as his solicitor in England. By a private agreement between B. and C., the latter arranged to allow the former half the profits of the business transacted by him for A. Upon a taxation of C.'s bill, A. presented a petition, claiming the benefit of the agreement between B. and C., but it was dismissed with costs. Gordon v. Daltell, 15 Beav. 351; 16 Jur. 186; 21 L. J., Ch., 206.

3. A bill in equity alleged a particular contract as to agency, but charged that the defendant pretended that the contract was one of partnership, and that upon either construction he was liable to account, and prayed for discovery of all matters of business relating to the agency; that he might deliver his bills of costs for taxation, and for an account. Demurrer overruled. Ward v. Lawson, 8 L. R., Ch., 65; 42 L. J., Ch., 273; 21 W. R. 88.

When there is an agreement as to costs, which only goes to the extent of the charges to be paid, the Master may take that into consideration, and a bill in equity is not the proper remedy; but where the agreement goes farther, and there is, on the face of the bill, a dispute as to whether the agreement was one of agency or of partnership, a bill will be sustained. Id.

4. When one solicitor asks another to look up some old deeds in his possession, and offers to pay his costs, the bill for these costs is taxable. Re Boren, 41 L. J., Ch., 327; 20 W. R. 395.

5. Notwithstanding the definition of the word "client" in s. 3 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1870, that Act does not apply to accounts between country solicitors and town agents. Ward v. Eyre, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 130; 49 L. J., Ch., 657; 43 L. T. 525; 28 W. R. 712.

VII. WHERE SEVERAL BILLS.

6. A solicitor was employed by a testator in his lifetime, and by his executors and trustees after his death; the latter having applied for a taxation of the bills subsequent to the death:—Held, that the solicitor was, on this application, entitled to have a taxation of all the bills. Re Dalby, 8 Beav. 469.

7. An order for the taxation of a solicitor's bill, on the undertaking of A. to pay the same, does not extend to a bill of costs, for which A. is liable jointly with B. Collins v. Price, 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 94.

A. was individually indebted to a solicitor for costs in a cause, and A. and B. were jointly indebted to the same solicitor for costs relating to other business. A. obtained an order for the taxation of the solicitor's bill of costs in the cause, and all other suits, causes, and matters wherein he had been employed by A.; and it was ordered, that all proceedings against A. should be stayed. The solicitor afterwards arrested A. and B. for their joint account:—Held, that such proceeding was not a breach of the order. Id.

8. If A. employs B. as solicitor in business, the bill for which is not taxable, and also requires B. to strike a docket, and B., because he is not admitted as a solicitor in bankruptcy, employs C., a solicitor of the court, for that purpose, B. cannot divide his bill so as to exclude from taxation the otherwise untaxable items by procuring C.'s bill of costs to be taxed separately; but B.'s own bill and C.'s must form one bill, so that all may be taxed. Exp. Cass, 4 Dea. & Ch. 718; 2 Mont. & A. 170.

9. A client, who had employed a solicitor in several matters, obtained an order of course for the taxation of the costs of one matter only, with a direction that, on payment, the solicitor should deliver all the papers belonging to the client. It was discharged with costs for irregularity. Holland v. Gwynne, 8 Beav. 124.

10. Solicitor employed in a suit, and a prosecution arising thereout, delivered two bills. The surviving plaintiffs obtained an order for the taxation of the bills, submitting to pay what was due. On the taxation of their said bills before the taxing master, they disputed their retainer in the prosecution. The Master having completed the taxation, they presented a petition praying that they might be ordered to pay the first bill only, and that, if necessary, the Master's certificate, and the order for taxation, might be varied. The petition was dismissed with costs. Re Springall, 8 Beav. 63; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 12.

11. A solicitor delivered four bills, the last of which and the cash account showed upon the whole a large balance due to him. He brought an action to recover the balance, whereupon the client obtained an order of course to tax the last bill and to stay the action in the meantime. The order was held irregular, and was discharged with costs. Re Yetts, 33 Beav. 412; 3 N. R. 598.

1. A solicitor claimed five bills of costs against his client. The client obtained an order of course to tax two only. It was discharged with costs. Re Law, 21 Beav. 481.

2. An order for taxation of two out of four bills of costs, and the delivery up of the papers, discharged, but without costs, the solicitor having attended the Master without having objected, and not having applied to discharge the order until six weeks after notice of it. Re Wavell, 22 Beav. 634.

See also XII. 2 infra.

VIII. ORDER TO TAX.

1. How Obtained, 6460.
2. Petition or Summons. Form and Contents, 6461.
3. Suppression of Material Facts, 6461.
4. Within One Year, 6462.
5. Other Cases, 6462.

1. How Obtained.

3. Order for taxing a bill of costs, entitled in the cause, if obtained by the party to the cause, regular under the general jurisdiction. But a person not a party in the cause, must apply ex parte under the stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 22. Such an irregularity would be waived by proceeding under the order. Bignol v. Bignol, 11 Ves. 328.

4. An irregular order for taxation may be waived, but it must be done in some clear and unequivocal manner. Re Mackrill, 11 Beav. 42.

5. Bills of costs will be ordered to be taxed upon petition, and a bill is not necessary, unless it be to set aside securities obtained from the client. Hamilton v. Bremster, 2 Moll. 407.

6. A motion on behalf of a person who had obtained an order for the taxation of his solicitor's bill of costs, to discharge that order, and to have it declared that his solicitor was incapable of acting as such under the 39 Geo. 3, c. 90, and consequently not entitled to claim his bill of costs, was held to be open to objection (if properly taken) for irregularity; the Court considering that such an application ought to have been made by petition. Ex p. Chambers, Re Wilton, 2 Keen 497; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 200; 2 Jur. 489.

7. In an action by a person against his solicitor, who pleaded a set off for a bill of costs, part of which was incurred in the Courts of Westminster, all matters in difference were referred to an arbitrator; "but no question of liability was to be raised." The solicitor had not been admitted in the courts of Westminster, and so much of the costs as had been incurred therein were disallowed by the arbitrator. The Court of Exchequer set aside the award on the application of the solicitor, on the client refusing to go again before the arbitrator, and afterwards stayed proceedings in the action, with liberty for the plaintiff to go before the arbitrator, with directions that the costs should be allowed. The plaintiff declined to proceed in the arbitration, and obtained a common order in Chancery, for the taxation of the costs and delivery over of the papers:—Held, that as the proceeding at law had failed, the client was entitled to the taxation; but that the order ought not to have been obtained ex parte. Jones v. James, 2 Keen 184; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 293.

8. The taxation of the bill of costs of the agent of a solicitor, upon the footing of a special agreement requiring the Master to depart from the ordinary rules of taxation, cannot be obtained upon petition. Re Smith, 4 Beav. 309.

9. An order referring a solicitor's bill for taxation may be made without notice in either of the two first classes of cases provided by 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37. Re Gaitskell, 1 Ph. 576; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 450; 9 Jur. 909.

10. The decision in Re Gaitskell (1 Ph. 576), in which it was held that applications for the taxation of bills in the second class of cases, provided for by the 37th section of the statute 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, do not require notice confirmed. Re Pender, 2 Ph. 69; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25; 10 Jur. 891. Affirming 8 Beav. 299; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 277; 9 Jur. 339.

11. Where an order for taxation had been obtained as of course, for which a special application ought to have been made, the Lord Chancellor discharged the order with costs. Harris v. Start, 4 Myl. & C. 261.

12. Where the common order for the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs has been obtained ex parte, and the solicitor applies to discharge it, on the ground that the order ought to have been obtained on special application, the Court will not enter into the merits, further than to decide on the regularity of the order; and will not, even if the facts warrant it, then make a special order for taxation: such order must be the subject of another application by the client. Gragg v. Taylor, 1 Beav. 123; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

13. An order of course for taxation cannot be supported on merits as a special order, upon the occasion of a motion to discharge it. Grove v. Sansom, 1 Beav. 297.

14. C., with others, guaranteed payment to the extent of their respective subscriptions of the expenses of an application for an Act of Parliament. T., who acted as the solicitor in the matter, brought an action against C. for the amount of his bill of costs. C. paid into court the amount subscribed by him, and pleaded to the action. Subsequently C. presented a petition, and obtained an order of course for taxation. The petition did not contain a submission to pay, nor the order any direction to the taxing master to state the amount due from C. to T. On a motion to discharge this order with costs:—Held, that an order on a petition presented under such circumstances was not of course; that where taxation was asked and the retainer disputed a special application and order were necessary. Such an order was now offered to the petitioner, and if rejected, the order of course to be discharged, but without costs, on the ground that such order of course was in accordance with the practice in the offices. Re Thurgood, 2 Eq. Rep. 1152; 2 W. R. 682; 19 Beav. 541; 18 Jur. 821; 23 L. J., Ch., 952.

15. A client may obtain an order of course to tax his solicitor's bill, although some of the items are included in an existing order to tax in a suit. Re Fluker, 20 Beav. 143.

1. A solicitor delivered a bill of costs with a cash account at the foot, which showed a balance due to him larger than the amount of the bill, and then brought an action for the whole amount:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the common order to tax was improper, and that a special application must be made. Re Yetts, 3 N. R. 598; 33 Beav. 412.

2. A client presented a special petition for the taxation of his solicitor's bill, complaining that he had taken reckless proceedings, and praying that the costs of them might be wholly disallowed on taxation. A special petition was held to be unnecessary, and the petitioner was ordered to pay the costs of it. Re Atkinson, 26 Beav. 151.

3. Where a solicitor retains money, received for his client, in payment of costs alleged to be due to the solicitor, an application for the delivery and taxation of the bill, and for payment of the amount retained in excess, is an application under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73; and therefore, since the General Order of the 2nd August 1864, such an application must be made by summons in chambers, not by petition. Re May, 5 N. R. 297.

4. Special applications for delivery and taxation of a bill, and for payment over to the applicant of the balance of the cash account, must be made by summons, and not by petition. Re Edmonds, 19 W. R. 1048; 25 L. T., N. S., 152.

See also X. 1—XIII. 2 infra.

2. Petition or Summons. Form and Contents.

5. It is no objection to a petition to tax the solicitor's bill, that it contains allegations reflecting on the conduct of the solicitor; for, if such allegations are improper, they may be referred for scandal. Exp. Wells, 1 Dea. 69.

6. A petition for the taxation of a bill of costs, which sufficiently sets forth special circumstances for taxation, need not mention the specific items which are objected to. Exp. Andrews, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 222; 8 Jur. 827.

7. In a petition to tax, it is not necessary to specify all the items objected to. Re Dawson, 28 Beav. 605.

8. In a proceeding by summons for taxation, it is not necessary to specify palpable overcharges by affidavit. Re Brady, 15 W. R. 632.

3. Suppression of Material Facts.

9. A solicitor was employed by two persons, A. and B.; an order of course for taxation was obtained by A. alone, on the allegation that the solicitor was employed by A. It was discharged for irregularity. Re Perkins, 8 Beav. 241; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 168; 9 Jur. 220.

10. A. B., who claimed some property, conveyed it to trustees, upon trust for carrying on the litigation and payment of the costs, etc. The trustees employed a solicitor, and they raised a sum of money upon A. B.'s notes, drawn for the purpose, which they placed in the solicitor's hands. A. B. alone obtained an ex parte order for taxation; it was discharged for irregularity. Exp. Mobbs, 8 Beav. 499.

11. A. agreed to take a lease and to pay the expenses. The lease was prepared by the lessor's solicitor, who delivered his bill, made out as against the lessee. The lessee obtained an order to tax the bill on an allegation that he, the lessee, had employed the solicitor, which, being contrary to the fact, the order was discharged, but without costs, the matter in difference being very small. Re Gabriel, 10 Beav. 45.

12. An original cause and cross-cause for discovery were attached to Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's Court. The original cause was heard before an answer to the cross-cause had been obtained. The defendant to the bill of discovery then put in his answer, and obtained at the Rolls an order of course for his costs, suppressing the fact that the bill of discovery was a cross-bill. It was discharged for irregularity. Watts v. Penny, 11 Beav. 435; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 150; 13 Jur. 578.

13. An ex parte order for the delivery of a bill of costs discharged with costs; the allegation of the professional employment being denied by the solicitor. Re Eldridge, 12 Beav. 387.

14. Order of course for taxation discharged, on the ground of the case being misstated upon the petition for the order. Re Carvon, 8 Beav. 436; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 372.

15. A client agreed to pay his solicitor three guineas a day, in addition to the usual charges of a solicitor, for his travelling and other expenses. The Court, being of opinion that, under the common order of taxation, the Master would take the agreement into consideration:—Held, that its suppression, in obtaining an ex parte order, was not irregular. Re Eyre, 10 Beav. 569; 2 Ph. 367; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 277.

16. Order of course for taxation discharged on the ground of the suppression of an alleged previous reference to arbitration, though the fact was disputed. De Feuchères v. Daves, 11 Beav. 46.

17. Order for taxation, made upon affidavit of service, discharged with costs; the petition having misrepresented the case, and the real facts being found not to warrant the order. Re Rees, 12 Beav. 256.

18. A. B. employed a solicitor in the matter of a mortgage, and there was a dispute between them whether he was not also liable for the costs of legal proceedings taken in the name of a third party. A. B. obtained ex parte at the Rolls an order for taxation. He stated, however, the mortgage transaction alone, and suppressed the other matters. It was discharged on the ground of the suppression. Re Walker, 14 Beav. 227.

19. An order of course for taxation discharged on the ground of the suppression of the fact that there had been a previous order of the Queen's Bench for taxation, upon terms which had not been complied with, and a subsequent application to the Exchequer for taxation, which had been refused. Re Gedye, 15 Beav. 254; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 430.

20. Upon an arbitration between A. and B., A.'s costs were directed to be paid by B., and were moderated by the arbitrator, and paid.

A. afterwards obtained an order of course to tax his solicitor's bills of costs, suppressing these facts. The order was discharged. Re Winterbottom, 15 Beav. 80.

The rule, that on application for orders of course all material facts must be stated, is to be strictly adhered to. Id.

1. An order of course was obtained for the taxation of two bills of costs. One had been paid, and the fact had been suppressed. The Court discharged the order altogether. Re Hinton, 15 Beav. 192.

2. In December an account was signed by a client, one item of which was the amount of a bill of costs previously delivered. The balance was paid over a month after. Four months afterwards the client, suppressing settlement, obtained an order of course to tax. It was discharged. Re Holland, 19 Beav. 315; 2 W. R. 514.

3. A client applying for the common order to tax a bill of costs ought to disclose the existence of an agreement respecting its payment, although the contents may not be known. Re Ingle, 21 Beav. 275; 1 Jur., N. S., 1059; 25 L. J., Ch., 169.

A client obtained an order of course for the taxation of his solicitor's bill. A special agreement existed between them, which ought to have been mentioned on the application; but this was in the possession of the solicitor, who refused to furnish a copy. The Court declined to discharge the order, though irregular. Id.

4. A., the next friend of infants in a suit, employed B. as solicitor therein and in other matters. An order was made, in the suit, for the taxation and payment to B. of his costs of suit. Before this had been done, A. obtained, ex parte, an order to tax B.'s bill in all the matters in which he had been employed for A.:—Held, that the order was regular. Re Fluker, 20 Beav. 143.

5. In an action by a client against his solicitor, the latter pleaded his bill by way of set off. The client obtained an order for the delivery of the bill, and suffered himself to be nonprossed:—Held, that it was not necessary to state these circumstances in an ex parte application in Chancery for taxation. Re David, 30 Beav. 278.

6. Circumstances under which a court of equity will discharge an order for taxation of a solicitor's bill. Re Abel, 15 W. R. 730.

7. C. acted as solicitor for X., and before his bill was paid he took P. into partnership. X. then paid the bill by cheque to the order of C. and P., and received an acknowledgment in their joint names, but in P.'s handwriting. He then took out an order to tax the bill as against C. and P. They then wrote to him informing him that C. alone was interested in the bill, and requested him to get the order altered so as to be against C. alone, but this he declined to do:—Held, that the order must be discharged, C. consenting to an order against himself alone. Re Curnot, 40 L. J., Ch., 608.

4. Within One Year.

8. Under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, any party entitled to the order may obtain it as of course, and without special directions, within one month after delivery; and with such special directions, as the Court may order to be imposed, after the expiration of one month from the delivery, but not after verdict, writ of inquiry, or payment. In those cases a special order made upon special circumstances, to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court, is required. Re Beaka, 5 Beav. 406; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 157; 8 Jur. 505.

9. After the expiration of a month from the delivery of a bill of costs, and before the expiration of twelve months, an order of course may be obtained for its taxation. Holland v. Gwynne, 8 Beav. 124.

10. Terms of taxation, after the expiration of one month from the delivery of the bill. Re Bromley, 7 Beav. 487; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 320.

11. An application to tax a bill within a year of its delivery should be made by common order, and not by special summons, although a payment may have been made on account. Re Woodard, 18 W. R. 87.

See also 1 supra.

5. Other Cases.

12. The order of course for taxation is to refer to business in which the solicitor "has been employed," not to fees, etc., which "he claims to be due." Re Smith, 19 Beav. 329.

13. Upon a petition for taxation, the solicitor offered to repay the matters of overcharge therein specified. The offer was not accepted. Taxation ordered treating the specified items of overcharge (upon their repayment by the solicitor), as omitted from the bill. Re Cattlin, 23 Beav. 412.

14. Where an order of course made at the Rolls for the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs of a suit is not made in such suit, an application to vary or discharge the order ought to be made at the Rolls. Re Bell, 4 N. R. 497.

15. A fiat was sued out on the 7th June, by an attorney against his debtor, for the amount of his bill of costs, and the bankrupt was shortly afterwards discharged under the Insolvent Act, having inserted the amount of the attorney's bill in his schedule. The bankrupt passes his last examination, and on the 4th December petitions for an order to tax the attorney's bill, with a view of superseding the fiat, on the ground of the insufficiency of the petitioning creditor's debt:—Held, that the bankrupt could not, after lying by so long, and after his previous admission of the debt, apply for such an order. Exp. & Re Gingell, 2 Dea. & Ch. 546; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 22.

IX. WHO MAY APPLY FOR TAXATION.

1. Solicitor, 6462.
2. Married Woman, 6463.
3. Trustees in Bankruptcy, 6463.
4. Persons Jointly Liable, 6463.
5. Other Persons, 6463.

1. Solicitor.

16. Taxation of costs not ordered on application of solicitor himself. Sayers v. Walond, 1 Sim. & S. 97.

1. A solicitor has no statutory right to have the amount of his charges ascertained by taxation only. Exp. Ditton, Re Woods, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 318; 42 L. T. 161; 28 W. R. 402.

A solicitor who tenders a proof in the bankruptcy of his client, in respect of costs due to him by the client, is not entitled to insist on having his bill referred for taxation to the taxing master, but the registrar has jurisdiction to determine the amount due, availing himself, if necessary, of the advice of the taxing master. Id.

2. Married Woman.

2. In every case where a married woman seeks to tax a solicitor's bill, for business in respect of her separate estate, she must apply by her next friend. Re Waugh, 15 Beav. 508; 22 L. J., Ch., 612; 21 L. J., Ch., 567.

The next friend will be liable for the costs of the order and taxation, but not for the amount of the bill. Id.

A married woman, having obtained an order to tax without the intervention of a next friend, was ordered to give security, and in default the order was to be discharged. Id.

3. Where a married woman employs a solicitor, and makes her separate estate liable, she is, though not personally liable, a "party chargeable," within the meaning of the 37th section of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73. Waugh v. Waddell, 16 Beav. 521; 1 W. R. 206.

3. Trustee in Bankruptcy.

4. When the client of a solicitor becomes bankrupt, and the solicitor does not prove for the amount of his bill in the bankruptcy, the assignee cannot obtain an order to tax without giving an undertaking to pay the whole amount of the bill. Re Elmstie, 9 L. R., Eq., 72.

5. Order for taxation obtained by an insolvent debtor of a bill of costs incurred prior to his insolvency, discharged with costs. Re Halsall, 11 Beav. 163.

4. Persons Jointly Liable.

6. Where any part of solicitor's bill relates to business done in this Court, the whole may be taxed, although part of the business was for other persons jointly with the person applying. Margerum v. Sandiford, 3 Bro. C. C. 233.

7. A bill of costs having been incurred by A. and B. jointly, and an action having been brought against them for the recovery of the amount, the Court refused to direct a taxation, and to stay the proceedings at law, on the undertaking of A. alone to pay what might be found due. Re Chilcote, 1 Beav. 421.

8. Bill of costs incurred by two persons, ordered to be taxed on the application, and upon the undertaking of one. Lockhart v. Hardy, 4 Beav. 224.

9. A solicitor was employed by two persons, A. and B.; an order of course for taxation was obtained by A. alone, on the allegation that the solicitor was employed by A. It was discharged for irregularity. Re Perkins, 8 Beav. 241; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 168; 9 Jur. 220.

10. A solicitor was employed by three partners. He brought an action against them for his bill of costs, and, representing one, he obtained judgment against him by default:—Held, that this did not prevent the others from obtaining an order for taxation: held, also, that an application for taxation by the two was regular, the third not concurring, but that he ought to be served with the petition. The taxing masters have jurisdiction to determine questions of retainer. Re Hair, 10 Beav. 187; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 163; 11 Jur. 139; 1 W. R. 269.

11. Where a solicitor is retained by two persons jointly, an application for taxation by one, in the absence of the other, should not be made as of course. Re Levin, 16 Beav. 608.

12. Upon an application by one of several persons interested, for the taxation of a bill of costs of considerable amount, the Court, in determining his right to taxation, will not regard the amount of his interest. Re Dawson, 28 Beav. 605.

13. An order of course to tax a solicitor's bill incurred by three persons, obtained on application of two of them, is irregular. Re Iderton, 33 Beav. 201.

14. Taxation ordered where a solicitor was retained by more than one defendant to a suit, and the application to tax the solicitor's bill of costs was made by one of such defendants. Exp. Ford, 23 L. J., Ch., 515; 5 De G. M. & G. 35.

5. Other Persons.

15. A., the next friend of infants in a suit, employed B. as solicitor therein and in other matters. An order was made, in the suit, for the taxation and payment to B. of his costs of suit. Before this had been done, A. obtained, ex parte, an order to tax B.'s bill in all the matters in which he had been employed for A.:—Held, that the order was regular. Re Flucker, 20 Beav. 143.

16. A person who signs an authority for the use of his name as next friend to an infant, becomes primâ facie liable to pay the infant's solicitor's bill of costs, as well as those of the other side. Re Flower, 19 W. R. 578.

If for any cause he disputes this liability, the solicitor may nevertheless obtain the common order for taxation against him without mentioning that fact, for the defence cannot be raised in the process of taxation, but requires independent proceedings to be taken to enforce it. Id.

17. A bankruptcy is not during the bankruptcy a party interested in the estate in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy so as to entitle him after his discharge, and although his creditors have been paid in full, to demand delivery and taxation of a bill of costs paid by the trustee out of the estate, under 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73 (The Solicitors Act 1843), ss. 39, 40. Re Leadbitter and Harvey, 39 L. T., N. S., 12; 26 W. R. 853. Affirmed 39 L. T., N. S., 286; 10 L. R., Ch. D., 388; 48 L. J., Ch., 242; 27 W. R. 267.

18. Order for taxation obtained by an insolvent debtor of a bill of costs incurred prior to his insolvency, discharged with costs. Re Halsall, 11 Beav. 163.

19. A party to whom costs are awarded may proceed in the taxation, notwithstanding he may be in contempt. Newton v. Richetts, 11 Beav. 67.

UNDER THIRD PARTY CLAUSES.

1. Order. How Obtained, 6464.
2. Cestui que Trust, 6464.
3. Mortgagor and Mortgagee, 6465.
4. Person Paying the Bill, 6465.
5. Other Third Parties, 6466.
6. Rights of Third Party, 6466

1. Order. How Obtained.

1. Under ordinary circumstances, an order for taxation may be obtained as of course by third parties "liable to pay." Re Bracey, 8 Beav. 338.

2. The taxation under the 38th section of the Act 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, or the "third party liable clause," is by order of course; but under the 39th section, or third party interested clause, the application is special. Re Straford, 16 Beav. 27.

3. In taking a transfer of two mortgages, there was included in the amount secured on the estate a sum for costs incurred by the mortgagor and mortgagees on account of the estate:—Held, that the transferee could not have the bill for these costs taxed on an ordinary summons. Re Forsyth, 34 Beav. 140; 11 Jur., N. S., 615; 13 W. R. 932; 12 L. T., N. S., 687; 2 De G. J. & S. 509.

Semble, that the general jurisdiction of the Court over a solicitor will not be exercised on an ordinary summons for taxation. Id.

4. A petition for taxation under the "third-party clause" of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, must be served upon the "party chargeable" in a case where the bill of costs is not taxable as between the party chargeable and the solicitor. Re Baker, 2 N. R. 151.

5. On a petition for taxation under the third-party clause of the Solicitors Act, where the party immediately chargeable has paid the solicitor, and the third party liable has repaid him, it is not necessary to prove pressure. Re Turner, Exp. Burton, 4 W. R. 805.

2. Cestui que Trust.

6. Reference of a solicitor's bill of costs, to be taxed upon the application of one of two trustees and executors, by whom he had been employed in the conduct of the cause, and in other matters relating to the executorship; the executor making the application not having acted, and his co-executor refusing to consent to the application, the bill having been long since paid by the acting executor, but unknown to the parties beneficially interested, and no settlement of the executorship accounts having been made, notwithstanding repeated applications, until lately, and the cestuis que trustent (one of them a married woman) having executed a release to the executor: motion, on behalf of the solicitor, to discharge the order of reference, refused; the cestui que trust having a right to use the name of his trustee for the purpose of taxation, and the release to the executors not operating to prevent him from prosecuting against the solicitor the remedy given him by the statute. Hazard v. Lane, 3 Meriv. 285.

7. The words "any such bill," in the 41st section, do not mean the bill mentioned in the section immediately preceding, viz., any bill "previously taxed and settled;" nor are they limited to such bills as under the provisions of the Act are sought to be taxed by a party directly chargeable. Re Downes, 5 Beav. 425; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 159.

Where a cestui que trust applies for taxation, then, if there has been no payment, the rules under which taxation is to be directed are such as are pointed out by the 37th section of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, and if there has been payment by the 41st section. Id.

Whenever the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, applies, the Court cannot, in any case whatever, send a bill for taxation as against the solicitor, if it has been paid more than twelve months; but the Court may, after that period, direct a taxation as between a trustee and his cestui que trust, to justify the payments of the former. Id.

Application by cestui que trust for the taxation of a bill of costs paid by his trustees more than twelve calendar months, refused. Id. And see Re Press, 35 Beav. 34.

8. A. B., who claimed some property, conveyed it to trustees, upon trust for carrying on the litigation and payment of the costs, etc. The trustees employed a solicitor, and they raised a sum of money upon A. B.'s notes, drawn for the purpose, which they placed in the solicitor's hands. A. B. alone obtained an ex parte order for taxation; it was discharged for irregularity. Exp. Mobbs, 8 Beav. 499.

9. The taxation under the 38th section of the Act 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, or the "third party liable clause," is by order of course; but under the 39th section, or third party interested clause, the application is special. Re Straford, 16 Beav. 27.

10. A trustee is not a proper party to a petition presented by a cestui que trust for the delivery and taxation of bills of costs paid by a trustee. Re Mole, 22 L. J., Ch., 455.

11. Taxation ordered, at the instance of cestuis que trustent, of a bill incurred in respect of a trust estate by trustees, both being now dead; but any balance due from the solicitor was ordered to be paid into court, to a separate account, and not to the petitioners. Re Hallett, 21 Beav. 250.

12. Whether the taxation, at the instance of a cestui que trust, of a bill of costs which has been long since settled and paid by trustees out of a trust fund, ought to take place as against the solicitor, or as against the trustees for the purpose of justifying their payment, quære. Grove v. Sansom, 1 Beav. 297.

13. Where a cestui que trust seeks to tax the solicitor's bill paid by his trustee, on the ground of overcharge, he must allege and prove specific items. Re Bennett, 8 Beav. 467; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 403.

14. Application by residuary legatee, more than twelve months after payment, for the taxation of a solicitor's bill against the executor, refused; notwithstanding there had been some agreement between the legatee and solicitor, and that payment had afterwards been made behind the back of the legatee. Re Rees, 12 Beav. 256.

1. It is not necessary where a cestui que trust applies for taxation of bills paid by trustees or executors, to show that there are fraudulent overcharges. Re Drake, 22 Beav. 438.

2. Where a bill of costs against executors contained charges to a considerable extent beyond what would have been allowed them in their accounts with the testator's estate:—Held, that it was a proper case of taxation at the instance of the persons beneficially interested, after payment by the executors. Exp. Dickson, 8 De G. M. & G. 655.

3. An action will not lie by a cestui que trust against the solicitor of his trustees for taxation of a bill of costs paid by the trustees, the proper remedy being by application, under s. 29 of the Solicitors Act 1843. Re Spencer, Spencer v. Hart, 51 L. J., Ch., 271; 45 L. T. 645; 30 W. R. 296.

4. The rule that under the third party clause in the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 38, taxation is to be made as between the solicitor and person who is immediately liable to pay him, is to be taken with the exception that a trustee is to be personally responsible to the solicitor for the payment of items not necessary for the execution of the trust, and such items will be disallowed on taxation by a third party. Re Brown, 36 L. J., Ch., 842; 4 L. R., Eq., 464; 15 W. R. 1080; 16 L. T., N. S., 729.

Therefore the Master having, in taxing a paid bill of costs at the instance of a cestui que trust, disallowed certain items as not chargeable against the trust estate:—Held, that though such items would have been allowed as between the solicitor and his client, the trustee, the Court would not in that case interfere with the discretion of the Master. Id.

5. A bankrupt is not during the bankruptcy a party interested in the estate in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy so as to entitle him after his discharge, and although his creditors have been paid in full, to demand delivery and taxation of a bill of costs paid by the trustee out of the estate, under 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73 (The Solicitors Act 1843), ss. 39, 40. Re Leadbitter and Harvey, 39 L. T., N. S., 12; 26 W. R. 853; Affirmed 39 L. T., N. S., 286; 10 L. R., Ch. D., 388; 48 L. J., Ch., 242; 27 W. R. 267.

3. Mortgagor or Mortgagee.

6. After payment, an ex parte order for taxation is irregular; and the same rule applies where the payment is made by a mortgagee, and the taxation is at the instance of the mortgagor, as the party ultimately liable to pay. Re Carey, 8 Beav. 160; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 100.

7. A., a solicitor, being one of three mortgagees, arranged with another solicitor, B., to "act as his agent" in the matter of the mortgage, on agency terms. B. accordingly acted, and sent in his bill prepared as between solicitor and client, which was paid by the mortgagees. B. allowed A. 100% as his share of the profits. After this, on the application of second incumbrancers, the bill was taxed:—Held, that the taxing master was right in taxing it on the principle of solicitor and agent, for the agreement between A. and B. was valid, though it inured to the benefit of the mortgagees; and that the bill was properly taxable, at the instance of the second incumbrancers, as between them and B. Re Taylor, 18 Beav. 165; 18 Jur. 666; 23 L. J., Ch., 857.

8. Upon a petition by a mortgagor to tax the bill of the mortgagee's solicitor, after payment, the mortgagee must be served. Re Baker, 32 Beav. 526; 11 W. R. 792; 8 L. T., N. S., 566.

A mortgagor seeking to tax the bill of the mortgagee's solicitor, as against the solicitor, stands in the position of the mortgagee himself, and if the mortgagee cannot tax it, neither can the mortgagor; but the mortgagor may tax it as against the mortgagee for the purpose of diminishing the amount of his claim. Id.

9. A second mortgagee presented a petition to tax the bill of costs of the first mortgagee's solicitor, which had been paid out of the produce of the sale of the mortgaged estate:—Held, that the first mortgagees must be served with the petition. Re Jessop, 32 Beav. 406.

10. Where on transfer of a mortgage the transferee has paid the amount claimed and accepted a deed, which recites that a certain sum is due to the original mortgagee for costs, and contains an assignment of that sum as well as of the principal and interest, he cannot afterwards obtain an order for taxation of the mortgagee's solicitor's bill. Re Gold, 24 L. T. 9; 19 W. R. 343.

11. When once a mortgagor has paid the bill of costs, he cannot, as between himself and the solicitor of the mortgagee, have it taxed, except under special circumstances; but, as between himself and the mortgagee, he may have it taxed, under the third-party clause in 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 38. Re Abbott, 4 L. T., N. S., 576.

4. Person Paying the Bill.

12. A party who by agreement has paid the bill of costs of another party, cannot apply for a taxation. Langford v. Nott, 1 Jac. & Walk. 291.

13. A party liable under a bond of indemnity for the costs of another, having, on a compromise, paid what the solicitor stated to be the amount of them, is entitled afterwards to have the bill taxed. Balme v. Paver, Jac. 305.

Semble, it cannot be made one of the terms of the compromise of a suit, that the solicitor's bill should be paid without taxation. Id. 307.

14. An agreement to pay costs is an agreement to pay taxed costs, and a third party paying a solicitor's bill of costs, in order to compromise a suit, stands in the same situation with respect to the right of claiming taxation as the solicitor's client. Vincent v. Venner, 1 Myl. & K. 212; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 49.

15. A mere volunteer under no previous liability does not, by paying a solicitor's bill, acquire a right to tax it. Re Booke, 5 Beav. 406; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 187; 8 Jur. 505.

16. A. and B. compromised a suit, B. agreeing to pay A.'s costs, and any question on this was to be referred to an arbitrator, who was named. A's solicitor delivered his bill of costs to B.:—Held, that B. was entitled to a taxation by an order of course. Re Hartley, 30 Beav. 620.

1. Where one party is chargeable with a solicitor's bill, and another party, for reasons of his own, pays the bill, the party paying the bill has, under 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 38, the same right to taxation which the party originally chargeable would otherwise have had; and this right of taxation is not limited to any transaction which may have occurred in the premises between himself and the solicitor; but the bill which he has paid is the bill which he has a right to have taxed. Re Newman, 2 L. R., Ch., 707; 15 W. R. 1189; 17 L. T., N. S., 128.

2. A solicitor to a railway company provisionally registered brought an action against three of the managing directors for the amount of his bill of costs, and recovered judgment. An order was afterwards obtained for winding up the company under the Act, and a petition was then presented by the official manager for taxing the solicitor's bill, under the stat. 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, on the ground of excessive charges:—Held, that the Court could not be called upon to examine the items of a bill to ascertain their correctness, and that an allegation of excessive charges was not such a special circumstance as to bring the case within the 38th section of the Act. Petition dismissed with costs. Re Vardy, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 325.

3. A creditor's petition to wind up a company having been withdrawn on payment of the debt, the solicitors for the company undertook by letter with the petitioning creditor's solicitors "to pay all proper costs and charges incident to and recoverable under such petition, such costs, in case of difference, to be taxed." The amount of the costs not being agreed upon, the company obtained, ex parte, an order to tax under the third-party clause (s. 38) of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, and served it on the solicitors of the petitioning creditors:—Held, on motion to discharge the order, that the undertaking was a personal undertaking to pay the costs, such costs being costs as between party and party; that the 38th section of the Act had reference only to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client; that the order, therefore, was irregular, and must be discharged with costs to be paid by the company. Re Hartley (30 Beav. 620), considered and explained. Re Grundy, Kershaw, & Co., 17 L. R., Ch. D., 108; 50 L. J., Ch., 467; 44 L. T. 541; 29 W. R. 581.

5. Other Third Parties.

4. A husband became liable for bills of costs due from his wife dum sola, and from her former husband, to a solicitor:—Held, that, though the relation of solicitor and client did not exist between the solicitor and the second husband, yet that the latter was entitled to a taxation of the bills of costs. Waring v. Williams, 2 Beav. 1.

5. A shareholder and member of the managing committee of a provisionally registered railway company:—Held, entitled to an order, on petition, for delivery and taxation, after payment of the bills of the solicitors employed by such committee. Re Stephen, 2 Ph. 562. Varying 10 Jur. 585.

6. An administrator employed a solicitor to recover debts due to his intestate, and gave him a power of attorney, under which he received moneys, and acted generally; out of the moneys so received he retained sufficient to pay his costs, which had never been furnished to the administrator nor taxed, but after his death they were furnished to his executor, who approved of them:—Held, on petition, that the administrator de bonis non of the intestate was entitled to have the bill of costs referred for taxation, and would have been equally entitled had there been actual payment to, instead of retention by, the solicitor. Semble, scus, if she had refused the offer of taxation previously, where the question properly arose. Langford v. Mahony, 2 Con. & L. 317; 4 Dr. & War. 81; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 569.

7. A person liable to pay costs as between party and party is not entitled to a reference for taxation under the third-party clause (s. 38) of the Attorneys Act 1843. Re Comdell, 52 L. J., Ch., 246; 31 W. R. 335.

8. The Court will make an order for taxation under the third-party clause, contained in s. 39 of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, although the petitioners may be actuated by personal feelings to present the petition, and their interest in the matter is very small. Re Dawson, 6 Jur., N. S., 878.

9. A bankrupt who has obtained his discharge and who has become entitled to the surplus of his estate, all the creditors having been paid in full, is not entitled, under the 39th section of the Solicitors Act (6 & 7 Vict., c. 73), to obtain the taxation of a bill of costs paid by the trustee in the bankruptcy. The trustee in bankruptcy does not stand in the position of a trustee for the bankrupt. Re Leadbitter and Harvey, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 888; 48 L. J., Ch., 242; 27 W. R. 267; 39 L. T. 286. Affirming 39 L. T. 12; 26 W. R. 853.

Where a solicitor's bill of costs has been paid by a trustee in bankruptcy, the bankrupt, when discharged, even though all the creditors have been paid in full and there is a surplus, is not "a party interested" within 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, at the time when the bill of costs was paid. Id.

6. Rights of Third Party.

10. The taxation (under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73) of a solicitor's bill, at the instance of a third party "liable to pay," is regulated by the relations existing between the solicitor and his client, and not as between the solicitor and such third party. Re Fyson, 9 Beav. 117.

11. Under 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 38, the third party stands in the position of the client; and if the client is not entitled to a taxation against the solicitor, neither is the third party entitled to a taxation, either as against the solicitor or as against the client. But he may be entitled to have a taxation as against the client in a suit. Re Massey, 34 Beav. 463; 11 Jur., N. S., 594; 34 L. J., Ch., 492; 13 W. R. 797; 12 L. T., N. S., 519; 6 N. R. 195.

The proper course is to file a bill. Id.

12. A mortgagor who has paid his mortgagee's solicitor's bill, may yet tax it, in the same way as the mortgagee might have done. If the latter has, as between the solicitor and himself, bound himself, then the mortgagor cannot tax the bill as against the solicitor, but only in diminution of the amount due to the mortgagee; who must in that case be before the Court. But if the case is one in which the bill can be taxed by the mortgagee as against the solicitor, the mortgagee need not be before the Court. Re Baker, 11 W. R. 792; 8 L. T., N. S., 566; 32 Beav. 526. And see Re Jessop, 32 Beav. 406.

1. The rule that under the third-party clause in the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 38, taxation is to be made as between the solicitor and person who is immediately liable to pay him, is to be taken with the exception that a trustee is to be personally responsible to the solicitor for the payment of items not necessary for the execution of the trust, and such items will be disallowed on taxation by a third party. Re Brown, 36 L. J., Ch., 842; 4 L. R., Eq., 464; 15 W. R. 1030; 16 L. T., N. S., 729.

Therefore the Master having, in taxing a paid bill of costs at the instance of a cestui que trust, disallowed certain items as not chargeable against the trust estate:—Held, that though such items would have been allowed as between the solicitor and his client, the trustee, the Court would not in that case interfere with the discretion of the Master. Id.

2. The third-party clause in the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 38, only entitles a third person to tax in the same manner as the client might have done, notwithstanding that the bill contains items which such third party would not be under any liability to pay. Re Newman, 36 L. J., Ch., 843. Affirmed 15 W. R. 1189; 17 L. T., N. S., 128; 2 L. R., Ch., 707.

A. entered into a special agreement with B. as to granting a lease to him, and B. agreed to pay the costs of "this agreement and the lease and counterpart and incidental thereto." On the completion of the matter, A.'s solicitors delivered to B. a bill of costs, which contained every charge which they were entitled to make to their client A. in the matter, including therefore charges which B. under the agreement might not be obliged to pay:—Held, on B.'s application to tax the bill, that the order must be to tax the bill as between the solicitors and their client A. Id.

XI. BY OR AGAINST REPRESENTATIVES.

1. In What Cases, 6467.
2. Revisor of Order to Tax, 6468.
3. Revisor for Costs. See PRACTICE (COSTS).

1. In What Cases.

3. In a suit for an account by the assignees of a bankrupt, against the executor of the solicitor to the commission, bills of costs, for which the executor takes credit, as against the sum due from his testator to the bankrupt's estate, will, on motion, be referred for taxation. Stephens v. Davis, 6 L. J., Ch., 66.

4. This Court has no authority to order the personal representatives of a deceased solicitor to have his costs taxed, even though they are in possession of the client's deeds. Turkington v. Kiernan, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 447.

5. The Court has no authority, under the 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, to make an order against the personal representatives of a deceased solicitor, that the solicitor's bills of costs shall be taxed. Muddeford v. Austwick, 3 Myl. & C. 423; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 304; 3 Jur. 668.

6. An attorney, having delivered up deeds to an executor, which he was not obliged to do till his bill was paid, and these deeds being of great use to the executor in several suits which were then carrying on; this is a sufficient consideration to make the executor liable to the attorney's whole demand, whether there be assets or not. Order of the Exchequer, refusing an injunction to stay proceedings in a judgment at law, affirmed. Hamilton v. Inceledon, 4 Bro. P. C. 4.

7. Plaintiff's demand in a suit for the administration of assets, being on foot of costs untaxed, but the bill delivered agreeably to the stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, the decree directed the costs to be taxed, to ascertain what was due to the plaintiff; the administratrix being held not to be concluded, so as to establish, as the debt due, the full amount of the bills delivered. The general submission to pay the costs, when taxed in such case, is out of assets, but a personal undertaking was required of her to pay the expenses of taxation, if less than a sixth was reduced. Hartford v. Humphreys, 1 Moll. 142.

8. A solicitor acted as receiver of rents on behalf of his client, the accounts by him in that character being settled periodically. He was also engaged on various occasions in raising money for his client by means of mortgages, and his bills of costs with respect to these transactions were generally settled by means of deductions from what he received for the client on the completion of each transaction. He was also employed in the transaction of general professional business for his client. The rent account was treated as an entirely separate matter from the account for general business, and in 1854 a settlement of the general account was come to, on which occasion the client paid the solicitor upwards of 1,000*l.* The solicitor kept no proper accounts of sums received by him on behalf of his client. Upon the solicitor's death in 1859 his executors sent in a further bill of costs against the client for general business:—Held, that the omission to keep accounts was not a reason for depriving the solicitor of his proper taxed costs for the business done. Re Lee, 17 W. R. 108; 19 L. T., N. S., 435; 4 L. R., Ch., 43.

9. A solicitor, who was one of the executors of a testator, paid himself out of the assets a bill for business done for the testator. Twenty-six years after the death of the testator, and ten years after the death of the solicitor, a decree was made directing the usual accounts of the testator's personal estate. The executor of the solicitor, in bringing in his accounts under the decree, inserted the bill of costs as one of his items of discharge:—Held, that although as between solicitor and client the bill was no longer subject to taxation, yet, as against the executor, the persons beneficially interested were entitled to question its amount as an item of discharge, but that an order referring it for taxation was not proper, the right course being to direct the taxing master to state whether any items objected to were fair and proper to be allowed, and to what amount. Allen v. Jarvis, 4 L. R., Ch., 616; 17 W. R. 943.

1. J. was solicitor of A. for many years before his death, and was appointed one of his executors. He delivered his bills to the widow, an executrix, and the amount was paid by a cheque drawn by J. himself upon the bankers of the executors, who were three in number. This was in June 1843, soon after which J. died; and in 1865, a suit to execute the trusts of the will was instituted, and accounts of moneys received by the executors were directed. J.'s executor carried in the bills as items of discharge of his testator's estate, and the Master of the Rolls, in chambers, without being attended by counsel, directed the taxing master "to tax and settle the bills" in respect of items which the persons beneficially interested in the estate questioned:—Held, on appeal, that as the Cons. Order XL., r. 35, provided that the judge may direct the Master to assist him in settling the costs, the order was erroneous, and it was varied by substituting a direction to the Master to inquire and state whether any, and which, of the disputed items were fair and proper to be allowed, and to what amounts respectively. Allen v. Jarvis, 21 L. T., N. S., 280.

Where, under the above circumstances, a judge has made an order, it is irregular for him to give leave to appeal against it, and application for such leave must be made to the Court of Appeal. Id.

2. Revivor of Order to Tax.

2. A representative of a person who had obtained an order to tax a bill, can revive it only on an undertaking to pay. Murphy v. Balderton, 2 Atk. 114.

3. Where there was a decree with costs against three persons, and during the progress of the taxation one of them died, it was held, the Master was regular in proceeding with the taxation and making his certificate, notwithstanding the two survivors objected that the suit was abated. Meredith v. Hughes, 3 Y. & J. 188.

4. Pending a taxation, both the solicitor and client died, the reference was revived, and the taxation continued between the representatives. Re Whalley, 20 Beav. 576.

5. Pending a taxation, the solicitor died:—Held, that his executors might revive the proceeding against their client by an ex parte order. Re Waugh, 29 Beav. 666; 30 L. J., Ch., 796; 9 W. R. 775.

6. A client may apply ex parte against an executrix of a solicitor deceased, to revive an order for the taxation of the solicitor's bill of costs. Re Nicholson, 30 L. J., Ch., 796; 9 W. R. 774; 20 Beav. 665.

An order to revive an order to tax will be made, though the order for taxation was made specially by the Lords Justices, and though they reserved to themselves a right to deal with such special circumstances as might be certified by the Master. Id.

XII. AFTER TWELVE MONTHS.

1. Special Circumstances, 6468.
2. Successive Bills, 6469.
3. Other Matters, 6470.

1. Special Circumstances.

7. Where neither a case of pressure is proved against a solicitor, nor improper items of charge shown by a third party applying for an order to tax the bill, the application will be refused, with costs. Re Evans, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 115.

8. After more than twelve months from the delivery of unsigned bills, the client applied for their taxation:—Held, that he was not entitled, except on showing sufficient "special circumstances." Re Gedye, 14 Beav. 56; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 410; 15 Jur. 851.

The possession of the papers in a cause is not a sufficient special circumstance to warrant the taxation of a bill delivered more than twelve months. Id.

9. In October 1839 a client obtained an order to tax his solicitor's bill: he commenced the taxation in January 1840, and proceeded therein to a very considerable extent. A year and a half after, and before the report, the client applied to vary the order:—Held, that after his acquiescence he came too late to alter the order, and too early to correct any erroneous principle acted upon by the Master. Tarbut v. Tarbut, 4 Beav. 149.

Quare, whether, after the taxation of a particular bill of costs, as between solicitor and client, a general taxation is directed, a solicitor can include items included in the former taxation, but not allowed; or ought, for the purpose of explanation, to introduce items taxed and paid on the former taxation. Id.

10. An application for taxation of a bill made fourteen months after its delivery and before payment refused, there being no sufficient "special circumstances." Re Harper, 10 Beav. 284.

11. J. S. was the sole solicitor employed by a railway company to obtain an Act of Parliament, and he was to employ, on his own responsibility, a local agent. J. S. employed A. B., another solicitor, as his agent for collecting evidence. In November 1846 J. S. delivered his bill of costs to the company, but it did not include A. B.'s costs, and the company declined to consider the bill until those costs were included. In December 1847 J. S. brought an action for his costs, and the company, in January 1848, presented a petition for the taxation of his bill:—The Court held, that, under the circumstances, the petitioners, notwithstanding that twelve months had elapsed since the delivery of the bill, were entitled to have the bill taxed. Re Bagshawe, 2 De G. & Sm. 205; 12 Jur. 510.

12. Taxation of a solicitor's bill for parliamentary business ordered, under the 37th section of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, upon a petition presented more than twelve months from the delivery of the bill, on the ground of gross overcharges, amounting to what the Court designates as fraud, coupled with misrepresentation by him in accounting for one of the items overcharged, notwithstanding the client knew of the circumstances, and had another legal adviser within a month of the delivery of the bill, and might reasonably have availed himself of these circumstances to present his petition within the twelve months. Re Strother, 3 Kay & J. 518; 3 Jur., N. S., 736; 26 L. J., Ch., 695; 5 W. R. 797.

To entitle a client to an order for taxation of his solicitor's bill of costs after the expiration of twelve months from its delivery, he must show either pressure, or gross overcharge, amounting to what a court of equity designates as fraud, but it is not necessary to show both. Ib.

1. Charges in a bill apparently excessive, and alleged to be overcharges:—Held, special circumstances sufficient to authorise the Court, under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37, to direct the bills to be taxed more than twelve months after delivery, although one item complained of was sworn to be a mistake. Re Hook, 3 Giff. 372; 8 Jur., N. S., 875; 10 W. R. 116; 5 L. T., N. S., 502.

2. N. acted as solicitor of I. from 1833 to 1857, and during that period received and paid large sums of money as his account. In November 1853 N. delivered to I. his account current from 1833 to that time, and in it took credit for twenty-seven bills of costs, which he delivered at the same time. N. afterwards, in February 1857, and June 1857, delivered continuations of his accounts, taking credit in them for subsequent bills of costs, which were delivered along with the accounts in which they were included. None of the accounts were ever settled. In July 1857 the relation of solicitor and client was determined, and I. placed the matter in the hands of a fresh solicitor. In March 1858 the last account was delivered, with another bill of costs. In April 1858 I. presented a petition for taxation of all the bills, showing considerable items of overcharge:—Held, that a taxation of all the bills ought to be directed, though most of them had been delivered more than twelve months before the petition was presented. Re Nicholson, Exp. Johnson, 3 De G. F. & J. 93; 7 Jur., N. S., 434; 30 L. J., Ch., 585; 9 W. R. 441; 4 L. T., N. S., 167.

3. Where special circumstances are relied upon as a ground for taxation after the prescribed time they must be such as the client could not have reasonably availed himself of sooner. Semble, that mere overcharge is not a special circumstance within the meaning of the Solicitors Act. Re Barnard, 2 De G. M. & G. 359; 17 Jur. 53.

4. Taxation ordered of an unpaid bill of costs, eighteen months after its delivery, the "special circumstances" being, that it was delivered long after application for it, on the eve of the client going abroad, and contained substantial overcharges not acquiesced in. Re Williams, 15 Beav. 417.

5. Where an action has been brought by an attorney for 68*l.*, balance of untaxed costs, more than twelve months after the delivery of the bill thereof, and it appeared that before action the attorney had offered to take 40*l.* in full:—Held, that it was a proper case for a reference for taxation, and the special circumstances were sufficient. Hughes v. Murray, 9 L. T., N. S., 93.

6. A petition for taxation (presented more than twelve months after the bill of costs was furnished) by one of two trustees, behind the back of his co-trustee, was refused, although the solicitor had commenced an action against the petitioner alone. Re McCay, 15 L. T., N. S., 101.

7. Taxation ordered upon an application made after the expiration of twelve months after delivery of a bill of costs, on the ground of the continuance of the relation of solicitor and client subsequently to the delivery of the bill. Anon., 16 W. R. 749.

8. A country solicitor, with an office in town, conducting personally the business which would ordinarily be transacted by a London agent, is not entitled to charge for letters passing between the two offices, but such charges are not "overcharges amounting to fraud," so as to induce the Court to refer the bill more than twelve months after delivery. Re Harle, 19 L. T., N. S., 305; 17 W. R. 21.

9. The continuation of the relationship of solicitor and client is not of itself such a special circumstance that the Court will on account of it order the taxation of a bill of costs twelve months after it has been delivered. Re Elmalie, Exp. Tower Subway Co., 42 L. J., Ch., 570; 16 L. R., Eq., 326; 22 W. R. 54; 28 L. T., N. S., 731.

The Court will not after a lapse of twelve months go into questions of excessive charge, unless it can be proved that there are items of gross overcharge amounting to fraud. Ib.

2. Successive Bills.

10. A petition was presented for taxation of forty-six bills of costs delivered by a solicitor to his client at intervals between 1833 and 1857, and comprising items of unsettled accounts between them. The petition contained allegations of improper charges, and was presented more than twelve months after the delivery of the last bill:—Held, that the improper charges being proved, the delay in presenting the petition was no bar to an order for taxation, especially when the relationship of solicitor and client existed up to a period within twelve months preceding the presentation of the petition. Re Nicholson, Exp. Johnson, 7 Jur., N. S., 434; 30 L. J., Ch., 585; 9 W. R. 441; 4 L. T., N. S., 167; 3 De G. F. & J. 93.

11. Three months after a solicitor to a company had delivered his bill the company was ordered to be wound up. Subsequently he delivered a further bill to the official liquidator. More than twelve months elapsed, and the solicitor carried in a claim for payment of both bills:—Held, that both bills must be referred for taxation before they could be paid. Re Marseilles Extension Railway and Land Co., Exp. Evans, 11 L. R., Eq., 151; 40 L. J., Ch., 197; 19 W. R. 379; 23 L. T., N. S., 647.

12. A solicitor having delivered successive bills of costs relating to the same suit and on the same retainer, and having received from his client payments on account, though not in discharge of any one bill, sent a signed letter to the client, stating that he should increase some of his former charges, and containing a list of additions to certain items in his previous bills:—Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the latter, being a correction of the earlier bills, must be treated as bringing them down as one entire bill to that date, and that taxation of the whole must be directed, though most of them had been delivered more than twelve months before the application. Re Cartwright, 16 L. R., Eq., 469; 42 L. J., Ch., 735; 21 W. R. 891; 28 L. T., N. S., 891.

1. The retainer and employment of a solicitor in such a matter as a bankruptcy, an administration, or a winding up, do not constitute an entire contract so as to deprive the solicitor of his right to payment, except for costs out of pocket, till the whole matter is completed, and successive bills of costs in such a matter are not necessarily to be treated as one bill brought down to the date of the latest delivery. Re Hall & Barker, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 538; 47 L. J., Ch., 621; 26 W. R. 501.

Therefore, where solicitors had been retained to act for a trustee in bankruptcy, and also to protect the interests of a creditor, who subsequently by arrangement with the other creditors took over the bankrupt's estate, and they delivered a bill of costs up to a certain date, with an intimation that there were then and would still be some further items, and delivered a second bill of costs incurred after the date to which the first bill came down: on an application by the creditors to tax both bills, more than twelve months after the delivery of the first:—Held, that they must be treated as separate bills, and that the second bill only could be taxed. Ib.

2. A solicitor delivered to the directors of an abortive railway company his bill of costs, No. 1. It was perused by an experienced solicitor, named by the solicitor retained, at the request of the directors, and items were taxed off, leaving 275*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* as the amount due. The directors paid 200*l.* on account, leaving a balance of 75*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* due. An order to wind up the company under the Winding-up Acts was obtained, and the solicitor claimed a lien on the papers for his costs. He delivered a bill of costs, No. 2, commencing with the balance of 75*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, amounting to 233*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* On the petition of the official manager, seeking the taxation of the solicitor's bills of costs, No. 1 and No. 2, it appeared that the bill of costs No. 1 had been duly delivered more than twelve months before the date of the petition to tax:—Held, that bill No. 1 could not be taxed, except under special circumstances, which did not exist in this case; and the Court ordered bill No. 2 to be taxed, directing the Master not to investigate the accuracy of the balance of bill No. 1, with which bill No. 2 commenced, further than to ascertain that that balance had not in fact been paid. Eap. Quilter, 4 De G. & Sm. 183.

3. Other Matters.

3. Where an attorney has been seven years without getting his bills taxed, after an order so to do, and they are lost in the meantime to the Master's office, the Court will not allow it to go again to the Master. Yea v. Yea, 2 Anstr. 494.

4. Within twelve months after payment of a bill of costs a client presented a petition for its taxation; but the petition having specified no items of overcharge, no order could be made. The twelve months having then expired, the Court refused to allow the petition to stand over for the purpose of amendment, by specifying the items. Barnwell v. Brooks, 7 Beav. 345.

5. A petition being presented for the taxation of a solicitor's bill:—Held, that the application was to be considered as to be made at the latest at the time of answering the petition, and not at the time of service of the petition, or the day appointed for hearing. In case of accidental delay in the office, the period may be carried further back. Sayer v. Wagstaff, 5 Beav. 415; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 161. Affirmed 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 116; 8 Jur. 1083.

A solicitor delivered his bill of costs on the 14th October 1842, for which the client, on the 3rd November 1842, gave his promissory note, which was paid on the 17th November 1842. On the 15th November 1843 the client presented a petition for the taxation of the bill, which was answered on the 16th, and was served on the 21st. The day appointed for hearing was the 24th:—Held, first, that the bill must be considered as paid on the 17th November 1842; and, secondly, that the application for taxation must be considered as made at the latest on the 16th November 1843; and consequently, that the application for taxation had been made within twelve months, according to the 41st section of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73. Ib.

6. A preliminary agreement between a solicitor and his client on obtaining a loan on mortgage, no bill of costs having been delivered, is illegal, and the delivery of the bill and taxation ordered more than twelve months after completion of the transaction and payment of the balance to the client. Re Casely, 18 W. R. 1125.

A solicitor lent his client 200*l.* on a promissory note. The note was made out for 210*l.*, the addition being alleged to be for costs on the transaction:—Held, that the client was not precluded from requiring a bill of costs, showing how the sum of 10*l.* was made up, by the lapse of nearly three years and subsequent money transactions between the parties. Ib.

7. If a fund on which a solicitor has a lien for costs is paid into court within a year after his bill has been delivered, on payment of the fund out of court the owner of the fund has a right to have the bill taxed, although more than a year may have elapsed since it was delivered. De Bay v. Griffin, 10 L. R., Ch., 291; 23 W. R. 737.

B. acted as attorney for G. in an action which resulted in G.'s recovering a large sum. A bill was filed by persons claiming through G. to establish their equitable title to that sum, and in February 1871 the defendant in the action paid the sum recovered into court to the credit of the cause in which B. was a defendant in respect of his lien. In March 1871 B. delivered his bill of costs in the action to G. In December 1873 the suit was compromised and the fund distributed, except a sum kept in court to answer B.'s claims:—Held, that B. was not entitled to have his bill of costs paid out of the fund without taxation, however the case might have stood, if his bill had been delivered at such a time that G.'s right to tax it would have been lost before the fund was paid into court. Id.

XIII. AFTER PAYMENT.

1. General Principles, 6471.
2. Order. How Obtained, 6471.
3. Time and Delay, 6472.
4. What Bills, 6474.
5. Payment, what is, 6474.
6. Payment to Recover Papers or Complete Transactions, 6475.
7. Protest, 6477.
8. Pressure or Overcharge, 6478.
9. Undue Influence, 6480.

1. General Principles.

1. The cases of taxation after payment are not to be extended. Re Browne, 15 Beav. 61. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 322; 21 L. J., Ch., 442.

2. Several bills were delivered in, settled, and paid, in the course of a long cause, and a receipt in full given; at the end of the cause the client moved to refer them all for taxation. The order was discharged. Pistor v. Dumbas, 1 Anstr. 186.

3. After a bill of costs paid, and a receipt in full taken, the client is not entitled to an order to tax the costs, merely swearing they never had been taxed; he must show specific error. Mahon v. Scanlon, 2 Moll. 388.

4. A bill of costs, settled and paid after examination, discussion, and abatement made by the solicitor, referred for taxation under the circumstances, but on the terms of the client admitting the cash payments contained in the settled account. Nokes v. Warton, 5 Beav. 448.

5. Though the Court will open a solicitor's bill, and order taxation, after several years and a security given, or even payment upon gross errors, fraud, or undue pressure, yet where nothing appeared but a trifling inaccuracy, and under other favourable circumstances, the Court would not restrain proceedings upon a security obtained while business was depending. Cooke v. Settee, 1 Ves. & B. 126.

6. Costs settled and paid, or after judgment in action for them, not referred for taxation. Otherwise, on a special case of fraud or improper charges. Langstaffe v. Taylor, 14 Ves. 262.

7. Proof of overcharge alone is insufficient to obtain the taxation of a paid bill; but it is a necessary ingredient. Re Stirke, 11 Beav. 304.

8. Payment of a bill of costs is prima facie an admission of its correctness, and the client is bound to prove "special circumstances" to authorise its taxation; such special circumstances are usually pressure, as where an immediate payment is required at a time when it would be very inconvenient to the party paying that any delay should occur in the completion of the business; and secondly, error or overcharge in the bill; if the overcharges evidence fraud, very slight, if any, circumstances are necessary to induce the Court to order a taxation. Re Harding, 10 Beav. 250; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 288.

9. The principle of taxation after payment is not to be extended. Re Mash, 15 Beav. 83.

10. The rule of the Court is, that to obtain a taxation after payment there must either be both overcharge and pressure, or overcharge so gross as to amount to fraud. Re Hubbard, 15 Beav. 251. And see Re Browne, Earp. Jefferies, 1 De G. M. & G. 322; 21 L. J., Ch., 442.

A solicitor is not bound to do that on the undertaking of the opposite solicitor, which the latter is not entitled to as of right. Id.

The cases of taxation, after payment on the ground of pressure, are not to be extended. Id.

11. To obtain an order for taxation of a bill of costs which has been paid, it must be shown that there has been undue pressure and overcharge, or overcharge amounting to fraud. Re Foster, Earp. Walker, 6 Jur., N. S., 687; 29 L. J., Ch., 625; 2 De G. F. & J. 105.

12. After a solicitor's bill has been paid, an order for the taxation of it will not be made, unless special circumstances—as overcharges such as amount to fraud, or which are accompanied by pressure—can be shown, which, in the opinion of the judge, appear to make in proper that the bill should be taxed. Re Munns and Longden, 50 L. T. 356.

13. It requires a very special case to induce the Court to order taxation after payment, the Court being reluctant to open a matter deliberately settled. The rule is, that there must be both pressure and overcharges or items in the bill itself of such a nature as to amount to what is vaguely called fraud. Definition of the term "fraudulent items." Re Barrow, 17 Beav. 547; 18 Jur. 181; 2 W. R. 109.

The doctrine of pressure in cases of taxation after payment is not to be extended, and the application for taxation should be made speedily. Id.

Where a mortgagor seeks the taxation of the bill of the mortgagee's solicitor, it must be looked at, not as between the mortgagor and the solicitor, but as between the solicitor and his client, the mortgagee. Id.

Where a considerable portion of a bill of costs is for business which, in the exercise of an honest and fair discretion, ought never to have been transacted, the Court, although there be no serious amount of pressure, will order a taxation after payment. Id.

14. Semble, a third party who applies under the 38th and 39th sections of 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, for taxation of a bill after payment, must show such special circumstances as would support an order for taxation on the application of the person originally chargeable. Re Dickson, 5 W. R. 108; 26 L. J., Ch., 89; 3 Jur., N. S., 29.

2. Order. How Obtained.

15. Where a bill of costs has been paid, the client ought not to obtain an order of taxation as of course. Honell v. Edmunds, 6 L. J., Ch., 29; 4 Russ. 67.

But where a bill had been paid pending the suit, and under some degree of pressure practised by the solicitor towards the client, the Court refused to discharge an order for taxation, obtained subsequently, as of course. Ib.

1. An order of course, obtained by a client for the taxation of his solicitor's bill of costs after payment thereof, discharged. Sayer v. Wagstaff, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 496.

2. After payment of a bill, an order for taxation is not to be obtained as of course, even by a party liable to pay the same. Re Becke, 5 Beav. 406; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 157; 8 Jur. 505.

Under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, any party entitled to the order may obtain it, as of course and without special directions, within one month after delivery, and with such special directions as the Court may order to be imposed, after the expiration of one month from the delivery, but not after verdict, writ of inquiry, or payment. In those cases a special order made upon special circumstances, to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court, is required. Ib.

3. A solicitor's bill having been partly taxed and paid, an order, obtained as of course, referring the bill generally for taxation, was discharged with costs. The conduct of the solicitor cannot be adduced in support of such an order; and the costs of affidavits upon that subject were ordered to be paid as between solicitor and client. Clutton v. Pardon, T. & R. 301. And see Gretton v. Leyburne, id. 407.

4. After payment, an ex parte order for taxation is irregular; and the same rule applies where the payment is made by a mortgagee, and the taxation is at the instance of the mortgagor, as the party ultimately liable to pay. Re Carey, 8 Beav. 150; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 100.

5. After payment, an order of course for taxation is irregular. Re Winterbottom, 15 Beav. 80. And see Re Catlin, 8 Beav. 121.

The rule, in these matters, that on application for orders of course all material facts must be stated, is to be strictly adhered to. Ib.

Upon an arbitration between A. and B., A.'s costs were directed to be paid by B., and were moderated by the arbitrator and paid. A. afterwards obtained an order of course to tax his solicitor's bills of costs, suppressing these facts. The order was discharged. Ib.

6. Application for taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs, on the ground that the solicitor has improperly retained in account a sum of money in satisfaction of his bill, must be made by summons in chambers. Re May, 34 Beav. 132; 11 Jur., N. S., 149; 34 L. J., Ch., 236; 13 W. R. 777; 11 L. T., N. S., 658.

7. The solicitor to the fiat having delivered his bill of costs, and retained the amount of it before the end of 1850, was discharged in July 1851. No application for taxation was made before October 1852:—Held, that it was not consistent with safety or propriety to direct taxation in a summary way, even if the Court had jurisdiction to do so. But semble per Lord Cranworth, that the Court had no such jurisdiction. Exp. Pemberton, 2 De G. M. & G. 960; 22 L. J., Bky., 76.

8. A summons taken out to tax a bill paid eight years ago is not the proper course; a person wishing to tax such a bill must show a special case and proceed by petition. Re Woodard, 17 W. R. 1006.

9. An order for the taxation of the costs of conveyances under s. 83 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, cannot be obtained where the costs have been paid. Such an order for taxation cannot be sustained as an order of course under the Attorneys Act. Exp. Somerville, South Eastern Railway Co., 23 L. R., Ch. D., 167; 52 L. J., Ch., 438; 48 L. T. 416; 31 W. R. 518.

3. Time and Delay.

10. Bills of costs examined after a long period, and even after payments made. Newman v. Payne, 2 Ves. J. 202; 4 Bro. C. C. 350.

11. Taxation of solicitor's bill, after payment and lapse of several years, refused. Waters v. Smith, 1 Jur. 375.

12. Petition to tax a bill of costs, paid without pressure nine days after its delivery, dismissed with costs. Re Drew, 10 Beav. 368.

13. Solicitor having taken a judgment of his client for 400*l.* whilst cause was depending, also several extraordinary charges appearing in his bill, bill though adjusted and allowed seventeen years ago, referred to be taxed, and judgment and other securities to be delivered up. Drapers' Co. v. Davis, 2 Atk. 295.

14. Semble, a procuracy-fee charged by mortgagee's solicitor is improper; but eleven months having elapsed since payment, taxation refused. Re Bayley, 2 W. R. 404.

15. An unexplained delay of nine months after payment in the presentation of a petition for taxation on such grounds:—Held, fatal to the application. Exp. Jefferies, Re Browne, 1 De G. M. & G. 322; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 442.

To constitute a case for taxation of costs after payment on the ground of undue pressure, the pressure must have been of such a kind as to have rendered it impossible or difficult to have the costs taxed before payment in the ordinary course. Ib.

16. Where a bond and warrant of attorney, on which judgment was entered, were given twenty-seven years ago for costs due to a solicitor, the Court, upon an allegation that these costs had never been taxed or settled, refused to refer them for taxation at the instance of the surety of the client, and against the executor of the executor of the solicitor, who had died twenty years before. Masmell v. O'Dell, San. & Sc. 194.

17. A client executed a mortgage to his solicitor for a specified sum, being the amount at which past costs in a suit had been estimated, without the bills having been delivered, the solicitor undertaking to deliver the bills by a certain time, which he did. Four years afterwards the client changed his solicitor, and obtained an order for taxation of subsequent costs, but declined the offer of the solicitor to have the costs secured by the mortgage included in the taxation, and obtained the order without prejudice to any question as to those costs. Two years afterwards, the client filed a bill against the solicitor, to have the latter costs investigated and the account between the parties re-opened, but did not allege any specific overcharge or error:—Held, that the sum was precluded by length of time and acquiescence. Blagrove v. Routh, 8 De G. M. & G. 620.

1. A bill of costs was delivered by the solicitor in 1809, and shortly afterwards paid by the client: between that time and March 1817 four other bills were delivered, and various payments were made on account. In November 1817 a sixth bill was delivered, when the client paid the general balance due on the bills of costs, at the same time stating that he would insist on having the bills taxed. An application for taxation to a judge at law in 1818, and an application to the Court of King's Bench in 1819, failed, from circumstances not involving the merits of the question. Some attempts at a compromise were made from time to time, and the client was obliged, on three or four occasions, to leave England, in order to attend to urgent business in foreign countries; but at length, in 1824, a motion was made to have the bills referred for taxation, supported by evidence that some of the items of charge were improper. The Court ordered that the bill last delivered should be taxed generally, and that the five antecedent bills should be referred to the Master, with a direction that the client should deliver to the solicitor a schedule of the items complained of, and that the Master should exercise as large a discretion as he might think fit, with respect to the evidence on which he should proceed in forming his judgment concerning these items. Scougall v. Campbell, 3 Russ. 545.

2. Costs ordered to be taxed fourteen years after security given for the payment of them, it appearing that the costs had not been paid, although payments had been made on account of them; that the security had been given pendente lite, and while the relation of attorney and client existed between the parties; no account having been then settled between them, the client being then in embarrassed circumstances, some oppression having been used towards him by the attorney; but the vouchers having been given up to the client, it was ordered that the bills of costs should be prima facie evidence of the business done, and the reasonableness of the charge, with liberty to the client to surcharge and falsify. Fowler v. Moore, 2 Jones 415.

3. A cetui que trust agreed that her trustee, if he acted as solicitor in a suit, should receive full costs. A bill was delivered on the 18th February, and on the 8th March the solicitor ceased to act. After discussion as to the amount, and having received other professional advice, the client paid the bill on the 22nd May, a deduction being made therein. On an application being made within twelve months, the Court refused to order a taxation. Re Wyche, 11 Beav. 209.

4. Petition by mortgagor for taxation of the mortgagee's solicitor's bill, presented five months after it had been discharged by retainer, dismissed with costs, on the ground that it neither alleged any circumstances of pressure nor any specific item of overcharge. Dunt v. Dunt, 9 Beav. 146.

5. The lapse of twelve months between the payment of a bill of costs and the presentation of a petition for its taxation precludes taxation under the Act. Re Harper, 10 Beav. 284.

6. Quære, by Lord Cranworth, whether a bill can be ordered to be taxed above a year after payment unless fraud can be shown. Pemberton v. Tyther, 1 W. R. 86.

7. Refusal to order the taxation of a solicitor's bills of costs, the amount of which had been secured by a deed in the year 1819, although the suit was then pending; the client's affairs having, since the year 1822 (when that solicitor died), been in the hands of another solicitor, and there being no proof of such dealings between the solicitor and client, or of such errors or improper charges in the bill, as could amount to evidence of fraud. Waters v. Taylor, 2 Myl. & C. 526; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 245; 1 Jur. 375. Reversing 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 20.

8. A solicitor, acting on behalf of mortgagees, sold the mortgaged premises, and on the 27th June 1850 he retained the amount of his bill of costs out of the proceeds of the sale. On the 29th June 1850 he sent a copy of the bill to the solicitor of the mortgagor, and, on the 27th June 1851 the mortgagor applied for an order for taxation:—Held, that the taxation might have been had upon the common order; that the petition was presented in time; that it could scarcely be considered a payment of the bill of costs until the petitioner had the means of knowing the amount of the surplus, and that he was entitled to taxation, but that he must pay the costs beyond the costs of the common order. Re Steele, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 562.

9. When the bill was delivered on the 14th October 1842, for which the client gave his note on the 3rd November, and which was paid on the 17th in the same year, and, on the 15th November, in the following year, a petition for taxation was presented, which was answered on the 16th and served on the 21st; the day of hearing was the 24th:—Held, that the bill was to be considered as paid on the 17th November 1842, and the application for taxation as made at the latest on the 16th November, 1843, and therefore made within the twelve months, according to s. 41 of the statute. Sayer v. Wagstaff, 5 Beav. 415; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 161. Affirmed 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 116; 8 Jur. 1083.

10. Where a bill of costs was delivered on the completion of a purchase, to which the solicitor was a party and he refused to complete the purchase without payment:—Held, that the circumstances were evidence of pressure, and justified taxation after payment, notwithstanding five months had elapsed before the presentation of the petition. Re Pugh, Exp. Briscoe, 11 W. R. 762; 8 L. T., N. S., 586; 1 De G. J. & S. 673. Affirming 32 Beav. 173.

11. A solicitor delivered a general estimate of costs due to him, without specifying the particulars. The client signed a memorandum agreeing to the statement, and requesting A. (to whom he had given his acceptance) to pay the amount. A bill filed by the client more than three years afterwards, to obtain a delivery and taxation of the bill of costs, was dismissed with costs. Turner v. Hand, 27 Beav. 561.

12. A solicitor, who was the chief acting executor of a client, retained the amounts of his bills of costs, as solicitor of the testator and of the executors, out of the assets received by him, and died. A suit was instituted for the administration of his estate. Twelve years after his death, and twenty years after the solicitor had ceased to act professionally for the executors of the testator, the testator's representative sought against the representatives of the deceased solicitor an order for the delivery and taxation of the solicitor's bills, under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73:—Held, that whether the Act gave jurisdiction to make such an order or not, such an order ought not to be made. Exp. Shackell, 2 De G. M. & G. 842; 17 Jur. 793.

Executors retained the son of one of them to act as their solicitor in the administration of the estate, and the solicitor's bills, or some of them, were paid by credit being given to the son in accounts between him and his father:—Held, that this fact was not such a special circumstance as would warrant an order for the delivery and taxation of the son's bills of costs, upon a petition presented under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, ten years after the payment, even if that interval did not exclude the jurisdiction to make such an order. Id.

1. A client having withdrawn from a litigation, his solicitor agreed to take one-third of his bill in full discharge, if the suit (which was to be carried on for the benefit of another party) failed; and the client agreed to pay the remaining two-thirds, if it succeeded. The Court refused, eight years afterwards, when the suit had succeeded, to open the transaction by ordering a taxation of the bill. Re Moss, 17 Beav. 340.

2. When a client has paid his solicitor's bill under pressure before the delivery of the bill he is entitled to have it taxed, at any time before the expiration of a year. Re Fielder, Exp Bailey, 40 L. J., Ch., 615; 25 L. T., N. S., 55.

3. An account settled between a client and her solicitor, including arranged bills of costs, decreed to be opened and the bills referred for taxation in an action instituted nearly two years after such settlement, on the grounds of undue influence, and that the charges were improper and excessive, and that much of the business done was unnecessary, and ought not to have been done. Watson v. Rodwell, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 625; 47 L. J., Ch., 418; 26 W. R. 524. Affirmed 11 L. R., Ch. D., 150; 27 W. R. 265; 48 L. J., Ch., 209; 39 L. T. 614.

In Case of Third Parties. 4. Where a solicitor's bill has been paid by a trustee, the cestui que trust cannot, after the expiration of twelve months from payment, obtain a taxation as against the solicitor, although he had no notice of the payment until after the twelve months had expired, semble. Re Donnes, 5 Beav. 425; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 159.

5. The lapse of twelve calendar months after payment of a bill of costs precludes taxation under the Solicitors Act. This rule applies where payment is made by trustees, etc., and the application for taxation is made, under the 38th section of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 75, by a party "liable to pay." Re Massey, 8 Beav. 458.

6. Twelve months after payment of a bill of costs by trustees to their solicitor it cannot be taxed, upon the application of their cestui que trust. Re Press, 35 Beav. 34.

4. What Bills.

7. Upon an application to tax a paid bill, the solicitor will not be permitted to add to any under-charges contained therein, but the taxation must be had on the bill as delivered and paid. Re Wells, 8 Beav. 416; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215; 9 Jur. 820.

8. A bill of costs was settled by retainer; a second and subsequent bill was also settled in the same way:—Held, on an application to tax the second bill only, that the solicitor could not insist on having both taxed. Re Gregg, 30 Beav. 259; 31 L. J., Ch., 632; 10 W. R. 127.

9. W., on the 31st May 1865, agreed in writing to take a lease from G. to T., and to pay their costs of the agreement and of the lease and counterpart, and incidental thereto. W. paid the bill, and afterwards applied for taxation against the solicitors. An order was made to tax the bill, "upon the terms of the agreement dated the 31st May 1865":—Held, that this reference to the agreement was erroneous, for that the order must be to tax the bill which W. had paid, without anything to limit the bill to that which would be the proper bill as between G. and T. and W. Re Newman, 2 L. R., Ch., 707; 15 W. R. 1189; 17 L. T., N. S., 128.

5. Payment. What is.

10. Bill may be taxed after bond and mortgage given as security for same. Aubrey v. Popkin, Dick. 403.

11. Court will order attorney's bill to be taxed, though he has a mortgage to secure payment. Walmesley v. Booth, 2 Atk. 29.

12. A solicitor being indebted to A. and having a demand against B., a client, prevailed on B. to give A. a bond for 3,000*l.*, as part satisfaction of the costs due from B. A. knew that the sum claimed from B. was due for costs, but had no notice that the costs had not been taxed. Taxation decreed. Harrison v. Wiltshire, 9 Sim. 255; 2 Jur. 679.

13. A settlement of a bill of costs during the continuance of the suit, while the client has no professional adviser, except the solicitor himself, is not a bar to its taxation. Crossley v. Parker, 1 Jac. & Walk. 460.

14. Where a bill of costs has been delivered and security given for the amount, that is equivalent to payment, for the purpose of precluding taxation without special circumstances. Exp. Turner, 5 De G. M. & G. 540; 24 L. J., Ch., 71.

A solicitor delivered his bill to his client, and by letter informed him that payment might be postponed if taxation were intended. After the delivery of the bill of costs, and on the occasion of a purchase by the client, and of a mortgage to raise part of the purchase money, which the client required in order to complete the purchase, the client executed a mortgage to the solicitor for a round sum, which included and exceeded by a small amount the bill of costs and the amount of advances made formerly by the solicitor to the client. Some time afterwards, the client applied for and received the excess, and subsequently the mortgage was transferred, with the client's concurrence:—Held, that this amounted to payment of the bill, so as to preclude taxation without further special circumstances than the above. Id.

15. Taxation ordered at the instance of a legatee, of a bill of the executor's solicitor, for the amount of which a mortgage had been given by them. Re Drake, 22 Beav. 438.

1. Upon paying off a mortgage, the bill of the mortgagees' solicitor, though objected to, was paid in full, the solicitor undertaking "to refund" so much of "the mortgagees' law charges" as might be "found to be in excess of what they were entitled to receive":—Held, that the Court would enforce the undertaking, upon petition, by ordering a taxation, and that it was to be as between the mortgagor and mortgagees. Re Fisher, 18 Beav. 183.

2. The amount of a bill of costs was included in a settled account between a solicitor and client, and retained by the solicitor out of moneys in his hands:—Held, that the Court had not jurisdiction upon petition under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, to open the account and order taxation, and that it could not be done by bill. Barrell v. Brooks, 8 Beav. 121.

3. A mortgagee's solicitor retained the amount of his bill of costs out of the produce of the sale of the mortgaged estate, and he charged the amount in an account delivered to the mortgagor:—Held, that an order for taxation within twelve months might be obtained as of course; and a special petition having been presented for that object, the order was made, but the petitioner was ordered to pay the costs. Re Bignold, 9 Beav. 269.

4. A solicitor delivered to his client a bill of costs together with a cash account, showing in favour of the client a balance of 1*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* The client, upon applying for such balance, was by inadvertence paid 1*l.* 16*s.* only:—Held, that there had been no payment of the bill, and that the client was entitled to the common order for taxation. Re Angove, 46 L. T. 280. Reversed 26 S. J. 417.

5. A solicitor, acting on behalf of mortgagees, sold the mortgaged premises, and on the 27th June 1850 he retained the amount of his bill of costs out of the proceeds of the sale. On the 29th June 1850 he sent a copy of the bill to the solicitor of the mortgagor, and on the 27th June 1851 the mortgagor applied for an order for taxation:—Held, that the taxation might have been had upon the common order; that the petition was presented in time; that it could scarcely be considered a payment of the bill of costs until the petitioner had the means of knowing the amount of the surplus; and that he was entitled to taxation; but that he must pay the costs beyond the costs of the common order. Re Steele, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 562.

6. A solicitor retained the amount of his bill out of moneys in his hands belonging to the client, and the client, on receiving the balance of the moneys, but before the bill had been delivered, signed an account in which the total amount of the costs was an item, and gave a receipt for the balance:—Held, that there had been no payment of the bill within the meaning of 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 41; and that the client was entitled to have the bill taxed more than a year after the retainer of the costs and the signature of the account. Re Street, 10 L. R., Eq., 165; 39 L. J., Ch., 495; 22 L. T., N. S., 429.

Held, also, that a special application was necessary under the circumstances. Id.

7. A client gave his solicitor a promissory note, and signed a memorandum of settlement; the Court was strongly inclined to think that under the circumstances it ought to be deemed to amount to payment. The lapse of twelve months between the payment of a bill of costs and the presentation of a petition for its taxation precludes taxation under the act. Re Harper, 10 Beav. 284.

8. A retainer of a sum of money by a solicitor out of moneys received for his client, is not a payment of his bill by the client. Re Brady, 15 W. R. 632.

9. When, on the transfer of a mortgage, the transferee has paid the amount claimed and accepted a deed, which recites that a certain sum is due to the original mortgagee for costs, and contains an assignment of that sum as well as of the principal and interest, he cannot afterwards obtain an order for taxation of the mortgagee's solicitor's bill. Re Gold, 19 W. R. 343; 24 L. T., N. S., 9.

6. Payment to Recover Papers on Complete Transactions.

10. Bill may be taxed after payment made for purpose of getting papers from solicitor's hands. Audrey v. Popkin, Dick 404.

11. Taxation ordered after payment under protest, the payment being insisted on, as a condition for parting with a deed necessary to complete a purchase. Re Tryon, 7 Beav. 496.

12. It is a "special circumstance" within the meaning of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 7, where a solicitor produces his bill at the time appointed for the settlement of a transaction, and refuses to complete except on payment thereof. Re Bennett, 8 Beav. 467; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 403.

13. It is a "special circumstance," within the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 75, where, on paying off a mortgage, a solicitor produces his bill and insists on payment as a condition for immediate completion, though items are objected to, and a taxation will be directed after payment, if there are apparent overcharges. Re Wells, 8 Beav. 416; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215; 9 Jur. 820.

14. If a solicitor has refused to allow certain deeds to be executed until his bill of costs is paid, and the bill is paid under protest, and the deeds executed, this may constitute such a "special circumstance" as to induce the Court to tax the bill under 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73. Exp Andrews, Re Clement, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 222; 8 Jur. 327.

15. As to the legal effect of a payment of a bill of costs "under protest." Mortgagee's solicitor delivered his bill to the mortgagor nearly three weeks before the day of settlement. At the meeting the bill was objected to; but the solicitor refused to complete without full payment, and the mortgagor paid it under protest:—Held, that this was not sufficient to authorise a taxation, although there might be some overcharges. Re Harrison, 10 Beav. 57; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 170; 11 Jur. 197.

16. Taxation of a bill paid under protest, on the ground of overcharges, and that the solicitor had refused to part with the title-deeds until payment, refused with costs, it not appearing how long the bill had been.

delivered before payment. Re Mash, 15 Beav. 83.

The principle of taxation after payment is not to be extended. Id.

1. Payment of a solicitor's bill, delivered at the last moment of settling a mortgage, being insisted on without any opportunity of examination being afforded, is a "special circumstance" within the meaning of the Solicitors' Act. Re Jones, 8 Beav. 479.

A mortgagee's solicitor would not part with the deeds until payment of his bill of costs, which had been delivered to the mortgagor's solicitor a month previously:—Held, that this was not a sufficient case of pressure to induce the Court to order a taxation. Id.

A mortgagor has not a right to have the bills of the mortgagee's solicitor taxed upon different principles from those which would be applied to the taxation of the same bill upon the petition of the mortgagee. Id.

2. The single fact that, upon a transfer of a mortgage, a mere draft bill of costs of the mortgagee's solicitor is, for the first time, produced and then paid, is not of itself, without proof of pressure or fraud, a sufficient "special circumstance" to authorise taxation after payment; nor is that fact sufficient, coupled with overcharges which are not so gross as to evidence fraud. Re Fyson, 9 Beav. 117.

3. A meeting was appointed to settle important matters on the 23rd August, and the costs were to be paid by A. B. The bill of costs was delivered the evening before, and payment was then insisted on, though the bill was objected to. Upon evidence of overcharge, taxation was ordered after payment. Re Elmshie, 12 Beav. 538.

4. Order made for taxation of bills of costs after payment, where the solicitor had produced them, on the execution of a mortgage, out of the produce of which they had been paid, but had taken them back immediately, and afterwards refused to produce them. Re Loughborough, 23 Beav. 439.

It is not necessary to specify items of overcharge upon a petition for taxation after payment, in a case in which the solicitor, by retaining the bill of costs, and refusing to produce them, prevents the client pointing out the overcharges. Id.

5. Where the alleged pressure consisted in the refusal to allow the execution of a reconveyance, which was required without delay to make a good title to a purchaser, except on payment of the bill of the mortgagee's solicitor—taxation after payment refused. Re Dolman, 2 W. R. 447.

6. Where a client intends to pay a bill of costs at the meeting to complete a matter, the mere fact of the bill being then delivered, and of his paying it, without having had an opportunity of examining it, will not alone be sufficient to entitle the client to a taxation, but such a circumstance forms a material consideration. Re Abbott, 18 Beav. 393; 23 L. J., Ch., 955; 2 W. R. 379.

Items of overcharge must be shown to warrant a taxation after payment. Id.

A mortgagor and her solicitor met the mortgagee's solicitor to complete, when the money was paid in three cheques, one of which was handed to the mortgagor's solicitor, who retained it for his costs. His bill was delivered at the time in a sealed packet. Items of overcharge being afterwards proved, a taxation was directed. Id.

7. A., the mortgagee's solicitor, sent a reconveyance to B., the mortgagor's solicitor, for execution, unstamped. On the 23rd August B. delivered his bill of costs, which was objected to; and on the 10th September A. applied to B. for the loan of the deed to get it stamped, on his undertaking to return it, which was refused; and on the 18th September the mortgage and bill were paid. The mortgagee afterwards applied for a taxation, and the pressure relied on was, that he had been compelled to pay the bill, in order to get the reconveyance stamped, and avoid the penalties; and, secondly, that no taxation could be had in the long vacation. He also alleged overcharges, which were not clearly made out. The application was refused, with costs. Re Hubbard, 15 Beav. 251.

8. A mortgagor, without giving six months' notice, requested the mortgagee to accept payment and to transfer the mortgage. The transfer being executed, the mortgagee's solicitors refused to deliver it or the title-deeds to the mortgagor without payment of their bill of costs. The mortgagor's solicitor objected to items amounting to less than 9% in all, but paid the full amount, in order to obtain the deeds:—Held, that the above were not such special circumstances as to subject the bill to taxation after payment. Rep. Barton, 4 De G. M. & G. 108; 22 L. J., Ch., 670.

Semble, that one of the special circumstances required is overcharge, and that an item objected to, not because the business was not done or because the charge was excessive, but because the liability to pay it is disputed, is not such an overcharge as to be sufficient ground for taxing a paid bill. Id.

9. On the day appointed for "paying off" a mortgage the solicitor of the mortgagee refused to part with the title-deeds until payment of his bill of 18%, which had been delivered two days previously. It was paid under protest. The Court refused a taxation, no pressing necessity for the title-deeds appearing, and no items of overcharge being distinctly shown. Re Finch, 16 Beav. 585; 1 Eq. Rep. 109.

10. A bill of costs was delivered on the day appointed to complete the transfer of a mortgage. It was objected to, but the solicitor of the mortgagee refused to complete until payment. The mortgagor paid it, but it was afterwards ordered to be taxed. Re Phillpotts, 18 Beav. 84; 2 W. R. 3.

11. A mortgagee's solicitor's bill was delivered at the completion of the mortgage transaction, and the amount retained, after objection. A petition, presented eleven months afterwards, for taxation, was refused, although the bill contained an objectionable item of 20% for procuration money. Re Bayley, 18 Beav. 415.

12. A mortgagor presented a petition, praying that certain bills of costs, which had been paid under certain special circumstances, might be taxed. The petition stated that a meeting was appointed for the completion of a transfer of mortgages and payment of the money, and that the solicitor of the mortgagees presented four bills of costs, two of which were agreed upon, and the others, which related to matters between the mortgagees and their solicitor, not; but as a postponement of the settlement might be serious to the mortgagor, it was agreed that they should be paid by him. The bills contained improper and exorbitant charges, and the petition specified items of overcharge:—Held, that as the statements and evidence showed a case of great and unnecessary pressure, and as the bills, which were between the solicitor and other parties, contained items which could not be duly examined at the time, there was sufficient reason on either ground to induce the Court to make the order. Re Kinair, Exp. Price, 5 Jur., N. S., 423.

If payment be made under pressure, the circumstance of pressure alone is enough to induce the Court to order a taxation. Id.

Even without pressure, items of overcharge are enough to render the circumstances special, under s. 41 of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73. Id.

It is not sufficient, in order to exclude taxation, to show that no objection was made at the time to the payment either of particular items or of the whole bill. Id.

1. On the day fixed for the completion, at a solicitor's office, of the sale of a mortgaged property belonging to a former client, the solicitor delivered to the former client, who was in somewhat embarrassed circumstances, his bill of costs. The client and his new solicitor attended, and in order to prevent the postponement of the completion, allowed the solicitor to retain the amount of his bill, but under protest. The bill contained overcharges to a considerable amount:—Held, that the bill was paid under circumstances of pressure, and that it must be taxed. Re Pugh, Exp. Briscoe, 1 De G. J. & S. 673; 11 W. R. 762; 8 L. T., N. S., 586. Affirming 32 Beav. 173.

2. A tenant having an option of purchase of the fee at a given price on the terms of his paying all the vendor's costs, gave notice in December 1882 of his exercise of the option, and stated that he should not require an abstract of title. The time for completion was the 25th March 1883, but it was arranged for the tenant's convenience that the completion should be six weeks earlier, and that the property should be conveyed in two lots. He sent his draft conveyances for perusal before the end of December. On the 2nd February 1883 the vendor's solicitors sent in their bill of costs, in which they charged 30s. per cent. on the purchase money of each lot. The purchaser's solicitors objected to these charges, but the vendor's solicitors refused to allow completion unless they were paid, and on the 14th February the purchaser paid them under protest, and completed the purchase. After this he applied for taxation of the bill:—Held, that, having regard to the dates, there was no pressure, and that there was no overcharge amounting to fraud, and that there were therefore no special circumstances to authorise taxation after payment. Re Laocy & Son, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 301; 53 L. J., Ch., 287; 49 L. T. 755; 32 W. R. 233. Reversing S. C. sub. nom. Parker to George, 49 L. T. 553; 32 W. R. 222.

3. A solicitor delivered his bill of costs to his client, made out in double columns, one being the amount allowed on taxation, which he refused to accept when tendered. The client then paid the larger sum to obtain his papers:—Held, notwithstanding the payment, that he was entitled to an order to tax the bill, as he had been constrained to pay the larger sum by the refusal of the solicitor to accept what he himself had stated that he was legally entitled to. Exp. Tisland, Re Letts, 31 Beav. 488; 32 L. J., Ch., 100; 1 N. R. 8.

An order was made for repayment of the difference, and the costs of the petition. S. C. 8 Jur., N. S., 1119; 11 W. R. 15; 7 L. T., N. S., 303.

4. There is no general rule as to how much pressure will entitle a party to have a solicitor's bill taxed after payment. But if reasonable facilities for taxation have been refused at the last moment, when it has become imperative to the party to obtain immediately the papers to which the solicitor's lien applied, and the party has consequently paid the bill, that is a special circumstance which, coupled with items of apparent overcharge, will justify the Court in directing taxation after payment. Re Newman, 15 W. R. 1189; 17 L. T., N. S., 128; 2 L. R., Ch., 707.

It is no argument against taxation in such a case that the effect produced upon the party by the pressure arises out of his own conduct or private affairs. Id.

7. Protest.

5. A solicitor's bill of costs paid under pressure, and protested against, referred for taxation. Protest, combined with other circumstances, may be a ground of reference of a bill of costs for taxation. Where there is evidence of pressure, the Court will, if necessary, direct a general reference for taxation, although in the petition for taxation some only of the items of the bill of costs may be objected to. Exp. Wilkinson, Re Alcock, 2 Colly. 92; 9 Jur. 720.

6. The bill of trustees was delivered on the 27th November, and on the 10th December paid, after some deductions, by the solicitor of the cestui que trust, as he alleged, under protest. A petition for taxation, presented by the cestui que trust in January following, was dismissed with costs. The general rule is, that a paid bill is not to be referred for taxation, and special circumstances and grounds are required to take a case out of this rule. Re Neate, 10 Beav. 181.

7. In March 1847 a railway company agreed to purchase some property, and to pay the vendor's costs. In May 1847 possession was delivered. The bill of costs of the vendor's solicitor was delivered on the 13th June 1848, and a meeting, to complete the purchase, took place between the solicitors on the 20th June, when objections were then made to the bill. It was then paid, under protest, and with an intimation that it would be taxed, and a petition for taxation was presented a few days after:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of pressure to open the matter by ordering a taxation. Re Welohman, 11 Beav. 319.

1. Taxation of a bill paid under protest, on the ground of overcharges, and that the solicitor had refused to part with the title-deeds until payment, refused with costs, it not appearing how long the bill had been delivered before payment. Re Mash, 15 Beav. 83.

2. A protest upon payment of a bill of costs has no effect. Re Browne, 15 Beav. 61. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 322; 21 L. J., Ch., 442.

The cases of taxation after payment are not to be extended. Ib.

A bill was delivered, and, after dispute, paid under protest, about seven weeks after, in order to release a fund and pay a creditor, who threatened execution. A petition was presented for taxation nearly twelve months after the delivery, alleging no specific items of overcharge. It was dismissed. Ib.

3. W. employed F. as his solicitor from 1855 to 1859, and became indebted to him for costs and cash advances. In 1858 W. gave to F. a security upon his furniture, farming stock, etc., to secure all moneys due or to become due, with an immediate power of sale. In January 1859 F. sent in to W. an unsigned bill of costs and cash account, and in March pressed for payment, and threatened to enforce his security. W. then employed another solicitor, and a correspondence went on till May. F., on 17th May, gave notice that if the money were not paid on that day he should take possession under his security, and he accordingly did so. W. then paid the amount under protest. The bill of costs contained items to a considerable amount subsequently in date to the security, and overcharges were shown. Many of the vouchers for the items in the cash account, though applied for, had not been produced till the day of payment:—Held, that W. was entitled to an order for taxation. Re Foster, Esq. Walker, 2 De G. F. & J. 106; 6 Jur., N. S., 687; 29 L. J., Ch., 625.

See also Preceding Subdivision.

8. Pressure or Overcharge.

4. After bill of costs paid, and a receipt in full taken, the client is not entitled to an order to tax the costs, merely swearing they never had been taxed; he must show specific error. Mahon v. Scanlan, 2 Moll. 388.

5. Though the Court will open a solicitor's bill, and order taxation after several years, and a security given, or even payment, upon gross errors, fraud, or undue pressure, where nothing appeared but a trifling inaccuracy and under other favourable circumstances, the Court would not restrain proceedings upon a security obtained while business was depending. Cook v. Setree, 1 Ves. & B. 126.

6. Order for taxation of a solicitor's bill under the circumstances, after a settlement, upon the common petition, without stating the objectionable items. Jones v. Poyys, 10 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 49.

7. Taxation of a solicitor's bill refused, after a security given, payment, and acquiescence; some charges, though improper, not being so gross as to amount to fraud. Plenderleath v. Fraser, 3 Ves. & B. 174.

Generally a bond, taken by a solicitor from the client in the progress of a cause, subject to taxation. Id. 175.

8. An attorney's bill of costs settled and paid, or after judgment in action, not to be referred for taxation of course; as it may be upon a special case of fraud, or improper charges, notwithstanding payment, a release, judgment, or other security. Langstaffe v. Taylor, 14 Ves. 262.

9. A solicitor's bill of costs had been delivered, after the death of the client, to the solicitors employed by his representatives, and paid by them after investigation; and some, but not all, of the papers of the deceased client were delivered up. An application, made three years after, for the taxation of the bill, without referring to any specific errors, but alleging generally that the bill contained exorbitant charges, was refused. Horlock v. Smith, 2 Myl. & C. 495; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 236; 1 Jur. 302.

Where a client has paid his solicitor's bill without pressure, and with full means of examining it before payment, and afterwards seeks to open the bill and refer it for taxation, he must state, in his petition, and prove to the satisfaction of the Court, specific errors of such a character as amount to evidence of fraud. A general allegation of improper charges will not be sufficient. Ib.

A mere prima facie error in such a bill will not authorise the Court to refer it for taxation. Ib.

The circumstance, that a solicitor has omitted to give his client credit for certain items with which he ought to have been credited, will be a ground for a distinct inquiry what sums the solicitor has received which ought to be set off against the amount of the bill; but will not, of itself, be a ground for referring the whole bill for taxation. Ib.

Principles of the Court with respect to the taxation of a solicitor's bill after payment. Ib.

10. A petition for the taxation of a bill of costs set forth special circumstances sufficient in themselves to obtain an order for taxation, but the affidavits in support of it mentioned some of the items which were objected to, all of which were explained by the solicitors to the satisfaction of the Court. The petition was dismissed with costs. Esq. Andrews, Re Clement, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 222; 8 Jur. 327.

11. Petition to tax a bill of costs after payment, on the ground of trifling overcharges, dismissed with costs. Re Drake, 8 Beav. 123.

12. To obtain the taxation of a bill of costs after payment, the petitioner must allege and prove specific items of overcharge, even if the payment has been made under protest and upon pressure. Upon a petition for taxation, the Court has no jurisdiction to determine the construction of a disputed special contract as to the costs. The Court, though it refuses the prayer of a petition for taxation, does not always give the costs. Re Thompson, 8 Beav. 237; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 37; 9 Jur. 169.

13. Where an account, comprising bills of costs, is settled and paid as between a solicitor and client, and no surprise or fraud is practised, the Court will not direct a taxation of the bill, though it appears to contain items which would be disallowed or reduced on taxation, unless it appears that the overcharges are in themselves so extravagant and improper, as under the circumstances to be considered fraudulent. Massie v. Drake, 4 Beav. 433.

Upon the settlement of an account between a solicitor and his client, a sum of 75*l.* was retained by the solicitor, by consent, to answer particular costs not then ascertained. The Court limited the taxation to such particular costs. Ib.

1. A solicitor, pending a suit to administer the assets of a deceased client, brought an action against the executrix, and obtained judgment of the entire amount of very heavy untaxed bills of costs, relating, for the most part, to proceedings at law and an arbitration. He afterwards came in and filed a charge under the decree to account in the administration suit, insisting on his demand on foot of the judgment; and it appearing that the bills of costs contained several extraordinary and apparently excessive charges, the Court, on the motion of the defendant in the cause, grounded on an affidavit specifying the objectionable items, referred it to the Master to tax the costs for which the judgment had been obtained, with liberty to the Master, as to the costs of proceedings in other courts, to refer to the taxing officers of those courts. Gower v. Donovan, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 329.

2. To constitute a case for taxation of costs after payment, on the ground of undue pressure, the pressure must have been of such a kind as to have rendered it impossible or difficult to have the costs taxed before payment in the ordinary course. Re Browne, Exp. Jeffries, 1 De G. M. & G. 322; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 442.

To support such a petition on the ground of extravagant and improper charges, the allegations directed to that point must be specific, and must be such as to amount to evidence of fraud. Ib.

3. Where payment of a bill of costs has been obtained by undue pressure, a taxation may be directed on proof of overcharge, without showing that such overcharges are so gross as to amount to fraud. Re Wells, 8 Beav. 416; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215; 9 Jur. 820.

4. Where the client being desirous of raising a sum his solicitors agreed to obtain it, if the amount of their bills might be included and settled, which the client consented to on condition of their taking his acceptance for the bills, on being furnished with all of them, and which had not been delivered, and the acceptance was sworn to have been received in lieu of payment:—Held, that in the absence of any circumvention or oppression, the acceptance of payment under such circumstances was not such a special circumstance as to entitle the client to taxation after payment. The overcharges complained of and explained not being proved to such an extent as to amount to fraud, it was not sufficient that there were some overcharges which might have been disallowed on taxation. Re Currie, 9 Beav. 602; 10 Jur. 976.

5. A compromise of a solicitor's claim for costs, if effected under circumstances of pressure upon the client, does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court to tax the bills upon petition. Re Stephen, 2 Ph. 562. Varying 10 Jur. 585.

6. Taxation after payment ordered, on proof of pressure, and on showing grounds for thinking that the bill would be considerably reduced on taxation. Re Sladden, 10 Beav. 488.

7. Where a solicitor pressed for the amount of his bill, but offered an opportunity of taxation, and apprised his client that it would be difficult to have the bill taxed after payment, and the client chose to pay without taxation, and afterwards applied to have the bill taxed without showing overcharges amounting to fraud:—Held, that the application ought to have been dismissed with costs. Exp. Turner, 24 L. J., Ch., 71; 5 De G. M. & G. 540; 2 W. R. 617.

The client joined in the transfer of the security so given, and in the commencement of other matters employed the same solicitor, and in their completion employed another solicitor, and paid the second bill of costs:—Held, that these were not special circumstances to justify the taxation of the bill of costs. Ib.

Unless overcharge amount to fraud the Court will not refer bills of costs for taxation after payment. Ib.

8. Taxation ordered of a paid bill of a mortgagee's solicitor in a mixed case of pressure and of improper items. Re Rance, 22 Beav. 177.

9. A mortgagee took legal proceedings against the mortgagor whereby expenses were being incurred. The mortgagee's solicitor delivered his bill on the 25th December, and the parties met to complete a transfer on the 29th December. The bill contained a charge for an abstract, which was more than double what it ought to have been, but the solicitor refused to reduce it, and the bill was paid. It did not appear that any proposal had been made to settle the matter, and postpone the question of costs. The Court, considering that there had been both pressure and overcharge, ordered a taxation. Ib.

10. On application by a residuary legatee to tax a bill of costs of the solicitors of the executors after payment, no case of pressure or actual fraud was made out, nor of very gross overcharge, but various items were of a considerably greater amount than would have been allowed to the executors in a suit to administer the estate:—Held, that taxation had been rightly ordered, for that overcharges of this nature were overcharges amounting to fraud, within the technical meaning of the term. Re Dickson, 3 Jur., N. S., 29; 26 L. J., Ch., 89; 5 W. R. 108.

Held, also, that affidavits filed between the hearing before a Vice-Chancellor and of the appeal were receivable, though evidence so introduced was not entitled to much weight. Ib.

11. When a bill of costs is paid, the onus of proving overcharges is thrown on the client. Re Towle, 30 Beav. 170; 3 L. T., N. S., 283.

Charges for attendances, to the extent of eight on one day, are not sufficient to open a paid bill. Ib.

Where a mortgagee had instituted a suit for foreclosure, and an arrangement had been made for a transfer, and the bill of costs was not delivered until the day appointed for completion, but was not paid until fourteen days after, the Court refused to order a taxation, no overcharges being satisfactorily proved. The Court considered that the mortgagee ought to have obtained an order to stay the suit, on payment of the mortgage, and the deposit of the amount claimed for costs. Id.

1. On the occasion of the payment of a mortgage debt by the mortgagor, the mortgagee's solicitor delivered his bill of costs, which was paid by the mortgagor. The bill contained items to the amount of 10*l.* for the preparation of a bill of foreclosure against the mortgagor, which was never filed:—Held, that the preparation of the bill of foreclosure being under the circumstances unnecessary and improper, the charges were of such a nature as to induce the Court to allow taxation after payment although there had been no pressure or surprise. Re Barron, 2 W. R. 109; 18 Jur. 181.

9. Undue Influence.

2. Where the client was in the power of his solicitor, and without the means, or proper assistance, for obtaining any effective examination of the bills, which consisted of general items, and were otherwise not sufficiently explanatory, and the solicitor appeared to be driving the client into a bargain on unequal terms, the relation of attorney and client still continuing, the Court held that the latter was not precluded from an order for reference for taxation by the circumstances of an admission of the balance and payment of the settled account. Nokes v. Warton, 5 Beav. 448.

3. Agreement between a solicitor and his client, an illiterate person, for payment of his bills (taken at a given amount) solely out of the produce of some property, the subject of the suit:—Held, not to preclude taxation. Re Ingle, 21 Beav. 275; 1 Jur., N. S., 1059; 25 L. J., Ch., 169.

4. The retention and appropriation of money under such an agreement is not such a payment of the bill of costs as, under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, will supersede the taxation, especially when the client is illiterate and without professional assistance. Id.

5. An account which had been settled between a client, who was an old lady, and her solicitor, including arranged bills of costs, was ordered to be opened and the bills of costs taxed, after the lapse of nearly two years, without actual proof of error or overcharge, on the ground that the client had acted under undue influence and without sufficient information, and that much of the business charged for was unnecessary and improper. Watson v. Rodmell, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 150; 48 L. J., Ch., 209; 27 W. R. 265; 39 L. T. 614. Affirming 7 L. R., Ch. D., 625; 47 L. J., Ch., 418; 26 W. R. 524.

6. The solicitor of a mortgagee, at a meeting to execute the mortgage deeds, by directing the solicitor of the mortgagor to draw cheques on account of the money to be advanced for the payment of divers bills of costs owing to him, across which he required the mortgagee to sign her name at the back, at once withdraws his protection, and subjects the client and mortgagee to constraint and undue influence amounting to pressure, which, notwithstanding payment, will render the bills liable to taxation. Re Abbott, 23 L. J., Ch. 955; 18 Beav. 393; 2 W. R. 379.

XIV. AFTER ACTION BROUGHT.

7. Solicitor may proceed to tax his costs after a verdict at law, with a view to commence an action in his own name for the amount, after a final settlement between the parties by arbitration without his concurrence, notwithstanding an injunction to stay execution. Brooks v. Bourne, 1 Price 72.

8. A solicitor to a railway company, provisionally registered, brought an action against three of the managing directors for the amount of his bill of costs, and recovered judgment. An order was afterwards obtained for winding up the company under the Act, and a petition was then presented by the official manager for taxing the solicitor's bill, under the stat. 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, on the ground of excessive charges:—Held, that the Court could not be called upon to examine the items of a bill to ascertain their correctness, and that an allegation of excessive charges was not such a special circumstance as to bring the case within the 38th section of the Act. Petition dismissed, with costs. Re Vardy, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 325.

9. A bill of costs having been incurred by A. and B. jointly, and an action having been brought against them for the recovery of the amount, the Court refused to direct a taxation and to stay the proceedings at law, on the undertaking of A. alone, to pay what might be found due. Re Chilcote, 1 Beav. 421.

10. Where an action at law has been brought by a solicitor for his costs, and the defendant permitted judgment to go by default at law, Equity cannot interfere to order taxation. Bryan v. Twigg, 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 114.

11. A solicitor was employed by three partners. He brought an action against them for his bill of costs, and, representing one, he obtained judgment against him by default:—Held, that this did not prevent the others from obtaining an order for taxation; held, also, that an application for taxation by the two was regular, the third not concurring, but that he ought to be served with the petition. The taxing masters have jurisdiction to determine questions of retainer. Re Hair, 10 Beav. 187; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 163; 11 Jur. 139.

12. A judgment at law which is not final does not preclude an order of course for taxation. Re Gedye, 15 Beav. 254.

How far a judgment signed at law for default will prevent the obtaining an order of course in this court; and whether such order, if granted, will not stay execution on such judgment, quære. S. C. 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 430.

13. A client obtained an order of course to tax after action brought, but before notice of it, and the order did not provide for the costs of the action:—Held, that this was not irregular, and a motion to discharge it was refused with costs. Re Farrington, 33 Beav. 346.

14. After final judgment, signed by an attorney and solicitor, in an action upon his bills of costs, there can be no reference for taxation under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, except under special circumstances, although there has been no verdict nor writ of inquiry executed in the action. Re Barnard, 17 Jur. 53; 2 De G. M. & G. 359.

Semble, that after the question of taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs has been adjudicated upon in an action, a special petition to this Court to tax the costs, under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37, cannot be entertained. Ib.

Semble, that after judgment in an action for costs the special jurisdiction to direct taxation given by the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, is gone. Ib.

In an action brought by an attorney against his client, upon his bill of costs, the client obtained an order for taxation on the terms of withdrawing all his pleas except nunquam in-debitatus. Afterwards he withdrew all his pleas, and applied to the judge for an order of taxation, under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, which was refused for want of jurisdiction:—Held, that the client could not obtain an order for taxation from the Court of Chancery, there being no special circumstance beyond mere overcharge. Ib.

1. A solicitor brought an action at law for the recovery of his bill of costs. The client contested the retainer, and while the action was pending, obtained an order of course to tax the bill of costs; but the order contained no submission to pay what, upon taxation, should be found due. Upon motion to discharge the order as irregular:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to make such an order; but that in such a case the facts ought to be brought specially before the Court, which would make a special order, according to the circumstances of the case. The Court made a special order; and in case the respondent should refuse to take it, directed the order of course to be discharged, but without costs. Re Thurgood, 18 Jur. 821; 23 L. J., Ch., 952; 19 Beav. 821.

XV. ORDER TO TAX AS BETWEEN PARTY AND PARTY.

2. When costs are given against a party, he must pay the costs of his antagonist when taxed as between party and party. Kirkwood v. Lyons, 1 Hog. 116.

3. In a suit to restrain the piracy of a literary work, a plaintiff who, in opposition to the defendant's denial of his title, obtains an injunction, is entitled to an answer from the defendant for the purpose of having his title admitted (in case, by arrangement between the parties, the title is not established at law), and also of having an account from the defendant of the profits made by the sale of the spurious work. The plaintiff, therefore, under such circumstances, is entitled to the cost of the suit, including the answer as between party and party; and if, by the refusal of the defendant to pay those costs, the plaintiff is compelled to bring his cause to a hearing, he will be entitled to the whole costs of the suit as between party and party, although, at the hearing, he may waive the account. And the plaintiff's equity in this respect will not be affected by his having offered to waive his right to an answer, with a view to obtain terms more beneficial to himself than the Court would, under any circumstances, afford to him; as, for instance, with a view to receive costs as between solicitor and client. Kelly v. Hooper, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 197.

4. Costs of process of contempt for not answering, not allowed in the taxation of costs of suit as between party and party. Att.-Gen. v. Carrington (Lord), 6 Beav. 454; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 453.

5. In a suit against an attorney, for the purpose of having his bills of costs on the plaintiff taxed, and for an injunction against his proceeding at law in the meantime, defendants moved that the costs might be taxed as between attorney and client; but the Court said, that the rules of taxation of costs, as between attorney and client, did not apply where they appear in the court as party and party in a cause, and that these costs, therefore, must be taxed as between party and party. Spelman v. Woodbine, 1 Cox 49.

6. A railway company, made a defendant in order to ascertain the amount of shares belonging to a testator's estate, will only have party and party costs on being dismissed. De Combe v. De Combe, 3 Jur., N. S., 712.

7. Where a company is made a defendant to a bill by a plaintiff claiming an incumbrance on shares of a shareholder, also made defendant, the company is entitled to costs as between party and party from the plaintiff, and to the difference between such costs and costs as between solicitor and client out of the fund. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London, and China v. De Jonge, 9 L. T., N. S., 678.

See also Next Subdivision and Titles there referred to.

What Items Allowed.] See XVIII. infra.

XVI. ORDER TO TAX AS BETWEEN SOLICITOR AND CLIENT.

8. The Exchequer never orders costs to be taxed, as between attorney and client. Leathes v. Nerritt, 8 Price 570. S. P. Fontaine v. Tyler, 9 Price 105; Sharples v. Sharples, 13 Price 748; McClcl, 505.

9. Costs directed by decree to be taxed as between a solicitor and client, cannot, on petition, be ordered to be taxed on another principle. Massie v. Drake, 4 Beav. 533.

10. The 159th General Order does not affect or regulate the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client. Brangan v. Gorges, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 225.

11. By a decree, the costs of all parties were ordered to be taxed as between solicitor and client. Upon a re-hearing, the decree was affirmed, and the deposit was ordered to be returned, but nothing was said as to costs. By a subsequent order, the costs of all parties were ordered to be taxed, as between solicitor and client, from the last taxation. Held, that this did not include the costs of the re-hearing. Agabeg v. Hartwell, 5 Beav. 271.

12. An adverse application was made against a receiver by a party to the cause, which was refused with costs. The applicant being wholly unable to pay the costs:—Held, that the receiver was entitled to be indemnified and have his costs, as between solicitor and client, out of the fund in hand belonging to incumbrancers. Courand v. Hammer, 9 Beav. 3.

13. Costs as between solicitor and client will be allowed to the plaintiff, in a legatee's suit, where there is a deficient fund. Burkitt v. Ransom, 2 Colly. 536.

1. A solicitor's bill having been partly taxed and paid, an order, obtained as of course, referring the bill generally for taxation, was discharged with costs. The conduct of the solicitor cannot be adduced in support of such an order, and the costs of affidavits upon that subject were ordered to be paid as between solicitor and client. Clutton v. Pardon, T. & B. 301. And see Gretton v. Leyburne, id. 407.

2. In cases of scandal the costs are as between solicitor and client. Exp. Porter, Re Robinson, 2 Mont. & A. 220.

3. Affidavit in bankruptcy ordered to be taken off the file as irrelevant and scandalous, with costs as between attorney and client. Exp. Simpson, 15 Ves. 476.

4. Costs as between attorney and client against parties to a fraudulent bankruptcy, except those who discovered and gave evidence; and the attorney deprived of the office of master extraordinary, and committed. Exp. Thorp, 1 Ves. J. 394.

5. A suit instituted by a solicitor without authority was dismissed on motion, with costs of the suit, and of the motion, as between solicitor and client. Allen v. Bone, 4 Beav. 493.

6. When an unsuccessful party has been ordered to pay costs, it is not the practice to direct such costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client, except where a fiduciary relation exists between the parties, or where there is something in the nature of scandal, as where gross charges of fraud have been made and not sustained; but the Court may direct an unsuccessful party to pay the costs of a trustee as between solicitor and client, whether there is or not any fund out of which they may be paid. Turner v. Collins, 12 L. R., Eq., 488; 40 L. J., Ch., 614; 25 L. T., N. S., 264.

7. A bill was filed by a solicitor as next friend, charging that the plaintiff was of unsound mind, against the plaintiff's house-keeper, to restrain her from exercising undue influence over the plaintiff. Proceedings directed by the Court to be taken by the next friend in lunacy to ascertain the state of plaintiff's mind having resulted in a dismissal by the lords justices of the next friend's petition in lunacy with costs, the plaintiff applied to have the bill taken off the file, and Malins, V.-Ch., made an order accordingly, but, being of opinion that the suit had not been instituted by the next friend without reasonable cause, gave no costs. On appeal upon the subject of costs, the lords justices, in reversal pro tanto of the Vice-Chancellor's order, gave costs to the plaintiff as between solicitor and client, and to the defendant as between party and party. Palmer v. Walesby, 37 L. J., Ch., 612; 19 L. T., N. S., 1. See Davies v. Davies, 18 L. T., N. S., 701.

A person who has been made plaintiff without authority, is entitled to full indemnity; and a defendant who, by reason of the bill being ordered to be taken off the file, cannot be heard on the merits, is entitled to costs as if the cause had come to a hearing, and the bill been dismissed on the merits. Id.

8. A taxation at the instance of a mortgagor of the bill of the mortgagor's solicitor, must be as between the solicitor and his client, the mortgagee. Re Wells, 8 Beav. 416; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215; 9 Jur. 820.

9. The taxation of the bill of a mortgagee's solicitor, at the instance of the mortgagor, takes place as between the solicitor and the mortgagee, his client. Re Harrison, 10 Beav. 57; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 170; 11 Jur. 197.

1. In General.

10. The Court refused (but without costs) a motion for special direction to Master, requiring him to deduct, in his taxation of costs of the parties, the costs which he should allow to defendant from those which he should allow to plaintiff (who had become insolvent) after decree had been passed and acted upon. Rumney v. Beale, 10 Price 113.

11. A motion for the taxation of a solicitor's bill, with special directions to disallow the costs of certain proceedings alleged to have been improperly taken by the solicitor, or with a qualification that the tax was to be of the costs of such proceedings only as had been properly incurred, refused, as such objections may be taken advantage of under the common order for a taxation. Wiggins v. Pippin, 2 Beav. 403. See S. C. 3 Jur. 721.

12. Where a report of scandal or impertinence has been excepted to, the Master cannot tax the costs of the reference, under the 22nd Order of 1833, without further order. Desanges v. Gregory, 6 Sim. 473.

13. Under a general order of taxation, the Master will, without any special direction, exercise a discretion as to taxing the costs of informal proceedings. Clayton v. Meadows, 2 Hare 26.

14. The Master has no jurisdiction to tax costs under the 201st General Order, except with the consent of both solicitor and client. Massy v. Millar, Sau. & Sc. 425.

15. Two solicitors, A. and B., dissolved partnership, and it was agreed that B. should be entitled to half the profits of a suit instituted by them. After some time an order was made, by consent of both, for the taxation of the costs down to the date. Some of the costs had, unknown to B., been already taxed, and received by A.:—Held, under the circumstances, that the order comprised all such costs; and the previous costs having been omitted in the Master's certificate, the Court, upon a petition to review the taxation, referred the matter back to the Master. Greenwood v. Churchill, 14 Beav. 160.

1. The defendant having succeeded in two interlocutory applications, with costs to be paid to him by the plaintiff, the costs were measured by the Court, pursuant to the 159th General Order. The bill was afterwards dismissed for want of prosecution, and upon taxation, the Master, notwithstanding the award of the sum for costs, taxed the defendant's costs of the two applications to sums greater than those awarded:—Held, that the sum awarded by the Court was final and conclusive, and that the Master was not authorised to tax those costs. Woodley v. Woodley, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 77.

The 159th General Order applies to all interlocutory motions. Ib.

2. An order, directing the costs of the suit to be taxed, warrants a taxation up to the time of the Master's making his report, semble. Clutton v. Pardon, T. & R. 304.

3. Parties agreed to compromise a suit, and that the costs, charges, and expenses, as between solicitor and client, should be paid out of the fund:—Held, that the taxing master ought to treat the suit as properly constituted, and ought not, in the taxation, to consider whether defendants, having interests similar to the plaintiffs, should have been made co-plaintiffs; and, secondly, that if any of the parties entering into the compromise intended to challenge the propriety of the constitution of the suit, they ought to have distinctly stated, and have provided for it in the agreement. Lucas v. Peacock, 8 Beav. 1.

4. On a reference for taxation the taxing master has no jurisdiction to judge of the propriety of a compromise entered into on behalf of the client, which the client has taken no proceedings to impeach. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 511.

5. A decree directed a reference to the Master to tax the defendant's bills of costs, and a reference to the Master in Ordinary to take an account of all the dealings and transactions between the plaintiff and the defendants. By a subsequent order made on a motion, it was directed that, notwithstanding the decree, both references should go to the taxing master:—Held, first, that the order was erroneous as varying the decree in such a manner in which it could not be varied upon motion without consent. King v. Savery, 8 De G. M. & G. 311.

Held, secondly, that matters unconnected with bills of costs could not, under the 9th Order of the 20th October 1842, be referred to the taxing master. Ib.

6. A bill was dismissed with costs. Considerable costs had been incurred by the examination and cross-examination of witnesses in Australia under a commission:—Held, that the Master must have regard to the rules of taxation there; but the Court refused to refer the taxation of that bill to the proper officer in Australia. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 34 Beav. 455.

In the course of a suit in this country, special examiners were appointed to take evidence in Sydney. That evidence was duly taken. The costs of taking it, which were very heavy, were taxed as between solicitor and client, at Sydney, and paid by the defendant. The scale of taxation there was larger than here. The bill in the suit was dismissed by the Master of the Rolls at the hearing, and ultimately on appeal by the House of Lords. Upon the question what was the proper course to adopt with reference to the final taxation of the costs of taking the evidence at Sydney, the Court was of opinion that the bill of costs ought to be finally taxed in this country on the same scale as it would have been taxed in Australia; and that if the Master here felt any difficulty, he must refer to Sydney for information to guide him. S. C. 13 W. R. 486; 13 L. T., N. S., 226.

2. Discretion.

7. The taxing master has, under the Solicitors' Act, 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, a discretion to disallow costs he may think unduly claimed. Re Clark, 1 De G. M. & G. 43; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 20; 15 Jur. 1047. Affirming 13 Beav. 173.

The disallowance of the whole costs of an action of replevin, where replevin was clearly the wrong remedy, is a proper exercise of that discretion. Ib.

8. Great discretion is allowed to the taxing master as to the items of the costs of taxation. Where, upon appeal from the taxing master, there appeared considerable difficulty in ascertaining the real facts, and questions of law depended upon them, the Court directed an action to try the question. Re Burchell, 11 Beav. 596; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 236.

9. Where, under an order directing an account of what was due to a party in respect of costs of proceedings taken by him to enforce a judgment in the Exchequer Division, the taxing master to whom the bill of costs was referred disallowed the costs of certain abortive garnishee summonses. On a summons to review the taxation:—Held, that the taxing master was not precluded by the form of order from disallowing any costs that he thought proper, and that, under Rules of Court 1875 (Costs), Ord. VII., r. 26, he was bound to do so; also that the costs in question were properly disallowed. Simmons v. Storer, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 154; 49 L. J., Ch., 121; 42 L. T. 291; 28 W. R. 408.

See also XXII. infra.

3. What Items are Taxable.

10. If a solicitor retains money received by him in his character of solicitor, for the use of his client, his bill is taxable, though it contains no charges for business done in a court of law, or equity. Semble, items in a solicitor's bill for preparing and settling a bill in equity, will render the solicitor's bill taxable, though the bill in equity was never filed. Re Barker, 6 Sim. 476.

11. Under the common order for taxing a solicitor's bill, the Master is bound to take a general account of receipts and payments by the solicitor, as agent to the client. Russel v. Buchanan, 9 Sim. 167; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 210; 2 Jur. 610.

12. Under the common order for taxing a solicitor's bill, the Master ought to take an account of sums received by the solicitor for his client, in the character of solicitor, and which are connected with the items of the bill. But the Master ought not to take under that order a general account between the parties; and consequently the decision to the contrary in Russel v. Buchanan (9 Sim. 167, 175) was erroneous. Cooper v. Enart, 15 Sim. 564; 2 Ph. 362; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 417.

1. An account of all the dealings and pecuniary transactions of a solicitor not connected with the bills of costs, cannot be obtained upon a petition for the taxation of costs, the account directed on petition being limited to moneys paid or duly appropriated towards satisfaction of the bills. Re Smith, 4 Beav. 309.

2. Where the taxing master has received no special directions from the Court in regard to payments made by a client to his solicitor, it is his duty to confine himself to simple payments plainly proved to have been made on account of the bill of costs. In ascertaining what is due on bills of costs, and in the consideration of what payments have been made on account of them, questions of law and fact of considerable difficulty may incidentally arise, and may possibly justify and require discussion and determination, even in the jurisdiction exercised by the Court on petitions for taxation. Re Smith, 9 Beav. 182; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 238.

3. Under the common order for the taxation of costs, the Master is not authorised to take an account of pecuniary matters between the parties which are foreign to the bill of costs; but secus, where moneys are paid by the client on account of the bill of costs, or where, by agreement between the solicitor and client, the moneys which come to the hands of the solicitor are to be applicable to the payment of the bill of costs. Jones v. James, 1 Beav. 307; 3 Jur. 310.

Under the common order, the Master is not authorised to allow interest on the balances of moneys of the client, from time to time in the hands of the solicitor, though such appears to have been the agreement between the parties. Id.

4. The Court has no jurisdiction, in directing the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs, to order any account of dealings between the parties, in which the solicitor did not act as such, even though the latter has given credit for such items in the bill of costs. Sneyd v. Conroy, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 469.

5. A bill of costs, nearly the whole of which had been paid, contained items unconnected with professional employment, as for a horse, etc.:—Held, that the solicitor ought, in taxation, to have credit for such items (if due), although they had not become due to him in the character of solicitor. Waring v. Williams, 2 Beav. 1.

6. As to what items of disbursement are properly included in a bill of costs. Legacy and probate duties, estimated at 140%, were payable in order to make available certain funds in court. The solicitor, at the request of the client, engaged to pay them, and took a charge on the funds for 140% and interest. The duties, amounting to 78% only, were paid by the solicitor:—Held, that sum formed a proper item in his account on the taxation of his bill of costs. Re Bedson, 9 Beav. 5; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153.

7. Under an order to tax, the Master may take an account of the receipts of the solicitor on account of interest received by him; but he cannot charge him with the profits made from moneys of his clients in his hands. Re Savery, 13 Beav. 424.

8. By a decree made in a suit by a client against his solicitor, it was referred to the taxing master to tax the defendant's bills of costs, and to the Master in ordinary to take an account of all dealings and transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant. The plaintiff afterwards applied, on motion, to have the whole account taken by the taxing master:—Held that this was such an alteration of the decree as could not, without consent, be ordered on motion. King v. Savery, 2 Jur., N. S., 431; 25 L. J., Ch., 564; 4 W. R. 471.

Such a reference to the taxing master could not be made, for that giving to the 9th Order of the 26th October 1842 the widest construction of which it was susceptible, it did not authorise a reference to the taxing master of accounts not connected with the bills of costs under taxation. Semble. Id.

9. A petition was presented for taxation of a paid bill of costs, alleging specific items of overcharge. The solicitor thereupon offered to repay the amount of such items and the costs. The petitioner did not accede to this, but brought the petition to a hearing. The Court ordered the taxation of the bill, treating these items as omitted. Re Catlin, 23 Beav. 412.

10. An Act of a railway company provided that the company should pay the costs of obtaining the Act and preparatory thereto:—Held, that the solicitor's costs as to parts of the original scheme, which were abandoned before the passing of the Act, were properly included. Re Tilleard, 11 W. R. 764; 8 L. T., N. S., 587.

11. The Master has, under the 201st Order, jurisdiction to tax mere conveyancing costs between solicitor and client. Re Smith's Trustees, Fl. & K. 627.

4. Directions as to Retainer.

12. In equity, the client, in prosecuting the common order for taxation, may object, on the ground of want of retainer, to any items of the bill except those as to which he has admitted the retainer by his petition. The practice is different at law. A party applying for a special order for taxation in a case in which he might have obtained the common order, must pay the costs, though he succeeds. Re Bracey, 8 Beav. 266; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 299; 9 Jur. 417.

13. A court of equity has jurisdiction to make an order for the taxation of a bill of costs, giving liberty to the client to question the retainer. Re Thurgood, 19 Beav. 541; 18 Jur. 821; 23 L. J., Ch., 952; 2 W. R. 682; 8 Eq. R. 1152.

Finding an action by a solicitor for his bill of costs, the client, disputing the retainer, obtained an order of course at the Rolls to tax the bill, which omitted the submission to pay, and a stay of proceedings at law:—Held, first, that the order was irregular. Id.

Held, secondly, that it ought not to have been made ex parte. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the proper order would be this: on submission to pay, to order taxation, with liberty to the client to question the retainer, and the proceedings at law be stayed. Ib.

1. In ordering the taxation of a bill claimed against two, the Court gave both liberty to question the retainer, and directed the Master to distinguish by and to whom each sum found due was to be paid. Re Kitton, 35 Beav. 369.

1. General Principles.

2. Observations on the unsatisfactory mode of remunerating solicitors. Stephens v. Newborough (Lord), 11 Beav. 403; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332; 12 Jur. 319.

3. Observations on the imperfect mode in practice in which the solicitors are remunerated for their services. By the practice of the Court, solicitors are often not paid at all, or very ill paid, for very important services, and therefore they ought not to be deprived of any lawful fees which the practice warrants, upon the notion that the business charged may have been of no practical benefit. Thus, where a solicitor acts for a plaintiff and for some defendants, he is entitled to charge such defendants for the plaintiff's warrants served on his clients the defendants, and for attendance thereon, and for separate copies of the proceedings. Lucas v. Peacock, 8 Beav. 1.

4. Observations as to the allowance to solicitors in taxation of costs for business not necessary or required for the interests of their clients, by way of compensation for services for which they are inadequately remunerated. Distinction between this and fictitious charges for important business as done, which, in fact, has been neglected. Davenport v. Stafford, 8 Beav. 503; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 414; 9 Jur. 801.

5. In ascertaining what is due on bills of costs, and in the consideration of what payments have been made on account of them, questions of law and fact of considerable difficulty may incidentally arise, and may possibly justify and require discussion and determination even in the jurisdiction exercised by the Court on petitions for taxation. Re Smith, 9 Beav. 182; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 238.

2. Abstracts.

6. Where an abstract of title which was used in the preparation of a defendant's answer had been prepared mainly, if not entirely, before the commencement of the suit, and there was no evidence before the Court to show what part, if any, had been prepared since the institution of the suit:—Held, that in taxation as between party and party the costs of preparing such abstract could not be allowed. Davis v. Dysart (Earl), 2 Jur., N. S., 219; 25 L. J., Ch., 322; 8 De G. M. & G. 33; 4 W. R. 268. Affirming 21 Beav. 124; 1 Jur., N. S., 1153; 25 L. J., Ch., 122.

Quære, whether, if the abstract had been made after the institution of the suit, and solely for the purposes of the defence, the costs of its preparation could have been allowed. Ib.

7. According to the practice under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 56, in cases of sale by the Court, an abstract of title is submitted to counsel to prepare the conditions of sale. Counsel having made certain queries upon four sheets of the abstract, the vendor's solicitor charged 1*l.* 1*s.* for perusing the same, and 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for a second fair copy of the abstract for the purchaser's solicitor. The taxing master disallowed the first item, and reduced the second to 13*s.* 4*d.*, which he allowed for re-copying the four spoiled sheets of the abstract, to render it fit to be sent to the purchaser's solicitor. On a petition to review:—Held, that the taxing master was right, and that they were matters entirely within the discretion of the taxing master. Ex p. Rumsey, 21 Beav. 40.

A second fair copy of abstract is not allowed, except under special circumstances, as where the notes of counsel render the copy laid before him wholly unfit to go to the purchaser. Ib.

The solicitor usually charges for drawing the conditions of sale, though they are really drawn by counsel, and he is thereby remunerated for the trouble of answering counsel's queries. Ib.

8. The costs of an abstract of a deed prepared to accompany a case submitted to counsel, disallowed under the circumstances. Re Pender, 10 Beav. 390.

9. In taxation, abstracts are ordinarily passed if they contain eight folios on an average; but the strict rule is, that they should contain ten folios. Re Walsh, 12 Beav. 490.

Taxation of a paid bill sought on the ground of overcharge in abstracts containing less than ten folios refused, the practice being in uncertainty and there being no pressure or surprise. Ib.

Explanatory notes of the taxing-master as to the charge for abstracts, etc., etc. Ib.

3. Accountant's Charges.

10. The expense of an accountant, employed with reference to and pending the suit, does not come under the general denomination of costs, and will not be allowed on taxation. Small v. Attwood, 1 Y. & Coll. 53; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 1.

1. In the absence of any special arrangement, the rule for accountant's charges, fixed by the General Order in Bankruptcy of the 19th May 1855, will be adopted by the Court of Chancery. Meymott v. Meymott, 10 Jur., N. S., 715; 33 L. J., Ch., 686; 12 W. R. 993; 10 L. T., N. S., 681; 33 Beav. 590.

2. An accountant had been employed to examine books for the purpose of preparing an affidavit in a suit in Chancery, and had also been employed in extracting items of profit and loss and recording them in supplemental books, and in setting up new journals and ledgers:—Held, that the taxing-master was right both in making an allowance of five guineas a day to the accountant for such time as he had been employed in preparing to give evidence, and in refusing to make any allowance in respect of work done by him as an accountant. Re Lafitte & Co., 20 L. R., Eq., 650; 33 L. T., N. S., 91; 24 W. R. 7; 44 L. J., Ch., 633.

See also BANKRUPTCY, XXXV. iv.

4. Affidavits and Interrogatories.

3. The costs of documentary evidence not read, nor entered as read, were disallowed. Stuart v. Greenall, McClel. 705; 13 Price 755.

4. Costs of preparing interrogatories, which were not used, owing to admissions being put in, allowed as between party and party. Davies v. Marshall, 1 Dr. & Sm. 564.

5. A solicitor is entitled to charge for the costs of the affidavit made by him on delivering up the papers under an order for taxation. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 514; 7 Jur., N. S., 669; 9 W. R. 756.

6. So much of a bill for an account against trustees, and to have sums claimed by them disallowed, as charged fraud, was dismissed with costs, and accounts were directed. The Master, in taxing the defendant's costs, had refused to allow to the plaintiff any costs whatever in respect of the interrogatories, answer, or production of documents, considering that all these items were unnecessary upon a mere bill for an account:—Held, that the Master was not justified in disallowing these items without distinguishing those portions which related to the part of the bill which had not been dismissed, and as to which his certificate was sent back for review. Heming v. Leifchild, 8 W. R. 352. Affirmed 9 W. R. 174.

7. Where an affidavit was filed which the Court considered to be of unnecessary length, a direction was made, under the 122nd Order of May 1845, that the taxing master should, on taxing the costs, look into the affidavit, and distinguish those parts which he might consider to be of unnecessary length, and disallow the costs occasioned thereby. Re Skidmore's Trusts, 1 Jur., N. S., 696; 24 L. J., Ch., 711; 3 W. R. 584; 3 Eq. Rep. 736.

8. Where a motion for an injunction had been refused, with costs, on the ground of want of parties, the defendant is not to be entitled to the costs of affidavits which have been filed by him, but not used on the motion.

Camille v. Donato, 11 Jur., N. S., 26; 13 W. R. 358; 11 L. T., N. S., 584.

9. The costs of affidavits, used to qualify the answer of a defendant, so as to excuse him from the production of documents, must be paid for by the defendant. Smith v. Massie, 4 Beav. 417; 5 Jur. 1053.

10. The costs of an affidavit, filed in support of a motion, but not entered in the order as read, will not be allowed on taxation, even as between solicitor and client. Stephens v. Newborough, (Lord), 11 Beav. 403; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332; 12 Jur. 319.

11. Costs may be allowed for affidavits used in reference to the common injunction. Small v. Attwood, 1 Y. & Coll. 53; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 1.

5. Attendances.

12. Only one fee is allowed to a solicitor for attendance on a motion. Doolan v. Tobeau, 2 Jones 314.

13. Costs of solicitor attending execution of commission abroad. Hamond v. Wordsworth, Dick. 381.

14. The costs of a London attorney attending the execution of a commission for the examination of witnesses in the country, may, under special circumstances, be allowed on taxation of costs between party and party. Howell v. Tyler, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 284; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 223; 7 Jur. 525.

15. Costs of attending the defendant's solicitor for undertaking to appear were allowed. Davies v. Marshall, 7 Jur., N. S., 669; 9 W. R. 756; 1 Dr. & Sm. 564.

16. A charge in a solicitor's bill "for attending a great many times" is too vague, and on taxation the charge will be disallowed. Re Pender, 10 Beav. 390.

17. Where a motion to dismiss stood over for a space of time, including fifty-three motion days, the defendant's solicitor being unable to swear that he actually attended in court upon such motion days, the taxing master allowed him costs for ten attendances only, and the Vice-Chancellor, on petition, confirmed this order. Hollocombe v. Hollocombe, 17 Jur. 362; 1 W. R. 160.

18. A vendor of land to a railway company having filed a bill for specific performance, opposed three bills in Parliament, and by an Act which was eventually obtained his lien was provided for. It was then arranged that he should be paid principal, interest, and costs:—Held, that the Master in taxing the costs should allow all reasonable costs, charges, and expenses of appearing before the committee and opposing the bills in Parliament. Cooper v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 17 L. T., N. S., 283.

19. The attendance of a solicitor's clerk in addition to the solicitor himself, on cross-examination before the examiner, is unnecessary and unusual, and the costs of such attendance will be disallowed in taxation. Smith v. Buller, 45 L. J., Ch., 69; 19 L. R., Eq., 473; 23 W. R. 332; 31 L. T., N. S., 873.

20. Where one solicitor attends in chambers for two parties in different interests the costs of one attendance only will be allowed. Brown v. Gellatly, 15 W. R. 887; 16 L. T., N. S., 553.

6. Auctioneer's Charges.

1. Under the usual taxation order, a solicitor is entitled, in the absence of negligence or improper conduct, to be allowed all moneys paid out of pocket. Re Page, 9 Jur., N. S., 1116; 11 W. R. 584; 8 L. T., N. S., 281; 32 Beav. 487.

Where, upon the sale of some property, an auctioneer employed by the solicitor deducted the amount of his commission, which was at the usual rate:—Held, that in the absence of improper conduct, the solicitor was entitled to be allowed the amount in account, although the rate of commission was higher than that allowed in chambers. Id.

7. Briefs.

2. An order for re-hearing was discharged with costs, but, in the meantime, the cause had been set down, and briefs delivered:—Held, that the costs thereof could not be included in the order, and could only be given on a re-hearing, or upon special application. Davenport v. Stafford, 9 Beav. 106.

3. Brief of pleading prepared for counsel after publication and before the cause had been set down, and which became useless in consequence of a compromise before hearing, disallowed on taxation as between solicitor and client. Friend v. Solly, 10 Beav. 329; 11 Jur. 958.

4. Brief of pleadings made before the case was at issue, disallowed. Re Pender, 10 Beav. 390.

5. The plaintiff's solicitor is entitled to give out briefs and fees to counsel upon the same day that he sets down the cause to be heard pro confesso. Ivie v. Gahan, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 223.

6. Where an injunction or receiver is prayed by the bill, the defendants, who are interested in resisting the motion, are entitled to the costs of two briefs on the filing of their answers; but the plaintiff is not entitled to the costs of briefs, unless he has moved or served a bonâ fide notice of motion, or unless some act had been done by the defendant after the briefs were bonâ fide made, which rendered the notice of motion unnecessary. The bill prayed an injunction, and, upon the coming in of the answer, the solicitor prepared two briefs for the injunction motion. The suit was compromised before the briefs were given out or notice of motion served:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the costs of the briefs against the defendant. Broadbent v. Hughes, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 65.

7. In a bill of costs taken in before the Master for taxation, one charge under the title of "observations," of considerable amount, was for copies of certain charters, accompanying briefs to counsel:—Held, that the Master was right in allowing the charge. Skinners' Co. v. Irish Society, 1 Jur. 37.

8. As a general rule, it is improper to introduce, into counsel's briefs, both the original and amended bills. Higgins v. Bateman, 2 Dr. & War. 70.

9. Costs of supplemental briefs on petition allowed, where made necessary by opposition of respondents, after expressing their intention not to oppose petition. Stephens v. New- borough (Lord), 11 Beav. 403; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332; 12 Jur. 319.

10. The 1*l.* is allowed for the orders of 7th August 1852, for instructions for brief, was intended as a compensation for the whole fee for abbreviating the bill, at 4*d.* a folio, which ceased on bills being printed. And where there has been a change of solicitors, the solicitor at the time of filing the replication is ordinarily entitled thereto. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 517.

11. In instructing counsel to prepare pleadings, etc., a solicitor is bound to send only copies of deeds, and not the original deeds, which act would be a violation of his duty to his client. The costs of such copies will be allowed on taxation. Re Beamish, 19 W. R. 740.

In preparing briefs for the hearing, such copies should not be made up into the brief, but should be kept for the use of the Court if necessary. The deeds should be briefed independently of such copies. Id.

12. When one party, by his pleading, puts in issue documents which the other may reasonably expect will be read in evidence, and he accordingly has them briefed to his counsel, the Master ought, in the exercise of his discretion, and having regard to the probable materiality and relevancy of those documents to the case as pleaded, to allow the costs of the briefs containing them, if he considers that the party was justified in having them briefed; even though they were not read in evidence at the hearing. Haslam v. O'Connor, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 615.

13. Diagrams annexed to the margin of copies of the evidence supplied to counsel, illustrative of the subject matter in dispute, although convenient are not necessary, and the extra costs occasioned thereby will not be allowed in taxation as between party and party. Smith v. Buller, 45 L. J., Ch. 69; 19 L. R., Eq., 473; 23 W. R. 332; 31 L. T., N. S., 873.

14. The entry, upon the decree, of documents as read at the hearing does not, upon taxation of costs between party and party, exclude the Master's discretion as to disallowing the charges for briefing them to counsel. Murphy v. Nolan, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 498.

15. In taxation between party and party, costs of counsels' fees on brief to fix a day for the hearing, disallowed. Clarke v. Malpas, 1 N. R. 221.

16. A demurrer having been allowed with costs, the costs of preparing "observations" to counsel's briefs, including marginal notes and an index to the bill, which was very long, disallowed. Ernest v. Partridge, 2 N. R. 232; 11 W. R. 715; 8 L. T., N. S., 655.

8. Conferences and Consultations.

17. On taxation of costs, a charge for consulting counsel previously to presenting the petition, and a fee to a second counsel on the hearing, if the petition is one of a special nature, ought to be allowed. Exp. Ellis, Re Musgrove, 3 M. D. & De G. 600.

18. Costs of a case laid before counsel as to a supplemental bill, and costs of a consultation between a new junior and the former junior, who had been promoted, allowed in a taxation as between solicitor and client. Lucas v. Peacock, 8 Beav. 1.

1. In the absence of sufficient reason, only one consultation ought to be allowed under the 120th Order of May 1845; and the taxing master's certifying the fact of one counsel being brought specially from another court, is not a ground for allowing an extra number. Smith v. Effingham (Earl), 10 Beav. 378; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 297; 11 Jur. 444.

2. A. B. was entrapped into becoming a trustee; but it was agreed that he should be discharged. He consulted counsel as to the liability he had incurred, and instructed him to prepare proper deeds for his protection. It was discovered that a breach of trust had been committed previous to his becoming trustee, and counsel prepared a bond and release for A. B.'s protection, but which were never executed, in consequence of a suit having been instituted by A. B. to set the matter right. During the above-mentioned suit, the tenant for life made proposals to A. B. for a settlement, and on which the advice of counsel was obtained by A. B. in conference:—Held, also, that A. B. was entitled to the fee paid by him for this conference. Stephens v. Newborough (Lord), 11 Beav. 403; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332; 12 Jur. 319.

3. The expression "costs of the suit as between solicitor and client" means such costs as the client would have to pay to his solicitor under the technical "costs of the suit." Foster v. Davies, 11 W. R. 813; 8 L. T., N. S., 626; 9 Jur., N. S., 741; 32 Beav. 624; 33 L. J., Ch., 185; 2 N. R. 350.

Where, therefore, a junior counsel requests and obtains a consultation with his leader in it, in order to settle the frame of the bill, the costs of that consultation must be allowed as between solicitor and client, but not as between party and party, without reference to the result of the suit, or the fact whether or not the advice of the Queen's counsel was acted upon. Id.

4. A fee for a conference with counsel allowed, as the solicitor had thereby spared counsel much trouble, and been able to give him a more moderate fee on his brief than would otherwise have been the case. Ernest v. Partridge, 11 W. R. 715; 8 L. T., N. S., 655; 2 N. R. 232.

5. Where settled estates had been purchased by a corporation under the powers in their Act, and the purchase money paid into Court, the tenant for life of the land taken petitioned for payment out of Court of part of the money to be invested in purchase of another estate. She had the abstract before her own counsel, who approved of the title, and subsequently it was laid before one of the conveyancing counsel of the Court, who also approved the title. The Master disallowed the fees of the private counsel, but his decision was overruled by the Vice-Chancellor:—Held, on appeal, that so much of the costs as consisted of fees for consultation between the two counsel were reasonable charges, but that the whole costs of the investigation of the title by the private counsel was too much, and the Court sanctioned a compromise of the claim, and varied the order of the Vice-Chancellor. Re Jones, 4 Jur., N. S., 887; 27 L. J., Ch., 706.

6. Where no fee is paid to counsel on a consultation, no charge can be allowed to the solicitor for his attendance. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 516.

7. Where, by arrangement, exceptions to an answer were heard with the cause, a charge for consultation between counsel on the exceptions, as distinct from the consultation on the hearing of the cause, was allowed. Davis v. Dysart (Earl), 8 De G. M. & G. 33; 25 L. J., Ch., 322; 2 Jur., N. S., 219. Affirming 21 Beav. 124; 1 Jur., N. S., 1153; 25 L. J., Ch., 122; 4 W. R. 41.

A charge for copies only of those parts of the interrogatories, the answers to which were excepted to, can be allowed for the purposes of the consultation on the exceptions, as distinct from the copies made for the purpose of preparing the answer; for which latter purpose, also, only one copy to one junior counsel can be allowed. Id.

8. The Master is not at liberty to disallow a charge for a conference, where the solicitor has thought one necessary and paid the counsel's fee, except where a number of conferences has been charged for on the same point. Re Braund, 39 L. J., Ch., 384.

9. The Court refused to allow the fees paid on a second consultation held pending the hearing of the appeal. Wegman v. Corcoran, 41 L. T. 792.

9. Copies.

10. Where any of the plaintiffs in a suit live in the country, close copies of the answer will be allowed, and the costs of them will be costs in the cause. The costs of all copies of documents, which are required by the judge for his assistance in hearing the cause, are costs in the cause. Small v. Attwood, 1 Y. & Coll. 53; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 1.

11. If upon a motion by the plaintiff, grounded upon the defendant's answer, documents therein shortly stated have been read from copies in which they are set out at length; an order dismissing the motion with costs, will not entitle the defendant to the costs of such copies. Skinner's Co. v. Irish Society, 1 Myl. & C. 162.

12. A charge for copies only of those parts of the interrogatories, the answers to which were excepted to, can be allowed for the purposes of the consultation on the exceptions, as distinct from the copies made for the purpose of preparing the answer; for which latter purpose, also, only one copy to one junior counsel can be allowed. Davis v. Dysart (Earl), 2 Jur., N. S., 219; 25 L. J., Ch., 322; 8 De G. M. & G. 33. Affirming 21 Beav. 124; 1 Jur., N. S., 1153; 25 L. J., Ch., 122; 4 W. R. 41.

13. It would appear to be the settled practice, that where the same solicitor acts for both the plaintiff and the defendant in a cause, not to allow copies to be taken by one party of documents brought into chambers by the other. Sharp v. Wright, 1 L. R., Eq., 634; 14 W. R. 552; 14 L. T., N. S., 246.

14. An order for taxation of costs having been made in a suit, in which three copies in writing of the bill had been served, and the Master, in the absence of any special direction in the decree, having refused to allow the costs of these:—Held, that the omission to ask for them at the hearing being by inadvertence, the costs of these bills might be allowed; but the costs of the motion refused, it arising out of the negligence of the party himself. Hewitt v. White, 12 Jur., N. S., 46; 14 W. R. 220; 13 L. T., N. S., 787.

1. In allowing the costs of attested copies, it is discretionary with the taxing master whether he will allow for the copy of the whole or a part only of a document. Clanmorris v. Mahon, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 144.

2. A defendant's solicitor, who himself furnishes copies of documents which the plaintiff has a right to take under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, ss. 18, 20, will not be permitted to charge for them at the rate of 4d. per folio, but will be allowed only stationer's charges actually incurred. Kennedy v. George, Re Honnor, 6 W. R. 218.

3. The sums paid for office copies of answers at 4d. per folio, and for ordinary printed copies at ½d. per folio, are payable to the defendant, and when received by his solicitor must be applied in reduction of the cost of printing the answer. Att.-Gen. v. Etridge, 32 L. J., Ch., 706; 11 W. R. 927; 9 L. T., N. S., 314.

4. Copy of a correspondence between the parties, furnished to counsel as instructions for a bill, and partially inserted therein, disallowed on a taxation as between solicitor and client. Stephens v. Newborough (Lord), 11 Beav. 403; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332; 12 Jur. 319.

5. The costs of copies of deeds or documents not actually read at the hearing, but furnished by the parties to the Court, are not allowed where they are personal costs, and do not come out of a fund. Bozon v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 378.

6. A solicitor is not entitled to charge at the rate of fourpence per folio for documents existing in print prior to the institution of a suit, though the documents may have been properly used for the purposes of the suit. Underwood v. Secretary of State for India, 16 W. R. 752; 18 L. T., N. S., 351. Affirmed 16 W. R. 926; 19 L. T., N. S., 270.

7. In instructing counsel to prepare pleadings, etc., a solicitor is bound to send only copies of deeds, and not the original deeds, which act would be a violation of his duty to his client. The costs of such copies will be allowed on taxation. Re Beamish, 19 W. R. 740.

8. If notice that certain affidavits will be read at the hearing of an appeal be given to one of the parties, to the admission of which he objects, his proper course is to inform the party, who has given him notice, of his objection, and to oppose their reading at the opening of the appeal without having taken copies, and, if the Court decides that they are admissible, to ask for time to furnish himself with copies. If, however, he has previously taken copies, and the affidavits be not read, he will have to bear the costs of the copies, although he gets the costs of the appeal. Re Brompton and Longdown Railway Co., Shaw's claim, 23 W. R. 813; 33 L. T., N. S., 5.

The appellants from an order on a claim in a winding up gave notice to read a mass of affidavits made in the winding up but not used on the hearing below. The respondent objected to their being admitted, but took copies. The Court of Appeal confined the argument in the first instance to a question not affected by these affidavits, and being against the appellants on that question, dismissed the appeal with costs, so that the question as to the admissibility of the affidavits was not decided. The respondent applied to have the affidavits entered in the order, as otherwise he would not be able to get the costs of having taken copies:—Held, that the application could not be granted, and that the respondent ought not to have taken copies unless and until the Court held the evidence admissible, in which case it would have given him time to enable him to meet it. 8 C. 10 L. R., Ch., 186.

9. Under the common order of the Court of Appeal giving the costs of the appeal, and of the shorthand writer's notes of the evidence and of the judgment in the Court below, the solicitor of the successful party, when the shorthand notes have been printed in the first instance, is entitled on taxation of the costs to be allowed, in addition to the printer's bill, 3d. per folio for one printed copy of the shorthand notes of the evidence supplied to each of his counsel on the appeal, and 3d. per folio for one printed copy of the shorthand notes of the judgment supplied for the use of each judge of the Court of Appeal. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog, 52 L. J., Ch., 288; 49 L. T. 484; 31 W. R. 392.

10. An order had been made by the Court of Appeal on the application of the defendants directing part of an affidavit to be struck out as scandalous and giving the defendants the costs of the application. Among the items in the bill of costs of the defendants were charges for four copies of the pleadings, one for the use of counsel and three for the use of the judges of the Court of Appeal. The taxing master, without entering into the consideration of the question whether the copies were necessary for the purpose of the application, disallowed them on the ground that it was the general rule not to allow the costs of copies of pleadings on an interlocutory application:—Held, that no such general rule as was alleged to exist in the taxing master's office could be sustained; that it was the duty of the taxing master, under the Rules of the Supreme Court (Costs), rule 26, to consider in each case whether the copies were "necessary or proper for the attainment of justice," and that as the copies in the present case were necessary for the hearing of the application, the costs of them must be allowed. Warner v. Mosses, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 72; 51 L. J., Ch., 86; 45 L. T. 359.

11. A deposition of a witness, taken in the Court of Bankruptcy for one purpose, and filed, may be used against him as an admission in any other proceeding in the matter of the same bankruptcy. Exp. Hall, Re Cooper, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 580; 51 L. J., Ch., 556; 46 L. T. 549.

12. But when a party to an application in the Court of Bankruptcy gives notice to his opponent of his intention to use as evidence on the hearing of the application a deposition which is on the file, though it was originally taken for another purpose, he ought not to serve his opponent with a copy of it, and if he does so, he will not, though successful on the application, be allowed the costs of the copy thus served. Ib.

Semble, per curiam. With regard to the costs of the copies of the deposition which were supplied for the use of the respondent's counsel, we think that in the present case those costs should be allowed. It must not be supposed that we should in all cases allow such costs, we might in some cases allow only the costs of making extracts. Ib.

(a) In General.

1. Payment in respect of counsel's fees should specify the cause, and each particular fee. Payments, except for stated and specific fees for particular matters of business done or to be done, disapproved of. Re Smith, 4 Beav. 309.

2. Party allowed counsel's attendance at the signing of the draft report, where an application had been made to delay the signing thereof. Bourne v. Farren, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 659.

3. The costs of counsel in chambers are always understood as being allowed, unless the contrary is expressed. Greville v. Greville, 27 Beav. 596.

4. A fee to counsel for setting a draft report is not allowed in taxation of costs between party and party. Practice before the 1st General Order of April 1847, as to fees to counsel in the Master's office. Clanmorris v. Mahon, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 144.

5. On taxation between solicitor and client, the costs of a case laid before counsel for an opinion on a point decided by the decree disallowed, on the ground that the solicitor was not justified in endeavouring to re-open the question. Nemby v. Drew, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 24.

6. In taxation between party and party, it is not the practice to allow the common retaining fee to counsel. Green v. Briggs, 7 Hare 279; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 294.

Before the 120th Order of May 1845, the expense of attending the Master by counsel was not allowed between party and party, except on reference for scandal. Ib.

7. Fee of counsel for settling a special affidavit for leave to amend, disallowed in a taxation between solicitor and client. Re Pender, 10 Beav. 390.

8. Rule 17 of 4th Consolidated Order, empowering the Master to consider whether he will allow an affidavit to be settled by counsel, does not take the question of the costs of the affidavit out of the discretion of the Court. Davies v. Marshall, 1 Dr. & Sm. 564; 7 Jur., N. S., 639; 9 W. R. 756.

Costs of settling affidavit (which was an echo of the bill) by counsel allowed. Ib.

Costs of drawing observations for counsel, when cause stood over, allowed. Ib.

9. In a patent suit in which the plaintiffs, after the briefs were delivered, but before the hearing, took the common order dismissing their bill, with costs:—Held, on taxation of the costs, and notwithstanding the judge had not certified what particulars had been proved, that the defendants were entitled to allowances in respect of drawing and settling by counsel particulars of breaches. Batley v. Kynnooh, 44 L. J., Ch., 565.

10. On the taxation of a plaintiff's bill of costs (in a suit in which a bill for the production of title deeds had been dismissed), the Master allowed charges for the settlement of the answer by the defendant's junior equity counsel, and by his conveyancing counsel, who was familiar with the defendant's title, and also allowed a charge for an abstract of title laid before the junior equity counsel for the purpose of preparing the answer, but which abstract did not appear to have been prepared entirely for that purpose:—Held, that these allowances ought not to have been made. Davis v. Dysart (Earl), 8 De G. M. & G. 33; 2 Jur., N. S., 219; 25 L. J., Ch., 322. Affirming 21 Beav. 124; 1 Jur., N. S., 1153; 25 L. J., Ch., 122; 4 W. R. 61.

Costs of a conveyancing counsel employed to assist in the preparation of an answer disallowed. Ib.

Fees to two junior counsel (one of them being a conveyancer only) to settle the answer, cannot be allowed as between party and party, unless by special order of the Court. Ib.

A charge for abbreviating the answer, estimating it at its total length, including schedules, is proper, and to be allowed on a taxation between party and party. Ib.

(b) Attorney-General.

11. Liberty given to except to the Master's report of taxation being applied for on the ground of his disallowance of a brief to the attorney-general, besides two other counsel in a charity information, the report was referred back to the Master for review. Att.-Gen. v. Drapers' Co., 4 Beav. 305.

12. Upon the taxation of costs as between party and party, where the attorney-general is made a party to protect the interests of the Crown, the rule is, to allow two counsel in addition to the attorney-general, in every case in which, if it were that of a private individual, that number of counsel would be allowed. Cockburn v. Raphael, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 263; 7 Jur. 246.

13. Held, that in taxing the costs of a suit, which were to be paid by the defendant, a special retainer paid by the plaintiff, to the attorney-general, who did not usually practise in the Court of Chancery, ought to be allowed, although there were no special circumstances which rendered the employing the attorney-general necessary. Nichols v. Haslam, 15 Sim. 49. S. C. nom. Nickells v. Haslam, 9 Jur. 649.

14. When the attorney-general, upon making an application in the matter of a charity, desires an order for taxation and payment of his costs, charges, and expenses relating to the charity, not being costs in the matter, the summons should contain a statement of the matters in respect of which payment of such costs is desired. Re Dulwich College, 15 L. R., Eq., 294; 21 W. R. 519.

(c) Number of.

1. Upon the taxation of costs, even as between solicitor and client, the rule is to allow only two counsel, or under special circumstances three. Downing College case, 3 Myl. & C. 474.

2. Under a reference to the Master to tax costs as between solicitor and client, he disallowed the fees to two out of five counsel, who appeared at the hearing:—Held, that the Master was right. Att.-Gen. v. Vigors, 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 214; 2 Jur. 508.

3. The plaintiff's solicitor employed a Queen's counsel and a junior to oppose a motion for further time to answer. The Court held that he was justified in so doing, and ordered the taxing master, who had disallowed the fees of the junior counsel, to review his taxation. Cooke v. Turner, 12 Sim. 649.

4. The solicitor for the plaintiffs employed three counsel (two of whom were Queen's counsel) to appear for his clients at the hearing of a cause; and the Master, in taxing the solicitor's bill as between solicitor and client, under an order obtained by one of the plaintiffs, disallowed the fees of the second counsel. The Court referred it back to the Master to review the report, there being nothing to show that it was unnecessary to employ more than two counsel. Wastell v. Leslie, 14 Sim. 84; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 368; 8 Jur. 1001.

5. The costs of employing two Queen's counsel for the plaintiff at the hearing allowed; the second Queen's counsel having drawn the bill when he was without the bar. Carter v. Barnard, 16 Sim. 157; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 278; 12 Jur. 322.

6. In the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, the taxing master had disallowed the costs of two counsel in several applications to the Court. The Master having used his discretion, and not proceeded on any general principles, a petition to review the taxation was dismissed with costs. Friend v. Solly, 10 Beav. 329; 11 Jur. 958.

7. The general rule is, that the costs of two counsel only are allowed upon a taxation between party and party. In the absence of sufficient reason, only one consultation ought to be allowed under the 120th Order of May 1845; and the taxing master's certifying the fact of one counsel being brought specially from another court, is not a ground for allowing an extra number. Smith v. Effingham (Earl), 10 Beav. 378; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 297; 11 Jur. 444.

8. Briefs to two counsel, on an unopposed motion, made by a trustee, to pay money into court, allowed, upon appeal from the decision of the taxing master. Stephens v. Newborough (Lord), 11 Beav. 403; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332; 12 Jur. 319.

A petition was presented to compromise a suit, which it was supposed would be unopposed, but, after the delivery of the briefs, an opposition was threatened. Further briefs being thereupon delivered, the costs thereof were allowed, on taxation, as between solicitor and client. Id.

9. A fee given to senior counsel to plead, the cause was not heard on the day set down. At the next hearing the counsel was from home and another senior was feed. An appeal from the taxing master allowing both fees was dismissed. Kidd v. Young, 1 W. R. 214.

10. The fact of a petition being unopposed is not of itself a sufficient reason for the disallowance of the costs of two counsel. Costs of two counsel, upon a petition of a retiring trustee for a reference to appoint a new trustee, and of a petition to confirm the Master's report, allowed under the circumstances. Sturge v. Dimadale, 9 Beav. 170; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 211; 10 Jur. 277.

11. The general rule that, for the purposes of taxation as between party and party, only two counsel can be allowed as against an adverse party, will not be departed from except under very special circumstances. Att.-Gen. v. Munro, 1 Macn. & G. 231.

12. The costs of more than two counsel disallowed in taxation between party and party, notwithstanding the third counsel was retained after the counsel by whom the pleadings had been drawn had been called within the bar. Green v. Briggs, 7 Hare 279; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 323.

13. There is no rule that only one counsel on each side shall be heard in long vacation causes. Henry v. Great Northern Railway Co., 3 Jur., N. S., 1117.

14. Where the evidence was voluminous, and required careful consideration, the costs of a third counsel were allowed. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 2 L. R., Eq., 607; 12 Jur., N. S., 581; 35 L. J., Ch., 642.

15. The general rule that, upon taxation of costs as between party and party, the briefs of more than two counsel shall not be allowed, is not inflexible. Pearce v. Lindsay, 1 De G. F. & J. 573.

A plaintiff having retained two counsel on the original hearing of a cause, and succeeded, and having on an appeal retained a third counsel, there being a considerable amount of additional evidence:—Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the costs of the third counsel ought not to be allowed in taxation as between party and party, and the certificate of the Master who had allowed these costs, sent back for review; but on appeal the costs of the third counsel were allowed. S. C. 1 Johns. 702, 705; 8 W. R. 354, 383.

16. Circumstances under which the costs of a third counsel will be allowed. Betts v. Clifford, 1 John. & H. 74.

17. Parties employing more than two counsel in equity do so at their own risk; the costs will not be allowed unless directed by the Court. Davis v. Dysart (Earl), 21 Beav. 124; 1 Jur., N. S., 1153; 25 L. J., Ch., 122; 4 W. R. 41. Affirmed 2 Jur., N. S., 219; 25 L. J., Ch., 322; 8 De G. M. & G. 33; 4 W. R. 268.

The fees of two junior counsel engaged in settling defendant's answer will not be allowed. Id.

Only one junior counsel allowed as between party and party, except by special leave of the Court. Id.

1. Where notice of motion is irregularly given before the Master of the Rolls, in a Vice-Chancellor's cause, this Court has jurisdiction to award costs. Yearsley v. Yearsley, 19 Beav. 1.

Two counsel having been instructed by the respondents in such a case, 42s. costs were summarily given. Ib.

2. Where the taxing master had refused to allow the briefs of more than two counsel on the taxation of costs between party and party, the Master having exercised his discretion by looking into the circumstances of the case, and not having relied wholly on the general rule, the Court refused to disturb the certificate. Midland Railway Co. v. Brown, 10 Hare (App.) xlv.; 17 Jur. 969; 22 L. J., Ch., 1092.

3. The costs of more than one counsel attending the examination of witnesses before an examiner will not be allowed. Hallons v. Fernie, 16 W. R. 175; 17 L. T., N. S., 347.

4. Costs of a brief to a second Queen's counsel on the hearing of the cause allowed, he having before he had been called within the bar been the junior counsel in the cause. Horsley v. Cox, 38 L. J., Ch., 678; 7 L. R., Eq., 461; 17 W. R. 603; 20 L. T., N. S., 473.

5. B., a second mortgagee, filed a bill for redemption and foreclosure against F., who held the first and third mortgages on the property. F., by his answer, disputed B.'s security by denying the consideration, and filed a cross-bill for foreclosure impeaching that security. By the decree made in both suits, F.'s bill was dismissed with costs, so far as it sought to set aside B.'s security, and F. was ordered to pay the costs of the first suit, "so far as the same have been increased by the answer of F. impeaching the validity of the security of B." The Master held that the costs incurred by B. in proving the consideration, and consequent thereon, were the increase of costs in the first suit which F. was to pay, and that the expense of the hearing must be apportioned according to the number of folios, and that the costs of the second suit must be apportioned. He allowed the costs of three counsel in the second suit on account of the complexity of the case. B. objected to this taxation, and contended that he ought to be allowed all his costs except such as would have been incurred if the suits had been ordinary redemption and foreclosure suits heard as short causes, and that F. ought to have all his costs disallowed, except such as would in that case have been incurred, the difference being attributable to F.'s impeaching B.'s security:—Held, that the Master had proceeded on a correct principle. Begbie v. Fenwick, Fenwick v. Begbie, 6 L. R., Ch., 869; 20 W. R. 67; 25 L. T., N. S., 441.

Held, also, that so much of B.'s bill as was directed to anticipating the objection taken by F.'s answer ought to be dealt with as occasioned by the objection taken in the answer, and that in the other suit regard ought to have been had in taxation to the circumstance that the complexity which justified the allowance of three counsel was owing to B.'s security being impeached. Ib.

6. A solicitor who acts for two parties in the same interest should employ one set of counsel for both, although he acts directly for one, and as agent for the solicitors of the other. Walters v. Webb, 18 W. R. 86.

7. The costs of three counsel allowed where the junior who had drawn the pleadings was called within the bar before the hearing of the cause. Cousens v. Cousens, 20 W. R. 48; 7 L. R., Ch., 48; 41 L. J., Ch., 166; 25 L. T., N. S., 719.

It is not a matter of course to allow the costs of three counsel in such a case. They ought to be allowed only where the matter is of such a nature that, according to the ordinary practice of litigants, it would have been proper in the first instance to give a retainer to a Queen's counsel. Ib.

When the junior counsel who has prepared the pleadings in a Chancery suit is called within the bar before the hearing, and after a retainer has been given to a leader (the propriety of which retainer is a question to be considered), the costs of giving briefs to the leader so retained, the junior who has been called within the bar, and a new junior will be allowed on taxation between party and party. Ib.

8. When a leader has been employed in a suit but not retained, the costs of employing him as third counsel at the hearing will not be allowed as between party and party, although the junior counsel who drew the pleadings has before the hearing been called within the bar. Betts v. Cleaver, 7 L. R., Ch., 613; 41 L. J., Ch., 663; 20 W. R. 732; 27 L. T., N. S., 85.

9. Whether the costs of two counsel retained on behalf of parties having liberty to attend the proceedings, and being in the same interest as the plaintiff, ought to be allowed or not is a question for the discretion of the taxing master. Re Webb, 21 W. R. 745; 28 L. T., N. S., 726.

The mere fact of such parties appearing by the same solicitor as the plaintiff is no good reason why they ought to be allowed the costs of a junior counsel only. Ib.

10. Costs of two junior counsel allowed. North-Eastern Railway Co. v. Jackson, 22 W. R. 629.

11. A bill having been dismissed with costs, after a hearing of fourteen days' duration, in a suit in which nineteen individuals and two companies—who had, to a great extent, a common case—were defendants, and some of them had justifiably answered separately, and had severally appeared by three counsel, two only of whom were heard for each defendant or set of defendants; the Court refused, in the instance of an individual defendant, to review the taxation whereby the costs of the third counsel were disallowed by the taxing master as between party and party. Haslam v. O'Connor, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 615.

12. The costs of a third counsel of the Common Law Bar disallowed. Flookton v. Peake, 4 N. R. 466; 12 W. R. 1023.

13. Although two counsel only are heard in the Court of Appeal, the costs of three counsel in that Court should be allowed on taxation between party and party where the difficulty and importance of the case render it proper to retain them, particularly in cases where three counsel had been allowed on taxation between party and party in the court below. Robb v. O'Connor, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 373.

14. The junior counsel who had advised throughout the proceedings taken by a claimant against a company in liquidation, in respect of its breach of contract to purchase his business, having been called within the bar before the hearing of the claim and after a leader had been retained:—Held, that having regard to the length and complication of the case and evidence, the costs of a third counsel as junior counsel at the hearing ought to be allowed. Re Laffitte & Co., Laffitte's claim, 20 L. R., Eq., 650; 44 L. J., Ch., 633; 24 W. R. 7; 33 L. T., N. S., 91.

1. The mere fact of a junior counsel in a cause having been appointed a Q.C. is not a sufficient reason for allowing the costs of briefs to three counsel. Mem., 10 L. R., Ch., 540.

2. The rule that charges will not be allowed for employing more than two counsel will only be departed from in exceptional circumstances, and in determining whether such circumstances exist the amount of interest which the successful party has in maintaining the suit may be taken into consideration. Smith v. Buller, 19 L. R., Eq., 473; 23 W. R. 232; 31 L. T., N. S., 873; 45 L. J., Ch., 69.

3. An arrangement by which a Q.C. retained for one of the defendants for the hearing of an appeal has been transferred to the co-defendants to argue the case for them as leading counsel, does not justify the allowance of three counsel on party and party taxation, although only four counsel were employed between the two sets of defendants, and the hearing of the appeal occupied several days. Merchant Banking Co. v. Maud, 20 L. R., Eq., 452; 44 L. J., Ch., 581; 23 W. R. 788; 32 L. T., N. S., 794.

4. On the hearing of an action in the Chancery Division, the plaintiff was represented by four counsel, the defendants by two only. Judgment was then given for the defendants. The plaintiff having given notice of appeal, the defendants retained another counsel, and were represented by him and their former counsel at the hearing of the appeal, which was dismissed with costs. The taxing officer disallowed the fees paid to the additional counsel:—Held, that the case was one in which the Court ought not to interfere with the taxing officer's discretion. Wegmann v. Corcoran, 41 L. T. 792.

5. The action, after a motion for an injunction had been heard before Malins, V.-Ch., was transferred for hearing to Fry, J.; the defendant, therefore, retained a third counsel. The taxing master allowed his costs:—Held, that the costs of such counsel could not be allowed on account of the transfer, and that the weight of the case did not justify such allowance. Mason v. Brentini, 42 L. T. 726. S. C. on appeal 43 L. T. 557; 29 W. R. 126; 15 L. R., Ch. D., 287.

6. In a case of considerable complication, in which charges of fraud were made against the defendant, judgment having been given for him with costs, he was allowed the costs of employing three counsel, though the Master had only allowed the costs of two. Kirkwood v. Webster, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 239; 47 L. J., Ch., 880; 26 W. R. 812.

What Counsel will be heard.] See PRACTICE (COUNSEL AND CROSS REFERENCES THERE).

(d) Amount of Fees.

7. The Court will not interfere with the discretion of the taxing masters as to the quantum of fees to counsel. Att.-Gen. v. Carrington (Lord), 6 Beav. 454; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 453.

8. The Court will not entertain an application to review the certificate of the Master as to the amount of fees to be allowed to counsel. Parkinson v. Hanbury, 11 Jur., N. S., 474; 13 W. R. 1056; 12 L. T., N. S., 624.

9. On a summons to review the Master's certificate, in a suit where all the evidence was written, for disallowing refreshers to counsel in some cases and allowing them in others:—Held, that there is a discretion to allow refreshers where, from the nature of the case, the period of time occupied in the hearing, and the amount of fee originally given with the brief, it appears reasonable to allow further fees, and that the quantum of fees to be allowed is entirely a matter of discretion for the Master. Smith v. Daniell, Walker v. Daniell, 34 L. T. 899.

10. The Master having reduced counsel's fees, on taxation between party and party, not because the amount was excessive, but because the fee had been increased at the instance of the counsel, the Court referred it back to the Master to review his taxation as to those items. O'Brien v. Cantwell, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 221.

It would be illegal for the bar, as a body, to fix a minimum fee for any particular class of business; but any individual member of the bar may decline to take a fee less than a certain amount. Id.

The Master, in taxation between party and party, should only allow the usual and accustomed fee payable on each particular class of business, though a larger fee had been paid to counsel. Id.

11. One of several defendants appealed, substantially, from the whole decree, and the appeal was dismissed with costs:—Held, on taxation, that the same fees on the plaintiffs' briefs which had been allowed on the original hearing ought to be allowed on the appeal. Sturgis v. Morse, 26 Beav. 562.

Held, also, that the length of the interval between the two hearings ought not to vary the amount. Id.

12. The rule that the decision of the Master is final as to the proper charge for business done, does not apply to counsel's fees on the hearing of an appeal, on the ground that the judge of the court below is better able to decide the question of quantum. Gilbert v. Guignon, 21 W. R. 745.

13. The taxing officer allowed for the defendants' two original counsel only the same fees as had been allowed in the court below:—Held, that the Court ought not to interfere with the taxing officer's discretion. Wegman v. Corcoran, 41 L. T. 792.

14. The Court of Appeal will not interfere with the discretion of the taxing master as to the amount of counsel's fees. Cousens v. Cousens, 41 L. J., Ch., 166; 7 L. R., Ch., 48; 20 W. R. 48; 25 L. T., N. S., 719.

15. The taxing master's decision as to the amount of counsel's fees will not be interfered with unless a gross mistake is made. Brown v. Sewell, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 517; 44 L. T., N. S., 41; 29 W. R. 295.

16. In estimating the amount of fees to counsel, the taxing master should always have regard to the difficulty and complication of the questions of law and fact involved in the case, and the importance of the result of it to the parties. Robb v. Connor, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 373.

The fees bonâ fide paid by a solicitor to counsel, and fairly required by the magnitude or complication of the cause, ought not to be reduced, but should be allowed on taxation between party and party. Ib.

1. The Court has the right, although reluctant to exercise it, to interfere with the amount of counsel's fees. In cases of great intricacy, a fee of 7*l.* 7*s.* a day to counsel for attending before the examiner not considered excessive, and allowed as between party and party, as also a fee of the same amount to a scientific witness for reading papers and getting up the case with a view to giving his evidence. Smith v. Buller, 45 L. J. Ch., 69; 19 L. R., Eq., 473; 31 L. T. 873; 23 W. R. 332.

(e) Refreshers.

2. The rule of the common law courts as to refreshers applies to the hearing of heavy suits in Chancery, whether on written or vivâ voce evidence; but the brief fee may fairly be taken to cover two days, after which refreshers should be allowed. Smith v. Buller, 19 L. R., Eq., 473; 23 W. R. 332; 31 L. T., N. S., 873; 45 L. J., Ch., 69.

The charge to be allowed for counsel's fees for cross-examination will not ordinarily exceed 5*l.* 5*s.* a day after the first, for which a larger fee may be allowed in heavy cases; and where the case is long and complicated, as much as 7*l.* 7*s.* a day may be allowed for the subsequent days. Ib.

3. The costs of proceedings in court in the course of which several witnesses were examined vivâ voce, and which involved the question whether a certain person was legitimate, were ordered to be taxed upon the common law scale, so as to give the equity counsel refreshers for every day after the first day of the hearing, as in the case of counsel of the common law bar. Hill v. Hibbit, 14 L. R., Eq., 221; 41 L. J., Ch., 703; 27 L. T., N. S., 334.

4. On a summons to review the Master's certificate, in a suit where evidence all written, for disallowing refreshers to counsel in some cases and allowing them in others:—Held, that there is a discretion to allow refreshers where, from the nature of the case, the period of time occupied in the hearing, and the amount of fee originally given with the brief, it appears reasonable to allow further fees, and that the quantum of fees to be allowed is entirely a matter of discretion for the Master. Smith v. Daniell, Walker v. Daniell, 34 L. T., N. S., 899.

5. In taxing the costs of an action in the Chancery Division tried on oral evidence, the taxing master should follow the rule in the common law divisions of allowing refreshers to counsel for every day occupied by a trial beyond one day's time; but where the action is tried on affidavit evidence no refreshers should be allowed. The amount of the refreshers lies in the discretion of the taxing master, and depends on the fee originally marked on the brief and the nature of the case. The rule in Smith v. Buller (19 L. R., Eq., 473), that the criterion for allowing refreshers is the length of time occupied by the trial, irrespective of the mode in which the evidence has been taken, dissented from. Harrison v. Wearing, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 206; 48 L. J., Ch., 365; 27 W. R. 526.

6. When the trial of an action commences on one day and is concluded on the next day, refreshers to counsel will not be allowed unless the trial occupied in the whole more than one day's sitting, i.e. six hours. Brown v. Sewell, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 517; 44 L. T., N. S., 41; 29 W. R. 295.

(f) Clerk's Fees.

7. Fees to counsel's clerks are mere gratuities, for which they have no legal demand, and this Court has no jurisdiction in respect of such fees as against the clerks. The sum allowed for clerks' fees on taxation does not limit the sum which may be spontaneously given, but it does limit the sum which the solicitor can safely pay without the special direction or permission of the client. The Regulation of the 5th November 1840 (Ordines Can. 157) is not a general order of the Court, giving the clerks a legal demand for the fees therein mentioned, but a mere intimation of the opinion of the equity judges, that they may be properly allowed in taxation. Exp. Cotton, 9 Beav. 107; 10 Jur. 84.

(g) Receipt.

8. The taxing master ought not to require a receipt stamp to be affixed to counsel's signature to a fee before allowing the charge on taxation. Re Beavan, 5 De G. M. & G. 40; 22 L. J., Ch., 536; 2 W. R. 229.

11. Decrees and Minutes. Drawing up.

9. Where the Court has pronounced an order, but no minutes of it have been drawn up, the solicitor is, nevertheless, entitled to his costs of the minutes, as if they had been actually drawn up. Gould v. Drummott, 2 L. R., Eq., 609; 12 Jur., N. S., 614; 35 L. J., Ch., 794; 14 L. T., N. S., 881.

10. Costs of inrolling decree disallowed on taxation between party and party. Clark v. Malpas, 31 Beav. 554; 9 Jur., N. S., 612; 32 L. J., Ch., 313; 11 W. R. 251; 7 L. T., N. S., 659; 1 N. R. 221.

12. Evidence and Witnesses.

(a) In General, 6494.

(b) Interpreter's Charges, 6496.

(c) Professional Witnesses, 6496.

(d) Production and Inspection of Documents, 6496.

(a) In General.

11. Where plaintiff not only failed to establish his case by evidence, but also incurred the suit with an unnecessary multitude of witnesses, and with a body of very irrelevant depositions, he must pay the costs of the depositions, although the bill, not being vexatious, was dismissed without costs, as to the rest of the cause. Moore v. M'Kay, Beat. 282.

1. A plaintiff, who enters into evidence to prove facts clearly admitted by the answer, must pay the costs, though he succeed in the suit. Booth v. Booth, 1 Beav. 130; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 39; 2 Jur. 938.

2. Where much unnecessary evidence was adduced on the part of the plaintiffs, in whose favour a decree was given, costs were only given against the defendants up to the date of the replication. Harvey v. Mount, 8 Beav. 439; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233; 9 Jur. 741.

3. Where defendant in the cause examines many witnesses whose testimony is inadmissible to any extent, the Court will give plaintiff his costs of the rejected depositions, independently of the result of the cause. Petch v. Dalton, 6 Price 232.

4. The costs of documentary evidence not read, nor entered as read, were disallowed. Stuart v. Greenall, M'Clel. 705; 13 Price 755.

5. Costs for witness served to testify before Lord Mayor, awarded. Rome v. Guybone, Cary 35.

6. The costs of bringing up witnesses for cross-examination in court allowed, in a taxation between party and party, although they had not been actually cross-examined. Clark v. Malpas, 31 Beav. 554; 9 Jur., N. S., 612; 32 L. J., Ch., 313; 11 W. R. 251; 7 L. T., N. S., 659; 1 N. R. 221.

7. Where a country witness remained in London, the sum which his journey would have cost, being less than his expenses in town, will be allowed. Turner v. Turner, 5 Jur., N. S., 839.

A barrister is prima facie entitled to the expenses of a professional man, without proof of his being in practice. Id.

Where an examination is adjourned by the fault of a witness, the Master taxes the costs of both days, and has no jurisdiction to decide that the second examination was unnecessary. Id.

The 14th Order of June 1854 does not empower the Court to adjudicate on the amounts of the items allowed. Id.

8. On taxation of costs as between party and party, the only costs chargeable against the unsuccessful party are such as are necessary for the conduct of the litigation. Therefore, in a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, in which the defendant had set up several cases as anticipations, the costs of drawings of exhibits for the purpose of affixing to the margin of counsel's briefs were disallowed. Smith v. Buller, 19 L. R., Eq., 473; 23 W. R. 332; 31 L. T., N. S., 873; 45 L. J., Ch., 69.

9. An injunction obtained by a plaintiff having been dissolved with costs on motion by the defendant, the plaintiff gave notice to read, on motion for decree, his evidence on the motion to dissolve the injunction. The decree, which was made with costs, recited part of this evidence:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to include the charges for this evidence in his bill of costs. Stempson v. Jepson, 18 W. R. 962.

10. In a suit for specific performance the plaintiff, after expiration of the time prescribed, obtained liberty to cross-examine the defendants at the hearing, and they accordingly attended at the hearing for the purpose, but the plaintiff declined to cross-examine them:—Held, that, although the plaintiff was entitled to the general costs of the suit, he should be disallowed all costs in reference to the cross-examination, and pay the expenses of the witnesses so attending. Guilfoyle v. Hutchinson, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 298.

11. All costs caused by unnecessary evidence must be paid by the party offering it. Littlewood v. Collins, 1 N. R. 457.

12. It is improper to examine in chief as to particular items of the account, the defendant being an accounting party; or to examine in chief as to the particular acts of wilful default in not receiving rents, the defendant being bound to account for the wilful default simply by reason of the nature of his relation to the plaintiff. Such evidence may however be entered as read, but the plaintiff must pay the defendant the costs of it. Hamilton v. M'Cormick, 3 J. & L. 183.

13. When a petition is dismissed with costs, the Court will not limit the payment of costs merely as to the affidavits that were read on the hearing of the petition, for in general all affidavits filed are entered as read. Eap. Lucas, Re Oldham, 3 Dea. & Ch. 664; 1 Mont. & A. 405.

14. The party on whose behalf a witness gives evidence, if required by the other side to produce him for cross-examination, is bound in the first instance to pay such witness his reasonable expenses, even though he may be out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Richards v. Goddard, 17 L. R., Eq., 238; 43 L. J., Ch., 144; 22 W. R. 204; 29 L. T., N. S., 884.

The plaintiff produced a witness before the examiner, and demanded the expenses of his production. The defendant's solicitor objected to the amount, but undertook to pay what should be found due upon taxation. The witness was then sworn, and the cross-examination proceeded. The plaintiff then applied for an order for repayment by the defendant of the amount paid by the plaintiff to the witness for his expenses, or for taxation, and payment of the amount found due. The Vice-Chancellor considered that the question had better be left till the hearing of the cause, and declined to make any order:—Held, on appeal, that the matter was not one for judicial discretion, but that the plaintiff was entitled, ex debito justitiae, to an immediate order for taxation and payment. 8 C., 10 L. R., Ch., 288; 23 W. R. 329; 33 L. T., N. S., 13.

15. The costs incurred in a colony, under a commission to examine witnesses, must be taxed in England upon the scale which would be allowed in the colony, and the Master, in case of difficulty, ought to refer to the colony for information, but not to send the bill of costs there for taxation. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 13 W. R. 486; 13 L. T., N. S., 226; 34 Beav. 455.

[Printing.] 16. Where the viva voce evidence is voluminous, and the parties cannot properly argue the appeal without referring to all parts of it, the Court will allow the costs of printing it. Bigby v. Dickinson, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 24; 40 L. J., Ch., 280; 35 L. T. 679; 25 W. R. 122.

1. A party examining, by means of an interpreter, a witness ignorant of the English language, must bear the expense of the interpreter's services on the cross, as well as the direct examination. Plunkett v. Williams, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 80.

2. On taxation of costs as between party and party, the Master has a discretion to allow the expense of employing an interpreter to assist a foreigner in preparing instructions for his answer; but such allowance ought not to include the tavern or travelling expenses of an interpreter brought to this country for the special purpose. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Trappes, 8 Jur., N. S., 587; 31 L. J., Ch., 680; 10 W. R. 663; 6 L. T., N. S., 516.

(c) Professional Witnesses.

3. There is no positive rule in equity as to the sum to be allowed to a scientific witness attending before an examiner; but the Master decides on the sum to be allowed in each case according to the circumstances. Smith v. Butler, 19 L. R., Eq., 473; 23 W. R. 332; 31 L. T., N. S., 873; 45 L. J., Ch., 69.

4. Upon taxation of costs between party and party, the sums paid to witnesses for inspecting, measuring, and valuing improvements upon lands will not be allowed in addition to the charges for the affidavits made by those witnesses. Murphy v. Nolan, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 498.

5. In a suit in equity, raising the question of title to a chapel, the defendant employed an antiquary to search after, translate, and report upon various ancient records, and the judgment of the Court turned, in a great measure, upon the evidence so collected. The bill having been dismissed with costs, the antiquary's fees and expenses amounted to 334*l.*, in respect of which the Master allowed 220*l.*; also, of two sums of 26*l.* 5*s.* and 22*l.* for journeys and reports to two other experts. The plaintiff objected, on the ground that the evidence was procured only for the purpose of informing the mind of the defendant as to the best mode of framing his case, that the defendant had no prior knowledge of the existence of many of the documents, and that he had refused to make the antiquary himself a witness in the cause:—Held, that the costs in question had been necessarily and properly incurred by the defendant, and rightly allowed by the Master. Churton v. Frezen, 36 L. J., Ch., 660; 15 W. R. 559; 16 L. T., N. S., 171.

Held, also, that the travelling expenses of two eminent architects, who had made affidavits in the cause, were rightly allowed. Id.

6. An accountant employed as a skilled witness to give evidence in support of the claim, though entitled to a reasonable allowance for his time and expenses in preparing his evidence by an examination of the books, is not entitled upon party and party taxation to his charges for balancing and putting the books into shape for the purpose of supporting the claim. Re Laffitte & Co., Laffitte's claim, 20 L. R., Eq., 660; 44 L. J., Ch., 633; 24 W. R. 7; 33 L. T., N. S., 91.

7. The daily fee allowed to a professional witness on taxation between party and party is not necessarily to be limited to 3*l.* 3*s.* In this case a fee of 5*l.* 5*s.* a day was allowed to an engineer and architect of eminence employed under the direction of the Court. Robb v. Connor, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 373.

8. In a patent suit in which the plaintiffs, after the briefs were delivered, but before the hearing, took the common order dismissing their bill, with costs:—Held, that they were entitled to an allowance in respect of the charges of scientific witnesses, and that such allowance was not limited by the rules of taxation at common law, and also that they were entitled to an allowance in respect of the cost of a model; but the Court followed the Master's decision as to amount. Bailey v. Kynoch, 44 L. J., Ch., 565.

9. An auctioneer summoned to give evidence before a special examiner appointed under proceedings in the Chancery Division is, as a professional witness, entitled to be paid a guinea a day by way of compensation for his loss of time, together with the amount of his travelling expenses, if any, including therein his railway fare, first-class, from his residence to the place of his examination and back again. And, although sworn, he may refuse to answer any questions until a sum sufficient to cover these amounts has been paid to him. Re Working Men's Mutual Society, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 831; 51 L. J., Ch., 850; 47 L. T. 645; 30 W. R. 938.

(d) Production and Inspection of Documents.

10. As to how far a vicar, plaintiff in a tithe cause, is compellable to produce for inspection, etc., vicar's books, and those of predecessors, admitted by him, in his answer to cross bill by defendant, to be in his possession, and to contain entries relating to payments of sums of money, as compositions corresponding in amount with the money payments set up by the defendant as modus relied on. The costs of all proceedings had, for obtaining the discovery by such means, must be paid by party so acquiring it. Firkins v. Lowe, 13 Price 193; M'Clel. 73.

11. Defendant ordered to deposit books in the hands of the deputy remembrancer for inspection of other party, and afterwards ordered to account, in doing which he must refer to these books, is not obliged to pay the fees of the office in taking copies. Gabbit v. Cavendish, 2 Anstr. 547.

12. The defendants were ordered to deposit certain documents with their clerk in Court for the usual purposes, and to give an inspection of the remainder at their office, and produce them at the examination of witnesses and at the hearing:—Held, that the production on the examination of witnesses in town and at the hearing should be at the expense of the defendants, but the production on the examination of witnesses in the country at the expense of the plaintiff. Davies v. Harford, 3 Beav. 118.

1. The costs of affidavits used to qualify the answer of a defendant so as to excuse him from the production of documents, must be paid by the defendant. Smith v. Massie, 4 Beav. 117; 5 Jur. 1053.

2. On a motion for the production of documents, the defendant was permitted to show, by affidavit, that they could not be left in the office without great inconvenience; but as the ground for this indulgence was not stated by the answer, he was ordered to pay the costs. Gardner v. Dangerfield, 5 Beav. 389.

3. Plaintiff procured the usual order for defendants to produce certain deeds within a particular time, but did not take the usual steps to enforce it, on account of the defendants submitting to perform the order. Subsequently, the defendants not having produced a particular deed, plaintiff gave notice of motion to produce the same, and for defendants to pay the costs of the application. Defendants immediately produced the deed, but refused to pay the costs of the application:—Held, upon motion by plaintiff for defendants to pay the costs, that plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the motion, made necessary by the non-compliance of defendants with the order, although the plaintiff had not taken the regular steps to enforce it. Maw v. Marsden, 4 Jur. 1079.

4. Where documents which a defendant is ordered to produce are permitted to remain in his solicitor's office for the plaintiff's inspection, the solicitor is not entitled to charge the plaintiff for inspecting them, although the clerk in Court would have been entitled to demand 6s. 8d. per hour. Woodroffe v. Daniel, 10 Sim. 126.

5. Where the inspection of documents on either side is ordered to take place at the office of the solicitor, instead of at the record and writ clerk's office, the solicitor at whose office the inspection takes place is not entitled to charge the other side for attendances during the inspection. Flookton v. Peake, 12 W. R. 1023; 4 N. R. 456.

6. Where an order is made in an action in the Chancery Division for the production of documents at the office of the producing party's solicitor, that party, if ultimately successful in the action, is not entitled, as between party and party, to his solicitor's costs of the production, nor to his own costs of inspecting the documents of the other party. Brown v. Sewell, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 517; 44 L. T. 41; 29 W. R. 295.

13. Journeys and Attendances in London.

7. Where it is the usage of the profession that certain business should be intrusted to an agent in London, a country solicitor will not be allowed to charge for his attendance in London, to perform that business, although his client has requested his attendance, unless the solicitor has first explained to his client, that, by the usage of the profession, such attendance is considered to be unnecessary. The comparison of an abstract of title with the title-deeds is business within this rule, and a country solicitor will not be allowed to charge for his personal attendance in London, in respect of such business. Alsop v. Oxford (Lord), 1 Myl. & K. 564; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 174.

8. Charges by a country solicitor, for attending the cause in London, to be allowed in some cases; but the circumstance of their being undertaken by the direction of the client, is not alone a sufficient ground for allowing them, as the solicitor himself is better able to judge of their necessity. Crossley v. Parker, 1 Jac. & Walk 460.

9. Generally, country solicitors are not allowed the costs of a journey to London to examine abstracts there, unless there be some speciality. Re Tryon, 7 Beav. 496.

10. A solicitor acting for a third mortgagee, negotiated for a transfer of the first mortgage, and had proceeded so far as to send the drafts. He took a journey into the country to complete the matter, which proved fruitless; and having previously received an intimation that the second mortgagee had already obtained a transfer of the first mortgage, the costs of the journey were, on taxation, disallowed, on the ground that, after that intimation, he ought to have obtained his client's sanction before incurring the expense. Re Price, 9 Beav. 234.

11. A considerable portion of a charge for attendance of a solicitor in town at the request of his client disallowed, on the ground that the solicitor had failed to prove that the whole time was required for the business. Where a solicitor makes against his client any charge not authorised in the usual and regular mode of proceeding, the burden of the proof is upon the solicitor; and in a case where for the interest of a client the solicitor had advanced money to put in the answer of a co-defendant, it was disallowed on the ground that it was not clearly made out that the client authorised or acquiesced in it. Re Pender, 10 Beav. 390.

12. A country solicitor personally attending an appeal instead of employing his London agent, will be allowed the additional charges and expenses thereby occasioned. Re Foster, Ex p. Dickens, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 598; 26 W. R. 915.

13. Costs of attendance of the country solicitor in a country cause, where witnesses were cross-examined in court, disallowed in a taxation between party and party. Clark v. Malpas, 31 Beav. 554; 9 Jur., N. S., 612; 82 L. J., Ch., 313; 11 W. R. 251; 7 L. T., N. S., 659; 1 N. R. 221.

14. Costs of a journey to Paris to obtain the execution of a deed disallowed, beyond the expense of doing it through an agent. Re Bevan, 20 Beav. 146.

15. A solicitor had a retainer to act generally for a company, and also a special retainer to conduct a chancery suit on behalf of the company. Being employed by another client to go to America, he collected information on behalf of the company in furtherance of their suit, but without special instructions from the company to do so. On his return to England, he reported to the company what he had done, and they made use of the information he had obtained. He afterwards took three journeys to Paris to conduct negotiations for a compromise of the same suit, without instructions from the company, but with the knowledge of some of the directors, and on two of them he was accompanied by the chairman:—Held, that, under the special circumstances of the case, the solicitor was entitled to charge the company for his professional services in America, and also for his professional services and expenses on his journeys to Paris. Re Snell, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 815; 36 L. T., N. S., 534; 25 W. R. 736. Reversing 25 W. R. 40.

14. Letters and Posting.

1. Letters written by a solicitor to his client which are not properly required for the interests of the client in the business for which the solicitor is engaged, will not be allowed on taxation. Re Brady, 15 W. R. 632.

2. A country solicitor, with an office in town, conducting personally the business which would ordinarily be transacted by a London agent, is not entitled to charge for letters passing between the two offices; but such charges are not "overcharges amounting to fraud," so as to induce the Court to refer the bill more than twelve months after delivery. Re Harle, 19 L. T., N. S., 305; 17 W. R. 21.

3. A solicitor is not entitled to charge a profit upon the addressing and posting of documents for his client. Eap. Ditton, Re Woods, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 318; 42 L. T. 161; 28 W. R. 402.

15. Perusals.

4. Taxation of costs between solicitor and client: solicitor's fee for perusing and signing approbation of a draft deed submitted for approbation of his client, who was to be an executing party. Westby v. Greene, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 449.

5. Where depositions have been taken abroad, a reasonable allowance should be made to the solicitor in England for perusing them. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 2 L. R., Eq., 607; 12 Jur., N. S., 581; 35 L. J., Ch., 642; 14 W. R. 751.

6. A demurrer to the whole bill having been allowed with costs:—Held, that the solicitor for the defendant was not entitled to fees for perusing interrogatories (so as to render the plaintiff liable to the costs of a double defence by demurrer and answer), for drawing an index and marginal notes to the bill (which was of extraordinary length and complication), for the assistance of counsel, or for drawing observations for counsel's brief to argue the demurrer. Ernest v. Partridge, 11 W. R. 715; 8 L. T., N. S., 655; 2 N. R. 232.

7. A similar affidavit was filed by a plaintiff in each of several suits. The solicitor for the defendants took an office copy of the affidavit in one suit only, and examined at the record office the affidavits in the other suits:—Held, that he was not entitled to charge for perusing the affidavits in the other suits. Betts v. Cleaver, 7 L. R., Ch., 513; 41 L. J., Ch., 663; 27 L. T. 85; 20 W. R. 732.

8. Under an order for taxation, 2l. 2s. was allowed to the solicitor then acting for the client for perusing the bill of his predecessor, it having led to a compromise. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 510.

9. Mortgagee's solicitor, at the time of the loan, perused the title-deeds, and was paid the costs therefore by the mortgagor. After the decree for sale in the mortgage cause, the same solicitor prepared the abstract of title under the 138th General Order, which, though deducting the title to the time of sale, did not contain any new deeds. The Master having refused to allow the costs of perusing the deeds, the Court refused to send back his taxation. Scott v. King, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 483.

10. Biddings were opened upon an advanced price on payment by the applicant of the costs properly incurred of the purchaser:—Held, that the costs of perusing the abstract and of the examination of the title, prior to the first purchase being confirmed, ought not to be allowed on taxation. Raymond v. Lakeman, 34 Beav. 584.

11. The costs of perusals of exhibits to affidavits are not allowed on taxation under the Rules of Court, August 1875 (Costs), Ord. VI., without a special direction to the taxing-master, who by the form of order has liberty to allow a special charge for perusal and consideration of the exhibits, the amount of such charge, if any, to be in his discretion. Re De Rosaz, Rymer v. De Rosaz, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 684; 49 L. T. 133.

16. Prolixity and Unnecessary Matter.

12. Additional costs of long amendments, granted. Rome v. Stuart, Dick. 58.

13. Where the bill prayed a sale, and account and payment of prior contemporaneous incumbrances, and a prior elegit creditor had put in an answer of unreasonable length, the Court directed that the Remembrancer should, in taxing the costs, have regard to the length of the answer. O'Brien v. O'Brien, Jon. & C. 193.

14. In a suit for tithe composition, all the defendants appeared by the same attorney, and such of them as were tenants from year to year answered the bill separately at length. The Court, upon motion, permitted the plaintiff to dismiss his bill against those defendants, upon payment of costs; and directed the officer, in taxing the costs, to disallow the costs of any answer, or part of any answer, which should appear to have been improperly and unnecessarily filed. Armstrong v. Bannon, 2 Jones 538.

15. Where the bill was dismissed with costs, the Court referred it to the Master to inquire what parts of a cross-bill were of unnecessary length, and the costs thereby occasioned. Woods v. Woods, 5 Hare 229.

16. Where, in an unopposed petition, unnecessary statements were introduced, the Court directed the taxing master, on taxing the costs, to have reference to such statements. Hyder v. Coleman, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 592.

17. The Masters do not act under the 40th Consolidated Order, r. 9, in relation to the unnecessary length of the pleading, unless directed by the order of reference. Re Farington, 33 Beav. 346.

18. Where a petition was presented to the Court of vexatious length, the Court directed the Master, in taxing the costs, to have regard to the length of the petition. Canning v. Bell, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 304.

19. The plaintiff, in a supplemental bill, set out at considerable length the statement of the original bill:—Held, that he ought to pay the costs of any unnecessary statements, to be determined by the Master. Horsley v. Fawcett, 11 Beav. 565.

1. The Court will, on the hearing of a cause, decide the question whether the pleadings contain any impertinent matter, and will order a direction to be inserted in the decree, that the taxing master, in taxing the costs, shall have regard to the matter so decided to be impertinent. Stephens v. Lawrie, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 71.

2. A plaintiff having by an amended bill abandoned part of the relief prayed by his original bill, the Court referred it to the Master, upon motion by the defendant, to tax the additional costs which had been occasioned by so much of the plaintiff's claim as had been so abandoned, and ordered the costs when taxed to be paid by the plaintiff. Strickland v. Strickland, 3 Beav. 242; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 392.

3. The Masters never tax the costs of such parts of an answer as are prolix or unnecessary. Parsons v. Potter, 2 Hog. 281.

A mere trustee is only allowed an answer of one skin and a guinea. Id.

4. Remarks as to the effect of the 122nd Order of May 1845 as to costs of prolix or unnecessary affidavits, and jurisdiction of Master in respect of them on their taxation. Moore v. Smith, 14 Beav. 393.

5. Where bill had been amended three times, and the two last were by the negligence or error of plaintiff, the defendant was allowed extra costs of those latter amendments. Watts v. Manning, 1 Sim. & S. 421.

6. Special direction to taxing master to see whether matter had been properly introduced by amendment, and to charge the plaintiff therewith. Burchell v. Giles, 11 Beav. 34.

7. A solicitor, in carrying in a state of facts to obtain the Master's approval of a contract to purchase, appended a long schedule thereto of the parcels proposed to be purchased. The taxing master disallowed the charge for drawing, and only allowed for copying such schedule:—Held, that such disallowance was proper, although the Master in ordinary had allowed attendances upon a number of warrants proportioned to the length of the state of facts, including the schedule:—Held, also, that the allowances in respect of these attendances were properly considered by the taxing master as a compensation for other business actually transacted, and in respect of which he disallowed the charges. Jones v. Lewis, 1 De G. & Sm. 245; 11 Jur. 511.

8. Directions given to the Master, that in taxing the costs he should, under Rule 9 of the 40th Order, strike off such parts of the costs as might have been occasioned by an improper mode of framing the pleadings and the affidavits on both sides. Hanslip v. Kitton, 8 Jur., N. S., 835.

9. The costs of an unnecessarily long petition will be limited to ten guineas. Bourne v. Buckton, 36 L. J., Ch., 792.

to be of unnecessary length, and disallow the costs occasioned thereby. Re Skidmore's Trusts, 1 Jur., N. S., 696; 24 L. J., Ch., 711.

11. On dismissing a claim, the Court may direct the defendant to pay the costs of any scandalous and impertinent portions of his affidavits. Dufaur v. Sigel, 4 De G. M. & G. 520; 22 L. J., Ch., 678.

12. Where, in an interpleader suit, the plaintiffs filed an affidavit of some length as to merits:—Held, that in making an order on the defendants to interplead, and for taxation of costs, there should be a direction to the Master to have regard to any prolixity in the affidavits. Scottish Union Insurance Co. v. Steele, 9 L. T., N. S., 677.

13. Directions given to the taxing master under Rule 18 of Order VI. of the Additional Rules of Court, August 1875, to look into and disallow costs of affidavits of unnecessary length. Cracknall v. Janson, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 1.

14. An affidavit of documents unnecessarily prolix was ordered, on motion, to be taken off the file, the costs to be paid by offending party. Walker v. Poole, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 835; 51 L. J., Ch., 840.

15. When a defendant obtains the ordinary order to stay proceedings upon payment of costs, it is the duty of the Master when taxing such costs to consider and determine questions raised by the defendant as to the necessity or propriety of proceedings for which charges are made in the bills of costs. Re Wormsley, Baines v. Wormsley, 39 L. T., N. S., 85; 27 W. R. 36; 47 L. J., Ch., 844.

16. On an abandoned motion, or on the discontinuance of an action, the costs of all work in preparing, briefing, or otherwise, relating to affidavits or pleadings, are allowed, provided, in the opinion of the taxing master, such work has not been prematurely done. Harrison v. Leutner, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 559; 50 L. J., Ch., 264; 44 L. T. 331; 29 W. R. 393.

17. Shorthand Notes.

17. Special retainer disallowed in the taxation of costs as between party and party. Transcript of shorthand writer's notes used on appeal disallowed, on a taxation between party and party. Smith v. Effingham (Earl), 10 Beav. 378; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 297; 11 Jur. 444.

18. In taxing the costs of a motion for a new trial of an issue, the cost of copies of the shorthand writer's notes of the evidence taken on the former trial are in the discretion of the taxing master, regard being had to the nature of the issue, and the extent to which such copies, if at all, were necessary; but in no case will more than two copies be allowed. Malins v. Price, 1 Ph. 590; 9 Jur. 955.

19. As to allowance for shorthand notes taken before a Master in winding up proceedings. See Re London and Birmingham & Buckinghamshire Railway Co. Exp. Curzon (Viscount), 6 W. R. 141.

20. A charge for shorthand notes of vivâ voce evidence taken at the hearing, and used on the appeal, will not be allowed on taxation between party and party. Mockett v. Peake, 12 W. R. 1023; 4 N. R. 456.

1. Shorthand writer's notes of the cross-examination of witnesses in court allowed, but costs of his notes of the judgment disallowed, on a taxation between party and party. Clark v. Malpas, 31 Beav. 554; 9 Jur., N. S., 612; 32 L. J., Ch., 313; 11 W. R. 251; 7 L. T., N. S., 659; 1 N. R. 221.

2. The charge for a copy of a shorthand writer's notes of the proceedings in a county court may be allowed as part of the costs of an appeal. Exp. Sawyer, Re Bowden, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 698; 45 L. J., Bky., 56; 33 L. T. 759; 24 W. R. 375.

3. An appellant was allowed the costs of transcribing and printing shorthand notes of the evidence given vidé voce in the court below, though they had been printed without any previous order of the Court, and without any consent on the part of the respondent, on the ground that the appeal could not have been properly heard without the printed evidence; but the Court refused to allow the costs of the attendance of the shorthand writer to take the notes. Bigsby v. Dickinson, 35 L. T., N. S., 679; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 24; 25 W. R. 122.

4. A motion to vary the Master's certificate by allowing costs of supplying copies of shorthand notes to counsel during the progress of trial was refused on the ground that special directions ought to have been asked for at the trial. Kirkwood v. Webster, 47 L. J., Ch., 880; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 239; 26 W. R. 812.

5. Upon the hearing of an action the principal evidence was given vidé voce, and the solicitors on each side agreed together that one shorthand writer should be engaged on behalf of both plaintiff and defendant. Shorthand notes were accordingly taken of the speeches of counsel, of the evidence, and of the judgment of the Court. An order having been made in favour of the defendant, the plaintiff appealed, and the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal with costs, nothing being said about the shorthand writer's notes. On taxing the defendant's costs of the appeal, the Master disallowed the costs of copies of the shorthand notes, except those of the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, and further disallowed the sum paid by the defendant for shorthand writer's charges. The Vice-Chancellor decided that the two items in question must be allowed as costs in the cause:—Held, on appeal, that the Master was right in disallowing the two items, there having been a simple dismissal of the appeal with costs, without any special directions. Ashworth v. Outram, 39 L. T., N. S., 441; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 483; 27 W. R. 98.

The agreement between the solicitors was merely an arrangement for saving expense, and left the case on the same footing as if each party had employed his own shorthand writer. Ib.

6. The costs of shorthand notes of evidence in the court below are not to be allowed as a matter of course upon an appeal, but only where a case is made for such allowance. Re Duchess of Westminster Silver Lead Ore Co., 10 L. R., Ch. D., 307; 27 W. R. 539; 40 L. T. 300.

7. Where shorthand notes of evidence are essential to the proper hearing of the case, the costs of such notes will be allowed. Lee Conservancy Board v. Button, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 383; 41 L. T. 500.

8. The Court declined to give the successful plaintiff the costs of the shorthand writer's notes of the proceedings which had been taken by each side, as the Court had not required them to be produced for its own use. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, 41 L. T. 543.

9. The Court will not include in the costs of an action the costs of the shorthand writer's notes of evidence unless there has been an agreement between the parties on the subject. Mostyn v. Lancaster, 51 L. J., Ch., 705.

10. The Court allowed the costs of copies of the transcript of the shorthand writer's notes of the judgment below, furnished to the defendants' two original counsel. Wegman v. Corcoran, 41 L. T. 792.

11. The costs of shorthand writers' notes of a judgment are not allowed when it has appeared in the reports, provided that the report appeared a sufficient length of time before the briefs were delivered; if the report appeared too late, the costs will be allowed. London & South Western Railway Co. v. Gomm, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 589; 46 L. T. 455.

12. Where the Court has used the shorthand writers' notes of evidence taken in the court below, the costs will be allowed. Smith v. Chadwick, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 81; 51 L. J., Ch., 621.

13. The costs of the transcript of a shorthand writer's notes of evidence are, like other costs, in the discretion of the judge within r. 188 of the Bankruptcy Rules 1870, notwithstanding the provisions with reference to these costs made by r. 207. Re Albeverie, Exp. Smith, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 599; 48 L. J., Bky., 13; 38 L. T. 395; 26 W. R. 513.

14. It is the duty of the taxing master in a bankruptcy appeal to decide as to the costs of the transcript of a shorthand writer's notes of the depositions. Exp. Cooks, Re Poole, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 407.

Costs of the transcript of the registrar's judgment in a bankruptcy appeal were ordered to be included in the costs of the trustee. Ib.

15. The Court allowed the respondents the costs of copies of a shorthand writer's notes of evidence taken before the registrar, on the ground that they had been served by the appellant with notice that such notes would be read. Re Harris, Exp. Ward, 30 W. R. 561.

16. The Court generally allows the costs of the shorthand writers' notes of the judgment of the court below, if the transcript of the judgment is made use of. Collyer v. Isaacs, 45 L. T. 567; 30 W. R. 71.

17. As a general rule the Court of Appeal refuses the costs of shorthand notes of the evidence in the court below. Kelly v. Byles, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 682; 49 L. J., Ch., 181; 28 W. R. 585. See also Bewley v. Atkinson, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 300.

18. The Court will not allow the costs of shorthand notes of evidence except under very special circumstances. Vernon v. St James's Vestry, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 473; 44 L. T. 229; 29 W. R. 222.

19. Under the common order of the Court of Appeal giving the costs of the appeal, and of the shorthand writer's notes of the evidence and of the judgment in the court below, the solicitor of the successful party, when the shorthand notes have been printed in the first instance, is entitled on taxation of the costs to be allowed, in addition to the printer's bill, 3*d.* per folio for one printed copy of the shorthand notes of the evidence supplied to each of his counsel on the appeal, and 3*d.* per folio for one printed copy of the shorthand notes of the judgment supplied for the use of each judge of the Court of Appeal. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog, 52 L. J., Ch., 288; 49 L. T. 484; 31 W. R. 392.

1. It is a settled rule that the costs of shorthand writers' notes of evidence will not be allowed on taxation unless there is in the order a direction to that effect. Such a direction will only be inserted in exceptional cases; the notes of the judge, supplemented by those of counsel, being amply sufficient, if not better, for all ordinary purposes. The general utility of shorthand writers' notes considered. De la Warr (Earl) v. Miles, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 80; 45 L. T. 424; 30 W. R. 35.

After the order of the Court of Appeal has been drawn up, the Court has no power to alter the order by adding a direction that the costs of shorthand writers' notes of the evidence be allowed. Ib.

2. Costs will not be allowed of shorthand notes of evidence which are not used on the hearing of an appeal, the decision turning on a question of law. Eap. Webster, Re Morris, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 136; 52 L. J., Ch., 375.

18. Other Items.

3. An order was made for the division and transfer of a fund in court, but before it could be completed the fund became altered, and the solicitor presented a petition for a similar object:—Held, that it could not be considered as unnecessary, it appearing that the solicitor using his best exertions was unable to act on the first order, by reason of a difficulty as to the legacy duty; the solicitor was therefore allowed the costs upon taxation. Expedition money, paid by a solicitor to a stationer or writing clerk employed in the registrar's office, disallowed upon taxation. A gratuity paid to the clerks of the accountant-general's office was disallowed to the solicitor on taxation, as was also a fee paid upon bespeaking an order for transfer which could not be made available. Re Bodson, 9 Beav. 187; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 189; 10 Jur. 213.

4. Costs of registry searches, although directed by counsel, refused, under the circumstances, to be allowed the solicitor on a taxation between solicitor and client. Costs of proceedings in a cause, after the object of it had, with the knowledge of the solicitor, been otherwise obtained, not to be allowed on a taxation between solicitor and client, except under special circumstances. Langford v. Mahony, 3 J. & L. 97.

5. On a summary application by injunction, the Court will direct the costs of a written bill to be allowed, unless it is shown that such additional expense has not been incurred bonâ fide. Elt v. Islington (Burial Board), 2 W. R. 584; 2 Eq. Rep. 1089.

6. Solicitors in London were appointed solicitors to a projected company; other solicitors were appointed as local solicitors, and were directed to prepare notices to land owners, and other matters connected with the local board; errors were discovered in these, and the scheme was ultimately abandoned. The London solicitors, in their bill of costs, charged for the preparation of these notices, and the taxing Master allowed them. The master of the Rolls disallowed the claim, and "directed" the solicitors to establish their right at law, on the ground that the facts were disputed, and that on the facts, so far as they were ascertained, there were questions of law to be decided. On appeal, the claim was disallowed until it should be established at law, and the solicitors "were to be at liberty" to bring such action as they might be advised. Re Burchell, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 236; 11 Beav. 596.

7. A solicitor is entitled to charge 6*s.* 8*d.* for every three defendants to a bill for whom he enters appearances, although he may enter the appearances for all the defendants at the same time; and the scale of fees contained in the 5th General Order of the 23rd October 1852, as to entering appearances, is not to be confined to appearances to summonses. Morritt v. Walton, 18 Jur. 563; 23 L. J., Ch., 1003; 2 W. R. 599.

8. Term fee allowed where the only proceeding was leaving copy of decree and bill of costs before the Master. Davies v. Marshall, 1 Dr. & Sm: 564; 7 Jur., N. S., 669; 9 W. R. 756.

Costs of drawing observations when a cause stood over were allowed.

9. The fee of 2*d.* per folio for revising the print of a defendant's answer can be allowed only in those cases where the defendant swears to and files a printed answer. Att.-Gen. v. Ethridge, 32 L. J., Ch., 706; 11 W. R. 927; 9 L. T., N. S., 314.

10. A solicitor is not entitled to charge at the rate of 4*d.* per folio for documents existing in print prior to the institution of a suit, though the documents may have been properly used for the purposes of the suit. Underwood v. Secretary of State for India, 16 W. R. 752; 18 L. T., N. S., 351. Affirmed 16 W. R. 926; 19 L. T., N. S., 270.

11. Under an order for taxation, 2*l.* 2*s.* was allowed to the solicitor then acting for the client for perusing the bill of his predecessor, it having led to a compromise. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 510.

12. Only one fee of 6*s.* 8*d.* is allowed for attending for and to file a certificate of taxation, and not 6*s.* 8*d.* to bespeak for attending filing same. S. C. 18 Beav. 513.

A client was liable to a solicitor for the costs of procuring the execution of a lease by her tenant, but which the tenant was to bear. The amount not having been paid when the order to tax was made:—Held, that the charge was properly included in the bill of costs of the solicitor against his client. Ib.

13. Charge of 13*s.* 4*d.* for a list of deeds handed over by a solicitor under an order for taxation disallowed. S. C. 18 Beav. 514.

A solicitor is entitled to charge for the costs of the affidavit made by him on delivering up the papers under an order for taxation. Ib.

14. Three guineas is a proper sum to allow to each successful claimant to a fund in court for the costs of establishing his claim. Waterton

On appeal, the Court declined to interfere with the discretion which the Master had exercised in the matter, and ordered L. to pay to the parties served with the motion a sum for costs. Stahlschmidt v. Lett, 7 Jur., N. S., 1271; 9 W. R. 830.

1. Practice of the Taxing Master's Office as to the proceedings under a taxation of costs not requiring service or where service is dispensed with. Re Harvey's Settlement, 10 Hare (App.) lxxv.

2. Personal service on a solicitor of proceedings under a taxation dispensed with, and service by placing under his door substituted. Re Templeman, 20 Beav. 574.

3. A party does not attend a taxation by writing letters to the taxing master. Re Upperton, 30 W. R. 840.

2. Affidavit of Increase.

4. Where one of the parties to an action in the Chancery Division has been ordered to pay costs, the common law practice of requiring in all cases from the party to whom the costs are to be paid an affidavit of increase, proving that payments said to have been made have in fact been made, that witnesses were material, how many days they were in attendance, etc., will not be followed, but the party ordered to pay costs will only be entitled to call for such an affidavit in cases in which the taxing master has required it to supply information of which he is not in possession. Smith v. Day, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 726; 50 L. J., Ch., 333; 44 L. T. 217; 29 W. R. 424.

5. On an objection to a solicitor's charge for journeys, his affidavit that they "were necessarily and properly taken for the benefit of the trust estates," was, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, held sufficient. Mum v. Pearson, 3 N. R. 99.

3. Allocatur.

6. The allocatur of the taxing master, upon a taxation, does not, when registered under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 18, constitute a charge on the real estate of the client. Shaw v. Neale, 20 Beav. 157; 1 Jur., N. S., 1666; 24 L. J., Ch., 563.

7. An order for taxation was to be void, unless the Master made his report in a fortnight, or certified that further time was necessary. The time elapsed without such certificate, and the parties afterwards attended several times before the Master without objecting:—Held, that the irregularity had been waived, and an order was made for the Master to proceed in the taxation. Re Field, 16 Beav. 593.

4. Other Matters.

8. Upon taxation of a bill of costs, the solicitor must advance the sum payable to the Chancery fund. Hodgens v. Wheeler, Fl. & K. 162; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 323.

9. It is not the duty of the solicitor of a party entitled to costs to tot, upon oath, the items in the bill of costs as certified by the taxing officer; but if he takes it upon himself to make the tot in the absence of the solicitor of the opposite party, his client will be liable for the consequences of any mistake he may make. Kelly v. O'Beirne, 16 W. R. 172.

10. Where an attorney has been seven years without getting his bills taxed, after an order so to do, and they are lost in the meantime in the Master's office, the Court will not allow it to go again to the Master. Yea v. Yea, 2 Anstr. 494.

11. Where after an order of taxation and payment the solicitor has assigned his bill to a purchaser and absconded, the Court was inclined to think that the purchaser could not stand in place of the solicitor until he had procured him to be examined under the order. Wilson v. Williams, Barnard. 263.

12. The usual order for taxation empowers the Master to examine the solicitor as to what money he had received only; but, upon proper affidavits, the Court will order him to be examined as to his disbursements. Anon., Mos. 331.

13. Special direction given on an order for taxation, that if the solicitor should be unable to establish any of the charges by reason of the death of his clerk, or the absence of the books and papers delivered to the client, the taxing master should report specially thereon. Re Watts, 7 Beav. 491.

14. A solicitor may be cross-examined on an affidavit made by him in support of a bill of costs under an order for taxation, and it is the duty of the examiners to take such examination. Re Flux, Argles, and Rawlins, 44 L. J., Ch., 375.

15. After the delivery by a solicitor of his bill, he executed a deed, assigning all his property for the benefit of his creditors, which became binding on all the creditors. The clients afterwards obtained the common order for taxation against the solicitor himself, notwithstanding the deed. He thereupon gave them notice of the deed, but went in before the taxing master and opposed the taxation. There was a balance due from him. The Court allowed the clients to complete the taxation, on their undertaking not to proceed personally against the solicitor. Re Bartrum, 12 W. R. 699; 10 L. T., N. S., 313.

16. A railway company was ordered to be wound up. A claim was made before the Master, but not prosecuted. One contributory agreed to pay all debts proved before the Master, and thereupon an order was made to stay all proceedings under the winding-up order. In the same matter two solicitors obtained an order for the taxation and payment of their bills of costs. The taxation was commenced, and had not concluded when the order to stay proceedings was made:—Held, that the solicitors were entitled to proceed with the taxation of their bills of costs. Reep. Clifton, Re Dover, Deal, and Cinque Ports Railway Co., 3 W. R. 8; 24 L. J., Ch., 83.

XXI. PAYMENT INTO COURT PENDING.

17. On the client's neglecting to attend the Master on the taxation of the bill, the Chancellor would not order him to bring the money into court, but only that the order of reference should be discharged, if he did not procure a report in a fortnight. Anon., Mos. 68.

1. Solicitor's bill taxed without bringing the money into court as formerly. The judgment not afterwards opened for the client to have an account taken in respect of moneys due to him. Anon., 2 Ves. 452.

2. A solicitor cannot obtain the taxation of his agent's bill without bringing the amount into court. Ostle v. Christian, T. & R. 324.

3. An order for the taxation of an agent's bill cannot be obtained as of course by a solicitor, nor can the rule for bringing the amount of the agent's bill into court, upon such application, be dispensed with except under special circumstances. Lees v. Nuttall, 2 Myl. & K. 284; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 124.

4. Where a reference for taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs is applied for, after the expiration of the one month mentioned in the 37th section of 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, and the bill is under 100*l.* in amount, the order will be made for a reference, without requiring the amount of the bill to be paid into court. Re Bromley, 7 Beav. 477; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 320.

The taxation of a bill was directed on terms of paying the amount, 50*l.*, into court; it was taxed at 25*l.* The Court, upon motion, directed payment out of court of the funds deposited. Id.

5. Where decree orders defendant to retain his costs, when taxed, out of the balance in his hands, and pay the residue into court, if the defendant delays to get costs taxed, plaintiff must move that he may bring his bill of costs to be taxed within limited time, and not that he may pay in the whole balance. Newsome v. Shearman, 2 Sim. & S. 95.

6. Taxation of a bill was directed on the terms of paying a sum of money into court. The fund accumulated:—Held, that the solicitor was not entitled to the stock and the benefit of the accumulations, but that the whole must be sold, and the produce applied in part discharge of the bill. Re Smith, 9 Beav. 342.

7. Leave given to except to Master's report of costs, on payment of taxed costs into court. Exp. Leigh, 4 Madd. 394.

8. An application that the officer of the Court may be directed to review his certificate as to the taxation of costs, may be made by motion. It is not an objection to such application that the amount of the taxed costs has not been paid into court, though it may be proper to make such payment one of the terms of the order for re-taxation. Exp. Richardson, Re Consett, 3 Dea. & Ch. 735; 1 Mont. & A. 377.

XXII. REVIEW OF.

1. Order for. How Obtained, 6505.
2. On What Grounds, 6506.
3. Costs of, 6507.
4. Other Matters, 6507.

1. Order for. How Obtained.

9. Exceptions are not regularly taken to the Master's report for costs only, but should be by petition. Pitt v. Mackreth, 3 Bro. C. C. 321.

10. The application for leave to file exceptions to Master's certificate of taxation of costs must be made on affidavit, stating the facts on which exceptions are founded, and the notice of motion should state the exceptions intended to be filed, and the ground of exception. Jenkinson v. Royston, 9 Price 215. S. P. Oliver v. Court, id. 216. n.

11. An application that the officer of the Court may be directed to review his certificate as to the taxation of costs, may be made by motion. And it is not an objection to such an application, that the amount of the taxed costs has not been paid into court, although it may be proper to make such payment one of the terms of the order for re-taxation. Exp. Richardson, Re Consett, 3 Dea. & Ch. 735; 1 Mont. & A. 377.

12. An application for a review of a Master's certificate of taxation, on the ground that certain items had been improperly allowed, is not regular by way of motion. Att.-Gen. v. Brown, 1 Myl. & K. 567.

13. An application for the re-taxation of a solicitor's bill should be by petition, stating particularly the grounds of complaint, and not by motion. Att.-Gen. v. Nethercoat, 3 Beav. 297. S. P. Mussett v. Hill, 3 Beav. 301.

14. The Master's certificate on taxation of costs cannot be questioned without the special leave of the Court, to be obtained by petition setting forth the grounds of complaint, and the charges alleged to be erroneous. Re Congreve, 4 Beav. 87.

On petition for liberty to file exceptions to the Master's certificate of taxation, the Court will sometimes decide the point in dispute without putting the parties to file their exceptions. Id.

15. Objections to the Master's report on taxation of costs, are properly taken by petition. A solicitor presented a petition complaining that the Master, in taxing his bill, had taken into consideration matters not referred to him, and praying for leave to except to the certificate. It was objected that the solicitor ought to have filed exceptions to the certificate, but the Court overruled the objection. Russel v. Buchanan, 9 Sim. 167; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 210; 2 Jur. 610.

16. In equity the proper mode in this court of objecting to the Master's taxation of costs is to move upon affidavits, stating the ground of objection, for leave to file exceptions to the report. Wright v. Southwood, 1 Y. & J. 430.

17. A motion for leave to except to the Master's certificate of the taxation of costs was refused, and a petition directed. Bozon v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 378.

18. The Master will not be ordered, on motion, to review his taxation of costs; such an application must be made by petition. Anon., 1 L. J., Ch., 104.

19. An application to review a taxation must be made by a summons in chambers, and cannot be made on motion. Webster v. Manby, 4 L. R., Ch., 372; 17 W. R. 545; 20 L. T., N. S., 387.

20. When a superior court of record has jurisdiction to make upon motion an order or a certificate for costs, such order is binding and conclusive, and the Master's taxation for

On appeal, the Court declined to interfere with the discretion which the Master had exercised in the matter, and ordered L. to pay to the parties served with the motion a sum for costs. Stahschmidt v. Lett, 7 Jur. N. S., 1271; 9 W. R. 830.

1. Practice of the Taxing Master's Office as to the proceedings under a taxation of costs not requiring service or where service is dispensed with. Re Harvey's Settlement, 10 Hare (App.) lxxv.

2. Personal service on a solicitor of proceedings under a taxation dispensed with, and service by placing under his door substituted. Re Templeman, 20 Beav. 574.

3. A party does not attend a taxation by writing letters to the taxing master. Re Upperton, 30 W. R. 840.

2. Affidavit of Increase.

4. Where one of the parties to an action in the Chancery Division has been ordered to pay costs, the common law practice of requiring in all cases from the party to whom the costs are to be paid an affidavit of increase, proving that payments said to have been made have in fact been made, that witnesses were material, how many days they were in attendance, etc., will not be followed, but the party ordered to pay costs will only be entitled to call for such an affidavit in cases in which the taxing master has required it to supply information of which he is not in possession. Smith v. Day, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 726; 50 L. J., Ch., 333; 44 L. T. 217; 29 W. R. 424.

5. On an objection to a solicitor's charge for journeys, his affidavit that they "were necessarily and properly taken for the benefit of the trust estates," was, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, held sufficient. Mam v. Pearson, 3 N. R. 99.

3. Allocatur.

6. The allocatur of the taxing master, upon a taxation, does not, when registered under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 18, constitute a charge on the real estate of the client. Sham v. Neale, 20 Beav. 157; 1 Jur., N. S., 1666; 24 L. J., Ch., 563.

7. An order for taxation was to be void, unless the Master made his report in a fortnight, or certified that further time was necessary. The time elapsed without such certificate, and the parties afterwards attended several times before the Master without objecting:—Held, that the irregularity had been waived, and an order was made for the Master to proceed in the taxation. Re Field, 16 Beav. 593.

4. Other Matters.

8. Upon taxation of a bill of costs, the solicitor must advance the sum payable to the Chancery fund. Hodgens v. Wheeler, Fl. & K. 162; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 323.

9. It is not the duty of the solicitor of a party entitled to costs to tot, upon oath, the items in the bill of costs as certified by the taxing officer; but if he takes it upon himself to make the tot in the absence of the solicitor of the opposite party, his client will be liable for the consequences of any mistake he may make. Kelly v. O'Beirne, 16 W. R. 172.

10. Where an attorney has been seven years without getting his bills taxed, after an order so to do, and they are lost in the meantime in the Master's office, the Court will not allow it to go again to the Master. Yea v. Yea, 2 Anstr. 494.

11. Where after an order of taxation and payment the solicitor has assigned his bill to a purchaser and absconded, the Court was inclined to think that the purchaser could not stand in place of the solicitor until he had procured him to be examined under the order. Wilson v. Williams, Barnard. 263.

12. The usual order for taxation empowers the Master to examine the solicitor as to what money he had received only; but, upon proper affidavits, the Court will order him to be examined as to his disbursements. Anon., Mos. 331.

13. Special direction given on an order for taxation, that if the solicitor should be unable to establish any of the charges by reason of the death of his clerk, or the absence of the books and papers delivered to the client, the taxing master should report specially thereon. Re Watts, 7 Beav. 491.

14. A solicitor may be cross-examined on an affidavit made by him in support of a bill of costs under an order for taxation, and it is the duty of the examiners to take such examination. Re Flus, Argles, and Rawlins, 44 L. J., Ch., 375.

15. After the delivery by a solicitor of his bill, he executed a deed, assigning all his property for the benefit of his creditors, which became binding on all the creditors. The clients afterwards obtained the common order for taxation against the solicitor himself, notwithstanding the deed. He thereupon gave them notice of the deed, but went in before the taxing master and opposed the taxation. There was a balance due from him. The Court allowed the clients to complete the taxation, on their undertaking not to proceed personally against the solicitor. Re Bartrum, 12 W. R. 699; 10 L. T., N. S., 313.

16. A railway company was ordered to be wound up. A claim was made before the Master, but not prosecuted. One contributory agreed to pay all debts proved before the Master, and thereupon an order was made to stay all proceedings under the winding-up order. In the same matter two solicitors obtained an order for the taxation and payment of their bills of costs. The taxation was commenced, and had not concluded when the order to stay proceedings was made:—Held, that the solicitors were entitled to proceed with the taxation of their bills of costs. Exp. Clifton, Re Dover, Deal, and Cinque Ports Railway Co., 3 W. R. 8; 24 L. J., Ch., 83.

XXI. PAYMENT INTO COURT PENDING.

17. On the client's neglecting to attend the Master on the taxation of the bill, the Chancellor would not order him to bring the money into court, but only that the order of reference should be discharged, if he did not procure a report in a fortnight. Anon., Mos. 68.

1. Solicitor's bill taxed without bringing the money into court as formerly. The judgment not afterwards opened for the client to have an account taken in respect of moneys due to him. Anon., 2 Ves. 452.

2. A solicitor cannot obtain the taxation of his agent's bill without bringing the amount into court. Ostle v. Christian, T. & R. 324.

3. An order for the taxation of an agent's bill cannot be obtained as of course by a solicitor, nor can the rule for bringing the amount of the agent's bill into court, upon such application, be dispensed with except under special circumstances. Lees v. Nuttall, 2 Myl. & K. 284; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 124.

4. Where a reference for taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs is applied for, after the expiration of the one month mentioned in the 37th section of 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, and the bill is under 100*l.* in amount, the order will be made for a reference, without requiring the amount of the bill to be paid into court. Re Bromley, 7 Beav. 477; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 320.

The taxation of a bill was directed on terms of paying the amount, 50*l.*, into court; it was taxed at 25*l.* The Court, upon motion, directed payment out of court of the funds deposited. Ib.

5. Where decree orders defendant to retain his costs, when taxed, out of the balance in his hands, and pay the residue into court, if the defendant delays to get costs taxed, plaintiff must move that he may bring his bill of costs to be taxed within limited time, and not that he may pay in the whole balance. Newsome v. Shearman, 2 Sim. & S. 95.

6. Taxation of a bill was directed on the terms of paying a sum of money into court. The fund accumulated:—Held, that the solicitor was not entitled to the stock and the benefit of the accumulations, but that the whole must be sold, and the produce applied in part discharge of the bill. Re Smith, 9 Beav. 342.

7. Leave given to except to Master's report of costs, on payment of taxed costs into court. Exp. Leigh, 4 Madd. 394.

8. An application that the officer of the Court may be directed to review his certificate as to the taxation of costs, may be made by motion. It is not an objection to such application that the amount of the taxed costs has not been paid into court, though it may be proper to make such payment one of the terms of the order for re-taxation. Exp. Richardson, Re Consett, 3 Dea. & Ch. 735; 1 Mont. & A. 377.

XXII. REVIEW OF.

1. Order for. How Obtained, 6506.
2. On What Grounds, 6506.
3. Costs of, 6507.
4. Other Matters, 6507.

1. Order for. How Obtained.

9. Exceptions are not regularly taken to the Master's report for costs only, but should be by petition. Pitt v. Mackreth, 3 Bro. C. C. 321.

10. The application for leave to file exceptions to Master's certificate of taxation of costs must be made on affidavit, stating the facts on which exceptions are founded, and the notice of motion should state the exceptions intended to be filed, and the ground of exception. Jenkinson v. Royston, 9 Price 215. S. P. Oliver v. Court, id. 216. n.

11. An application that the officer of the Court may be directed to review his certificate as to the taxation of costs, may be made by motion. And it is not an objection to such an application, that the amount of the taxed costs has not been paid into court, although it may be proper to make such payment one of the terms of the order for re-taxation. Exp. Richardson, Re Consett, 3 Dea. & Ch. 735; 1 Mont. & A. 377.

12. An application for a review of a Master's certificate of taxation, on the ground that certain items had been improperly allowed, is not regular by way of motion. Att.-Gen. v. Brown, 1 Myl. & K. 567.

13. An application for the re-taxation of a solicitor's bill should be by petition, stating particularly the grounds of complaint, and not by motion. Att.-Gen. v. Nethercoat, 3 Beav. 297. S. P. Musket v. Hill, 3 Beav. 301.

14. The Master's certificate on taxation of costs cannot be questioned without the special leave of the Court, to be obtained by petition setting forth the grounds of complaint, and the charges alleged to be erroneous. Re Congreve, 4 Beav. 87.

On petition for liberty to file exceptions to the Master's certificate of taxation, the Court will sometimes decide the point in dispute without putting the parties to file their exceptions. Ib.

15. Objections to the Master's report on taxation of costs, are properly taken by petition. A solicitor presented a petition complaining that the Master, in taxing his bill, had taken into consideration matters not referred to him, and praying for leave to except to the certificate. It was objected that the solicitor ought to have filed exceptions to the certificate, but the Court overruled the objection. Russel v. Buchanan, 9 Sim. 167; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 210; 2 Jur. 610.

16. In equity the proper mode in this court of objecting to the Master's taxation of costs is to move upon affidavits, stating the ground of objection, for leave to file exceptions to the report. Wright v. Southwood, 1 Y. & J. 430.

17. A motion for leave to except to the Master's certificate of the taxation of costs was refused, and a petition directed. Bozon v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 378.

18. The Master will not be ordered, on motion, to review his taxation of costs; such an application must be made by petition. Anon., 1 L. J., Ch., 104.

19. An application to review a taxation must be made by a summons in chambers, and cannot be made on motion. Webster v. Manby, 4 L. R., Ch., 372; 17 W. R. 545; 20 L. T., N. S., 387.

20. When a superior court of record has jurisdiction to make upon motion an order or a certificate for costs, such order is binding and conclusive, and the Master's taxation for such costs cannot be impugned except by a suggestion of error in fact upon the record that no order or certificate was made by the Court. Scott v. Bennett, 20 W. R. 686; 5 L. R., H. L., 234.

2. On What Grounds.

1. The Court will not review a Master's taxation of costs unless he has been wrong in principle. Darley v. Nicholson, 1 Con. & L. 391; 2 Dr. & War. 86.

2. On general exception to report on taxation, referring to a schedule, Court will hear exception on principle only. Exp. Christy, Re Barron, 3 Mont. & A. 102; 2 Dea. 129; 6 L. J., N. S., Bky., 68.

3. Exceptions do not lie to Master's report as to costs, nor can there be a re-taxation as to quantum. Irregularity in proceedings, or Master acting on mistaken principle, will induce Court to interfere. Fenton v. Crickett, 3 Madd. 496.

4. The Master's decision on questions of taxation is final, as to matters of fact and amount of charges, and is only reviewed by the Court when the Master acts upon a mistaken principle; and if the solicitor negligently or ignorantly takes some unnecessary proceeding, it is the duty of the Master to disallow the charge made in respect of such proceeding. Alsop v. Oxford (Lord), 1 Myl. & K. 564; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 174.

5. Principles upon which the Court acts in permitting a review of the Master's certificate on taxation. Re Congreve, 4 Beav. 87.

The Master, on evidence before him, allowed a few items on the taxation of a solicitor's bill for business, as to which there was a conflict, whether the solicitor had authority to perform it:—Held, that this was not a sufficient reason for permitting a review of the taxation. Ib.

On petition for liberty to file exceptions to the Master's certificate of taxation, the Court will sometimes decide the point in dispute without putting the parties to file their exceptions. Ib.

6. The Court will not interfere where an objection is made to the quantum allowed by the Master, in his taxation of a solicitor's bill. Stoken v. Dawson, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 122.

The Master having taxed a solicitor's bill, the client presented a petition, stating a rule, that in the taxation of bills there was a distinction in the amount allowed for attendances by solicitors, and those by their clerk; that, for a number of attendances which had been made by the solicitor's clerk, the Master had allowed the same amount as if they had been made by the solicitor himself, and prayed liberty to except to the Master's report, and for a re-taxation. The Court, considering this a mere question of quantum, refused the application, with costs. Ib.

7. In appeals respecting costs the Court entertains not only questions whether a principle of taxation was correct or not, but also whether a given principle was applicable or not to the particular items. Newby v. Dren, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 24.

On reference A. and B. had a common interest in one question, and A. a separate interest in another. On the former the Master directed one charge to be filed for both. During the proceedings on it the taxing master allowed only one term fee to the solicitor, who acted for both A. and B.:—Held, that he was right in disallowing the second, and the taxation was affirmed. Ib.

In the course of the cause the opinion of a strange counsel was taken, and the taxing master allowed only the costs of a short case such as might have been laid before a counsel acquainted with the cause. The Court refused to interfere with this discretion, considering it doubtful if, in strictness, the case should have been allowed at all. Ib.

A solicitor is entitled to charge for fully instructing every counsel employed at the hearing. Therefore when A. and B. had a common interest in one question at the hearing, and A. only was interested in another question, and the taxing master disallowed the charges for so much of the briefs to A.'s counsel as related to the former question, the taxation was sent back to be reviewed. Ib.

8. The taxing master disallowed a general objection to a bill of costs as not properly chargeable under a trust deed, on the ground that the words of the trust deed covered all expenses incurred by the trustee in the proper matters of the trust, and that the majority of the items of costs were incurred with the plaintiff's consent, and some admitted by the plaintiff's bill. The Master also disallowed an objection to particular items, as having been "unnecessarily and improperly incurred," on the ground that such costs had been proved before him to have been properly incurred:—Held, that the above answers were sufficient. Maw v. Pearson, 3 N. R. 99.

9. A petition of a solicitor to review the Master's decision, as to specified items of charges for conferences, some of which had been reduced and others wholly disallowed, was dismissed with costs, the Court declining to enter into the merits of such matters. Re Hubbard, 23 Beav. 481.

10. The Court refused to entertain the question whether the master had properly disallowed costs of separate answers. Beattie v. Ebury, 43 L. J., Ch., 80; 29 L. T. 419; 22 W. R. 68.

11. Principles and practice in the taxing master's office, and before the Court in cases of taxation. The Court will only determine questions on items in a bill of costs which involve some principle, and not those relating to quantum only. Re Catlin, 18 Beav. 508.

12. A creditor's administration action was ordered to be stayed on payment by the applicant, the executrix and residuary legatee, of the debt and the costs of the action. Before the Master, the executrix objected to items in the plaintiff's bill of costs, alleging, as to some of them, that they had been incurred in taking unnecessary and improper proceedings in the action. The Master refused to inquire into the truth of these allegations, and taxed the costs without reference to them:—Held, that, under r. 18 of the Additional Rules of Court 1875, the Master ought to have considered the plaintiff's objections, and that there must be a new taxation. Baines v. Wormsley, 47 L. J., Ch., 844; 39 L. T., N. S., 85; 27 W. R. 36.

13. An appeal will lie from a decision by a judge under Rules of the Supreme Court (Costs), August 1875, Order VI., rule 3, as to the taxation of costs on the higher or lower scale; but where he has exercised his discretion the Court of Appeal will not interfere unless he has proceeded on a wrong principle or made a manifest slip. Re Terrell, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 473; 47 L. T. 588; 31 W. R. 208.

3. Costs of.

1. A petition to review a taxation was successful, but the petitioner, not having taken proper steps to satisfy the taxing master when the matter was in his office, was ordered to pay the costs. Sturge v. Dimsdale, 9 Beav. 170; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 214; 10 Jur. 277.

2. Where exceptions are taken to the Master's certificate of the taxation of costs, on the ground that he has not charged the solicitor with all the moneys received by him with which he ought to have been charged, and such exceptions are allowed, and the Master directed to review his report, in that respect the Court does not give the exceptant the costs of such proceedings, on the ground that they are necessary to correct a mistake, or misapprehension of the Master. Wright v. Southwood, 1 Y. & J. 527.

4. Other Matters.

3. A taxing master at common law referred certain items in a bill of costs to one of the Chancery taxing masters. On an application for an order that the Chancery Master might be directed to review his finding:—Held, that it was not within the jurisdiction of the Court to make an order as to anything which was not before it. Exp. Lett, Re Parry, 10 W. R. 6; 5 L. T., N. S., 416.

4. The Court having determined to communicate with the taxing master as to a proceeding in his office, declined to receive an affidavit, tendered by the parties, of what had there taken place. Sturge v. Dimsdale, 9 Beav. 170; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 214; 10 Jur. 277.

5. A bill of costs had been referred for taxation, and the parties agreed in the office upon the sum at which they were to be reported; subsequently, the client, having discovered certain entries in his own handwriting of advances made to the solicitor, and for which he had received no credit, applied that the costs should be sent back to the Master for taxation. The application was refused with costs. Austin v. Chambers, 3 Dr. & War. 178.

6. In October 1839 a client obtained an order to tax his solicitor's bill. He commenced the taxation in January 1840, and proceeded therein to a very considerable extent. A year and a half after, and before the report, the client applied to vary the order:—Held, that after his acquiescence, he came too late to alter the order, and too early to correct any erroneous principle acted on by the Master. Tarbut v. Tarbut, 4 Beav. 149.

7. An order of course was obtained for the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs, and the taxation was commenced and virtually completed:—Held, that an application to vary such order, on the ground of an alleged mistake appearing on the face of it, ought to have been made directly the mistake was discovered, and not delayed until after the virtual completion of the taxation. Re Tibbitts, 30 W. R. 177.

8. When a party carries in an objection in writing to the certificate of a taxing master under Rules of Court 1875 (Costs), Order VII., rule 30, he is only bound to state the items to which he objects, not the reasons of his objection. Simmons v. Storer, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 154; 49 L. J., Ch., 121; 42 L. T. 291; 28 W. R. 408.

An order directing an inquiry what is due to a party for costs, but not containing a direction to tax them, does not preclude the taxing officer from not allowing him any costs. Id.

9. A person who is not a party to the making of an order for the taxation of costs, and who desires that the taxation under the order may be reviewed, ought not to apply by motion to review the taxing master's certificate, but ought to apply to have the order for taxation set aside. Charlton v. Charlton, 31 W. R. 237.

1. Of Order to Tax.

10. The Court, though it refuses the petition for taxation, does not always give the costs. Re Thompson, 8 Beav. 237; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 137; 9 Jur. 169.

11. A special petition was presented for the taxation of two bills; it succeeded only as to one, as to which the order might have been obtained as of course. The petitioner was ordered to pay all the costs. Barrwell v. Brooks, 8 Beav. 121.

12. On petition to confirm the Master's report, after an order of reference to tax the respondent's bill of costs (more than one-sixth of the amount of the bill having been struck off), and for reference back to tax the costs of taxation, the costs of and incidental to the original petition and the petition for reference back to the Master, were ordered to be paid by the respondent, after deducting therefrom the costs of an action brought by the respondent previously to the date of the order directing the taxation of the respondent's bill of costs. Exp. Cow, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 247.

On petition to confirm the Master's report, after reference to tax a bill of costs, it is too late to object that the petition to tax ought not to have been a special one. Id.

13. A mortgagee's solicitor retained the amount of his bill of costs out of the produce of the sale of the mortgaged estate, and he charged the amount in an account delivered to the mortgagor:—Held, that an order for taxation within twelve months might be obtained as of course; and a special petition having been presented for that object, the order was made, but the petitioner was ordered to pay the costs. Re Bignold, 9 Beav. 269.

1. A party applying for a special order for taxation in a case in which he might have obtained the common order, must pay the costs. Re Bracey, 8 Beav. 266; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 299; 9 Jur. 417.

2. An order of course for taxation was refused at the secretary's office; but the Court, on a special application, thought that it was a proper case for an order of course:—Held, that the costs ought to follow the result of the taxation. Re Taylor, 15 Beav. 145.

In a doubtful case, the client should apply to the solicitor for his consent to an order of course. Id.

3. A client presented a special petition for the taxation of his solicitor's bill, complaining that he had taken reckless proceedings, and praying that the costs of them might be wholly disallowed on taxation. A special petition was held to be unnecessary, and the petitioner was ordered to pay the costs of it. Re Atkinson, 26 Beav. 151.

4. A client, on a special petition, obtained an order for taxation. The taxation having been completed, the client presented a petition for the consequential directions. The solicitor then objected, that the common order would have been sufficient, and he asked the costs beyond those of a common order:—Held, that the objection came too late. Re Hair, 11 Beav. 96.

5. Costs of motion to tax and of appeal motion ordered to abide the result of the taxation. Re Newman, 2 L. R., Ch., 707; 15 W. R. 1189; 17 L. T., N. S., 128.

6. A solicitor ordered to pay the costs of a special petition rendered necessary by his refusal to consent to the common order for delivery of his bill and for its taxation. Re Adamson, 18 Beav. 460. And see Re Cattlin 8 Beav. 121

7. Where a special petition for the taxation of a bill of costs was occasioned by breach of arrangement on the solicitor's part, he was ordered to pay the costs of the petition. Exp. Bailey, Re Cattlin, 3 Jur., N. S., 33. Affirmed 30 L. T. 110.

2. Where One-sixth Deducted.

8. Solicitor's bill reduced to less than one-twenty-eighth part, costs of taxation refused him. Ramsden v. Hilton, Dick. 322.

9. Where bill reduced one-sixth part, solicitor pays costs of taxation. Exp. Hathorway, 2 Madd. 329.

10. Rule of taxation is adopted in bankruptcy, if more than one-sixth is deducted, solicitor pays costs of taxation. Exp. Westall, 3 Ves. & B. 141.

11. Solicitor allowed costs of taxation, the reduction of his bill being less than a sixth, charged with costs of proceedings before the Master, creating useless expense. Yea v. Freere, 14 Ves. 154.

12. An order was made for the taxation of four several bills of a solicitor for various business done for the same assignee, under which more than a sixth part was taken off the gross amount of the four bills, but not off the amount of every one of the bills:—Held, that as all the bills were incurred by the same person in the same right, there was no need for a separate order of taxation for each bill, and that, as more than a sixth was taken off from the whole amount, the solicitor must pay the costs of taxation. Exp. Barrett, 3 Dea. & Ch. 731; 1 Mont. & A. 447.

13. Upon an application that the solicitor may be directed to pay the costs of taxation, more than a sixth part having been taken off his bill, the Court will not enter into the particulars of the bill. Exp. Millington, 1 Dea. 114.

14. One of the three petitioning creditors may apply for the taxation of the solicitor's bill, without the others joining in the application. Notwithstanding an action is commenced by the solicitor, before such an application is made, still, if more than a sixth is taken off the bill, the solicitor pays the costs of taxation. A conditional order to that effect, to save expense, was made in the first instance. Exp. Watts, 1 Dea. 588; 2 Mont. & A. 621; 5 L. J., N. S., Bk., 21.

15. In a suit for the administration of the estate of a testator, a solicitor carried in a claim for his bills of costs, which, on taxation, were reduced by more than one-sixth:—Held, that the solicitor ought to pay the costs of the taxation. Silvertop v. Ramsay, 1 Beav. 434.

16. A solicitor was retained by A. B. and four other defendants; A. B. having withdrawn his retainer, the solicitor delivered his bill against A. B., amounting to 19*l.* 19*s.*, which was referred for taxation; the Master, considering that A. B. was liable to one-fifth part only of several charges, struck off four-fifths thereof, and certified that he had taxed the bill at 4*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* The client then obtained an order of course for payment by the solicitor of the costs of the taxation; a motion being made on behalf of the solicitor, to discharge the latter order for irregularity, on the ground that more than one-sixth had not been struck off within the rule, but no application being made to be relieved from the certificate, which warranted the second order, the motion was, on that ground, refused with costs. Mussett v. Hill, 3 Beav. 301.

17. Where in a minor matter, upon a reference to the Master to ascertain what lien the solicitor of the father of the minor had upon the several documents, etc., in his possession, for costs incurred in the lifetime of the father, the costs claimed were reduced upon taxation by more than one-half:—Held, that the solicitor should pay his own costs of the taxation, as well as those incurred by the guardian of the minor in reducing the amount of the costs claimed. Re Lawler, Fl. & K. 73; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 102.

18. Where under an order referring it to the Master to tax bills of costs, furnished by the solicitor in pursuance of the statute, and staying an action which had been brought by him at law, for recovery of the same, the client undertaking to pay whatever balance should be found due, the Master reported that more than one-sixth had been struck off from each upon taxation:—Held, that the solicitor should pay his own costs of the taxation, as well as those incurred by the client. Bower v. Nagle, Fl. & K. 78; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 105.

1. A bill was filed by the executors and devisees in trust under a will, to have the trusts of the will established, and the usual accounts taken. J. F. acted as the solicitor of the plaintiffs as well as of the defendants, and conducted the proceedings in the suit subsequently to the decree, until the conduct of it was taken from him by the plaintiffs, and a new solicitor appointed by them. J. F. having delivered up the documents relating to the suit to the new solicitor, a paper writing was discovered amongst them, purporting to be a copy of a charge which had been carried in by J. F. under the decree, in the joint names of certain persons, of whom J. F. was one, as creditors of the testator; the charge thereby made by J. F. for himself amounted to the sum of 57*l.*, alleged to be the balance due from the testator's estate for business done by J. F. for the testator and his son, as partners in business, on the testator's retainer, after deducting from the aggregate amount of his several bills of costs the sums received by him from the testator on account of such business. On the copy of the charge found amongst the documents so delivered up by J. F. was indorsed a memorandum, in the handwriting of J. F.'s town agent, to the effect that the charge had been allowed, subject to the approval thereof by the defendants' solicitor: the copy also bore a subsequent indorsement, in the same handwriting, to the effect that the charge had been afterwards absolutely allowed, but no entry to any such effect was to be found in the Master's books. The Master having referred the bills of costs to be taxed, J. F. withdrew his charge. On application to the Court by the plaintiffs by petition, the bills of costs of J. F. were ordered to be taxed, and an account was directed to be taken of the moneys received by J. F. on account thereof, and more than one-sixth part of the amount of the bills having been taken off on taxation, J. F. was ordered to pay the costs of the petitioners occasioned by his charge, and also the costs of the petitioner's application to the Court relative to the charge and bills of costs, and consequential thereon. Acoy v. Simpson, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 449.

2. In a suit against a solicitor for an account in taxing of which the bills of costs are taxed, and reduced more than one-sixth in amount, the Court has jurisdiction to give or withhold the costs of taxation, according to the circumstances and justice of the case. Barton v. Pyne, 1 Hare 493.

3. Less than one-sixth was taken off a bill of costs on taxation, but more than one-sixth was taken off in the suit (which was one for a general account between the solicitor and client) on other grounds, into which the Master could not enter. The costs of taxation were allowed to the solicitor. May v. Biggenden, Cheeseman v. May, 24 Beav. 207.

4. A married woman having separate property, employed a solicitor, and undertook to pay him out of her separate estate. By the decree in a suit instituted by the solicitor, his bills were ordered to be paid out of the separate property, and it was referred to the Master to tax them. Semble, that the solicitor is entitled to the costs of taxation, though more than one-sixth was taken off. Murray v. Barlee, 7 Sim. 194.

5. Where taxation is directed after action brought, this Court does not give the client the costs of taxation, though more than one-sixth be taxed off. Toghill v. Grant, 6 Beav. 348; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 481; 7 Jur. 589.

3. Calculation of One-sixth.

6. Held, that a solicitor must pay the costs of the taxation of his bill of costs, reduced by the taxation more than one-sixth of the amount, which reduction arose from the Master disallowing fees, paid to the commissioners for travelling expenses. Eap. Inman, Buck 129.

7. Sums deducted in respect of business done for a third person, at the alleged retainer of the client, but the authority not proved, are always computed as deductions in the question of costs of taxation. Rigby v. Edwards, 5 Madd. 20. This is said to be overruled.

8. Semble, on taxation charges disallowed for want of authority, and charges reduced by limiting to one of several defendants, his aliquot part of a joint charge ought not to be computed in determining on whom the costs of taxation should fall. Att.-Gen. v. Nethercoat, 3 Beav. 297.

9. Cases may arise as between solicitor and executor where costs would be ordered against solicitor, though less than one-sixth were taken off. Eap. Christy, Re Barrow, 3 Mont. & A. 108. And see 2 Dea. 113; 6 L. J., N. S., Bk., 68.

After bill has been referred for taxation, erroneous overcharges inserted by mistake cannot be withdrawn so as to be excluded from the calculation of the one-sixth as between the solicitor and the estate. On taxation, items disallowed by commissioners and again taxed off, are included in the one-sixth. S. C. 3 Mont. & A. 104; 2 Dea. 131, 132; 6 L. J., N. S., Bk., 68.

10. The plaintiff had obtained an order for taxation of his solicitor's bills, amounting to 399*l.* The solicitor, with the Master's permission, struck out certain items as having been inserted by mistake. The bills were then taxed, and less than a sixth was taken off; but if the items struck out were included, then more than a sixth would have been taken off:—Held, that as less than a sixth had been taken off, the plaintiff must pay the costs of taxation. Marshall v. Oxford, 5 Sim. 456.

11. A solicitor was retained by A. B., and four other defendants. A. B. having withdrawn his retainer, the solicitor delivered his bill against A. B., amounting to 19*l.* 19*s.*, which was referred for taxation; the Master, considering that A. B. was liable to one-fifth part only of several charges, struck off four-fifths thereof, and certified that he had taxed the bill at 4*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* The client then obtained an order of course for payment by the solicitor of the costs of the taxation; a motion being made on behalf of the solicitor, to discharge the latter order for irregularity, on the ground that more than one-sixth had not been struck off within the rule, but no application being made to be relieved from the certificate which warranted the second order, the motion was on that ground refused with costs. Muskett v. Hill, 3 Beav. 301.

12. The costs of taxation depend on whether one-sixth is taken off the bill of costs; and to determine this, a distinction is to be made between strictly professional charges and disbursements, and independent cash payments. Those payments only which are made in pursuance of the professional duty undertaken by the solicitor, and which he is bound to perform, or which are sanctioned as professional payments, by the general and established custom and practice of the profession, ought to be entered and allowed as professional disbursements in the bill of costs; other disbursements ought to be included in a separate cash account. Re Remnant, 11 Beav. 613; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 374.

In a legal proceeding, A. became liable to pay 60*l*. This was paid by B., his solicitor, who had not acted for A. in the proceeding:—Held, that in a taxation as between A. and B., the 60*l*. was not properly included in B.'s bill of costs, for the purpose of determining whether one-sixth had been taxed off, although it was properly chargeable as a cash payment. Id.

1. A payment for legacy duty made by a solicitor for his client ought, for taxation, to be included in his cash account and not in his bill of costs, and therefore such a payment is not to enter into the computation, in considering whether a sixth is taxed off. Re Haigh, 12 Beav. 307; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 79; 14 Jur. 340.

2. Since the Solicitors Act, items struck out of a solicitor's bill on taxation as chargeable against another person, must be taken into account in determining the costs of the taxation. Re Clark, 13 Beav. 173. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 43; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 20; 15 Jur. 1047.

3. Moneys specifically paid by a client to his solicitor for counsel's fees and stamps, as they were required:—Held, properly included in the solicitor's bill, in calculating the sixth on a taxation. Re Metcalfe, 30 Beav. 406.

4. Where Solicitor Dead.

4. Representatives of a deceased solicitor will not be ordered to pay costs of taxation of his bill, more than a sixth being taken off; nor, where they have brought an action for the amount, to the costs of which the assignees are liable, can they set off such costs against each other. Exp Hammond, Re Jackson, Mont. & Ch. 136; 4 Dea. 48; 8 L. J., N. S., Bky., 26.

5. The assignees or executors of a bankrupt solicitor, are not, under statute, liable to pay the costs of taxation, if more than one-sixth of the bill of costs of the solicitor is deducted on taxation. Willasey v. Mashiter, 3 Myl. & K. 293.

6. If a bill of costs is taxed after solicitor's death, his representative will not be ordered to pay costs of taxation, although more than a sixth is deducted. Re Cole, 2 Sim. & S. 462. S. C. nom. Miller v. —, 4 L. J., Ch., 71.

7. Court has no jurisdiction to order executor of deceased solicitor to pay costs of taxing solicitor's bill, nor to order executor to refund balance found due from deceased solicitor, if executor does not admit assets, and even if he admit assets. Sed. quare Exp. Spackman, Re Phillips, 3 Mont. & A. 135.

5. Where Solicitor Bankrupt.

8. The costs of taxing the bills of costs of a solicitor who has become bankrupt do not fall upon his assignees, on the ground that more than a sixth part is deducted on taxation, although the assignees may have attended the taxation by their solicitor. Alsop v. Oxford (Lord), 1 Myl. & C. 26.

9. The assignees or executors of a bankrupt solicitor are not under the statute liable to pay the costs of taxation, if more than one-sixth of the bill of costs of the solicitor is deducted on taxation. Willasey v. Mashiter, 3 Myl. & K. 293.

10. Upon taxation, under the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, s. 37, assignees of a bankrupt solicitor are personally liable for the costs of taxation of a bill of costs delivered by them, where more than one-sixth is taken off. Re Peers, 21 Beav. 520.

11. Assignees in insolvency of solicitors ordered to pay the costs of taxation, more than one-sixth having been taxed off a bill of costs delivered by them. Re Poile, 25 Beav. 561.

6. Other Cases.

12. Where the solicitor was guilty of great delay in bringing in his bills, the Court will not give him his costs of the taxation, although less than one-sixth part is taken off. Yea v. Yea, 2 Anstr. 589.

On taxation of costs, the Court cannot make the attorney pay the costs of the taxation, unless for improper items in the bill, amounting to a sixth. Id. 494.

13. Though not a sixth deducted from bill, circumstances having given sufficient ground of suspicion for necessity of taxation, costs of taxation were refused to solicitor. Webb v. Stone, 1 Anstr. 260.

14. When a person obtains an order of reference at his own expense, he must pay the costs on both sides, which were properly incurred. Curtain v. Blennerhassett, 1 Hog. 395.

15. Upon an application that the solicitor may be directed to pay the costs of taxation, more than a sixth part having been taken off his bill, the Court will not enter into the particulars of the items of the bill. Exp. Millington, 1 Dea. 114.

16. Where an attorney, who had received a sum of money on account of costs, contended that a balance was still due, and threatened to file a bill for its recovery; and upon a reference obtained by the client, on a petition praying, among other things, that the sum received by the attorney should be ascertained, and his costs taxed as between party and party; although the client was wrong as to the principle of the taxation, and also in praying repayment of the entire amount received by the attorney, and not merely of the balance overpaid, yet:—Held, that the attorney should pay all the costs of the reference and other proceedings in the matter, except the costs of so much of the petition and answering affidavit as were incidental to the principle of taxation. Armstrong v. Pollock, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 663.

17. When an order has been made for the taxation of the solicitor's bill of costs, Semble, that a subsequent petition for the costs of the taxation cannot be heard, until the Master has made his certificate, nor unless the original petition is also set down in the paper. Exp. Elce, 2 Dea. & Ch. 332.

1. The costs of the plaintiff and of the several parties to the cause having been ordered to be paid out of the fund, and a puisne creditor not a party, but whose demand had been decreed to be paid, having obtained leave to attend the taxation of the costs:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs of reading over the bills of costs of the several parties to the cause. Phillips v. Page, Hay. & J. 819.

2. After action brought, an order was made here for taxation. The solicitor was found overpaid; but the action at law was in such a state, by the mispleading of the client, that, if it had proceeded, a balance would have been found due to the solicitor. On an application for an order against the solicitor to refund and pay the costs of the taxation, the Court made such order, but gave no costs of the action, or of the application. Re Smith, 11 Beav. 468.

3. Upon a taxation, a solicitor put in an insufficient examination. He was ordered, on motion, to pay the costs occasioned thereby, and of the four-day order and of the application. Re Bainbridge, 11 Beav. 620.

4. Upon a motion, after taxation, for an order on a solicitor to pay the amount found due from him, he was also ordered to pay the costs of the application. Re Bainbridge, 13 Beav. 108.

5. Where a taxation is ordered after action brought, the general rule is, that if anything is found due, the client must pay the costs of the action. Re Hair, 11 Beav. 96.

6. A solicitor proceeding under the common order for taxation (which is in accordance with s. 37 of the Solicitors Act 1843) must pay the costs of reference if the party chargeable does not attend the taxation. A person does not attend by writing letters to the taxing master. Re Upperton, 30 W. R. 840.

See PRACTICE (Costs).

1. By Action or Suit.

For Solicitor's Bill.] 7. Solicitor brings a bill for his fees. Plea of statute, 3 Jac., that the plaintiff had not signed his bill, good plea. Norris v. Bacon, 1 Vern. 312.

8. A solicitor suing for his bill need not state all the circumstances required by the statute 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 22, being matter of evidence. Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. 9.

9. A bill may be brought for solicitor's fees only, if for business done in this court; and so it may where the business is done in another court, if it relates to another demand made by plaintiff in this court. Ranelagh v. Thornehill, 1 Vern. 203; 2 Ch. Ca. 153.

10. Attorney, quitting his client before trial, cannot bring an action for his bill. Cresswell v. Byron, 14 Ves. 273.

11. In a suit, instituted by a solicitor, for payment of costs due to him from a client, it appeared, by the answer, that he had not delivered a signed bill conformably to the Act of Parliament. A bill duly signed was subsequently delivered, and that fact was put in issue by a supplemental bill. Semble, the defect in the title of the plaintiff, as it stood at the institution of the suit, was not cured: but held, that the objection, not having been urged at the original hearing, could not be taken at the hearing on further directions. Pritchard v. Draper, 1 Russ. & M. 191; Tam. 332.

For Costs.] 12. The party to whom costs were awarded in a bankruptcy matter brought an action on a written undertaking to pay them, received judgment, and levied for the money; Lord Redesdale said, he would never suffer costs awarded by this Court to become the subject of an action, particularly costs awarded in bankruptcy, which are to come out of a fund over which he would lose all control if the order made by him in the bankruptcy were to be proceeded in elsewhere. The party was ordered to acknowledge satisfaction on the judgments, to refund the money, and to pay the costs of the defendants at law, with the costs of this application. Re Dillon, 2 Sch. & Lef. 110.

13. Where plaintiff's solicitor, with notice, suffers defendant to satisfy plaintiff's demand, without taking effectual security for payment of his costs, the Court will not suffer him to proceed in suit against defendant for recovery of them. Morse v. Cook, McClel. 211; 13 Price 437.

2. By Action after Taxation. Injunction.

14. An order was made in bankruptcy referring a solicitor's bill to be taxed, and reserving the question as to the costs of the taxation. The costs were taxed, and one-sixth taken off, and the solicitor brought an action for the amount without deducting the costs of taxation. On petition, the action was stayed, a reference directed to tax the costs of taxation, and that the amount, after deducting the costs of taxation, be paid to the solicitor. Exp. Bellott, Re Lingard, 4 Madd. 379.

15. After an order for the taxation of a solicitor's bill, staying proceedings at law till the report, the solicitor having died before a report, and no measures having been taken for continuing the taxation, his administratrix, proceeding at law against the client, was held not to have committed a contempt. Houlditch v. Houlditch, 1 Swan. 58; 1 Wils. 17.

1. Injunction granted to restrain an action for the amount of a solicitor's bill, which had been taxed after the commencement of the action, and more than one-sixth had been taken off, but the costs of taxation had not been ascertained. Walton v. Johnson, 2 Sim. 456.

2. A solicitor, whose bill had been taxed, and more than one-sixth taken off, brought an action against his client before the costs of taxation were ascertained for the amount so taxed; the Court granted an injunction to restrain the action. Barr v. Wiggins, 4 Sim. 125.

3. Motion to restrain a solicitor from proceeding to recover the amount of a bill of costs refused, although much the greater part of the bill consisted of charges in respect of proceedings improperly taken by the solicitor, some few of the items of trifling amount appearing to be due from, and improperly claimed against the client. Wiggins v. Peppins, 2 Jur. 320.

4. A bill of costs having been incurred by A. and B. jointly, and an action having been brought against them for the recovery of the amount, the Court refused to direct a taxation and to stay the proceedings at law, on the undertaking of A. alone, to pay what might be found due. Re Chilcote, 1 Beav. 421.

5. The omission by a client to file a certificate of taxation of a solicitor's bill within the four days prescribed by the Order of 29th October 1692, does not render the order a nullity, but the client's representatives, after his death, may, notwithstanding the omission, obtain an order under the summary jurisdiction for the delivering up of the client's papers on payment of the amount of the bill as taxed, and an action by the solicitor on the bill, after such taxation, is a contempt, and will be restrained by injunction at the instance of the representatives. Re Campbell, 3 De G. M. & G. 585; 17 Jur. 1171; 22 L. J., Ch., 865; 1 W. R. 204.

3. By Attachment.

6. After decree for debt and costs, attachments may be taken out for each separately. Frazer v. Thoburn, 2 Anstr. 380, 413.

7. Cashier of bank in cause detained to answer solicitor's bill of fees, etc. Fairland v. Evener, Dick. 114.

8. Where a solicitor's bill of costs is taxed, he may take out an attachment for them without previously taking out a subpoena; but he must serve his client with the order for taxing his bill of costs, and with the Master's report of such costs. Murphy or Murphy v. Balderson, Barnard. 266; 2 Atk. 114.

To bring a defendant into contempt in an order of taxation, a copy and the report of the sum at which the bill is taxed must be left at his house. Ib.

9. Where costs are directed to be paid to A. or his solicitor, a personal demand by A. alone is sufficient ground for an order of committal against the party for non-payment of such costs. Exp. Diaoh, 3 Dea. 53.

10. The sheriff cannot take a bail bond upon an attachment for not paying costs, but in such case a messenger is to go to bring in the party. Anon., Pre. Ch. 331.

11. Where a decree directs the plaintiff to pay the costs of one of the defendants, and to have them over again from another defendant, and that defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs, the plaintiff is not at liberty to issue more than one subpoena, or more than one attachment for both sets of costs. Semble, but the circumstance of two subpoenas having been issued, when they were followed by but one attachment, is not a ground for discharging the attachment, as the defendant was only charged with one subpoena, and suffered no additional expense. Chute v. Ross, 7 Sim. 255; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 67.

12. Where an order for payment of costs has been made on two persons jointly, the four-day order will not be granted against one unless the order has been also brought into contempt. Exp. Batten, 1 M. D. & De G. 82; 9 L. J., N. S., Bky., 41.

13. When a warrant for taxation was irregularly served on the plaintiff, and the Master's certificate irregularly obtained, and the plaintiff was arrested for the non-payment of the costs, all proceedings were on motion set aside for irregularity, and defendant's solicitor ordered to pay the costs. Bricknell v. Stamford, 2 Jur. 1010.

14. Personal service of an order for payment of costs by a plaintiff, not a party to the suit, will be dispensed with, where the plaintiff cannot be found. Hunter v. —, 6 Sim. 429.

15. The service of a petition to dismiss a petition for taxation of costs, need not be personal. Secus, the order for payment of the costs. Exp. Stephens, Re Billing, 2 Mont. & A. 482.

16. Where there is an order against two persons jointly to pay costs, the process for giving it effect may be joint or several. Sangar v. Gardiner, C. P. C. 262.

It is not the practice, to prove the execution of the power of attorney, to receive costs as a foundation for the succeeding process. Ib.

17. When order to pay costs is made on person not party to suit, motion for four-day order or commitment requires notice. Re Partington, 6 Madd. 71.

18. An attachment issued against a party for the non-payment of costs which had been taxed by the Master. It appeared that part of the amount, certified by the Master to be due, consisted of fees to counsel, which had not been paid till after the Master's certificate had been granted. Under the circumstances, the attachment was set aside, and it was referred back to the Master to review his taxation. Herring v. Cloberry, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 410; 6 Jur. 619.

19. Decree for the sale of a vessel condemned, after appeal asserted and inhibition served personally on the judge:—Held, not such a contempt, under the circumstances of the case, as to entitle the owners to an attachment against the judge for costs and damages incurred thereby. Barton v. Field, 4 Moo. P. C. 273; 8 Jur. 113.

20. A party admitted to sue in forma pauperis after the commencement of a suit, may be attached for non-payment of costs which have been previously ordered to be paid in that suit, without being first dispaupered. Davenport v. Davenport, 1 Ph. 124; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 325; 6 Jur. 633.

1. After an order to tax, not in a cause, and application for the sum found due declined, the Court made the order for payment within ten days, and not for an attachment under the 11th General Order of August 1841. Re Lovell, 9 Beav. 332.

2. An order was made, on the application of the plaintiff, that certain costs should be taxed and paid, without stating to whom. The subpoena for costs directed them to be paid to the plaintiff, and an attachment in the usual form:—Held, regular. Oldfield v. Cobbett, 12 Beav. 91.

3. The sheriff, having taken a defendant, under an attachment for non-payment of a large sum of money, in obedience to an order of the Court, received a part of the amount, and a deposit of title deeds as security for payment of the balance on the return of the writ. At the return of the writ the defendant did not pay the balance. Upon the motion of the sheriff, the Court permitted him to pay the sum he had received into court, and to issue an attachment in the names of the plaintiffs, without prejudice to the question of his liability to them; he also indemnifying them against consequent costs, and undertaking to allow the defendant inspection of the title deeds deposited as security. Thomas v. Hall, 2 De G. & Sm. 264.

4. Where a plaintiff's bill is dismissed with costs, a writ of attachment is the right mode of recovering such costs. Andresen v. Walton, 1 Macn. & G. 380; 2 H. & Tw. 154; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 249; 14 Jur. 260.

Certificate of the clerks of records and writs upon the practice in relation to the issue and execution of writs of attachment for non-payment of costs. Id.

5. After service of a subpoena for costs the party liable is allowed, by the practice of the Court, eight days to pay the costs. An attachment sued out before that time has expired is irregular, and will be set aside. But where the party was in custody under an execution when the attachment issued, it was set aside without costs, the party undertaking not to bring an action in respect of the arrest or detention. Brennan v. Kenny, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 94.

An attachment sued out irregularly may be withdrawn, though executed, and another attachment may be sued out on the same subpoena. Id.

6. Upon a motion for attachment, an order was made, except that the respondent pay the costs of the motion. Upon default in payment:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to commit to prison for the default. Micklathwaite v. Fletcher, 27 W. R. 793.

7. Where an order, directing a solicitor's bill to be taxed, goes on to direct payment of what shall be found due within twenty-one days from the date of the certificate, no further order for payment is necessary, and no subpoena for costs need be sued out. Re Reynolds, 10 W. R. 709.

It is sufficient, in order to found an attachment, to serve a copy of the order properly endorsed, and a copy of the Master's certificate on the party thereby certified to be liable to pay; and the circumstance that the party to receive is a corporation makes no difference if they, under their common seal, authorise any one to receive. But if the copy of the Master's certificate which is served is not a true copy, however slight the error, an attachment will be discharged with costs. Id.

8. The Crown has a right to supersede a process which has issued at its own instance, and a party attached for non-payment of costs, decreed against him on an appeal in a slave case, ordered to be discharged, notwithstanding the objection of the captors to the Crown receiving the costs out of the proceeds. Jennings v. Hill, 4 Moo. P. C. 369.

9. The proper mode of enforcing orders made in the taxing master's office is by an attachment under Cons. Order XXIX., Rule 2. Re Saul's Estate, 3 N. R. 701.

Effect of on Right of Set Off.] 10. The Lord Chancellor on the 8th November ordered the defendant to pay costs to the plaintiff, but the order was not completed till the 23rd December. The Master of the Rolls on the 15th December ordered the plaintiff to pay costs to the defendant, and on the 19th the plaintiff offered to set off the costs. The defendant in January following issued an attachment for the costs:—Held, that the plaintiff, notwithstanding he was in contempt, might, under these circumstances, move to set off the costs. Cattell v. Simons, 6 Beav. 304.

11. The execution of a writ of attachment for costs does not deprive the party issuing it of any lien or right to set off he may possess for the payment of such costs. Bantree v. Watson, 2 Keen 713; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 183.

4. By Charging Order.

12. Where a motion was dismissed with costs, and every endeavour made to serve the party with a subpoena for them had failed, the Court enforced the order by charging Government stock of the party, under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. Blake v. White, 3 Y. & Coll. 434; 3 Jur. 749.

13. A plaintiff's bill having been dismissed with costs, an order nisi charging railway shares belonging to the plaintiff with the amount of the defendant's costs when taxed was made before taxation. Burns v. Irving, 46 L. J., Ch., 423; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 291; 25 W. R. 66; 34 L. T., N. S., 754.

14. A decree declaring a plaintiff entitled to one-fifth of the proceeds of sale of chattels, and directing an account to be taken of what was due, and payment of such amount together with the costs of the action to him, does not entitle him to a charging order under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 18, or to a stop order against funds in court in another suit belonging to the same defendant. Widgery v. Tepper, Hall v. Tepper, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 364; 37 L. T. 297; 25 W. R. 872.

15. Parties interested in a fund standing in the name of the accountant-general in one suit were ordered to pay the defendants in another suit their costs. These being taxed, and a minute having been left with the senior Master of the Common Pleas, the Court on petition made a charging order on the fund for such costs, and granted an interim stop order. Wells v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 204.

1. A Master's allocatur, and à fortiori, a mere rule for taxation of costs, is not an order whereby money is payable, so as to operate as a judgment within 1 & 2 Vict., c. 113, s. 18. Shaw v. Neale, 6 W. R. 635; 6 H. L. Ca. 581; 27 L. J., Ch., 444; 4 Jur., N. S., 695.

2. A plaintiff who had obtained an order for payment of costs was held entitled under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, to rank as an incumbrancer upon the defendant's estate from the date of the first registration of the certificates of taxation only. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 23 Beav. 484.

5. By Fi. Fa. or Elegit.

3. The 1st Order of May 1839 is not superseded by the 11th and 12th General Orders of August 1841; but a party, to whom money or costs are ordered to be paid, may still issue a fi. fa. or elegit. Streeten v. Whitmore, 5 Beav. 228; 6 Jur. 92.

4. The form of the decree on dismissal of a bill with costs, ordered to be altered, by adding the words "to be paid by the plaintiffs," with reference to the 1st Order of the 10th May 1839, giving a remedy by fieri facias or elegit for costs ordered to be paid. Taylor v. Jardine, 1 Hare 316; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 236; 6 Jur. 519.

5. The Court has a discretion not to supersede a writ of fi. fa. issued for costs payable to an outlaw. The discretion exercised in favour of an outlaw's solicitors, to whom costs had been assigned by way of security subsequent to the decree, but previously to the outlawry. Grand Trunk Railway Co. v. Brodie, 1 W. R. 321; 1 Eq. Rep. 64.

6. By Sequestration.

6. Order for sequestration made upon the return to a single distringas, issued under a decree for payment of costs; such an Order is only an Order nisi in the first instance. Lowten v. Colchester (Mayor), 3 Meriv. 543.

Form of distringas regular, being to appear and answer contempt merely (not ad comparandum et solvendum); but the cause for which it issued being specified by indorsement. Ib.

7. The warden's certificate of a prisoner being in his custody for contempt for non-payment of costs taxed is sufficient to found a motion for a sequestration, without any affidavit of demand and refusal to pay. Phillips v. Stephenson, 11 Price 473.

8. Permission to execute a sequestration for non-payment of costs in a cause will only be given when it appears that a party cannot be arrested. Mellifont v. Whitney, Hay. & J. 219.

9. There cannot be separate sequestrations for debt and costs; therefore, plaintiff permitted to execute a sequestration for the costs only, on the terms of his waiving any further proceeding against the defendant for the sum reported and decreed due. Graves v. Fennell, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 28.

10. When a deposit on an appeal had been ordered to be returned to the appellant, and before it was paid to him sequestration was issued against him for non-payment of costs previously due, the deposit was ordered to be paid to the sequestrators instead of the appellant. Conn v. Garland, 9 L. R., Ch., 101; 22 W. R. 175.

11. The petition of a defendant had been dismissed with costs to the infant plaintiffs. A subpoena and fi. fa. were issued, but the defendant was in Paris, and no effects could be taken. A commission of sequestration was then issued, under which the sequestrators obtained moneys which, by orders of Court, were paid in the cause to "the sequestration account," and were invested in consols. Upon the petition of the infant plaintiffs, the stock standing to "the sequestration account" was ordered to stand charged with payment to them of the taxed costs and interest from the date of the Master's certificate, unless the defendant should, within one month, show cause to the contrary. Service on the defendant's solicitor in England to be good service. Westby v. Westby, 5 De G. & Sm. 516; 16 Jur. 945.

Costs of. 12. A party will be entitled to the costs of issuing and serving an order of sequestration nisi, to enforce payment of taxed costs, though, upon a petition to review the taxation, their amount should afterwards be reduced, if the other party has not employed due diligence in obtaining a review of the taxation. — v. Marlborough (Duke), 1 L. J., Ch., 24.

13. Costs of a sequestration as between solicitor and client will not be taxed. Re Shapland, Ex p. Hunt, 23 W. R. 40.

7. By Subpoena.

14. Demurrer to examination by witness overruled: subpoena for costs not of course. Valiant v. Dodomead, Dick. 92. S. C. nom. Vailiant v. Dodomead, 2 Atk. 592.

15. Costs to be paid out of estate: no subpoena lies against defendant, but part of estate to be sold. Cannon v. Beely, Dick. 115.

16. Where a decree directs the plaintiff to pay the costs of one of the defendants, and to have them over again from another defendant, and that defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs, the plaintiff is not at liberty to issue more than one subpoena, or more than one attachment for both sets of costs, semble. But the circumstance of two subpoenas having been issued, when they were followed by but one attachment, is not a ground for discharging the attachment, as the defendant was only charged with one subpoena, and suffered no additional expense. Chute v. Ross, 7 Sim. 255; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 67.

17. Service of subpoena for costs out of the jurisdiction of the Court, is irregular, and an attachment founded upon it will be discharged. Hawkins v. Hall, 1 Beav. 73; 4 Myl. & C. 280; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 285; 3 Jur. 282.

A person, who has caused another to be irregularly arrested, will not be allowed to serve him while detained, in his own suit, with a subpoena for costs. Semble, that the service would also be bad if the defendant was irregularly in custody at the suit of any other person. Id.

1. The party who serves a subpoena for costs, is authorised by the subpoena itself, without any power of attorney, to receive the costs for which the subpoena is issued. Empringham v. Short, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 144.

8. Against Persons under Disability.

Infants.] 2. A continued employment of an attorney by infant client, after the latter comes of age, may amount to an undertaking to pay a prior bill of costs. Guy v. Burgess, 1 Sim. 117.

3. The Remembrancer having been appointed guardian to a minor defendant, upon process of contempt for want of an appearance, the Court, upon motion of the minor by her mother and testamentary guardian, gave her liberty to answer by her testamentary guardian, "praying the costs, as offered by the defendant's notice of the 30th January, the costs to be paid within a week after taxation, and the answer to be filed within a week after the payment of such costs." The notice of 30th January had been served by the mother. The minor's answer was afterwards filed and accepted, the costs not having been paid. The Court made an order for an attachment against the guardian for non-payment of those costs. Brady v. Finnegan, Jon. & C. 426.

4. The defendant, who was decreed to pay the costs, having run away, and the prochein ami poor, the solicitor was paid the bill of costs out of the money lodged in court for the benefit of the plaintiffs during their infancy. Staines v. Maddox, Mos. 319.

A person who signs an authority for the use of his name as next friend to an infant, becomes prima facie liable to pay the infant's solicitor's bill of costs, as well as those of the other side. Re Flower, 19 W. R. 578.

5. If for any cause he disputes this liability, the solicitor may nevertheless obtain the common order for taxation against him without mentioning that fact, for the defence cannot be raised in the process of taxation, but requires independent proceedings to be taken to enforce it. Id.

Lunatics.] 6. A solicitor employed on part of a lunatic can have no action against him for his bill of costs. Barnesley v. Powell, Amb. 102.

7. A lunatic died in June 1853. The solicitor in the lunacy obtained an order for taxation of his costs in the lunacy, in February 1854, and the taxation was completed in February 1855. He presented a petition under the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 29, but not before October 1860, for an order to charge the lunatic's real estate with his costs:—Held (Per Knight Bruce, L. J.), that his right to recover his costs accrued on the death of the lunatic: (Per Turner, L. J.), that the right must have accrued when the order for the taxation of them was obtained: and therefore, quacunq; viâ, he was within the proviso of the 29th section, and barred of his remedy against the lunatic's real estate. Re Cumming, 6 Jur., N. S., 1129.

S. C. nom. Exp. Turner, 20 L. J., Ch., 29; 3 L. T., N. S., 391.

See also PRACTICE (Costs).

Married Women.] 8. Wife cannot be taken in execution for costs. James v. Champion, Dick. 160.

9. In a proceeding in which a married woman and her husband are co-plaintiffs or co-petitioners, a sequestration cannot issue for costs against her separate estate; semble, it is otherwise if she sues by her next friend. Keogh v. Cathcart, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 215. And see S. C. 11 Ir. Eq. R. 280.

Liability of Married Woman's Separate Estate.] See HUSBAND AND WIFE, XI. XI. 6.

9. Other Cases.

10. No caveat does not lie in respect of costs taxed in a Chancery suit. Goodman v. Sayers, 5 Madd. 471.

11. Mode of proceeding to compel payment of costs by one not a party to the suit. Att.-Gen. v. Skinners' Co., C. P. C. 1.

12. How payment of costs enforced by and against persons not a party to the suit. Sangar v. Gardiner, C. P. C. 262.

Order against two persons jointly to pay costs; the process for giving it effect may be joint or several. Id.

It is not the practice to prove the execution of the power of attorney to receive costs, as a foundation for the succeeding process. Id. No costs of order fixing time for payment, nor of order to commit in default. Id.

13. Solicitor not to be paid fees till he has settled clerk in court's bill. Stevens v. Avery, Dick. 224.

14. Where plaintiff's solicitor, with notice, suffers the defendant to satisfy the demands of his client, without making effectual provision for payment of his costs; the Court will not suffer him to proceed in suit against defendant for recovery of them. Morse v. Cooke, McClel. 211; 13 Price 473.

15. An order obtained on petition by the client against the solicitor for a taxation of his costs as between solicitor and client, upon an undertaking to pay the balance:—Held, under the circumstances, not to be a bar to the more extended relief the client was entitled to. Gomley v. Wood, 3 J. & L. 678; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 418.

16. A. B. had obtained an order in the Exchequer for payment of costs against a party to a suit in this Court, who was tenant for life of certain property over which a receiver had been appointed with directions to pay her the rents. The Court gave leave to A. B., notwithstanding the appointment of receiver, to sue out and execute such writs as he might be advised. Gooch v. Haworth, 3 Beav. 428.

17. After an order to tax, not in a cause, and application for the sum found due declined, the Court made the order for payment within ten days, and not for an attachment under the 11th General Order of August 1841. Re Lovell, 9 Beav. 332.

18. An order was made for taxation, nominally, on the petition and undertaking of A. and others. The certificate was made ten years after, and an order was then made on A. to pay. A. applied to discharge the order for payment, showing that the order had been obtained without his authority, and during his absence from England:—Held, that while the order for taxation stood, the order for payment was regular. Re Thompson, 25 Beav. 246.

1. Where an order, directing a solicitor's bill to be taxed, goes on to direct payment of what shall be found due within twenty-one days from the date of the certificate, no further order for payment is necessary, and no subpoena for costs need be sued out. Re Reynolds, 10 W. R. 709.

2. When a plaintiff has given notice to the defendant to discontinue the action, and the costs have been taxed, no further order of the Court is required to enable the chief clerk to issue a writ to enforce payment, and the writ may be varied to suit the circumstances of the case. Ord. XXIII. (Judicature Act) has the force of an order of the judge or Court. Bolton v. Bolton, 24 W. R. 663; 35 L. T., N. S., 358.

XXV. RECOVERY OF BALANCES DUE FROM SOLICITOR TO CLIENT, AND VICE VERSA.

3. Course of proceeding to compel payment of a balance found due, on taxation, from a client to his solicitor. Stocken v. Dawson, 7 Sim. 547.

Where a balance is found on taxation due from the client, payment must be first demanded before applying for the four-day order, which when served and payment refused, the order for commitment is granted without notice, but on affidavit of the service of the order, and demand and refusal. Id.

4. Where decree orders defendant to retain his costs when taxed out of the balance in his hands, and pay the residue into court, if the defendant delay to get costs taxed, plaintiff must move that he may bring his bill of costs to be taxed within limited time, and not that he may pay in the whole balance. Newsome v. Shearman, 2 Sim. & S. 95.

5. On ordering taxation of a bill of costs in respect of a trust estate, the Court will not direct any money found due from the solicitor to be paid to the costis quo trustent, for the solicitor would have no indemnity against a breach of trust. Re Hallett, 21 Beav. 250.

6. After taxation of solicitor's bill and balance found due to client, the solicitor avoiding personal service of taxing master's certificate, service by putting a copy of Master's certificate through or under solicitor's door, with a copy of order authorising the same, to be deemed good service. Re Templeman, 20 Beav. 574.

7. Upon a taxation, not in a cause, a sum was found due to a solicitor from his client:—Held, that to compel payment, proceedings must be had under the old practice, and not under the 11th Order of August 1841. Re Lovell, 9 Beav. 332.

8. A sum being, on taxation, found due from a solicitor to his client, the first order fixing a day for payment must be obtained on notice; but the second or four-day order is made ex parte. Re Stevenson, 14 Beav. 27.

9. A sum of money having on taxation been found due from a solicitor to his client, the solicitor was ordered to pay the costs of the application for the second order for payment. Re Bainbridge, 14 Beav. 645.

10. Special applications for delivery and taxation of a bill, and for payment over to the applicant of the balance of the cash account, must be made by summons, and not by petition. Re Edmonds, 19 W. R. 1048; 25 L. T., N. S., 152.

11. A solicitor may be imprisoned for default in payment of a balance ordered to be paid on a common order to tax his bill of costs. Re Rush, 39 L. J., Ch., 159; 9 L. R., Eq., 147; 18 W. R. 331.

12. Default by a solicitor in payment of the balance found due from him to his client upon taxation, under the common order in Chancery, is default in payment of a sum of money, when ordered to be paid by a solicitor in his character of an officer of the Court, and an attachment may be issued against him. Re White, 19 W. R. 39; 23 L. T., N. S., 387.

13. Under an order to tax made in 1873, a balance was found due from a solicitor in respect of moneys received by him, and ought to have been paid within twenty-one days from the 21st August 1875:—Held, that the case was governed by Rules of Court 1875, Ord. XLIV., rule 2, and that an attachment for non-payment could not be issued without notice to the solicitor. Anon., 1 L. R., Ch. D., 445.

14. Default by a solicitor in payment of a bill of costs found on taxation to be due by him to another solicitor whom he had employed to act for him, is "default by a solicitor in payment of a sum of money, when ordered to pay the same in his character of an officer of the Court making the order," within the Debtors Act 1869, s. 4, sub-s. 4, and an attachment may be issued against him. Re Barfield, 24 L. T., N. S., 248; 19 W. R. 466.

15. A solicitor was ordered to pay the costs of an unsuccessful appeal against an order to tax his bill of costs, which had been obtained by his client:—Held, that the nonpayment of the costs of the appeal was not a default in payment of money within the Debtors Act 1869, s. 4, sub-s. 4. Re Hope, 41 L. J., Ch., 797; 7 L. R., Ch., 523; 20 W. R. 694; 26 L. T., N. S., 814.

XXVI. INTEREST ON COSTS.

1. Allowance of, 6516.

2. Agreements for between Solicitor and Client, 6517.

1. Allowance of.

16. A party was directed to pay certain costs and make other payments, but was declared to be entitled to be indemnified out of funds in Court:—Held, that he was entitled to interest at 4l. per cent. on all sums paid for costs or otherwise. Wainman v. Bomker, 8 Beav. 363.

17. A deed after reciting that A. had agreed to charge certain property with all sums which B. should pay as surety for a third party, together with interest on all such payments, and all such costs, etc., as he might sustain, etc., proceeded to charge the property with the payment of all such sums, costs, etc., with interest as aforesaid:—Held, that interest was not payable on the costs, etc. Hodgson v. Hodgson, 2 Keen 104; 7 L. J., N. S., 5.

1. Quere, as to right to interest on untaxed costs, from the date of a mortgage given for them. Lawless v. Mansfield, 1 Dr. & War. 557; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 113. And see Moss v. Bainbridge, Bainbridge v. Moss, 6 De G. M. & G. 292.

2. Interest on a bill of costs while under taxation not allowed. Re Smith, 9 Beav. 342.

3. Under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, ss. 17, 18, interest is recoverable on costs which one party is ordered to pay another, but not on costs directed to be raised out of an estate. Att.-Gen. v. Nethercoote, 11 Sim. 529; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 162.

4. Where a decree was pronounced for the payment to the plaintiffs of a sum of money and costs, the costs do not bear interest (under the 27th section of 3 & 4 Vict., c. 105) from the date of the decree, but from the date of the certificate of taxation of the costs. Lidwell v. Lidwell, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 91.

5. Where the time for payment of principal, interest, and costs, under a foreclosure decree, is enlarged, and no terms are imposed as to payment of subsequent interest, such subsequent interest is to be calculated upon the principal due and the unpaid costs, and not upon the aggregate of principal, interest, and costs. Whitfield v. Roberts, 7 Jur., N. S., 1268; 9 W. R. 844.

6. Where the payment of taxed costs was unavoidably delayed:—Held, that under the 27th section of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, interest was payable on such costs from the date of the taxing master's certificate, to the day of the payment thereof. Fox v. Charlton, Charlton v. Fox, 6 N. R. 352.

7. When an order has been made for payment of costs after taxation, the Court will order the payment of interest on the amount found due by the Master's certificate, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, s. 27, from the date thereof to the date of the application upon evidence that the payment has been unavoidably delayed. Carter v. Carter, 8 L. T., N. S., 692; 2 N. R. 512.

8. The 23 & 24 Vict., c. 127, only applies to solicitors, and a party to a suit cannot claim under it interest on his costs. Jenner v. Morris, Morris v. Jenner, 11 W. R. 943.

9. The Court will give interest on costs payable out of a fund which cannot be immediately realised. Re Campbell, 19 W. R. 427.

10. By orders of the Court of Chancery, made in 1862 and 1863, costs to which a petitioner was entitled were directed to be added to the moneys secured to him by a deed, and it was ordered that they should stand as a charge upon the property comprised in the deed. The deed referred to was a grant, in consideration of 400*l.*, of an annuity of 40*l.* a year for lives to the petitioner, secured by the covenant of the grantor, and by a charge of the annuity upon specified real and personal estate. The order mentioned nothing about interest:—Held, independently of the Attorneys Act 1860, that inasmuch as the costs were an equitable charge, they bore interest at 4*l.* per cent. Lippard v. Ricketts, 14 L. R., Eq., 291; 41 L. J., Ch., 595; 20 W. R. 898.

11. The 33 & 34 Vict., c. 28, s. 17, which enables the Master upon a taxation of costs to allow interest on moneys disbursed by a solicitor for his client, is intended to apply only as between a solicitor and his own client, and does not apply to a taxation of costs to be paid as between solicitor and client out of a fund in court belonging wholly or partly to other persons than the client. Harland v. Murrell, 16 L. R., Eq., 285; 43 L. J., Ch., 94; 28 L. T. 725; 21 W. R. 781.

3. Agreements for between Solicitor and Client.

12. An agreement of the assignee to allow the solicitor interest on the amount of his bill of costs, does not bind the bankrupt's estate; nor does a resolution of creditor, at a meeting held for this purpose, bind those who are absent. Repp. Philips, 1 Dea. 368; 2 Mont. & A. 526.

13. It is the bounden duty of a solicitor, before he enters into a bargain with his client that he shall be allowed interest upon his bills of costs, to inform his client that the law allows of no such charge for interest. Lyddon v. Moss, 5 Jur., N. S., 637; 4 De G. & J. 104.

14. Where, according to agreement, a solicitor charged, in addition to his costs, a commission of 5*l.* per cent. upon certain property recovered for a client, such charge was disallowed, although it formed part of a settled account. Pince v. Beattie, 9 Jur., N. S., 1119; 11 W. R. 979; 32 L. J., Ch., 734.

15. A security taken for untaxed costs gives a solicitor no right to interest on them. There may, however, be a contract to pay such interest, if it is made with full knowledge, sufficient advice, and necessary warning; but, in the absence of these, it will be of no force between solicitor and client. Shannon v. Casey, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 307.

XXVII. INTEREST ON BALANCES AND ADVANCES.

16. Where a solicitor, engaged in various suits, obtained payment out of court of a sum of money standing in trust in the cause, and retained it towards his costs, and upon a subsequent taxation of his bill it appeared that at the time he obtained payment of the money he had in fact been already overpaid. The Court refused, upon a motion for that purpose, to charge him with interest, the parties having made considerable delay before they taxed the costs, and there being no fraud or laches imputable to the solicitor. Wright v. Southwood, 1 Y. & J. 527.

17. Under the common order, the Master is not authorised to allow interest on the balance of the moneys of the client from time to time in the hands of the solicitor, though such appears to have been the agreement between the parties. Jones v. James, 1 Beav. 307; 3 Jur. 310.

18. On taxation a solicitor cannot be charged with interest on balances in hand; but, a solicitor having debited himself with interest in his cash account rendered:—Held, that the Master ought to have charged him. Re Savery, 15 Beav. 58.

19. A solicitor took up his client's bills:—Held, that these payments could only be treated in the same light as any other ordinary cash advances made by the solicitor for the benefit of his client, and that the solicitor was not entitled to charge interest thereon. May v. Biggenden, Cheeseman v. May, 24 Beav. 207.

1. The 33 & 34 Vict., c. 28, s. 17, authorising on taxation the allowance of interest on moneys disbursed by a solicitor for his client, only applies to costs between a solicitor and his own client, not to a case where costs are to be paid out of a fund in court not belonging wholly to the client. Hartland v. Murrell, 43 L. J., Ch., 94; 28 L. T. 725; 21 W. R. 781; 16 L. R., Eq., 285.

2. The Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1870 is not retrospective, and, therefore, interest cannot be allowed under s. 17, on disbursements made prior to the passing of the Act. Ward v. Byre, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 180; 49 L. J., Ch., 657; 43 L. T. 525; 28 W. R. 712.

In May 1872, a country solicitor commenced a suit against his London agent, claiming an account and taxation of the bills of costs between them. The defendant filed his answer in October 1872, and thereby alleged a large balance due to him, and claimed interest thereon. He had also, in 1869, furnished the plaintiff with an account which contained items for interest. In 1875 a copy of the account was enclosed in a letter which referred to the account, but made no formal demand of payment, and which was signed by a firm of solicitors as his agents:—Held, that neither the answer nor the letter enclosing the account was a sufficient demand in writing or notice within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 28. Id.

XXVIII. WAIVER OF TAXATION.

3. At the hearing, a plaintiff obtained an order for taxation of his costs of suit, and payment out of the fund in court. The plaintiff had, in the progress of the suit, employed three different sets of solicitors successively. The plaintiff and his solicitors, at the date of the decree, agreed to accept a gross sum in full of all costs, instead of proceeding to taxation, and received the sum accordingly, for which they gave a receipt to that effect. They applied the money to their own use, and never paid the former solicitors the costs incurred during the early period of the suit. The decree did not direct any distributive payment among the various solicitors of the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff and his solicitors, at the date of the decree, had a right to waive taxation, and to accept of a gross sum, in satisfaction of all costs, without consulting the former solicitors. Mornington v. Wellesley, 4 Jur., N. S., 6.

It appearing that the gross sum was taken in satisfaction of all costs:—Held, that the lien of the former solicitors upon the fund in court was gone. Id.

Semble, that the remedy of the former solicitors was by action against the solicitors who received the money, as for money had and received to their use. Id.

I. General Principles.

- I. In General, 6520.
- II. Foreign Contracts, 6522.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Principle of specific performance that the legal remedy is inadequate or defective. Flint v. Brandon, 8 Ves. 159.
2. Specific performance of contract by competent party, and its nature and circumstances unobjectionable, are as much of course in equity as damages at law. Hall v. Warren, 9 Ves. 608.

1. He who seeks relief in equity on the foot of an agreement, must show that he has performed his part. Stratford v. Aldborough, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 287.

2. Where one party to an agreement trifles or shows a backwardness in performing his part of it, equity will not decree a specific performance in his favour; especially if the circumstances and situation of the other party are materially altered in the meantime. Hayes v. Caryl, 1 Bro. P. C. 126.

3. In equity there is a marked distinction between what is necessary to resist a suit for a specific performance of a contract, and a suit founded on a contract executed. Vigers v. Pike, 8 Cl. & F. 562. And see Pike v. Vigers, 2 Dr. & Wal. 1.

A case may happen in which the governing body of a joint stock company, or the partners of a firm, may so unite with a stranger in practising fraud against the company for whom they act, as to entitle the company to repudiate such acts, and to be relieved against them. Id.

In a case depending on alleged misrepresentations of value, there cannot be a more effectual bar to the plaintiff than by showing that he was from the beginning cognisant of all matters complained of, or after full information of them continued to deal with the property. Id.

4. If a person contracts to do a thing which he may do himself, or has the means of compelling others to do, equity will compel him to do it, unless it be highly unreasonable, in which case the other party shall not be held to the contract. If in that case the other party refuses to give up the contract, equity will not enforce a specific execution of it, but leave him to recover damages at law. Costigan v. Hastler, 2 Sch. & Lef. 166.

5. Specific execution of agreements decreed where damages would not answer the intention in making the contract, and a specific performance is therefore essential to justice; but equity will not decree specific performance of a covenant where, from circumstances, it is become unconscientious strictly to enforce specific performance of it; but on the terms of plaintiff's submitting to a conscientious modification of the covenant, equity will grant specific performance subject to such modification, especially where the conduct of both parties for a great length of time has caused the contract so to be acted upon as to make it unconscientious to refuse a specific performance. Davis v. Hone, 2 Sch. & Lef. 341.

6. A court of equity will, in many cases, enforce the specific execution of agreements, where the deed will not enable the party to recover damages at law. Chandos v. Brownlow, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 416. But see Normandy v. Devonshire, 216.

7. In agreements, no relief in equity where an action at law would not lie by reason of a substantial defect, such as a contingency not happening. Husband covenants in marriage articles, in six months after the death of his mother, and that he should come to and be in possession of the estate in jointure, to settle, etc. He dies in mother's life, having no issue. The estate comes to his heir, who shall not be compelled by the wife to a specific performance. Whitmel v. Farrel, 1 Ves. 256.

8. The fact that the performance of an agreement has, owing to circumstances which have subsequently occurred, become hard in its consequences to one of the parties, or that he is called upon to perform it under circumstances which he had not contemplated, is no objection to the specific performance of the contract in equity, there being nothing doubtful in the meaning of the agreement, and nothing hard or oppressive in its terms at the time it was made, semble. Webb v. Direct London & Portsmouth Railway Co., 9 Hare 129; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 566; 15 Jur. 697.

But this was reversed on the ground that a decree for the specific performance would be more productive of injustice than justice, in such a case. S. C. 1 De G. M. & G. 52; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 16 Jur. 323.

9. The Court will not decree a specific performance of a contract, if any circumstances of suspicion exist which remain unexplained. West v. Haggood, 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 369; 1 Jur. 259.

10. Specific performance of an agreement, become useless to the defendant, refused. — v. White, 3 Swan. 108. n.

11. The interest which a third party may have against the specific performance of a contract, may preclude the execution of it, as between trustees and cestui que trust; as, where an insolvent tenant made over his lease to another, who treated for a renewal under a secret agreement, in trust for the original tenant. Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 313.

12. Specific performance refused where the parties had treated the non-performance of some of the stipulations as the subject of pecuniary compensation where the other stipulations might reasonably be dealt with in the same way. Paris Chocolate Co. v. Crystal Palace Co., 3 Sm. & G. 119; 1 Jur., N. S., 720; 3 W. R. 267.

13. A seller of land, like a purchaser of it, is entitled to file a bill for specific performance, where he seeks a more complete remedy than he could obtain by an action for damages for the non-performance of the contract. This rule applies equally to an incorporated company as to individuals. Eastern Counties Railway Co. v. Hames, 5 H. L. Ca. 331; 24 L. J., Ch., 601.

14. The rule that he who seeks equity must do equity, is restricted to an equity in respect of the subject-matter of the suit. Gibson v. Goldsmid, 5 De G. M. & G. 757. Reversing 18 Beav. 584.

Where, therefore, in a deed of dissolution of partnership, one partner assigned certain foreign shares (which were recited to be transferable, as it was believed, by delivery), and covenanted for further assurance; and the other partner covenanted to indemnify the former against certain liabilities; and it afterwards appeared that the shares were not transferable by delivery, but required a formal act to complete the assignment:—Held, in a specific performance suit instituted by the assignee of the shares, that he was entitled to have the assignment completed, although there might in the meantime have been on his part a failure to perform the covenant of indemnity. Id.

15. This bill was filed for the purpose of enforcing a contract for a lease of mines, at a rent of one-fifteenth of the minerals obtained.

The defendant had subsequently granted a lease to another party at the same rent. The bill charged that, under an Act of Parliament, it was directed that the best rent should be obtained by the owner of the mines; and although one-fifteenth was a fair rent when the plaintiff's contract was entered into, that afterwards, the mines having become more valuable, the amount was not then a fair rent, and the lease granted by the defendant was therefore contrary to the Act:—Held, upon a demurrer for want of equity, that a party coming for performance of a contract could only have it as it actually existed, and that, as the rent reserved in the plaintiff's contract was not the best that could be obtained, it was contrary to the Act, and in effect fraudulent. The plaintiff, therefore, could not have his contract enforced, and the demurrer was allowed:—Held, also, that it was an undeniable proposition, that when a party entered into a contract without having the power of performing it, and afterwards acquired the right to do so, he was then bound to perform it. Carne v. Mitchell, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 287; 10 Jur. 909.

1. If two parties for a valuable consideration enter into a contract, of which one of the stipulations is for the benefit of a third person, who is a stranger to the consideration, the Court will not enforce the contract without securing his interest under it. Davenport v. Bishop, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 451; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 492; 7 Jur. 1077. Affirmed 1 Ph. 98.

II. FOREIGN CONTRACTS.

2. Specific performance decreed of articles executed in England concerning boundaries of two provinces in America. Penn v. Baltimore, 1 Ves. 444.

Original jurisdiction as to bounds of proprietary governments is in the king in council; but by the contract of parties it is brought within this jurisdiction. Id. 446.

3. A suit between parties residing here to enforce a lien on immovable property situate out of the jurisdiction requires that some special state of circumstances should exist, in order to enable the Court to give any relief. Norris v. Chambres, 29 Beav. 246. Affirmed 3 De G. F. & J. 583.

A director of a company, established in England to work some Prussian mines, had paid a large sum towards the purchase. The vendor annulled the contract, and resold the mines to a new company with notice. A bill by the representative of the director to establish a lien on the estate for the advances, was dismissed. Id.

4. A contract made in France, on the marriage of two people of that nation, who afterwards take refuge and live in England, shall be carried into a specific execution here, although the terms of it refer to the custom of Paris. Foubert v. Twist, 1 Bro. P. C. 129; Pre. Ch. 207.

5. An English court of equity has no jurisdiction to enforce the contracts of a foreign government against the property of such government in England. Smith v. Woguelin, 8 L. R., Eq., 198; 17 W. R. 904; 38 L. J., Ch., 465; 20 L. T., N. S., 724.

By a convention between the government of Peru and a Peruvian company all guano to be exported from Peru to Great Britain and Ireland was consigned to the company, and it was agreed that the company should sell the guano, and hold a portion of the proceeds at the disposal of the government. The Peruvian government afterwards contracted a loan in England upon the terms, that all the Peruvian guano to be imported into Great Britain and Ireland and Belgium should be hypothecated for the repayment of the loan, and that out of the proceeds of the guano a certain sum should be applied half-yearly in redemption of the loan:—Held, in a suit by the bondholders of the loan (to which the Peruvian government was made a defendant, but did not appear), that the Court had no jurisdiction to compel the company or its agents to apply the proceeds of the guano in the hands of the agents in England to the redemption of the loan. Ib.

When the government of a state contracts a loan in another country, the contract is governed by the law of the state whose government contracts the loan, and not by the law of the country in which the contract is made. Ib.

6. The Court has jurisdiction to carry out an agreement entered into by persons in England and relating to lands abroad, although such agreement is not made in a form which by the foreign law would affect the land. Sichel v. Raphael, 3 N. R. 662; 10 Jur., N. S., 1165; 18 W. R. 191; 11 L. T., N. S., 433.

7. Court of England will relieve against fraudulent conveyances of land gained in Ireland when the defendant is in England. Arglisse v. Muschamp, 1 Vern. 75.

8. The Court will specifically enforce against a foreigner a contract of sale made abroad, if the subject-matter of the contract is within its jurisdiction. Hart v. Herwig, 42 L. J., Ch., 467; 28 L. T. 329; 21 W. R. 538. Affirmed 8 L. R., Ch., 860; 29 L. T. 47; 21 W. R. 663.

Therefore, when a contract was made abroad for the sale of a foreign vessel to be delivered in this country, the Court granted an interim injunction to restrain the removal of the ship from an English port, allowing substituted service of the notice of motion on the captain. Ib.

II. Discretion of the Court.

9. Specific performance is discretionary in court. Clowes v. Higginson, 1 Ves. & B. 527.

10. Specific performance is wholly discretionary in court, as is also the jurisdiction to set aside a contract. Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 294. Affirmed 2 Dow 510.

11. A bill for specific performance of an agreement is an application to the discretion, or rather the extraordinary jurisdiction, of the court, which cannot be exercised in favour of persons who have slept on their rights, or acquiesced for a long time in a title and possession adverse to their claim. In cases seeking a specific execution, laches are equally as strong against a plaintiff not prosecuting, as in not commencing a suit. Moore v. Blake, 1 Ball & B. 69.

1. In decreeing a specific performance, a court of equity exercises a discretion, and will not exert its authority for that purpose, if by so doing injustice will be done. Powell v. Lloyd, 2 Y. & J. 372. See also Martin v. Mitchell, 2 Jac. & Walk. 420. Mason v. Armistage, 13 Ves. 25. Drew v. Hanson, 7 Ves. 35. Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 734. Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 186. Jones v. Statham, 3 Atk. 389.

2. Specific performance is not of course because there is a contract, but a relief in the nature of indulgence peculiar to the jurisdiction of equity. Cox v. Middleton, 2 Drew. 290; 23 L. J., Ch., 618.

3. The Court cannot speculate on the damages which a jury might have given for the breach of an agreement, nor on the damage caused to property by failure of a sale; therefore the specific performance of an agreement of hereditaments, where the consideration money is 50*l.*, is not too small a matter for the jurisdiction of the Court. Bennett v. Smith, 16 Jur. 421.

The exercise of the jurisdiction is discretionary in the court; but the discretion is not arbitrary, but must be exercised according to the circumstances of the case. Id.

III. Relief by Way of Damages.

- I. Jurisdiction before the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, 6523.
- II. Jurisdiction under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, 6523.
- III. Assessment, 6527.
- IV. Damages generally. See COPYRIGHT, XII. II.—DAMAGES—INJUNCTION, I. X.—LIGHT AND AIR, V. VII. 2.—PATENT, VII. VIII. and VII. XII. 7.
- V. Abatement and Compensation. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, I. III.—VENDOR AND PURCHASER, IX.

I. JURISDICTION BEFORE THE 21 & 22 VICT., C. 27.

4. Court relieved against breach of agreement, on making a compensation. Rose v. Rose, Amb. 331.

Voluntary compensation must be paid at the time. Id.

5. A certain estate is covenanted to be conveyed, and is not so; the breach is remediable in damages. Such damages are money, not land, in the hands of the party injured. Wade v. Paget, 1 Bro. C. C. 364. For the judgment see 8. C. 1 Cox 74.

6. Compensation for non-performance of an agreement is not a mode of equitable relief. Cinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & Lef. 25.

7. Plaintiff, in a bill for specific performance of a contract, is not entitled generally to satisfaction by way of damages for the non-performance, to be ascertained by an issue, or a reference to the Master. Distinction as to case of compensation, as for a part subject to tithes, though represented as tithes free, giving the purchaser, if he chooses to take the purchase, a right to compensation, but not to compel the vendor to purchase the tithes. Todd v. Gee, 17 Ves. 273. See also Blare v. Sutton, 3 Meriv. 237.

8. On a bill for a specific performance of an agreement for the sale of a house, the plaintiff made out his case; but it appeared that the defendant had actually sold the house to another person for a valuable consideration, and without notice. The Court directed the Master to inquire what damage the plaintiff had sustained by the non-performance of the agreement, and that such damages, together with the costs of the suit, should be paid by defendant. Denton v. Stewart, 1 Cox 258.

9. In general, a court of equity will not direct any inquiry as to damage sustained by the non-performance of an agreement. Williams v. Hignett, 6 L. J., Ch., 125.

10. Vendor, upon objection to the title, sold to another, after notice that she would do so, if the title was refused. Under a bill for a specific performance, or an issue or reference to ascertain the loss of the first purchaser, a reference was directed upon the authority of Denton v. Stewart (1 Cox 251). As to the principle, quære. Greenaway v. Adams, 12 Ves. 395.

11. The jurisdiction of equity is never exercised to decree compensation singly, without other relief. As to the jurisdiction in cases of compensation generally, see Newham v. May, 13 Price 749; M'Clell. 511.

12. A sub-lessee having been evicted on the expiration of the term granted by his lease, sued on a covenant to grant an additional term; but the term covenanted to be granted having nearly expired at the time of the decree, instead of a specific performance, an account in the nature of an inquiry quantum damnificatus was directed. M'Nulty v. Hamill, Bent. 541.

13. In a case decided before the stat. 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27:—Held, that the Court has jurisdiction to award damages for the want of a literal performance of a contract, of which it directs the specific performance: it will in general do so rather than compel the parties to resort to another forum. Phelps v. Prothero, 7 De G. M. & G. 722.

As to Damages generally and in Lieu of Remedy by Injunction. See DAMAGES—INJUNCTION, I. X.

II. JURISDICTION UNDER THE 21 & 22 VICT., C. 27.

1. Where an Action for Specific Performance is not Sustainable, 6523.

1. In Aid of, or Substitution for, Relief by way of Specific Performance, 6526.

1. Where an Action for Specific Performance is not Sustainable.

14. Under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, damages, independent of relief, cannot be given by a court of equity, but the usual account of interest and rent will be directed. Chinnoch v. Sainsbury, 30 L. J., Ch., 409; 5 N. R. 185. 6 Jur.. N. S., 1318; 9 W. R., 7; 3 L. T., N. S., 258.

15. A court of equity can give damages only where it can decree specific performance. De Brassac v. Martyn, 11 W. R. 1020; 9 L. T., N. S., 287.

Where a plaintiff has, by delay in prosecuting a suit, allowed the term in an agreement for the lease of a house to expire before the cause can be heard, the Court will not direct an inquiry as to damages. Ib.

1. The Court has power to entertain questions of compensation for damages under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, only in those cases where it has power to enforce specific performance. Rogers v. Challis, 27 Beav. 175; 6 Jur., N. S., 334; 29 L. J., Ch., 240.

2. Although relief by award of damages, under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, is in the nature of consequential relief, yet the Court has jurisdiction to grant it, notwithstanding that it may not be in a position at the hearing to grant an injunction or a specific performance on which the right to damages depends. Cory v. Thames Ironwork & Shipbuilding Co., 11 W. R. 589; 8 L. T., N. S., 237; 2 N. R. 16.

3. When a plaintiff fails to establish any covenant contract, or agreement of which specific performance can be directed, the Court has no jurisdiction to grant relief in damages. Lewers or Lever v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 2 L. R., Eq., 270; 12 Jur., N. S., 389; 14 L. T., N. S., 855.

Suit for specific performance of an alleged parol agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the agent of the defendant, for a lease to the plaintiff of two farms for a term of twenty-one years. The plaintiff occupied the farms till 1855, and paid rent, but no lease was ever granted to him:—Held, that the Court has no jurisdiction to deal with the question of damages where a plaintiff has failed to establish, by proper evidence, a bill for the specific performance of the contract. S. C., 16 L. T., N. S., 185.

4. Where in the result it appears that at the time of the plaintiff filing a bill for specific performance, he had no title to any equitable relief, the Court has no power to assess damages under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27. Ferguson v. Wilson, 12 Jur., N. S., 912; 15 W. R. 80; 15 L. T., N. S., 230.

The plaintiff advanced money to a company upon the faith of a resolution, that when the time for which the loan was made expired he should be entitled to be repaid in money, with interest, or by an allotment of shares to the amount of his advance. He elected to accept shares in payment, but the company refused to allot him any, and he filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement, and for damages for the breach thereof against the directors and the company. At that time there were no shares remaining unallotted, and the plaintiff was aware of the fact:—Held, that under such circumstances he could not maintain a bill for specific performance; and that, as at the time when the bill was filed the plaintiff had no title to the equitable relief sought, the Court could not, under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, award him damages; for that Act was never intended to transfer the jurisdiction of a court of law to a court of equity, but to enable a court of equity to do complete justice between the parties in matters actually within its own jurisdiction. Ib.

5. It is not the intention of 21 & 22 Vict., c.

27, s. 3, to enable a party to have damages for breach of specific performance assessed, where he has good reason to believe that a bill for specific performance cannot be sustained; but where on a bill for the specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease, it appeared that the defendant could not grant the lease on account of the mortgagees refusing to concur therein, the Court directed an inquiry what damages the plaintiff had sustained by reason of the defendant's breach, instead of sending him to law to try the question; but it gave no costs in the suit up to the hearing. Hove v. Hunt, 8 Jur., N. S., 834; 32 L. J., Ch., 36; 10 W. R. 813; 7 L. T., N. S., 124; 31 Beav. 420.

6. A. agreed with the plaintiff to grant a lease of premises, and to execute such repairs as they should jointly agree upon, to the intent that the premises should be made fit for the use and occupation of the plaintiff and his family; upon the performance of which stipulation the plaintiff agreed to accept a lease. The plaintiff entered, and, after several years, A. died without any joint agreement having been come to as to the repairs, and having, shortly before his death, sold the premises, subject to the agreement. On demurrer to a bill against the purchaser and A.'s executors, for specific performance and damages:—Held, that the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, did not apply, and the demurrer was allowed both for want of equity and for multifariousness. Norris v. Jackson, 1 John. & H. 319; 7 Jur., N. S., 540.

7. Where a contract cannot be performed specifically, the Court will not interfere, in the absence of any step taken to reform the agreement, so as to make a new contract, even although there has been a virtual mistake, but will leave the plaintiff to his relief in damages, to be ascertained either by a jury at law, or by directing an inquiry. Raphael v. Thames Valley Railway Co., 12 Jur., N. S., 656; 14 W. R. 750; 34 L. J., Ch., 659; 14 L. T., N. S., 652.

8. The 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, has not conferred upon the Court a jurisdiction to assess damages in cases where it did not before exist. Lawrence v. Austin; Durell v. Pritchard; Dumball v. Walters, 11 Jur., N. S., 576; 34 L. J., Ch., 588; 13 L. T., N. S., 759.

Where by reason of the injury complained of being completed, or otherwise, the Court has no jurisdiction, it will not assess the damages which the plaintiff has sustained, but will leave him to take proceedings at law. Ib.

9. In a case for an injunction which, from circumstances arising after the bill was filed, could not be granted, the Court, under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, s. 2, awarded damages, though not specifically prayed for by the bill. Cotton v. Wyld, 32 Beav. 266.

10. A plaintiff, though barred by acquiescence or otherwise from his remedy by injunction, may obtain damages under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, and that even though no action would be maintainable by the plaintiff. Eastwood v. Lever, 33 L. J., Ch., 355.

11. When an agreement is entered into between two parties, and performance by the first party of his part goes to the root of the whole agreement, and the first party fails to perform his part, and the second party also fails to perform his part, the Court will restrain the first party from bringing an action against the second party for non-performance of his part, until he (the first party) shall have performed his part; and that although the Court has no jurisdiction to compel the first party to specifically perform his part, and no jurisdiction to award damages for its non-performance. Acreman v. Price, Davies v. Price, 18 W. R. 540.

A lease of a colliery contained an implied covenant on the part of the lessor to procure land by certain compulsory powers, for the lessees to make a railway to a neighbouring canal, without which they had no access to any available market. The lessor did not procure the land, but brought an action against the lessees for rent. The lessees applied for an injunction, and, the powers having expired, they asked at the hearing for an inquiry as to damages:—Held, that the Court would restrain the action until the land was provided, but that, as it could not have compelled the defendant to provide the land, it had no jurisdiction to award damages. Id.

1. Upon a bill for specific performance of agreement for a partnership:—Held, that the Court would not grant damages under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 32, there being a difficulty in suing at law, and no case which would have entitled the plaintiff to relief before the Act. Scott v. Raymond, 19 L. T., N. S., 4; 38 L. J., Ch., 48.

2. The defendant, in December 1873, demised to the plaintiff premises to be used for refreshment-rooms for twenty-one years. The plaintiff put up a stove for the purposes of his business, which made the party-wall so hot as to endanger the adjoining premises. On receiving notice from the defendant's solicitors to abate the nuisance he substituted another stove in August 1874, but the evil continued. In October 1874 the defendant commenced an action of ejectment against the plaintiff for breach of covenant. The plaintiff then had the premises examined, and found that in several respects the provisions of the Metropolitan Building Act, 18 & 19 Vict., c. 122, had been violated. The plaintiff by his bill sought to have the lease cancelled, the action of ejectment stayed, and damages awarded. The defendant did not insist on the lease or seek damages for past breaches of covenants:—Held, that as the bill was filed before the Judicature Acts came into operation, and was really for damages and not for the rescission of a contract, as the defendant did not seek to enforce the contract, it could not be sustained. The plaintiff's remedy was at law and not in equity. Thorley v. Glassop, 34 L. T., N. S., 169.

3. The Court will not entertain a bill for specific performance of a contract to pay a sum of money, either on the ground of part performance, or on the ground that for want of formality the contract is not enforceable at law; nor in such a case can the Court give damages in lieu of specific performance under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 37. Crompton v. Varna Railway Co., 41 L. J., Ch., 817; 20 W. R. 713; 7 L. R., Ch., 562.

By the constitution of a railway company all contracts above the value of 500*l.* were required to be under seal. By an agreement not under seal, made between the duly authorised agent of the company and the contractor for the line, it was agreed that if the contractor would erect and leave upon the company's land substantial cottages, the company would pay him a rent of 500*l.*, or a lump sum of 5,000*l.* at their option. The contractor having performed his part of the agreement, filed a bill against the company for payment of the money or for damages in lieu of specific performance, alleging that for want of a seal the contract was not enforceable at law. A demurrer was allowed to the bill. Id.

4. A Gibraltar firm entered into a contract with A., of Algeciras, in Spain, in consideration of property having been transferred to them, to open a credit in his favour to the extent of 9,400 dollars, and to honour his drafts to that amount. After advancing him some sums of money, they refused to accept a bill for 1,000 dollars, drawn upon them by him, and subsequently refused to make any further advances. Proceedings in equity were thereupon commenced by him in the Supreme Court of Gibraltar to enforce a specific performance of the contract, and to obtain an award of damages under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, for the non-performance of the contract:—Held, that a court of equity will not decree the specific performance of a mere agreement to advance money. Moreover, that that being so, it has no jurisdiction to award damages. However, the Court of Gibraltar might have proceeded with the case as if it had been commenced as an action. Larios v. Gurety, 5 L. R., P. C., 346.

Though the Supreme Court of Gibraltar may be bound, in administering the law, to follow the principles which govern English courts of law, and, in administering equity, to follow the principles which govern English courts of equity, yet, where a suit for specific performance is commenced before it, and it is found that the plaintiff ought not to have taken proceedings in equity, but at law, for damages in respect of a breach of contract, the Court may, amending the pleadings if necessary, continue the case as if the plaintiff had brought an action for damages. Id.

5. Although the Chancery Division of the High Court exercises both legal and equitable jurisdictions, those jurisdictions still exist, and the Court still acts upon the rule that there could be no damages at law for a breach by the assignee of an agreement. White v. Boby, 37 L. T. 652; 26 W. R. 133.

Damages instead of specific performance will only be given when a plaintiff had an equity at the time of issuing the writ. Id.

6. The plaintiffs claimed the specific performance of an agreement for the composition of a literary work by the defendant, alleging that the agreement was contained in three written documents. At the trial the first and third of the documents were proved; the second was not produced, nor was any evidence given of its contents. The defendant, by his statement of defence, denied that he had agreed with the plaintiffs as alleged by them with reference to the second document;—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to specific performance of the agreement contained in the first and third documents, or to damages for the breach of it. Post v. Marsh, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 395; 50 L. J., Ch., 287; 43 L. T. 628; 29 W. R. 198.

2. In Aid of, or Substitution for, Relief by way of Specific Performance.

1. A plaintiff agreed to grant a lease to the defendant when and so soon as he, the defendant, should have built a new house on the land; and the defendant agreed to accept such lease when required, and by a certain day to pull down an old house standing on the land, and build a new one on the site:—Held, on demurrer to a bill praying specific performance and damages, that the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, applied, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the non-building of the house, and to specific performance of the contract to accept the lease. Soames v. Edge, 1 Johns. 669.

2. The Court will not, under the terms of the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, award any damages to a plaintiff in addition to specific performance, where it does not appear that he has suffered any special injury from the delay which has occurred in the completion of the contract. Chinnock v. Ely (Marathoness), 2 Hem. & M. 221; 34 L. J., Ch., 899; 13 W. R. 178.

3. Decree for specific performance on an agreement for a lease, without prejudice to the question of damages. Tomlinson v. Dixon, 14 W. R. 528.

4. When the Court has jurisdiction to decree the specific performance of an agreement, but from circumstances is unable to decree specific performance of certain parts of it which are merely incidents to the agreement, and do not affect its substance, it has power to provide for them otherwise than by directing that they be specifically carried into execution, and notably by assessing the damages which, by reason of their non-performance, the plaintiff may have sustained. Middleton v. Greenwood, 10 Jur., N. S., 350; 10 L. T., N. S., 149; 2 De G. J. & S. 142; 3 N. R. 694.

5. Semble, that the Court will not enforce against a mortgagee specific performance of an agreement for a lease in which the mortgagor refuses to concur, but will give damages in substitution for the specific performance, where the concurrence of the mortgagor is no part of the agreement. Franklin v. Ball, 4 N. R. 128; 10 Jur., N. S., 606; 10 L. T., N. S., 446; 12 W. R. 845.

6. On a bill for specific performance of a negative contract, or, in the alternative, for damages, the plaintiff having come in time for an injunction as to part, an inquiry as to damages, under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, was directed in respect of the rest of the contract, the breach of which was complete at the time of filing the bill. Hindley v. Emery, 11 Jur., N. S., 874; 14 W. R. 25; 13 L. T., N. S., 272.

7. When a bill is filed for specific performance of a contract, and circumstances prevent the Court from giving a decree for specific performance, the Court may at the hearing award damages, although the subject-matter of the contract has then expired. Oakeley v. Ramsay, 27 L. T., N. S., 745.

8. A mortgagor agreed to grant a lease of a shop; the lessee entered into possession and commenced alterations; the mortgagees refused to confirm the lease or to allow him to proceed with the alterations. Upon a bill against the lessor for specific performance:—Held, as damages had clearly been sustained, that the Court would make an order to assess them, though the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, in simple cases never intended to transfer the jurisdiction from a court of law to a court of equity. Howe v. Hunt, 8 Jur., N. S., 834; 32 L. J., Ch., 36; 10 W. R. 813; 7 L. T., N. S., 124; 31 Beav. 420.

9. A plaintiff agreed to take a house and premises for three years, and the defendant agreed to put the same in substantial and decorative repair, and keep the same so during the term. The plaintiff entered into possession in the full expectation and belief that the premises would be put in complete substantial and decorative repair, and that the additions and repairs required by him, and agreed to by the defendant, would be made and done; but the defendant refused to perform his part of the agreement. The plaintiff prayed for specific performance of the agreement, and that damages might be awarded in respect of the breach and non-performance of the agreement. The Court decreed specific performance, and directed an inquiry whether the agreement as to decorative repairs had been performed, and if not, decreed, that the lessor should compensate the lessee in damages. Samuda v. Lawford, 8 Jur., N. S., 739; 6 L. T., N. S., 890; 4 Giff. 42.

10. The Court has no power, under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, upon motion in a cause, after a decree for specific performance of a covenant, to add an order for assessing damages for breach of the covenant. Such an order would be a supplemental decree upon facts which had subsequently occurred. Hythe (Corporation) v. East, 1 L. R., Eq., 620; 35 L. J., Ch., 257; 14 W. R. 273; 13 L. T., N. S., 788.

11. A., a lessee under a lease containing a covenant not to assign or underlet without a licence from the lessor, and a proviso for re-entry on breach of the covenant, agreed to grant an under-lease, but his lessor requiring a consideration for a licence which A. considered excessive, A. refused to complete. In a suit by the proposed under-lessee against A. for specific performance, the Court made a decree for specific performance, with a reference as to damages in case the defendant should be unable to procure the licence. Hilton v. Tipper, 16 W. R. 888; 18 L. T., N. S., 626.

In every case where there is a valid contract and an unexceptionable subject, and the parties are under no disability, the Court has power to decree damages. Id.

12. The defendant agreed with the plaintiffs by a certain day to pull down an old house and build a new one on the site, agreeably to plans to be submitted by the plaintiffs' contractor, and under the inspection and to the satisfaction of their architect; and the plaintiffs agreed, when the new building should be completed, to grant a lease of the premises for a certain term at a fixed rent, the defendant agreeing to accept such lease when required. A demurrer to a bill praying specific performance and damages was overruled on the ground that the plaintiffs, waiving the specific performance of that part of the agreement which related to the building of the house, might be entitled to damages for the breach thereof, and to specific performance of the other part, viz., the contract to accept the lease. London (Mayor) v. Southgate, 38 L. J., Ch., 141; 17 W. R. 197; 20 L. T., N. S., 107.

Held, also, that such waiver might be made at the bar, and need not be offered by the bill. Id.

1. S. contracted with J. for the purchase of a leasehold interest. S. entered into possession, with J.'s consent, in February 1867, without having paid the purchase-money. Afterwards J. extended the time for payment to the month of November 1867. On the 7th November S. by a letter offered to pay the purchase-money, but did not tender an assignment for execution. He received no answer to that offer, and on the 27th November J. forcibly turned S. out of possession. S. then came to the court to enforce specific performance, and prayed for damages for the non-performance of the contract by J., and for the wrongful entry and detention. A decree was made for specific performance of the contract with costs against J., but the Court refused to grant an inquiry as to damages. Johnston v. Johnston, 17 W. R. 278.

2. In a suit to administer the trusts of a settlement, the chief clerk having certified, in pursuance of an inquiry directed on motion for decree, that the most beneficial way of letting the premises which formed the subject of the suit would be to let them on lease, two persons (one of whom was the defendant and also a cotrustee and the receiver of the property) carried in equally beneficial proposals, and that of the defendant was accepted, and a conditional contract for a lease was signed by him accordingly, and approved by the judge. The defendant having afterwards declined to perform the contract, the Court, on further consideration, directed an inquiry as to the damages occasioned by his breach of contract. Carme v. Brancher, 17 W. R. 342.

3. By a memorandum in writing, defendant agreed to let, and plaintiffs agreed to take, business premises for one year, with an option for plaintiffs at the end of the year to have a lease for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years. Plaintiffs, having gone into possession under the agreement, and having laid out money in alterations, at the end of the year gave notice of their intention to exercise the option; but when the defendant's title came to be investigated it was found that she was possessed of only a moiety of the premises, the other moiety being vested in her son, a minor. The defendant was decreed to perform specifically so much of the contract as she was able to perform, with an abatement of one moiety of the rent. An inquiry as to damages was refused, there being no evidence to show that the plaintiffs had sustained any damage. Burton v. Scammell, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 175; 51 L. J., Ch., 296; 45 L. T. 606; 30 W. R. 310.

4. An agreement was executed between a banker at Paris and the directors of a company formed to take over his business. No day was fixed for the completion of the transfer of the business and offices. In fact, the transfer was never carried out; but the company was started, and it transacted business, and the banker admitted a committee of its directors to his offices, which he vacated, removing his clerks to a higher storey in the same building, where he continued to transact his business pending the completion of the contract, which he was always anxious and willing to effect by handing over books and executing legal transfers. The contract never was completed by the default of the company. The company came to a winding-up. The banker claimed the full amount of the purchase-money for which he had contracted.—Held, that the contract was in fieri, and as it was owing to the fault of the company that it never became fully executed, an inquiry was directed before the chief clerk as to the damages sustained by the banker through the breach of the contract, he to be allowed to prove for the amount of damages so ascertained. Lafitte & Co. v. Lafitte, 42 L. J., Ch., 716; 29 L. T. 80; 21 W. R. 750.

5. Where specific performance is refused on the ground of mistake by the defendant, so that under the old practice a bill for specific performance would have been dismissed without prejudice to an action, the Court will proceed to consider the question of damages. Tamplin v. James, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 215; 43 L. T. 520; 29 W. R. 311.

6. The plaintiff agreed with the defendant to take a lease of premises belonging to the defendant for the purpose, as the defendant knew, of carrying on a trade which the plaintiff was about to commence. In consequence of his wilful refusal to fulfil his agreement, the plaintiff was unable for fifteen weeks to commence his trade.—Held, that, in addition to judgment for specific performance of the agreement, damages must be awarded in respect of the loss of profits from his trade during the fifteen weeks; and 250*l.* damages were awarded. Jaques v. Millar, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 153; 37 L. T., N. S., 151; 25 W. R. 846; 47 L. J., Ch., 544.

7. A railway company agreed for valuable consideration with a landowner to erect, construct, and fit up a station on certain lands which they had bought from him. The agreement contained no further description of the station, nor any stipulations as to the use of it. The company having refused to erect a station in the specified place, and substituted one at a distance of two miles.—Held, that the case was one in which justice could be better done by an inquiry as to damages than by a decree for specific performance, and in assessing those damages the Court will give the landowner the benefit of all such presumptions as, according to the rules of law, are made against wrongdoers. Wilson v. Northampton & Banbury Junction Railway Co., 9 L. R., Ch., 279; 43 L. J., Ch., 503; 30 L. T. 147; 22 W. R. 380.

III. ASSESSMENT.

8. Where a bill for specific performance asks also for the damages consequential on non-performance, and the defendant specifically performs his contract before the hearing, the Court has, nevertheless, jurisdiction at the hearing to direct a reference as to the damages. Cory v. Thames Ironworks & Shipbuilding Co., 2 N. R. 16.

Simple questions, like the assessment of damages, are not such as the Court will try by jury, but it will refer them to a court of law. S. C. 11 W. R. 589; 8 L. T., N. S., 237.

9. Where a person seeks for damages, on the ground of the improper use of the process of the Court, and the person against whom the complaint is made requires the matter to be tried at law, the Court will permit it to be tried at law, instead of itself assessing the damages. Whithead v. Lyles, 34 Beav. 161.

1. In an action for specific performance, where, on an inquiry as to damages, it was necessary to examine witnesses, the inquiry was referred to an official referee. Stafford v. Cowan, 25 W. R. 788.

2. In the case of a breach of contract, where a vendor is entitled to recover nothing as purchase-money, but is entitled to compensation for the loss and injury he has sustained by the breach of contract, the measure of the damage is the difference between the price fixed by the contract and the market value at the time of the breach. But when the market value is unascertainable, and a serious loss and injury is proved, the Court, acting on the principle that no wrong done is to remain without redress, awards substantial damages. Such damages must not be greater in amount than the amount the vendor would have been entitled to under the contract if it had been punctually carried out. Re Lafitte & Co., Lafitte's Claim, 23 W. R. 379.

3. When a person wrongfully in possession had pulled down buildings, the demolition of which had increased rather than diminished the selling value of the property, and the owners of the property were trustees in bankruptcy:—Held, that he was not liable to pay damages in respect of the demolition of the buildings, the duty of the trustees being to sell the property, and the considerations which might arise, in the case of an ordinary owner who might desire to reside on the property, not being applicable. Krehl v. Park, 22 W. R. 487; 71 L. T., N. S., 325.

Damages in the nature of occupation rent will not be given where no advantage could be gained by the occupancy. Ib.

4. A contract entered into by a railway company with a landowner to build a railway station at a particular spot, nothing being said as to the user of the station, or the degree of convenience and accommodation to be afforded by it, is too vague and indefinite to be enforced by decree for specific performance; but the Court will give damages for the breach of such contract, and in assessing those damages will give the landowner the benefit of all such presumptions as, according to the rules of law, are made against wrongdoers. Wilson v. Northampton & Banbury Junction Railway Co., 43 L. J., Ch., 503; 9 L. R., Ch., 279; 22 W. R. 380; 30 L. T., N. S., 147.

Measure of.] See DAMAGES, II.

5. Upon a contract for the sale and purchase of a real estate, if the vendor, without fraud, is incapable of making a good title, the proposing purchaser is not entitled to recover compensation in damages for the loss of his bargain. Bain v. Fothergill, 7 L. R., H. L., 158; 43 L. J., Exch., 243; 31 L. T. 387. Affirming 6 L. R., Exch., 59; 40 L. J., Exch., 34; 23 L. T. 670; 19 W. R. 134.

F. was in possession of a mining royalty under a written agreement for a lease, of which he had taken an assignment. One of the stipulations of the agreement was that H. (the person with whom the agreement was originally made) should not assign without the licence of the lessors. They were ready to consent to the assignment to F., provided he would execute a duplicate of the agreement containing this stipulation. Though repeatedly communicated with on the subject he delayed doing so. He entered into a contract with B. to sell his interest in the royalty; it was afterwards found that the lessors absolutely refused their assent to the transfer, and F. was unable to perform his contract with B. In an action by B. against F. for its non-performance:—Held, that B. could only recover the expenses he had incurred, but not damages beyond then. Ib.

Costs of.] 6. By a decretal order specific performance was decreed against a vendor; an inquiry was directed what damage had been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the acts complained of in the bill, and the defendant was ordered to pay the costs of suit; liberty to apply being given, but further consideration not being reserved. The acts complained of by the bill were commencing to pull down buildings and removing the materials, and cutting and carrying away the crops on the land. The plaintiff carried in a very large claim for damages under various heads, most of which were at once rejected in chambers, but a certificate was made (which Bacon, V.-C., refused to vary) giving damages for pulling down buildings, and also under four other heads. The Lords Justices, on appeal, held that no damage was shown, on the ground that, under the peculiar circumstances, pulling down the buildings caused no damage, and that the other heads of damage were not within the scope of the inquiry. The defendant subsequently applied for the costs of the injury, on the ground that it had resulted wholly in his favour. This application having been refused by Bacon, V.-C.:—Held, that the plaintiff though unsuccessful, was entitled to the costs of the inquiry so far as they related to pulling down buildings, removing materials, and cutting and carrying away crops; but must pay all the other costs of the inquiry. Krehl v. Park, 10 L. R., Ch., 334; 44 L. J., Ch., 286; 33 L. T. 83; 23 W. R. 475.

IV. Indemnity in Addition to, or in Lieu of, Specific Performance.

7. Special directions, in a decree for specific performance against a company, providing for an indemnity to the company, and for works to be performed by the company. Powell v. South Wales Railway Co., 1 Jur., N. S., 773.

8. When actual specific performance cannot be directed, and an indemnity is prayed, the Court will decree indemnity as ancillary to the relief by specific performance. Cruse v. Paine, 19 L. T., N. S., 127.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Motion to restrain a defendant from violating his part of an agreement refused by Lord Lyndhurst, on the ground of the agreement being such, that the Court could not compel a specific performance by the plaintiff of his part of it. Hills v. Croll, 1 Coop. C. C. 84. n.; 2 Ph. 60; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 444; 9 Jur. 645.

2. The Court will not interfere by injunction to prevent the violation of an agreement of which, from the nature of the subject, there could be no decree for a specific performance, as, for instance, to restrain the defendant from imparting the secret of an invention which had been the subject of a patent long since expired. Newbury v. James, 2 Meriv. 446.

3. If an agreement consists of two distinct parts, one of which the Court can enforce, but not the other, and a bill is filed simply for an injunction to restrain the violation of the former part, the Court will grant the injunction, notwithstanding it would not enforce the agreement in toto. Rolfe v. Rolfe, 15 Sim. 88; 1 Coop. C. C. 87. n.; 10 Jur. 61.

4. By an agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendants, the former, in consideration of certain payments to be made by them to the latter, were to have the exclusive right of engraving and publishing a series of maps, from drawings to be furnished by them from time to time by the latter. The Court refused to restrain the defendants from acting in violation of the agreement, as it could not compel the defendants to furnish the drawings, and therefore could not decree a specific performance of the agreement. Baldwin v. Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, 9 Sim. 393; 2 Jur. 161.

5. The Court cannot specifically perform an agreement, whereby A. agrees to compose and write reports of cases determined in a court of justice, to be printed and published by a particular individual for a stipulated remuneration, nor interfere by injunction to restrain the party from permitting reports written by him to be published by another person. The remedy, if any, is at law. Clarke v. Price, 2 Wils. 157.

6. Consideration of the principle on which the Court may, in certain cases, interpose to prevent a contract from being performed in specie; protecting the legal or supposed legal right of the party seeking such assistance, and preserving to the other party the substantial benefit of the specific performance. East Lancashire Railway Co. v. Hattersley, 8 Hare 72.

II. IN CASE OF NEGATIVE OR QUASI-NEGATIVE STIPULATIONS.

7. Where a party agrees not to do a particular act, and there are other terms in the agreement which are so vague that the Court cannot enforce them, it will not grant an injunction to restrain the breach of the negative term. Kimberley v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 115.

8. Where an agreement had been entered into between A. and B. (who were partners without any written articles) and persons in their employ, containing terms and provisions of a harsh description, and where one of the partners had filed a bill against the other for a dissolution of the partnership, the Court refused to interfere, at the suit of the other partner, to restrain the breach of the negative terms of the agreement. Croft v. Haw, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 305.

9. Injunction granted to restrain the Commissioners of Woods from building on part of the site of Carlton Palace, in violation of one of the terms of an agreement entered into by them with the plaintiffs for a building lease of an adjoining part of the site. Rankin v. Huskisson, 4 Sim. 13.

10. The plaintiff's house being so near the church that the ringing of the five o'clock bell in the morning disturbed her; the plaintiff came to an agreement in writing with the churchwardens and inhabitants at a vestry, that she should erect a cupola and a clock at the church, in consideration of which the bell was not to be rung in the morning. This agreement good, and decreed to be binding in equity, and an injunction was granted. Martin v. Nuthin, 2 P. W. 266.

11. The jurisdiction of the Court to restrain by injunction an act which the defendant is by contract bound to abstain from, is not confined to cases in which there are either no other executory terms in the contract, or none which a court of equity has not the means of enforcing. If a bill states a right or title in the plaintiff to the benefit of a negative agreement on the part of the defendant, or of his abstaining from a given act, the Court will equally interfere by injunction, whether the right be at law or under an agreement, which cannot be otherwise brought under its jurisdiction. Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, 2 Ph. 52; 1 Coop. C. C. 72; 10 Jur. 60. And see Hills v. Croll, 2 Ph. 60; and see also Id. 62. n.

12. The Court will, in some cases, by means of an injunction in a negative form, compel parties who have begun to take away the rights of others, in some measure to restore them before the hearing of the cause. Spencer v. London & Birmingham Railway Co., 8 Sim. 193; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 281.

13. The Court will grant an injunction restraining defendants from acting contrary to a negative agreement, although it cannot specifically enforce the performance of the whole of the agreement. Great Northern Railway Co. v. Manchester, Sheffield, & Lincolnshire Railway Co., 5 De G. & Sm. 138; 16 Jur. 146.

Two directors of a railway company (the plaintiffs) met two directors of another railway company (the defendants), and entered into an agreement in writing, signed by all four directors, on behalf of their respective companies, whereby it was mutually agreed that each of the companies should, interchangeably, use the railway of the other company, on certain specified terms. The agreement contained no words of succession or of restriction:

—Held, that these contracts were not mere licenses determinable at will, but conferred rights of a permanent nature on the companies. Id.

Held, also, that the terms of the contract were not too vague; but that the user conceded was one consistent with the proper enjoyment of the railway, the subject-matter of the contract, and with the rights of the granting party. Id.

1. The lessee of an inn covenanted to use and keep it open as an inn during the term, and not to do any act whereby the licenses might become forfeited. The lessee having threatened to do certain acts inconsistent with the first branch of the covenant, the lessor obtained an ex parte injunction restraining him from discontinuing to use and keep open the premises as an inn, and from doing any act whereby the licenses might become forfeited or be refused. But the injunction was afterwards dissolved; the Court having no jurisdiction to restrain a person from discontinuing to use premises as an inn, which was the same in effect as ordering him to keep an inn, and no intention having been shown on the part of the defendant to violate the negative part of the covenant. Hooper v. Brodrick, 11 Sim. 47; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 322.

2. When the terms of a contract are such that the Court cannot superintend so as to secure the performance by a plaintiff on his part, it will not decree specific performance. Peto v. Brighton, Uckfield, & Tonbridge Wells Railway Co., 11 W. R. 874; 9 L. T., N. S., 227; 1 Hem. & M. 468; 32 L. J., Ch., 677; 2 N. R. 145.

If, on non-performance by a plaintiff, both parties cannot have equal justice, it will not, in the absence of an express negative covenant, grant an injunction to restrain acts, the doing of which is inconsistent with the maintenance of the contract. Id.

B., an engineer, received a written authority from the directors of a railway company, on their behalf, to enter into a contract for the construction, by P. and B. (railway contractors), of their line of railway for 215,000*l.*, 63,000*l.* to be paid in debentures, and the balance in shares of the company. B. negotiated the contract with P. and B., and on behalf of the railway company signed an agreement. In the meantime the directors of the company, having arranged for the sale of their undertaking to the Brighton company, repudiated the authority given to B. On a bill, filed by the contractors, praying specific performance, and that, the company might be restrained by injunction from parting with their shares:—Held, that as the Court could not compel P. and B. to carry out their part of the agreement, it would not interfere to prevent the company from parting with their shares to the Brighton company. Id.

Where a contract contains an express negative covenant, and complete justice can be done between the parties, the Court will grant an injunction to restrain a breach of the negative covenant; but the Court rarely interferes where there is no distinct negative stipulation, but the negative obligation is inferred only from the positive contract. Id.

3. The proprietors of Covent Garden theatre agreed with an actor, that he should act for twenty-four nights, during a certain period of time, at their theatre, and that, in the meantime, he should not act at any other place in London:—Held, that the Court cannot enforce the positive part of the contract, and therefore it will not restrain by injunction a breach of the negative part. Kemble v. Kean, 6 Sim. 333.

4. A lady, not of age, and her father, by writing signed in a foreign country, agreed with a theatrical manager to sing at his theatre for a definite period. By a clause subsequently acceded to and signed by her agent, and to which she and her father afterwards assented, she engaged "not to use her talents at any other theatre, nor in any concert or reunion, public or private, without the written authorisation of" the manager. The lady engaged with the manager of a rival theatre to sing at his theatre within the defined period, and her début was announced in the usual public advertisements. Upon motion, in a suit by the manager against the lady, her father, and the manager of the rival theatre, it was objected that the positive and negative terms formed but one agreement, and that, as it had been settled that the Court could not by injunction enforce the positive term that the lady should sing, it could not enforce the negative stipulation:—Held, notwithstanding Kemble v. Kean (6 Sim. 333), that the Court would prevent the violation of the negative term, and restrain the lady from singing at the rival theatre, though the positive term of the agreement could not be enforced:—Held, also, that, although it was a foreign contract, the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction, without reference to where the contract was entered into, or what might be the remedies or forms of procedure in other countries on it. Lumley v. Wagner, 5 De G. & Sm. 485. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 604; 16 Jur. 871; 21 L. J., Ch., 898.

Kemble v. Kean (6 Sim. 333), and Kimberley v. Jennings (6 Sim. 340), overruled. Id.

5. An agreement between a railway company and railway contractors (who were also landowners) for the construction of a branch railway, provided that the company should find the land within a reasonable time, and build the stations; that the contractors should give a bond to the amount of 50,000*l.* to secure the performance of the contract, and undertake to execute the works for a double line of railway, and the ballasting and permanent way for a single line, according to the terms of a specification, to be prepared by the engineer for the time being of the company; and that the company should work the branch in a reasonable and proper manner, as compared to the remainder of the main railway; and that in case of difference as to working, the same should be settled by arbitration; and that any of the details of the arrangement, in case of difference, should be determined by a referee, to be appointed by the solicitor-general for the time being:—Held, on demurrer, that this agreement was too vague, obscure, and uncertain to be enforced in a specific performance suit, and that the stipulation as to the execution of a bond could not be enforced apart from the rest, being merely an incidental and a subsidiary part of the agreement, and not within the principle of Lumley v. Wagner (1 De G. M. & G. 604), where the negative stipulation was a distinct and substantive part of the contract. South Wales Railway Co. v. Wythes, 5 De G. M. & G. 880; 24 L. J., Ch., 87; 3 Eq. Rep. 153; 3 W. R. 133. And see S. C. 1 Kay & J. 186; 24 L. J., Ch., 1; 3 Eq. Rep. 70.

Though the Court may execute an agreement framed in general terms where the law will supply the details, yet if those details are to be supplied, in modes which cannot be adopted by the Court, there is no concluded agreement which can be enforced in equity. Ib.

1. When the principal portion of an agreement is incapable of specific enforcement by the Court, and it appears that the entire agreement has been broken, no relief will be granted in respect of a negative clause therein contained, which is merely incidental to the general relief sought, although such clause might have been enforced, had it stood alone, or had the agreement been in other respects still subsisting and undisputed. Brett v. East India & London Shipping Co., 2 Hem. & M. 404; 3 N. R. 688.

2. D., an actor, contracted with the manager of a theatre to play at his theatre for twelve consecutive nights, commencing on a certain day, stipulating that he should be at liberty during those nights to perform (among other characters) three which were named; but there was no express condition that he should not act elsewhere during the twelve nights. On the approach of the day appointed for commencing the engagement, D. declared that he would only act in a piece which could not be produced at the theatre; and when told that was impossible, declared that he would not act all, and advertised himself to act at another theatre on the night appointed for the commencement of his engagement:—Held, that an injunction might be granted to prevent D. acting during the twelve nights at any other theatre during the ordinary hours at which the theatre was open for public performance. Webster v. Dillon, 3 Jur., N. S., 432.

3. An opera singer, by an agreement dated only as to the year 1870, agreed to sing at a theatre for the whole London season, and nowhere else in the kingdom of Great Britain "pending l'année," 1871, without the written consent of the employer. The salary did not extend beyond the season, which ended on the 5th August. On motion for an injunction to restrain him singing elsewhere after the season was over, but during 1871:—Held, that the Court would not under the circumstances grant an injunction on an interlocutory application. Mapleson v. Brentham, 20 W. R. 176.

4. Any actor who enters into a contract to perform for a certain period at a particular theatre may be restrained by injunction from performing at any other theatre during the pendency of his engagement, notwithstanding that the contract contains no negative clause restricting the actor from performing elsewhere. Montague v. Flockton, 16 L. R., Eq., 189; 42 L. J., Ch., 677; 28 L. T., N. S., 580.

On the 16th August 1871 F. agreed with M. to act for him "for the season of not less than nine months; to commence on the 2nd October 1871." F. subsequently, on the 2nd March 1872, agreed to "a renewal of his engagement on the same terms for the next season:—Held, that such second season commenced on the 2nd October 1872, and terminated in July 1873. Ib.

5. A manager of a London theatre engaged a provincial actor, desirous of appearing on the London stage, for two years. Though there was nothing expressed on the subject, the Court inferred an engagement on the part of the manager to employ the actor for a reasonable time, and on his part not to perform elsewhere. The manager (under these circumstances) delayed the actor's appearance for five months; he broke his engagement and went to another theatre:—Held, that he had a right so to do, and that the manager was not entitled to an interlocutory injunction to prevent his performing there. Fechter v. Montgomery, 39 Beav. 22.

6. The ground upon which a court of equity goes in enforcing, by injunction, a negative term in an agreement, the positive terms in which cannot be enforced by decree for specific performance, is, that the injunction is dependent upon the plaintiff performing his part of the contract, and will be dissolved upon his failing to do so. Stooker v. Wedderburn, 3 Kay & J. 393; 26 L. J., Ch., 713.

The Court will not entertain a bill for specific performance of an agreement, which contains terms that cannot be enforced against the plaintiff, where the effect of a decree would be, that, on the plaintiff refusing to perform his part of the contract, the defendant could not be restored to his former position. Ib.

The plaintiff, being owner of certain patents, entered into a written agreement with other persons to form a company for working these patents, he agreeing on his part to sell the patents in foreign countries, and to give his whole services to the company for two years, and to do his best to improve the invention, and to impart such improvements to the company:—Held, that the plaintiff could not obtain specific performance of this agreement against his co-promoters, because from the nature of his own part of the agreement, the Court could not compel specific performance of it by him. Ib.

The difference in the cases where a negative term of an agreement has been enforced by injunction, although the rest of the agreement could not have been specifically performed in equity, is, that the Court could, at any time, upon a breach of any other term in the agreement, restore the parties to their former position, or nearly so, by dissolving the injunction; but if in such a case as the above the Court were to compel the defendants to become a registered company, that could not afterwards be undone, if the plaintiff were to fail in his part of the agreement. Ib.

7. Where property, either immovable or movable, is disposed of, with notice of a prior contract entered into by the person disposing of it for its use in a particular manner, the person taking it with such notice may be restrained from using it otherwise. De Mattos v. Gibson, 4 De G. & J. 276.

The Court will not affirmatively enforce a charterparty, but it is implied in such a contract, that if the charterer provides a cargo the ship shall not be employed for any other purpose, and a mortgagee with notice of a prior charterparty effected with the mortgagor will be in general restrained from doing anything to prevent its performance. Ib.

1. The Court of Chancery cannot decree the specific performance of a charterparty, but it can restrain the parties from employing the ship in a manner inconsistent with the rights under a charterparty. Le Blanch v. Granger, 35 Beav. 187.

2. Injunction granted to restrain an owner of a vessel from doing any act inconsistent with a charterparty into which he had entered. Servin v. Deslandes, 7 Jur., N. S., 837; 30 L. J., Ch., 457; 9 W. R. 218.

3. The Court will not interfere by injunction to restrain the breach of a contract for the sale and delivery of chattels which it could not specifically perform. Fothergill v. Rowland, 17 L. R., Eq., 132; 48 L. J., Ch., 252.

Therefore, when the lessee of a colliery contracted to raise and deliver to the plaintiff all the get of coals in the colliery at a fixed price for five years, and subsequently agreed for the sale of the colliery to other parties:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain the breach of contract. Ib.

4. In considering whether to grant or to refuse an injunction to restrain a breach of a particular clause of an agreement, the Court will look to the substance of the Act to be performed, and not merely to the presence or absence of negative words. Wolverhampton & Walsall Railway Co. v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 16 L. R., Eq., 433; 43 L. J., Ch., 131.

A lease of a line of railway contained an agreement by the lessee company to carry over it all traffic between certain places, and to pay the lessor company one-half the receipts in respect of such traffic. The lease contained provisions on which no relief could have been obtained in equity, and it contained no negative stipulation restricting the lessee company from carrying the traffic in question over other lines. On demurrer to a bill by the lessor company alleging that the lessee company was carrying the traffic mentioned in the agreement over other lines of its own, and praying for an injunction to restrain it:—Held, that relief could be granted in such a case, and the demurrer must be overruled. Ib.

5. A contract for the sale of chattels to the plaintiff contained an express negative stipulation not to sell to any other manufacturer. The Court granted an injunction to restrain the breach of the negative stipulation, although the contract was one of which specific performance would not have been granted. Wolverhampton & Walsall Railway Co. v. London & North-Western Railway Co. (16 L. R., Eq., 433) considered. Donnell v. Bennett, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 835; 52 L. J., Ch., 414; 48 L. T. 68; 31 W. R. 316.

6. When the owners of a public building have contracted with the plaintiff, that he, renting a stall from them, shall have the exclusive right to exhibit and sell certain specified classes of goods, an injunction will lie against them for permitting the exhibition and sale by other renters of stalls within the building of goods so specified. Altman v. Royal Aquarium Society, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 228.

7. The plaintiff, a brewer, sold a piece of land to the trustees of a freehold land society, who covenanted with him that he, his heirs and assigns, should have the exclusive right of supplying beer to any public-house erected on the land, but the plaintiff did not enter into any covenant to supply it. The defendant, a member of the society, who was also a brewer, acquired a portion of the land with notice of the covenant, and erected on it a public-house, which he supplied with his own beer. The plaintiff filed a bill in equity to restrain the defendant from supplying beer, alleging that the plaintiff had always been ready to furnish a sufficient supply of good beer at a fair price:—Held, that the covenant was not void either for uncertainty or want of mutuality, or as being an unreasonable restraint of trade, or because it purported to be perpetual, and that, though it was in terms positive, it was in substance negative, and that the Court could interfere by injunction to restrain the defendant from acting in contravention of it. Catt v. Tourle, 4 L. R., Ch., 654; 21 L. T., N. S., 188; 38 L. J., Ch., 665; 17 W. R. 939. Affirming 38 L. J., Ch., 401; 20 L. T., N. S., 551; 17 W. R. 662.

8. The defendant agreed to sell his business premises and good will to the plaintiff, and not to set up in the same business in the neighbourhood, the plaintiff agreeing to employ the former. The sale was carried out, the defendant employed for a short time, and then dismissed for alleged neglect of his work. Some months afterwards the defendant committed a breach of the negative covenant. A bill having been filed for specific performance of such covenant, the Court, at the hearing, granted an injunction to restrain the breach, but, not being satisfied as to the bona fides of the dismissal and the evidence of neglect, without costs. Daggett v. Ryman, 16 W. R. 302; 17 L. T., N. S., 486.

9. A corporation advertised for tenders for the supply of stone to the borough during 1875. A., C., D., and E., quarry owners, entered into an arrangement by which it was agreed that A. should send in the lowest tender, so that, if possible, it should be accepted, that C. should not send in any tender at all, and that D. and E. should send in tenders higher than A.'s; it was also arranged that A. should purchase from C., D., and E. certain quantities of stone to be supplied by him under his anticipated contract to the corporation, so that, by this means, A., C., D., and E. would each have some share in the profits to arise from A.'s contract with the corporation. Notwithstanding this arrangement C. sent in a tender which was accepted:—Held, that a bill for an injunction would lie against C. to restrain him from supplying any stone to the corporation under his contract with them during 1875. Jones v. North, 32 L. T., N. S., 149; 19 L. R., Eq., 426; 44 L. J., Ch., 388.

Held, also, that the corporation was not a necessary party to the suit. Ib.

III. IN AID OF DECREE FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. Upon a contract for a lease, the solvency or insolvency of the tenant is an objection of weight, depending upon the circumstances: upon that and other circumstances, an injunction against an ejectment by the landlord was dissolved. Buckland v. Hall, 8 Ves. 92.

2. Bill for specific performance of parol agreement to grant farm lease, with usual covenants for neighbourhood, and injunction to prevent ejectment, plaintiff having taken possession. Upon answer, stating insolvency of plaintiff, and various breaches of agreement, during five years' possession, the injunction was continued, on undertaking to give judgment in ejectment, go to commission, and set down cause for next term, paying rent into court. Boardman v. Mostyn, 6 Ves. 467.

3. In a correspondence between lessor and lessee respecting the granting of a new lease to the lessee; the latter having spoken of the renewal of the old lease, the lessor did not object to this expression, but adverted to other topics connected with the subject. On a bill filed for the specific performance of the agreement for renewal alleged to be contained in these letters:—Held, that they were so far evidence of such agreement, as to warrant the continuance of an injunction against an action of ejectment brought by the lessor against the lessee. Price v. Asheton, 1 Y. & Coll. 82; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 3.

4. It is not necessary for a party who seeks to continue an injunction to the hearing, to show an indefeasible right to the decree prayed by bill; where, therefore, assignees of a bankrupt sought a specific performance of an agreement for a lease against a party who was herself a lessee, and restrained from assigning without the consent of the lessor in writing thereto obtained, the Court continued the injunction to restrain proceedings at law, there being a probability of obtaining the consent of the lessor to the assignment. Powell v. Lloyd, 2 Y. & J. 427.

5. A bill was filed by a person in possession of certain lands, for the specific performance of an illegal parol agreement to grant him a lease for seven years, and for an injunction to restrain an ejectment; the defendant, by his answer, admitted that he had been disposed to permit, and would have permitted the plaintiff, if he had been satisfied with his conduct, to remain in possession for the time, and on the terms alleged to have been specified in the supposed agreement; and that the plaintiff probably expected to remain in possession for that time, and on those terms; but he expressly denied that any such agreement had been made; and he insisted that the plaintiff was only tenant from year to year, and had done many acts which would have been breaches of the covenants of the lease supposed to have been contracted. The Court, upon this answer, refused to make the order nisi absolute, and continued the injunction upon terms. Attwood v. Barham, 2 Russ. 186.

6. Injunction granted, restraining sale of estate, till answer to a bill, alleging parol agreement to exchange, partly performed by plaintiff having purchased estate for that purpose. Curtis v. Buckingham (Marquis), 3 Ves. & B. 168.

7. Injunction to restrain the vendor of copyhold premises after delivery of possession, and receipt of part of the purchase money, from surrendering them to persons other than the purchasers. Spiller v. Spiller, 3 Swan. 556.

In general, during a suit for specific performance, the Court will not restrain the owner from dealing with his property. Id. 557.

8. Injunction restraining vendor defendant to a bill for specific performance, from conveying the legal estate. Echlin v. Baldwin, 16 Ves. 267.

9. Injunction in a suit for specific performance to restrain a vendor from letting or selling the estate, refused. Turner v. Wight, 4 Beav. 40.

10. Injunction against cutting timber in the case of trespass, viz., by a person having got possession under articles to purchase. Crookford v. Alexander, 15 Ves. 138.

11. Purchaser before conveyance is the owner in equity for almost every purpose as to profit and loss, but, before payment, may be restrained from cutting timber: as between his representatives, it is real estate. Ravlin v. Burgis, 2 Ves. & B. 287.

12. In a suit for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of the next presentation to a living, the Court will restrain the bishop of the diocese from taking advantage of a lapse pending the suit. Nicholson v. Knapp, 9 Sim. 326; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 219.

13. A vendor is not entitled to an injunction to restrain a purchaser from buying another estate, on the ground that it will incapacitate him from completing his first purchase. Wright v. Brighton Brewery Co., 13 W. R. 220.

14. Where there is a contract for the sale of land, the Court will restrain the owner of the land from dealing with it until a suit for the specific performance of the contract has been disposed of; but when a plaintiff sues for specific performance, and there is a serious question whether any contract exists, the Court will not interpose. Hadley v. London Bank of Scotland, 11 Jur., N. S., 554; 13 W. R. 978; 12 L. T., N. S., 747.

On motion for interlocutory injunction, the claim of the plaintiff being doubtful on the evidence, the court will act upon the consideration of the comparative inconvenience which may arise from granting or withholding the injunction. Id.

In a suit by a purchaser for specific performance, an injunction to restrain the vendor from selling the property was dissolved, it not being clear that he would be able to establish his right to specific performance, and it appearing that the granting the injunction would, in case of his ultimately failing, be more injurious to the vendor than the refusal of it would be to the purchaser, in the event of his ultimately succeeding. S. C. 3 De G. J. & S. 63.

15. A contract having been entered into for a purchase of land, it is not competent to the purchaser, before the title has been accepted, to obtain an injunction restraining the vendor from using or continuing to use the external wall of the building, the subject of the contract, as a party wall, or from encroaching on the land, or from building so as to obstruct the light or air coming to the premises contracted to be purchased. Heath v. Mayden, 11 L. T., N. S., 473.

1. Where a vendor has executed a legal assignment of property to a purchaser, the Court of Chancery will not, on the application of the latter, interfere by injunction to restrain the former from illegally distraining upon the tenants of the property assigned, for alleged arrears of rent accrued since the assignment. Drake v. West, 22 L. J., Ch., 375.

2. When a contract is complete, the money paid, and possession given, the Court will prevent the possession being interfered with by the vendor, although the purchaser does not ask for the specific performance of the contract. Hervey v. Smith, 22 Beav. 299.

3. W., in 1816, agreed to sell his term and interest in a certain opera house to C., reserving to himself, W., his executors, administrators, and assigns, the right to a certain box therein, during the continuance of the said term. In 1823, all W.'s interest in the said opera house was assigned to a trustee for sale, in whose place the present plaintiff was afterwards appointed. C. subsequently filed his bill, and obtained a decree for specific performance of the agreement above mentioned, and having become bankrupt, his assignees sold his interest in the premises to defendant L., subject to certain covenants, which, as L. alleged, had, in the event, rendered it impossible for him to continue to W. or his representatives the enjoyment of the aforesaid box. The plaintiff, as such trustee as aforesaid, claimed to be entitled to the said box, or to an equivalent in money for its loss:—Held, that the said defendant, and all persons claiming under him, were bound by the reservation above mentioned. An injunction was granted to restrain the defendant, etc., from preventing the plaintiff from enjoying the said box, without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff to compensation, in case it should appear that his right to enjoyment of the box had been actually lost through the act of the defendant. Helling v. Lumley, 6 W. R. 758; 5 Jur., N. S., 301; 28 L. J., Ch., 249.

4. A tenant under an agreement for a lease having filed a bill to restrain his lessor from obstructing the ancient lights in the premises comprised in the agreement, but not asking to have the agreement specifically performed, a motion for injunction was refused. Poa v. Pursell, 3 Sm. & G. 242.

5. Proprietors of a newspaper dissolved partnership, and one of them agreed to purchase the whole. Before the completion, and pending a suit for specific performance, the purchaser published statements as to the profits and loss of the paper, in order to establish a company to carry it on. A motion for an injunction to restrain him was refused. Marshall v. Watson, 25 Beav. 501.

6. The Court will not restrain a company from doing an act within the scope of its objects, on the ground that, if the company does that act, the doing of it may incapacitate the company from performing something else which is also within the scope of its objects.

Syers v. Brighton Brewery Co., 13 W. R. 220; 11 L. T., N. S., 560.

A vendor cannot prevent his purchaser from buying a second estate from some one else, pending the first transaction, on the ground that, by making such second purchase, he may be rendered unable to complete his first. Ib.

7. The Court will not, by interlocutory injunction, restrain one of the parties to a contract from an act for which, if wrongful, the plaintiff can obtain compensation in damages at the hearing of the cause, and where the contract is one of which specific performance cannot be decreed as against the plaintiff. Garrett v. Banstead and Epsom Downs Railway Co., 13 W. R. 878; 12 L. T., N. S., 654; 11 Jur., N. S., 654; 4 De G. J. & S., 462.

Where on motion for an interlocutory injunction the rights of the parties are doubtful on the evidence, the Court will act on the consideration of the comparative injury which may arise from granting or withholding the injunction. Ib.

8. A contractor agreed to execute the works of a railway within a certain time, and on being paid in a certain manner, and under a condition that if he failed to proceed with the works as required by the engineer of the company, the contract should be void, and the implements and materials belonging to the contractor should be forfeited. The contractor did not satisfy the engineer of the company, and the company proceeded to take possession of the works. The contractor alleged that the proper payments had not been made to him:—Held, that the Court would not restrain the company by interlocutory injunction until the questions between the company and the contractor were decided. Munro v. Wivenhoe & Brightlingsea Railway Co., 11 Jur., N. S., 612; 13 W. R. 880; 12 L. T., N. S., 655; 4 De G. J. & S. 723.

9. If a defendant in an action pleads an equitable plea, he cannot come for an injunction to restrain the action upon the same ground which is the subject of the plea, provided the Court of law can give such relief as a court of equity will give. Waterlow v. Bacon, 2 L. R., Eq., 514; 12 Jur., N. S., 614; 14 W. R. 855; 14 L. T., N. S., 724; 35 L. J., Ch., 643.

But if it cannot, then the equitable plea is no bar to the defendant coming to a court of equity, subject, however, to the costs of the plea being controlled by the court of equity. Ib.

A court of equity will restrain an action for damages where the defence relied upon is an alleged agreement between the parties for the performance of certain acts, which a court of law cannot give effect to. Ib.

Prima facie, a defendant, by pleading an equitable plea, thereby makes his election of the tribunal in which his case is to be tried; but if the case is such that the Court of law cannot give full relief, then his having pleaded an equitable plea is no bar to his coming into equity. Ib.

To an action by B. against W. for damages for the obstruction of his light and air by the heightening of a party wall between his premises and those of W., W. pleaded, by way of equitable plea, an alleged agreement on the part of B. to allow the wall to be raised on the terms of his not being called upon by W. to contribute to the expense, according to the Metropolitan Building Act, under which notice of the contemplated alteration had been given, and on his having a better skylight put up for him by W. On a bill filed by W. for specific performance of the agreement, and motion made to restrain the action:—Held, that inasmuch as this was a case in which a court of law could not give relief in respect of the agreement, the equitable plea did not preclude W. from coming into equity, and that W. was entitled to the injunction upon certain terms. Ib.

1. It is not the course of the Court, when it entertains jurisdiction in specific performance, to permit an action at law to proceed for the same subject matter. Beaufort (Duke) v. Glynn, 3 Sm. & G. 213.

2. In a suit to carry into effect an agreement, by giving the plaintiffs relief in respect of a breach of the agreement by the defendants, and at the same time, on the ground of such breach, to remove them from an office of trust and confidence which they held by virtue of the agreement, and to appoint other persons to such office; the Court, considering the plaintiffs entitled on an interlocutory application to the relief sought, restrained the defendants, by interlocutory order in a supplemental suit, from prosecuting actions at law against the plaintiffs under the agreement to recover damages for removing the defendants from such office. Breman v. Preston, 10 Hare 331.

In a question on the effect of a contract in the circumstances of the case, where the Court had concurrent jurisdiction with a court of law, and had assumed such jurisdiction by interfering to protect the rights of the parties, the Court restrained the parties to the contract from bringing actions at law founded on the facts with regard to which the Court had interfered, and in which actions the same question, of the legal effect of the agreement, and in the circumstances, would necessarily arise. Ib.

A case in which the Court, on an interlocutory application, appointed a ship's husband at the suit of some of the part owners of a ship as against the others, who were, under a contract, ship's husbands as well as part owners. Ib.

3. A plaintiff who comes to a court of equity for its aid is bound to put under the control of the Court his legal rights relating to the subject matter of litigation. Prothero v. Phelps, 2 Jur., N. S. 173; 25 L. J., Ch., 105.

Therefore where a party brought a suit for specific performance of an agreement, and after obtaining a decree brought an action to recover damages for injury sustained in consequence of breaches of the agreement, an injunction was granted. Ib.

Where the Court grants relief in a suit for specific performance, it has jurisdiction over the whole matter, and can therefore deal with any question of damages arising from a breach of the agreement. Ib.

- IV. By Preparation of Conveyance, 6538.

- VII. In Case of Promises and Representations as to Settlements on Marriage. See SETTLEMENT, II.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

4. A performance only on one side is not a dispensation of the Statute of Frauds, but casus omissus against which there is no provision. Charlewood v. Bedford (Duke), 1 Atk. 497.

5. Part performance takes a case out of Statute of Frauds. Aylesford's (Earl) case, 2 Stra. 763.

6. Equity will not decree upon a bare agreement by parol, without part performance. Popham v. Eyre, Lofft. 801.

Part performance of contract is not the mere tendering of conveyances, but it must be some act done, as in actual execution of contract, not towards the execution. Payment of earnest or delivery of possession of part are acts of part performance. Ib.

7. It is now established that if defendant has concurred in a material unequivocal act, by which he has obtained a substantial part of his object, as taking possession or accepting a considerable part of the purchase money, he shall not be allowed to retract, and plaintiff's right to a full execution of the contract has attached; but acts merely ancillary and introductory, as preparing conveyances, making surveys, valuations, etc., though attended with some expense to plaintiff, will not sustain an agreement on the ground of part performance. Acceptance of a trifling earnest would probably not be deemed sufficient. As binding the parties, it is not the mode prescribed by the statute; and as a part performance it is too inconsiderable in value. This, however, appears doubtful. See Simmons v. Cornelius, 1 Ch. Rep. 128; Voll v. Smith, 3 Ch. Rep. 16; Anon., 2 Freem. 128; Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 560.

8. Acts of part performance avoiding the Statute of Frauds, as repairs, etc., must be in their nature almost necessarily done in pursuance of the contract alleged. Exp. Hooper, 19 Ves. 479; 2 Rose 328; 1 Meriv. 7.

9. Specific performance of a parol agreement for the sale of an estate, proved by one witness, confirmed by part performance, by taking possession, and acts of ownership, refused, there being some inconsistencies in the testimony of the witness, which, with other circumstances, placed the terms of the contract in doubt. Reynolds v. Waring, Younge 346.

1. Parol agreements in part performed, not resting on the agreement only, are in equity excepted out of the statute. Kine v. Balfe, 2 Ball & B. 343.

2. On a bill for specific execution relying on part performance, the agreement must be proved as stated. Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 551.

3. Parol agreement proved by one witness, corroborated by others, and not denied by answer, enforced upon the ground of part performance. Toole v. Medlicott, 1 Ball & B. 393.

4. When a part of the agreement is performed on one side, it is just it should be carried into execution on the other. Walker v. Walker, 2 Atk. 100.

5. Plea of Statute of Frauds to discovery of a parol agreement not allowed where part performance. Taylor v. Beech, 1 Ves. 297.

6. Where nothing has been done under an agreement, the Court ought not to decree a specific performance, except when the right to compel it exists both in plaintiff and defendant. Lawrenson v. Butler, 1 Sch. & Lef. 13.

7. Parol evidence is not to be admitted on the ground of part performance, unless the agreement stated appears clearly to be the very same with that which was partly performed. Lindsay v. Lynch, 2 Sch. & Lef. 8.

8. If an agreement is in part performed by one of the parties, it is too late for the other to complain of fraud, surprise, etc., or attempt to set the agreement aside on that account; for a court of equity will decree a specific performance of the remaining part of it. Anglesea (Earl) v. Annesley, 1 Bro. P. C. 289.

9. Where a parol agreement is begun to be put in execution, and intended to be continued, equity will enforce the execution of it, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. Guessey (Lord) v. Rodbridges, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 4.

10. To maintain a contract on the ground that it is taken out of the Statute of Frauds by part performance, the Court will require it to be shown that the party seeking relief has expended money or otherwise acted in reliance on and in the execution of the agreement, and that non-performance would amount to a fraud upon him. Specific performance of a contract to purchase will not be enforced merely because the defendant has done acts on the property which, unless construed as acts of ownership, would, in the absence of licence, amount to a trespass. Phillips v. Alderton, 24 W. R. 8.

11. When a person has contracted for the purchase of land by an agreement, the terms of which are partly written and partly verbal, and has obtained possession upon performance of the written terms, to attempt to retain possession and refuse to perform the verbal terms amounts to a fraud. Jervis v. Borridge, 27 L. T. 436; 21 W. R. 96. Affirmed 8 L. R., Ch., 351; 42 L. J., Ch., 518; 28 L. T. 481; 21 W. R. 244.

A. signed a contract for the purchase of land from B., and on the same day transferred the benefit of the contract to C. by a memorandum in which some of the terms of the transfer were not expressed. C. entered into possession under the memorandum, but refused to perform the terms which were not expressed therein. A. filed a bill for cancellation of the memorandum, alleging that C.'s conduct amounted to fraud; and C. on demurrer contended that he was not guilty of fraud, inasmuch as under the Statute of Frauds the unwritten terms of the transfer were not binding upon him:—Held, that C.'s contention could not be sustained. Id.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, I. v. 1.

II. BY PAYMENT.

12. Payment of money by way of earnest merely, is not a part performance of agreement. Pengall v. Ross, 2 Eq. Abr. 46.

13. A. and B. agreed that B. should assign a term for years in his house, and certain vessels of beer for 200 guineas, whereof one guinea was paid down, and nineteen more next day. Part of the agreement was, that it should be reduced into writing. On a bill for performance, B. pleaded the statute, and insisted that the twenty guineas were paid for the lease. Plea overruled. Leak v. Morris, 2 Ch. Ca. 135.

14. Though a payment of a substantial part of the purchase money will take an agreement as to land out of the Statute of Frauds, on the ground of part performance, a small part, as five guineas, the purchase money being one hundred, will not do. The plea of the statute was allowed, with an intimation from the Court, that, under the circumstances of the case, the bill would be dismissed with costs. Main v. Melbourne, 4 Ves. 720.

15. Payment of the auction duty does not satisfy the Statute of Frauds, upon the general ground of part performance. Buckmaster v. Harrop, 13 Ves. 456; 7 Ves. 741.

16. An act of bankruptcy, and a docket struck, though no commission issued, a sufficient objection to a bill for specific performance of a previous contract for the sale of an estate to the plaintiff, in a case even where part of the money had been paid, and sub-contract for sale of part entered into by the plaintiff, and the defendants had agreed to convey accordingly. Franklin v. Brownlow (Lord), 14 Ves. 550.

17. A parol agreement, and 20*l.* paid for the sale of a house, was decreed, without further execution proved. His Honour said he should have demurred to the bill, but now having proceeded to proof, he would decree it. Anon., 2 Freem. 128.

18. Payment of money is not part performance to take an agreement, touching lands, out of the statute. Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & Lef. 40.

19. H. agreed with M. to convey her interest in a life estate for 300*l.* M. paid two-thirds, and then by accident the estate became more valuable, and M. agreed to give 140*l.* more; H. died, and nothing further was done. The latter agreement, though not in writing, decreed to be executed in favour of M.'s administrator against his heirs. Lacon v. Mortins, 3 Atk. 1; 1 Ves. 312; Dick. 664.

Delivery of possession or payment of money is part performance of an agreement not reduced into writing. Id. 4.

1. Promise to renew a lease in consequence of money already laid out is nudum pactum, and will not be specifically performed, and money laid out afterwards will not vary it; on this ground a demurrer allowed. Robertson v. St. John, 2 Bro. C. C. 140.

2. H. contracted for the purchase of shares in a vessel, and paid part of the purchase money to P. and obtained possession of the vessel, but no bill of sale was executed. The registered owners alleged that P. was not their agent to receive the money, and arrested the vessel in the Admiralty Court, and threatened to sell the shares. They were restrained from selling or proceeding in the Admiralty Court. Hughes v. Morris, 13 Jur. 1065.

3. A agrees with B. for the purchase of nine houses which were in mortgage to J. S., and pays him a guinea in earnest; B. writes a note to J. S., and desires him to deliver up the writings, he having disposed of them, which J. S. refused, unless all the mortgage money was paid him down, and afterwards purchases them himself. On a bill brought by A. for a specific execution of the agreement, it was held that neither the guinea paid down, nor the note which was the only evidence of assent, but did not ascertain the terms of the agreement, was sufficient to take it out of the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries. Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 560.

4. Agreement by parol, that upon plaintiff's procuring a release of right from a stranger, defendant would convey. Plaintiff procures the release by paying a valuable consideration; that is not a part performance, and the Statute of Frauds may be pleaded to a bill for specific performance of such an agreement. O'Reilly v. Thompson, 2 Cox 271.

5. W. lets premises to V. upon a contract written in pencil by V., and signed by him in a note-book belonging to W.; both act under the contract, but V. ultimately alleges non-performance by W. of certain things not contained in it, and W. makes like charges. The defendant had inter alia paid 25*l.* towards certain alterations and additions made by the plaintiff W., in accordance with the terms of the contract. On a claim for specific performance, decree for specific performance made without costs. Waller v. Vigurs, 2 W. R. 51.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, I. v. 2 & 3.

III. BY TAKING POSSESSION.

6. Delivery of possession is part performance of an agreement not reduced into writing. Lacon v. Mortins, 3 Atk. 4; 1 Ves. 312; Dick. 664.

7. Where possession delivered under an agreement, and money expended in permanent improvements, parol evidence admitted to prove the agreement. Toole v. Medlicott, 1 Ball. & B. 401.

8. On a bill for a specific execution, relying on part performance, the agreement must be proved as stated. Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball. & B. 551.

Possession taken, referable only to a contract of sale, is part performance, and parol evidence may be given of the terms of such contract. Id. 262.

9. There being a parol agreement for the purchase of a farm and farmhouse, the possession of the farm by the purchaser will be held an act of part performance, sufficient to authorise the Court to execute the contract, even though the house should have been occupied adversely to him. Gunter v. Halsey, Ambl. 586.

10. The vendor of a share in a co-partnership business filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the property and destroyed its value, and praying that he might be declared to have accepted the title, and might be decreed to perform the contract specifically. The Court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted, and as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that upon a record so framed, no accounts or inquiries could be directed as to the defendant's possession and management of the property, with a view to ascertain whether any and what sum ought to be paid, or compensation made by him to the plaintiff. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171; 6 L. J., Ch., 164.

11. Part performance by taking possession, cutting the crops, etc. Buckmaster v. Harrop, 13 Ves. 456; 7 Ves. 341.

12. Where the plaintiff alleged a parol contract for a lease of a house of which he was in possession, but the defendant denied the contract and alleged that the plaintiff was in possession in accordance with a written memorandum, whereby the plaintiff agreed to take the house from the defendant as a weekly tenant:—Held, that the possession was not of such a nature as to constitute an act of part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds; though the plaintiff had been let into possession some days previously to the date of the memorandum. Canning v. Catling, 4 N. R. 259.

13. In a suit for specific performance, where possession and expenditure are fairly referable to an express agreement with the landowner, to give an adequate consideration, to be calculated on a principle sufficiently defined in the agreement, the Court will, in favour of the possession and expenditure, endeavour to decree a specific performance; but not where the plaintiff after filing his bill, but before the hearing, has obtained by an Act of Parliament the means of securing and keeping his possession without the aid of the Court. Meynell v. Surtees, 3 Sm. & G. 101; 3 W. R. 36; 1 Jur. N. S., 80. Affirmed 2 Jur., N. S., 737; 25 L. J., Ch., 257; 3 W. R. 535.

A landowner offered a way-leave for a railway over his land to an iron mining company, for sixty years, upon the payment of triple damages only. The company, pending a suit by them for specific performance, sold its line to a railway company for public traffic, who procured an Act authorising them compulsorily to purchase the land in fee over which the way-leave had been granted:—Held, at the hearing, that there had been a variation as to the parties and the subject matter of the contract, and that there was no right to specific performance. Ib.

1. A purchaser being let into possession is enough to take a contract out of the Statute of Frauds, whether the vendor or the purchaser is seeking specific performance. Wilson v. West Hartlepool Railway Co., 2 De G. J. & S. 475; 11 Jur., N. S., 124; 34 L. J., Ch., 241; 13 W. R. 361; 11 L. T., N. S., 692.

In cases of part performance of contracts not formerly binding in themselves, the Court gives relief by decreeing specific performance, on the ground of protecting against fraud, and this principle applies as much to companies as to individuals. Ib.

A. having by letters entered into a contract with the manager of a company for the purchase of lands, a branch line of railway was in accordance with the terms laid down by the company's servants, plant and machinery were removed to the purchased lands by the company, and A. was let into possession:—Held, that although the manager had at the outset no authority to make the contract at all, these subsequent acts of the directors had made it binding upon them. Ib.

2. To maintain a contract on the ground that it is taken out of the Statute of Frauds by part performance, the Court will require it to be shown that the party seeking relief has expended money or otherwise acted in reliance on and in the execution of the agreement, and that non-performance would amount to a fraud upon him. Specific performance of a contract to purchase will not be enforced merely because the defendant has done acts on the property which, unless construed as acts of ownership, would, in the absence of licence, amount to a trespass. Phillips v. Alderton, 24 W. R. 8.

3. The plaintiff, who was proposing to enter into business as a milliner, was induced by C. to abandon the project, C. promising her verbally that she should occupy a leasehold house of C.'s during her (the plaintiff's) life, the plaintiff to pay the ground rent, rates, and taxes, and maintain herself by letting lodgings. The plaintiff thereupon abandoned the idea of the millinery business, and entered into possession of C.'s house, and continued there for several years until C.'s death, paying the ground rent, rates, and taxes. C. bequeathed the house to P., who brought an action of ejectment against the plaintiff, who thereupon filed a bill to restrain the action:—Held, that there had been a part performance of the verbal contract between the plaintiff and C. sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, Coles v. Pilkington, 19 L. R., Eq., 174; 44 L. J., Ch., 381; 31 L. T. 423; 23 W. R. 41.

4. A father verbally promised, in consideration of his daughter's marriage, to give her a house as a wedding present, and immediately after the marriage he put the daughter and her husband into possession. The father was then the owner of the house, which was leasehold, and was subject to a charge in favour of a building society, payable by instalments. The father paid the instalments which fell due during his lifetime, and at his death there remained a balance of 110*l.*, which fell due shortly afterwards:—Held, that the verbal promise to give the house having been established, the possession took the case out of the Statute of Frauds; that the contract was to give the house free from incumbrances; and that the 110*l.* was payable out of the father's estate. Ungley v. Ungley, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 887; 46 L. J., Ch., 854; 37 L. T. 52; 25 W. R. 733. Affirming 4 L. R., Ch. D., 73; 46 L. J., Ch., 189; 35 L. T. 619; 25 W. R. 39.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, I. v. 2.

IV. BY PREPARATION OF CONVEYANCE.

5. A public survey is held for sale of an estate, and A. offering 1,250*l.* for it, it is accepted and agreed to, and conveyances are ordered to be got ready, and A. is put into possession, but disputes arise relative to the settling the conveyance. A. gets an assignment of the mortgage to which the estate is subject, and antedates it, and refuses to go on with the purchase. Though the agreement was only by parol, yet, on the circumstances of the case, A. is decreed to proceed in the purchase. Pyke v. Williams, 2 Vern. 455.

6. Putting a deed into the hands of a solicitor to prepare a conveyance of the estate to a son-in-law (after marriage) not a part performance of a parol agreement, so as to take it out of the Statute of Frauds; a demurrer allowed on that ground to a bill for specific performance. Redding v. Wilkes, 3 Bro. C. C. 400.

7. Admeasurement not a part performance of an agreement to exchange lands. Pembroke v. Thorpe, 3 Swan. 442.

8. A. alters the draft with his own hand this is not a signing to take it out of the Statute of Frauds, though the seller afterwards executes a conveyance, and being in Middlesex it is caused to be registered. Hankins v. Holmes, 1 P. W. 770.

9. Payment of fees to counsel, drawing drafts and engrossing them, and providing purchase money, under circumstances, held a part performance. Child v. Comber, 3 Swan. 427.

10. Bill for a specific performance of an agreement for the sale of lands and chattels. Plea, the Statute of Frauds. The defendant, during the negotiation, delivered a particular of the whole signed by him. The agreement was afterwards made at a less price. Both parties gave instructions to an attorney to prepare the conveyance; and the defendant delivered to him the particular, as instructions for the deed which was prepared. This is not sufficient to take it out of the statute, and being void as to the lands, is void in toto. Cooke v. Tombs, 2 Anst. 420.

11. Agreement by parol, that upon plaintiff's procuring a release of right from a stranger, defendant would convey, plaintiff procures the release, by paying a valuable consideration; that is not a part performance, and the Statute of Frauds may be pleaded to a bill for specific performance of such an agreement. O'Reilly v. Thompson, 2 Cox 271.

12. Specific performance decreed of a parol agreement in part performed for surrendering a lease and granting a new lease at a reduced rent. Parker v. Smith, 1 Colly. 608.

13. A. agrees by parol with B. for the purchase of lands; B. delivers a rent-roll, which was dated and altered in his own handwriting, and showed by the title of it, that an agreement had been made between them for the sale of the estate, at twenty-one years' purchase. An abstract of the title was also delivered to A., together with the deeds, in order to be compared with the rent-roll. B. likewise wrote letters to several of his creditors, informing them that he had contracted with A. for the sale of his estate, at twenty-one years' purchase, and sent the tenants to treat with A. for a renewal of their leases. Notwithstanding all these circumstances, upon A.'s filing a bill for specific execution of this agreement, B. pleaded the Statute of Frauds in bar to both the discovery and relief; and the plea was allowed. Whaley v. Baguel, 1 Bro. P. C. 345; Wall. Lyn. 12. n.

1. A settlement contained a power for the trustee to lease at the request in writing of a married woman. She and the trustee, in pursuance of a parol agreement, executed a lease, and delivered it to their solicitor to exchange for the counterpart, but before the exchange was made or the counterpart executed, she directed the solicitor not to part with the deed:—Held, that the execution of the deed was not a part performance of the parol agreement, and that the deed was executed as an escrow, and that the Court would not compel the lessors to deliver it to the lessee. Phillips v. Edwards, 3 N. R. 658; 33 Beav. 440.

2. A. agrees for the purchase of an estate, but the agreement not reduced into writing: though A. in confidence thereof gave orders for conveyances to be drawn up, and went several times to view the estate, this Court will not carry such agreement into execution, and the Statute of Frauds may be pleaded to a bill brought for that purpose. Clerk v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12.

V. OTHER ACTS.

3. A. and B. being joint lessees of a building lease, A., by parol, agrees to sell his interest to B., and accepts a pair of compasses in hand to bind the bargain. Quere, if within the statute of Frauds. Alopp v. Patten, 1 Vern. 472.

4. Specific performance decreed of parol agreement as to land, made as a family compromise of doubtful rights, where there had been part performance by possession, and improvements, and acquiescence near nineteen years, a third person being permitted to act on his conception of the rights, not questioned at the time by the defendant, who had acquiesced under expectations from that third person, which were in part disappointed. Stockley v. Stockley, 1 Ves. & B. 23. S. P. Stapleton v. Stapleton, 1 Atk. 2.

Where a person contracts to grant a certain interest, which it afterwards appears he cannot carry into execution to the extent agreed on, yet the grant shall be available as far as his interest will permit. Id. 64.

5. Specific performance of a parol agreement to sell land, refused, notwithstanding many acts by which the defendant had treated the plaintiff as a purchaser. Whaley v. Baguel, Wall. Lyn. 12. n. 1 Bro. P. C. 345.

6. Act of part performance, avoiding the Statute of Frauds, as repairs, etc., must be in its nature almost necessarily done in pursuance of the contract alleged. Exp. Hooper, 19 Ves. 479; 2 Rose 328; 1 Meriv. 7.

7. F., a mortgagee with a power of sale, agreed with K., who was entitled to a reversionary interest in the lands comprised in the mortgage, not to sell without his consent; and afterwards proposed to make a lease for a term to W. at a fine; K. refused to consent, unless the lands were settled on his wife (who was the daughter of W.) and her children after the death of W.; and this being acceded to K. gave his written consent, and thereupon the lease was executed by W., and, upon the occasion of its execution, the following document was signed by W. and K.:—"It is agreed between W. and K. that the lease and lands of Largan, after death of W., shall be and become, through his love for her, the property of Mrs. K. in trust for her child or children by K. (if blessed with such), if not, to be for her sole use or benefit":—Held, first, that this was a declaration of trust by W. in favour of Mrs. K. and her children, and that, after W.'s death his personal representative became a trustee for them. Kelly v. Walsh, 1 L. R., Ir., 275.

Held, secondly, that if it was not a valid declaration of trust, it was an agreement which should be specifically performed, upon the ground that, although the consideration expressed was not valuable, yet the consent by K. was a part performance which took the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and that evidence of the real consideration was admissible. Id.

8. In 1825 C. died at Arequipa, intestate, leaving real and personal estate at Valparaiso, in Chili. His mother and his three brothers, B., T., and H., survived him. They all resided in England, except H., who at the time of the death of C. was in Peru, and who for many years subsequently resided either in Peru or in Chili, but without acquiring a foreign domicile. In 1831 their mother died, having bequeathed all her property to her sons B., T., and H., equally. In 1832 T. offered his share of C.'s estate to H. for 1,000*l.*; H., in reply, intimated, that with a view to save the expense of rendering formal accounts of C.'s estate, he was willing to buy the shares of both B. and T., which led to a long correspondence. In 1833 B. wrote to H. offering his share for 1,100*l.*, to be paid in part out of the mother's estate, but by a given date, and T. wrote to H. at the same time, saying whatever B. determined would meet with his approval. The condition as to payment by the given time was not fulfilled; but in the subsequent correspondence between B. and H., the arrangement was treated as binding between them, and was never repudiated by T., nor were any accounts of C.'s estate applied for until after B.'s death, which occurred in 1849. In 1850 T. sent an agent to Valparaiso, who, on behalf of T. and the representatives of B., took proceedings in the Courts in Chili, and in 1858, by a decree made in the Court at Santiago, it was decided that the letters between the brothers amounted to an agreement which bound B., but not T.; and H. was directed to account to T. for one-third of C.'s estate upon a bill here by H., and the assignee under his insolvency:—Held, that having regard to H.'s avowed object in purchasing both shares, and to T.'s acquiescence from 1833 to 1849, T. was bound equally with B.; and a decree was made restraining T. from further proceedings in Chili to compel an account, and declaring him a trustee of his share in the estate of C. for the plaintiffs. Cood v. Cood, 9 Jur., N. S., 1335; 33 L. J., Ch., 273.

1. A. devised his real estate to trustees to the use of his wife for life, with remainder to his son for life, with remainders over. A. afterwards gave the H. estate to his son, and signed a memorandum as follows: "H., together with my other freehold estates, are left in my will to my wife; but it is her wish, and I hereby join in presenting the same to our son for the purpose of furnishing him with a dwelling-house." The son took possession of the H. estate, and with the approbation of his father expended money on the erection of a dwelling-house thereon. Upon his death:—Held, that the son was entitled to have a conveyance to himself of the fee simple of the H. estate. Dillwyn v. Llewellyn, 31 L. J., Ch., 658.

2. Where a niece had been induced to render valuable services to her uncle on the faith of his representation that by so doing she would become entitled to the benefit of the trusts created in her favour by a codicil to his will, and the testator afterwards revoked such trusts:—Held, that he had no right to make such revocation, and a decree was made that the trusts in favour of the niece should be performed. Loffus v. Maw, 3 Giff. 592; 32 L. J., Ch., 49; 8 Jur., N. S., 607; 6 L. T., N. S., 346; 10 W. R. 513.

3. An intestate induced a woman to serve him as his housekeeper without wages for many years, and to give up other prospects of establishment in life by a verbal promise to make a will leaving her a life estate in land, and afterwards signed a will, not duly attested, by which he left her the life estate:—Held, that there was no contract, and that even if there had been, and although the woman had wholly performed her part by serving till the intestate's death without wages, yet her service was not unequivocally and in its own nature referable to any contract, and was not such a part performance as to take the case out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4; and that she could not maintain an action against the heir for a declaration that she was entitled to a life estate in the land. Loffus v. Maw (3 Giff. 592) disapproved. Maddison v. Alderson, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 467; 52 L. J., Q. B., 737; 49 L. T. 303; 31 W. R. 820; 47 J. P. 821. Affirming S. C. sub nom. Alderson v. Maddison, 7 L. R., Q. B. D. 174; 50 L. J., Q. B., 466; 45 L. T. 334; 29 W. R. 556.

VII. Contracts Incapable of Complete Performance.

See also V. ante.—X. IX. post.

4. Though specific performance might have been decreed against original parties holding as tenants in common; yet where an alteration prevented a decree as to one moiety, the Court would not direct a performance as to the other, the contract being entire, and an execution of half of it inadequate to the prime object. Att.-Gen. v. Day, 1 Ves. 218.

5. Plaintiff may have a specific performance in part, waiving the rest, and the defendant cannot object. Mestaer v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 640.

6. Courts of equity cannot decree the performance of one part of an agreement, leaving the other parts unperformed. Wood v. Rowe, 2 Bligh 595.

7. The Court will not interfere to compel the specific performance of an agreement unless it can itself execute the whole contract in the terms specifically agreed upon. Gervais v. Edwards, 2 Dr. & War. 80; 1 Con. & L. 242; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 555.

8. Difficulty of decreeing a partial performance of a contract where a vendor has not the power of fully performing it. Graham v. Oliver, 3 Beav. 124.

9. In an agreement for the purchase of an estate, one of the stipulations was, that the vendor should be tenant from year to year to the purchaser:—Held, that the inability of the vendor to perform this stipulation by reason of embarrassments of which the purchaser must have had some notice, was no bar to the specific performance of the contract. Lord v. Stephens, 1 Y. & Coll. 222.

10. Where the articles provided for the continuance of the partnership for twenty-one years, determinable upon the death of both, and also for the introduction by deed or will of a relation of either of them, but made no provision for the case (which happened) of the death of one of them during the term, or for the amount of capital to be used:—Held, that the provisions for the continuance of the partnership during the remainder of the term could not be enforced in equity against the representatives of the deceased partner. Dowds v. Collins, 6 Hare 418.

11. By a written agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff agreed to sell, and the defendant agreed to purchase, upon the terms stated, a certain property called L.; and by the same agreement the defendant agreed to sell and the plaintiff agreed to purchase another estate called H., and it was not expressed that the two contracts were to be dependent on each other. The defendant was eventually unable to make a good title to H.:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance of the contract as to L. Croome v. Lediard, 2 Myl. & K. 251; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

12. The Court will not decree a partial performance of articles; but when some parts appear unreasonable they always dismiss the bill. Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 189.

13. By an agreement between three incorporated railway companies, A., B., and C., it was agreed that A. should purchase the other two railways when completed, and that, in the meantime, their capitals should be amalgamated for the purpose of such completion, A.

undertaking to supply any deficiency; and it was provided that all the three companies should concur in applications to Parliament for the necessary powers to carry the agreement into effect. At the time the agreement was entered into, B. had power, with the consent of three-fifths of its shareholders, to sell its railway to A., but C. had no such power, and neither B. nor C. had any power of amalgamation. The agreement was duly ratified by three-fifths of the shareholders in each of the three companies, and C. subsequently obtained an Act giving it the required powers; but before a similar Act was obtained by B., a large majority of its shareholders had become adverse to the project, so that no such Act could be obtained; and the directors of that company, with the sanction of the shareholders, were proceeding to construct and dispose of their railway in a manner inconsistent with the agreement. A demurrer to a bill filed by A. against B. and its directors, for specific performance of the agreement and an injunction, was overruled, and the injunction granted; it being clear that, for the completion of the purchase, no further parliamentary powers were necessary, and it being at least doubtful whether the defendants could be heard in this court to say that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the performance of that part of the agreement, merely because there was another part (viz., the provision for amalgamation) which required additional parliamentary powers to give effect to it, which powers they refused to apply for. Great Western Railway Co. v. Birmingham & Oxford Junction Railway Co., 2 Ph. 597; 5 Rail. Ca. 241; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 243; 12 Jur. 106.

1. It is fully settled that a contract cannot be specifically performed in part; it must be wholly performed or not at all. Ford v. Stuart, 15 Beav. 493; 21 L. J., Ch., 514.

2. Relief by specific performance of agreements is decreed only where compensation in damages for non-performance would not be adequate, and where the stipulations are such as can be specifically performed throughout. Paris Chocolate Co. v. Crystal Palace Co., 1 Jur., N. S., 720; 3 Sim. & G. 119; 3 W. R. 267.

The Court will refuse to interfere by specific performance in cases where the larger subject matter of the contract is not fixed, but is to be ascertained by arbitrators, and where there is no reasonable mutuality in the stipulations. Ib.

Where in an agreement there are vague and peculiar stipulations to let at a certain rent space in a certain portion of a building for a particular purpose, the Court will refuse to interfere by enforcing specific performance of the agreement. Ib.

Where the Court finds an agreement which has not been performed, but has been dealt with by the parties themselves on the footing of pecuniary compensation, it is difficult to say that the non-performance of the entirety of the agreement should not be dealt with in the same manner, and therefore the specific performance of an agreement so dealt with would be refused. Ib.

Where a bill prayed for the specific performance of an agreement, and the main relief sought was not in respect of the main subject matter of the agreement, but in respect of certain vague stipulations contained in it, and there had been a departure from the original terms of the agreement, and non-performance by the defendants had been dealt with by the plaintiffs on the footing of compensation, the Court held that it could not decree specific performance, and a motion for an injunction by the plaintiffs, to restrain certain acts alleged to be in violation of the agreement, was dismissed. Ib.

3. The Court will not decree specific performance of a contract unless it can enforce the whole; but the difficulty seems to be removed where the part which it is impossible to enforce has already been performed. Hope v. Hope, 22 Beav. 351; 8 De G. M. & G. 731; 4 W. R. 583; 3 Jur., N. S., 454; 26 L. J., Ch., 417.

4. The Court will not direct an account as to a part of an agreement, where it cannot decree specific performance of the whole, nor will the Court make any declaration of right upon a contract, except as to so much of it as has been or is about to be broken. Holmes v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 3 Kay & J. 675; 3 Jur., N. S., 737.

5. Where the principal agreement cannot be enforced, the specific performance of the accessory agreement will not be decreed. Scottish North Eastern Railway Co. v. Stewart, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 382.

6. If an agreement is capable of being carried out as a whole, the Court will decree specific performance, although there may be collateral subordinate provisions which would not be enforced independently. Blackett v. Bates, 2 Hem. & M. 270; 34 L. J., Ch., 515; 13 W. R. 736; 12 L. T., N. S., 844; 11 Jur., N. S., 500.

Although a court of equity will not make a decree for the specific performance of an agreement to repair a railway simpliciter, it will do so if the agreement forms a collateral part only of a larger agreement, and the relation of lessee and lessor has been created between the parties. Ib.

Specific performance of an award or an agreement cannot be granted unless the Court can give mutual relief to both parties; accordingly, where an award provided that the defendant should execute to the plaintiff a lease in a certain form, and that the defendant should have a right to the performance by the plaintiff throughout the whole term of certain continuous duties not specified in the lease, a decree of Wood, V.-Ch., ordering specific performance of the award by the defendant, and seeking to enforce specific performance by the plaintiff by means of an injunction restraining him from interfering with the defendant's rights, was reversed, and specific performance refused. 8 C. 12 Jur., N. S., 151; 35 L. J., Ch., 324; 14 W. R. 319; 13 L. T., N. S., 656. And see 12 Jur., N. S., 874 n.

7. The Court will not compel specific performance of an agreement by a company to employ a person as their broker; and the contract being at an end, that which is merely an adjunct to the principal relief sought—viz., an injunction to restrain the company from advertising, in breach of a stipulation contained in the agreement, the name of any other person as their broker will not be granted. Brett v. East India and London Shipping Co., 12 W. R. 596; 10 L. T., N. S., 187.

1. An owner of a coal wharf agreed to let it, and at the same time agreed to act as agent in the coal business for the tenant, and not to act for any other person:—Held, that these agreements were inseparable, and that specific performance of the agreement to let would not be decreed, because the Court could not enforce performance on the other side. Ogden v. Fossick, 9 Jur., N. S., 288; 32 L. J., Ch., 73; 11 W. R. 128; 7 L. T., N. S., 515; 4 De. G. F. & J. 426; 1 N. R. 143.

The fact of the agreement having been acted on for some time made no difference. Ib.

2. A firm of shipbuilders agreed to alter a vessel according to a specification; and it was provided that in case of their failing to execute the alterations according to the agreement, the owners of the vessel should be at liberty, with workmen, to enter on the shipbuilders' yard, and themselves complete the alterations. The shipbuilders were adjudicated bankrupts before the vessel was completed:—Held, that the Court could not specifically perform the whole agreement, and therefore would not restrain the trustee under the bankruptcy from selling the dock in which the vessel was lying, although the owners might be thus prevented from themselves entering and completing the vessel pursuant to the agreement. Merchants' Trading Co. v. Banner, 12 L. R., Eq., 18; 40 L. J., Ch., 515; 24 L. T. 861; 19 W. R. 707.

3. An agent of a railway company, without any direct authority, agreed to sell to the plaintiff a piece of land of the company at a certain price per acre. Some of the terms were, that the company should lay down a branch railway to the land; that the plaintiff, who was going to erect ironworks on the land, should use the company's railway in preference to others—use it whenever reasonably practicable, and for the longest distance it was reasonably capable of use; and that the traffic to and from the works should be conveyed on the terms of a prior agreement of the 8th May between the parties relating to another piece of land bought by the plaintiff from the company, and the other stipulations of that agreement carried out. The company's surveyor measured the land, the company's engineer laid down the branch railway to it, the plaintiff was let into possession, and his machinery was brought in the company's waggons to the land, and there deposited. After this the company refused to complete the sale. On an appeal from a decree of the Master of the Rolls directing specific performance:—Held, that the stipulations as to the use of the railway by the plaintiff did not render a decree for specific performance improper; for that the insertion of a covenant to that effect would effectuate what the parties must be held to have contemplated. Wilson v. West Hartlepool Railway Co., 2 De G. J. & S. 475; 11 Jur., N. S., 124; 34 L. J., Ch., 241; 13 W. R. 361; 11 L. T., N. S., 692; 5 N. R. 289. Affirming 34 Beav. 187; 10 Jur., N. S., 1064; 13 W. R. 4; 11 L. T., N. S., 327. Affirmed in House of Lords, 23 L. J., Ch., 697; 5 H. L. Ca. 40.

Held, that although the company's agent contracted without sufficient authority, the company must be held by its acts to have ratified the contract, and that the contract thereby became binding on the company, although not under its common seal, nor executed in any other of the modes mentioned in 7 & 8 Vict., c. 16, s. 97, and that specific performance ought to be decreed, especially as possession had been given. Ib.

Held, also, that the fact of no sufficient evidence having been given of the contents of the prior agreement of the 8th August did not prevent a decree for specific performance, for that where possession has been given under an agreement a court of equity will, if possible, ascertain the terms of the agreement, and give effect to them. Ib.

4. A railway company, requiring some of the plaintiff's land, entered into a contract for the purchase, by which the company agreed to make and maintain, so long as it should be a convenience, a siding, with all necessary approaches, at B., for public use, for the reception and delivery of goods. The plaintiff and the company differing as to the construction to be put on these terms, the plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, that the Court will not dismiss the bill, on the ground that the agreement was not such as could be carried out under the superintendence of the Court. Lytton v. Great Northern Railway Co., 2 Kay & J. 394; 2 Jur., N. S., 436; 4 W. R. 441.

Certain persons entered into an agreement with A. B. to form a joint stock company for working certain patents to which A. B. was entitled, and which were to become the property of the company in consideration of payments and benefits secured to A. B., who agreed on his part to take any proceedings required of him by the company to obtain other patents in foreign countries; to devote his time to, and engage himself wholly for, the company; to promote its interests and improve the patents, and impart any new improvements discovered by him applicable to the process. A memorandum and articles of association were subsequently signed by the parties.

5. Demurrer allowed to a bill by A. B. for specific performance of the agreement, the Court having no power to compel performance from A. B. on his part of the contract, which was entire and could not be severed. Stocker v. Wedderburne, 5 W. R. 671; 3 Kay & J. 393; 26 L. J., Ch., 713.

6. Under an agreement to grant a building lease, including a covenant to insure in a particular office in the joint names of lessor and lessee, and to give the lessee an option to purchase for 500*l.*, the lessee built a house at a cost of more than 1,000*l.*, and insured in his own name only, and in the wrong office. The lessor brought ejectment, and the lessee thereupon claimed to exercise his option of purchase, and specific performance of that part of the agreement was decreed. Green v. Low, 4 W. R. 669; 22 Beav. 625.

7. When the conditions of an agreement between landlord and builder, whereby the landlord agrees to grant leases of successive plots of land as the houses upon each of them are built to a certain stage, are by the terms of the contract separable, there is no rule of equity to prevent them from being separately enforced by way of specific performance. Therefore where the assignee of the builder's interest had completed the houses upon some only of the plots agreed to be built upon:—Held, upon a bill for specific performance, that he was entitled to the leases of those plots, even though disclaiming all interest in the remaining plots. Wilkinson v. Clements, 42 L. J., Ch., 38; 8 L. R., Ch., 96; 27 L. T., N. S., 834.

1. On a contract for the sale of lands, described as partly freehold and partly copyhold, and the timber thereupon (the latter at a specified valuation), upon a condition that the vendor should not be required to distinguish the freehold land from the copyhold, nor the respective boundaries thereof, it was held, that upon the particulars and conditions the contract for the land and timber was one contract, and not separate contracts, and that the purchaser was bound to pay for the timber at the valuation, notwithstanding the fact that it might be wholly upon the copyhold land, and therefore subject to the rights of the lord and the restrictions of the custom. Crosse v. Lawrence, 9 Hare 462; 16 Jur. 142; 21 L. J., Ch., 889.

Where, upon a contract for the sale of an estate, a separate and distinct contract is made for the sale of the timber upon it, the Court will not enforce the latter contract, unless the vendor can give the purchaser such possession and dominion over the timber as will entitle him to fell and remove it, but, if an entire contract be made for the sale, both of the estate and the timber (notwithstanding the purchase money is made up of distinct sums for each), the vendor is only bound to make out his title to the land according to the contract, and the title to the land is the title to the timber upon it. Ib.

The purchaser of undistinguished freehold and copyhold land and timber, under a single and entire contract, must be considered as estimating in the price he pays for the land, the price he pays for the timber. 8 C. 9 Hare 467; 16 Jur. 142; 21 L. J., Ch., 889.

2. A contract for the purchase of copyhold land at a certain price, and the timber upon it at a specified valuation, enforced as one entire contract, although the vendor could not show any licence from the lord or custom in the manor enabling the tenant of the manor or himself, or his assignees, to fell the timber. Crosse v. Keene, 9 Hare 469.

3. The defendants agreed with the plaintiffs to undertake to execute a branch railway according to the terms of a specification to be prepared by the plaintiffs' engineer for the time being, and to give a bond to secure the performance of their contract. The plaintiffs had at the date of the agreement a bill pending to enable them to make the branch, and holding them to complete within a specified time, on pain of a suspension of dividends on the capital of their entire line. The specification was prepared by the company's engineer, but prices having risen, the defendants repudiated their agreement. The plaintiffs then filed their bill for a specific performance of the agreement according to the terms of the specification, and to have the bond executed, charging that they would have withdrawn the bill before Parliament, by reason of the liabilities incurred on the passing thereof, had not the defendants (to whom, as owners of a large estate adjacent to the proposed branch, it was of great importance that the plaintiffs should be bound to make the branch) assented to the terms of the agreement, and the plaintiffs believed that they would bond fide carry out the same; that the defendants, by their agreement, induced the plaintiffs to come under the obligation to make and complete the lines, and the Act was passed upon the faith of the agreement; and charging that the not carrying out the agreement was a fraud on the plaintiffs, there having been a part performance on their part. On demurrer, it was held (assuming the agreement to be valid within the Statute of Frauds, and in other respects one upon which the plaintiffs could recover), first, that the agreement could not be enforced as regards the construction of the railway, because from the nature of the works, the subject of the agreement, it was an agreement the execution of which the Court could not superintend consistently with public convenience, inasmuch as the motions would be incessant for committal or otherwise for non-performance of orders with regard to the making of particular works, besides the difficulty, on the ground of reciprocity, in enforcing that part of the agreement by which the plaintiffs were to provide the land, and because the plaintiffs having by their Act power to acquire the land, could make the railway for themselves; and having so ascertained the expense the defendants had put them to, would have an adequate and the better remedy in damages, and that the circumstances of fraud alleged in the bill did not prevent the application of the foregoing reasons. Secondly, that as the Court could not superintend the general execution of the whole works or enable the defendants to earn the whole of the money to which they would be entitled for the works when made, the execution of the bond would be a piecemeal performance of the agreement, which the Court would not direct, and the demurrer was allowed. South Wales Railway Co. v. Wythes, 1 Kay & J. 186; 24 L. J., Ch., 1; 3 W. R. 3; 3 Eq. R. 70. Affirmed 24 L. J., Ch., 87; 3 W. R. 133; 3 Eq. Rep. 153; 5 De G. M. & G. 880.

Whether in the simple case of an advance of money with an agreement to execute a bond for its repayment, such an agreement would be executed in this Court. Quare. Ib.

4. Held, that, although one party had to some extent acted on the award, by nominating trustees and signifying an election to take licences, there had not been such an acquiescence in the award as to justify the Court in enforcing a specific performance of it against him on that ground, no one appearing to have been misled by his acts. Nichols v. Hancock, 7 De G. M. & G. 300; 1 Jur., N. S., 1149.

5. A plaintiff agreed to grant a lease to the defendant when and so soon as he, the defendant, should have built a new house on the land; and the defendant agreed to accept such lease when required, and by a certain day to pull down an old house standing on the land, and build a new one on the site:—Held, on demurrer to a bill praying specific performance and damages, that the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, applied, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the non-building of the house, and to specific performance of the contract to accept the lease. Soames v. Edge, 1 Johns. 669.

1. There must be as clear evidence of the waiver as of the existence of the contract; the Court will not act upon less. A. wrote to C.:—"I have told Mrs. C. that it is my intention to let and lease to you that field which J. M. held under me, and that the rent thereof is to be 2*l.* 10*s.* per acre for your life and Mrs. C.'s, which will be stated in the lease, with the understanding that you are to be accountable for the payment of the tithe rent charge, poor-rate charge, cess, etc." The law agent of A., upon the instructions of C., and without the authority of A., afterwards prepared a lease which was executed by C., whereby the lands were purported to be demised for the lives of C., his wife, and a third person, or twenty-one years, whichever should last the longest, at a rent which was the aggregate of the rent mentioned in the letter, and the tithe rent charge. This reserved rent was for some time received by A., who afterwards refused to execute that or any other lease. A. was decreed specifically to execute a lease to C. for his own life and that of his wife, at the rent mentioned in the unexecuted lease; and the costs of the suit were given against A. because of his misconduct. Carolan v. Brabazon, 3 J. & L. 200; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 124.

Where there is an agreement to make the tithe rent charge payable by the tenant, and the agreement rests in fieri, the Court may, in favour of the intention, add the amount of the rent charge to the rent. Semble, where parties enter into an agreement for the letting of the lands, which is legal to a certain extent, to which extent they mean that the agreement should be executed by an actual lease; and stipulate that something further, not malum in se, but which is merely prohibited, should rest in understanding, the Court will decree the performance of the agreement as far as it is capable of legal execution. Id.

2. Where an agreement for the compromise of a suit for a divorce, provided that the wife should have the custody of two of the children, and should educate them in a particular manner, the first part of such provision being contrary to public policy, and the latter incapable of being enforced against the wife, a demurrer to a bill filed by her for specific performance was allowed. Vanstart v. Vanstart, 4 Kay & J. 63; 4 Jur., N. S., 276; 27 L. J., Ch., 222. Affirmed 2 De G. & J. 249; 4 Jur., N. S., 519.

3. The Court refused specific performance of an agreement which contained stipulations which could not be carried out, and it appearing that the parties had something in view which they had not expressed. Williamson v. Wootan, 3 Drew. 210.

4. A husband, upon a treaty for separation from his wife, agreed with a trustee to pay his wife an annuity for her separate use, and also, during their separation, to permit their daughter, an infant, but now of age, to reside with, and be under the control of, and educated and supported by, her mother; in consideration whereof the wife (who was entitled under her marriage settlement to property, settled to her separate use without power of anticipation) agreed with the trustee to indemnify her husband in respect of any debt on her own account or on account of their daughter. The trustee declining to enforce payment of arrears of the annuity, or to act any longer as trustee:—Held, first, that this was a voluntary agreement on the part of the husband, no consideration moving from the trustee by way of indemnity or otherwise, and the wife having no power to contract so as to bind property as to which, though settled to her separate use, she was restrained from anticipation. Walrond v. Walrond, 1 Johns. 18; 4 Jur., N. S., 1099; 28 L. J., Ch., 97.

Held, secondly, that the agreement being voluntary on the part of the husband, the Court could not decree specific performance of it by him, or order him to account in respect of arrears; nor could it appoint a new trustee in the only mode in which a trustee could be effectually appointed, viz., by ordering the husband to enter into a new covenant with a new trustee. Id.

5. In a marriage settlement, which comprised only the property of the wife, it was agreed between the intended husband and wife, and each of them covenanted with the trustees, that any property to which the wife might become entitled during the coverture should be conveyed to such uses as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of herself for life; remainder to the use of the husband for his life; remainder to the use of the wife's children, and, in default of such children to the use of A. B., her niece, and her heirs. After the death of the wife without children, and without having exercised her power of appointment, the husband filed a bill against her heir-at-law, praying that a real estate to which she had become entitled during her lifetime might be conveyed to the uses of the settlement. On the question, whether the decree for specific performance should be confined to the life estate of the husband, or should extend to the limitation to the niece, who was also dead:—Held, that it should extend to the latter, on the ground that the right of the husband to a specific performance of part of the covenant drew with it the right to a specific performance of the whole, at least as against the heir of the settlor, whatever it might have done as against a purchaser for value. Davenport v. Bishop, 1 Ph. 698. Affirming 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 451; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 492; 7 Jur. 1077.

6. Parts of an agreement can be separately enforced if an intention to separate the parts appears in the agreement. Odessa Tramways Co. v. Mendel, 47 L. J., Ch., 505; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 236; 26 W. R. 887; 38 L. T., N. S., 731. Affirming 37 L. T., N. S., 275.

The fact that an agreement is carried out by two instruments affords a presumption that the contracts in the two instruments are separable. Id.

A company was, by its articles of association, prohibited from issuing shares below par without the sanction of a general meeting. M. agreed to subscribe for 2,000 shares in the company, which should be taken up and paid for in full by him, in such numbers and at such times as should be required for the purposes of the company. On the same day on which he entered into this agreement, the board of directors agreed to pay him 4,000*l.* in consideration of the services rendered by him in connection with the company. The company failed. On an action brought by the company against M. for specific performance of his agreement:—Held, that, as M. had acted in collusion with the directors to defraud the company, he could not be heard to set up this fraud for the purpose of invalidating the agreement to take the shares; that as the parties had contemplated a piecemeal performance of the agreement, the Court could decree specific performance of a part of it; and that in the absence of mala fides the resolution of the directors to call up the shares was conclusive evidence that the money was required for the purposes of the company. Id.

1. By the contract for the sale of an estate it was agreed that the price should be 24,000*l.*, and that certain furniture and other articles on the estate, the value of which was about 2,000*l.*, should be valued by valuers mutually agreed upon, and that the purchaser would take a part of the furniture and articles at that valuation. The vendor refused to appoint a valuer, and refused to complete. A decree made at the suit of the purchaser for specific performance of the contract, except so far as it related to the furniture and articles. Richardson v. Smith, 5 L. R., Ch., 648

VIII. Contracts with a Parol Variation.

2. A suit for specific performance of an agreement with a variation, cannot be supported. Nurse v. Seymour (Lord), 13 Beav. 254.

3. Though a defendant, resisting specific performance, may go into evidence to show that by fraud the true terms were not expressed in the written agreement, yet plaintiff cannot do so for the purpose of obtaining specific performance, with a variation of the contract. Wooliam v. Hearn, 7 Ves. 211.

4. Parol evidence of declarations of auctioneers at sale, warranting quantity, received as defence to bill for specific performance on ground of fraud, though not for purpose of enforcing of specific performance. Winch v. Winchester, 1 Ves. & B. 375.

5. Bill for specific performance of an agreement dismissed: the agreement appearing from letters produced to have been different from that set up by the bill, and proved by one witness. Legh v. Haverfield, 5 Ves. 452.

6. Though a parol waiver of a written contract, amounting to a complete abandonment and clearly proved, would bar a specific performance, or even parol variations so acted upon that the original agreement could no longer be enforced without injury to one party: variations verbally agreed upon are not sufficient to prevent the execution of a written agreement; the situation of the parties, in all other respects, remaining the same. In this case the variations were all for the advantage of the defendant, by gratuitous covenants of the plaintiff. Price v. Dyer, 17 Ves. 366.

7. Parol evidence in aid of a specific performance upon the sale of the estate by auction; to explain, by declarations of the auctioneer, an ambiguity on the face of the particular, by a general claim for a separate valuation of the timber, and also special provisions as to the timber upon certain lots, the agreement, signed on the back of the particular, binding the purchaser, defendant, "to a strict fulfilment of this article, and to abide by the condition and declarations made at the sale," rejected: distinction, where evidence is to resist a specific performance. Higginson v. Clowes, 15 Ves. 516.

Though a paper, as the particular upon a sale by auction, may by reference be engrafted into a contract within the Statute of Frauds, that will not authorise the introduction of parol evidence to show what part was read. Id. 522.

8. Distinction between admission of parol evidence to support or resist specific performance of contract for land; admissible for latter purposes on mistake and surprise, as well as fraud, but not to vary, add to, or explain the written contract. Clowes v. Higginson, 1 Ves. & B. 524.

9. Where a parol agreement varying the terms of the written agreement is set up by the defendants in a suit for specific performance, and supported by evidence affording a presumption or suspicion of its existence, an inquiry will be directed. Van v. Corps, 3 Myl. & K. 269; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 208; 1 Jur. 101, 149.

10. Parol evidence admissible on the part of a defendant resisting the specific performance of an agreement to prove fraud, mistake, or omission in the article, and also to show the situation of the parties as connected with it. Flood v. Finlay, 2 Ball & B. 15.

11. Parol evidence admissible in opposition to specific performance of written agreement upon heads of mistake or surprise, as well as of fraud, and upon such evidence the bill was dismissed. Another bill for specific performance of agreement corrected according to same evidence, contradicted by answer, was also dismissed. Townsend (Marquis) v. Stangroom, 6 Ves. 328.

12. Specific performance of a written agreement refused, on parol evidence that one term of the actual agreement was omitted. Garrard v. Grinling, 2 Swan. 244; 1 Wils. 480.

13. Quere, whether a defendant, resisting the specific performance of an agreement, on the ground of alleged surprise and fraud, will be allowed to give parol evidence of a term of the contract, said to have been made at the same time with, but contradictory to, those terms of it which were reduced into writing, and signed by him. Bunning v. Bunning, 1 L. J., Ch., 56.

1. Construction of a contract; that a reference of the expenses was confined to expense of the conveyance; but the evidence of the attorney was admitted for the defendant to prove the intention of both parties, according to verbal instructions that the plaintiff, the purchaser, should also pay the expense of making out the defendant's title. Rumsbottom v. Gosden, 1 Ves. & B. 165.

2. By a written agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff agreed to sell, and the defendant agreed to purchase, upon the terms stated, a certain property called the Leigh estate; and by the same agreement, the defendant agreed to sell, and the plaintiff agreed to purchase, another estate, called the Haresfield estate, and it was not expressed that the two contracts were to be dependent on each other. The defendant was unable eventually to make a good title to the Haresfield estate:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance of the contract as to the Leigh estate. Evidence aliunde was not admitted, to show that it was the real intention of the parties that the agreement should take effect on the basis of a mutual exchange. Croome v. Lediard, 2 Myl. & K. 251; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

3. No relief under an agreement stated by the answer, the bill not being adapted to that agreement, but framed upon a different ground, which failed. Pilling v. Armitage, 12 Ves. 78.

4. Seemle, in a suit for specific performance of a written agreement a parol variation in the terms of the contract, being not such a one as would defeat the right to specific performance, not set up by answer, but coming out on cross-examination of one of plaintiff's witnesses, who was defendant's agent, is a proper subject of inquiry; but the plaintiff accepting the variation, specific performance was decreed with costs. What variations are consistent with this right to specific performance of original contract. London & Birmingham Railway Co. v. Winter, Cr. & Ph. 57.

5. A bill for a specific performance insisted on the literal construction of a written agreement, which was proved to be contrary to the real intention of the parties; and the bill contained a false statement as to a fact which would have been inconsistent with the plaintiff's representation of the case. The bill was dismissed on the parol evidence, although the plaintiff, at the hearing, offered to perform the true agreement, and the Court refused to dismiss the bill without prejudice. Molloy v. Egan, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 590.

6. Specific performance of an agreement refused, the same not having been accepted by the plaintiff in due time, nor any acceptance by him ever notified to the defendant, and the plaintiff having, after the defendant had signed the agreement, attempted to vary the terms of it, though he ultimately acquiesced in the defendant's terms. Thornbury v. Bevil, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 554; 6 Jur. 407.

7. Defendant held to the offer in his answer, though the circumstances of the case were varied from what they were at the time of answer put in. Holford v. Burnell, 1 Vern. 448.

8. Bill for performance of written agreement, parol evidence read of different agreement, dismissed with costs; and plaintiff cannot resort to agreement set up by defendant; parol evidence allowed where a hard agreement, or in part executed. Legal v. Miller, 2 Ves. 299.

9. W. D., by indenture, agreed to guarantee a certain composition to all the creditors of J. D. who should before a fixed day execute a release of their debts: the plaintiff, who was a creditor of J. D., did not execute by the time named, but insisted that this delay had taken place in consequence of an arrangement entered into between him and the agent of W. D., the effect of which was to bind the plaintiff to accept the composition, but to allow him to postpone his execution of the release:—Held, dismissing a bill filed by the plaintiff against W. D., for specific performance of the agreement to pay the composition, that there was no evidence that the agent of W. D. had authority to enter into any new agreement; that, if such authority had been proved, the agreement being within the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds, any alteration in its terms must have been evidenced by writing; that, the condition in the original agreement not having been performed by the plaintiff, the agreement never took effect, so far as he was concerned; and that, in the absence of fraud, no parol agreement could be substituted. Emmet v. Dewhurst, 3 Macn. & G. 587; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 497; 15 Jur. 1115.

10. Court of equity has no power to alter the contracts of parties from an eventual change not contemplated at the time. Revell v. Hussey, 2 Ball & B. 288.

11. Performance cannot be decreed of an agreement with a variation made in it by the Court. Jordan v. Sawkins, 4 Bro. C. C. 477.

12. Where a party has failed to prove the terms of the agreement he relies on, equity will not assist him by directing an issue to ascertain the terms. If he be plaintiff, it is incumbent on him to state in his bill the agreement, of which he calls on the Court to decree the performance, and to prove the agreement as stated. Savage v. Carroll, 2 Ball & B. 451.

13. Original bill prayed execution of an agreement; defendant denied the agreement as in bill, but admitted a different agreement; plaintiff amended his bill, continuing to insist on the original agreement, but praying in the alternative, if not entitled to that, to have execution of the admitted agreement. Bill dismissed without prejudice to a bill for performance of the admitted agreement. Lindsay v. Lynch, 2 Sch. & Lef. 1.

If there be uncertainty as to the terms of an agreement, it cannot be carried into execution even though reduced to writing. Id. 7.

14. Upon a bill praying the performance of an agreement duly signed, but offering to the defendant the benefit of certain variations contained in an unsigned memorandum of a subsequent date, the Court will decree a specific performance of the agreement with those variations, if the defendant elects to take advantage of them; and if the defendant does not so elect, it will decree specific performance of the original agreement. Robinson v. Page, 3 Russ. 114.

1. Quere, can a court of equity decree the performance of a written agreement, where the bill states that the written agreement was subsequently varied by parol, and prays, in the alternative, either that the agreement, with these variations, may be executed, or that it may be executed as it stands in writing. Wright v. Howard, 1 L. J., Ch., 94.

2. Where the plaintiff, in a suit for a specific performance, had assigned over a lease to the defendant (the latter being a surety for the rent), in consideration of a parol agreement for an annuity, which was denied in the answer, but such agreement or consideration was not expressed in the assignment:—Held, not an objection to a decree for specific performance, not being in contradiction to the instrument, nor that it was proved larger than that stated. Clifford v. Turrell, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 138; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 390.

3. Where an agreement is entered into for the sale of an estate, and the parties differ as to the quantity agreed to be sold, and the vendor files a bill for specific performance of the agreement as to part, and the vendee offers to complete the contract as to that part; but the vendor adds, as a condition, that the vendee shall pay the costs of the bill:—the Court will refuse a decree for specific performance. Spence v. Mawson, 9 L. J., Ch., 10.

4. Where the original agreement has been subsequently varied, unless there be certainty as to those variations as affecting the original agreement, so that both together should form one consistent agreement, the Court will not grant an injunction prayed for in a bill for specific performance. Paris Chocolate Co. v. Crystal Palace Co., 3 Sm. & G. 119; 1 Jur., N. S., 720; 3 W. R. 267.

5. A parol addition to an agreement must be established without doubt or ambiguity, before equity will assist in carrying the additional provision into effect. Vouillon v. States, 2 Jur., N. S., 845; 25 L. J., Ch., 875.

A written agreement was entered into for the sale of the goodwill of a business, the purchaser to pay for the trade fixtures, 1,500*l.*, and to pay for the goodwill of the business, including the services of the vendor, "as agreed on," 200*l.* per annum for eight years. The agreement was to be carried out by a bond, in which the purchaser was to bind himself to the vendor to pay the above sum annually, and the vendor was to engage to introduce the purchaser to all the customers, and to use his utmost endeavours to procure their business for the purchaser. The purchaser paid the 1,500*l.*, and entered into possession. The vendor held the appointment of milliner to the Queen, and, as alleged by the purchaser, it was verbally agreed that the 200*l.* per annum was not to be paid unless the vendor procured the transfer of the appointment to the purchaser. The vendor was unable to do so, and the purchaser refused to pay the 200*l.* per annum, or to execute the bond. Upon bill filed by the vendor for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that the parol agreement (if proved) was not referred to in the written agreement, and did not form part of it; and that the vendor was entitled to have the agreement as it stood specifically performed, especially as the parties could not be restored to their original position Id.

6. Where persons sign a written agreement and there has been no fraud or mistake, the written agreement binds at law and in equity according to its terms, although verbally a provision was agreed to which has not been inserted in the document; subject to this, that the defendant in equity may call upon the Court to be neutral unless the plaintiff will consent to the omitted term. Martin v. Pyecraft, 2 De G. M. & G. 785; 16 Jur. 1125; 22 L. J., Ch., 94.

Where, therefore, the defendants agreed in writing to grant a plaintiff a lease at a specified rent and for a specified term, subject to the same covenants, clauses, and agreements as were contained in an expiring lease under which he then held the property, and the plaintiff filed a claim for specific performance, stating the above agreement, and that it was further agreed that he should pay a premium of 200*l.*, which by his claim he offered to do:—Held, reversing the Vice-Chancellor's decision, that this additional term did not render the Statute of Frauds a valid defence to the claim. Id.

Other defences having been set up as to the agreement having been duly obtained, on which no decision had been given below, but which failed on appeal:—Held, that although the decree was one of reversal, the defendants must pay the costs of a videlicet examination, rendered necessary by these defences before the Appeal Court, the examination taking the place of an issue. Id.

Where intended lessors, in executing an agreement for a lease, acted partly upon a representation by the lessee as to what had taken place between their own solicitor and him in its preparation, and their intention was immediately afterwards directed to the point whether this representation was correct; but they took no step to question it for three years afterwards:—Held, that the delay was strongly confirmatory of the fairness of the transaction. Id.

7. A purchaser and his assignees sued for specific performance of a contract to sell land. The vendor pleaded fraud, and that the contract, if any, reserved mines. The plaintiff's subsequent pleadings affirmed there was no reservation in the contract. The contract signed by the purchaser contained a reservation; the receipt for deposit signed by the vendor stated the other terms, and was silent as to the reservation. Specific performance of the agreement with such reservation was decreed. Smith v. Wheatcroft, 47 L. J., Ch., 745; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 223; 39 L. T., N. S., 103; 27 W. R. 42.

1. Under some circumstances, a mere parol agreement is binding, and will be carried into specific execution by a court of equity. Herbert (Lady) v. Powis (Earl), 1 Bro. P. C. 355.

2. If a legatee promises a testator, that in consideration of a disposition in her favour, she will do an act in favour of a third person, she who undertook to do the act must perform it. Drakeford v. Wilks, 3 Atk. 539.

3. Six documents were found amongst the papers of a testator written by his sister, and expressing a wish that he should benefit certain members of the family:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of a promise by the testator to enable the Court to enforce specific performance of the sister's wish as against the testator's estate. Chester v. Urwick, 23 Beav. 407.

4. A voluntary contract in favour of a mother and her children:—Held, to be executory only as related to the children, and executed as to the mother, and therefore enforced for the benefit of the mother absolutely. Burrows v. Greenwood, 4 Y. & Coll. 251.

5. An old gentleman who had several children and grandchildren, had made and executed two wills, and disputes having arisen in the family about them, some of the oldest members of it entered into an agreement amongst themselves for a division of his real and personal estate. This was to be taken the next day to the testator for his approbation, and he was to be desired to cancel both wills. In the course of the night the testator died. The personal property was divided according to the agreement, and a deed of covenant was executed with respect to the appropriation of the real estate; which deed, the party, whose rights under the last will would be much diminished by it, understood to be a deed for carrying the first agreement into execution; but, in fact, the two instruments differed in many particulars:—Held, that the first agreement was only a recommendation to the testator, and could not be carried into effect in equity:—Held, that the second agreement or deed differing from the first agreement, whilst it was understood to contain corresponding provisions, could not be carried into effect. No costs given, the defendant having secluded the testator from the other members of the family. Beastall v. Swain, Taml. 288.

6. Distinction between a mere voluntary promise, nudum pactum, that will not maintain an action; and a promise upon the faith of which another does some act, as entering into engagements, or paying money; forming a consideration that will support an action, and, therefore, establish a debt against assets. Crossie v. McDonal, 13 Ves. 148.

7. Court, in general, will not decree performance of voluntary agreements. Wycherley v. Wycherley, 2 Eden 177; Brownsmith v. Gibbourn, 2 Stra. 738.

8. In general, a court of equity will not interpose in voluntary agreements made without fraud. Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 401.

9. The plaintiff removed his place of business to a house belonging to the defendant, his father-in-law, upon the faith, as he alleged, of a parol promise by the defendant, that he should occupy the house rent-free during his life. During the period of his occupation he spent various moneys in repairs, which were chiefly of the ordinary description, except the putting up a new staircase, and a new roof to an outhouse. The defendant brought an ejectment, and the plaintiff filed a bill for relief:—Held, that the change of the plaintiff's place of business did not constitute a sufficient consideration to support the parol agreement. Millard v. Harvey, 10 Jur., N. S., 1167; 13 W. R. 125.

Held, also, that he was not entitled to any lien in respect of the moneys spent in repairs. Id.

The plaintiff's wife, without his knowledge, asked the defendant to sell a field belonging to him. She paid the defendant 150*l.*, but he refused to sell the field, and nothing further was then done. A short time afterwards the defendant let the plaintiff into possession, and the plaintiff, without knowing of the transaction between the defendant and his wife, continued in possession for ten years, without paying any rent. During this time no interest upon the 150*l.* was paid by the defendant:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of a contract, and a decree was made for specific performance. Id.

10. One promised his brother's children that, if they would execute a deed, he would bequeath to them "at least as much as they would get under their father's will":—Held, that such promise, though verbal, constituted a binding obligation, and ought to be specifically performed. Ridley v. Ridley, 11 Jur., N. S., 475; 34 L. J., Ch., 462; 12 L. T., N. S., 481; 6 N. R. 11.

11. Though a parol agreement to give a bond might have been specifically enforced against an ancestor, yet, where terms of bond were not specified, court of equity will not enforce it against the heir. Brizeck v. Manners, 9 Mod. 284.

12. An unattested paper signed by A. and by him handed to B. stated that as a mark of his esteem and great friendship he agreed to allow B. 500*l.* a year, and that after his (A.'s) death he had in lieu thereof bequeathed to him 10,000*l.* B. took this document to C., who thereupon consented to the marriage of her daughter with B., such consent having hitherto been withheld on the ground of B.'s want of means. The marriage took place, but no settlement was made by B. on his wife. A. died about six months after signing the paper, having paid B. the first quarter of the allowance of 500*l.* a year. His will contained no provision whatever in favour of B.:—Held, that assuming the consent of C. to her daughter's marriage with B. to have been given on the faith of the engagement contained in the paper, there was no such connection between A.'s promise or representation, and the consent given by C., as to sustain a claim against A.'s estate. Dashwood v. Jermyn, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 776; 27 W. R. 868.

1. The plaintiff, who was a builder, agreed with the defendant, who was an owner of freehold land, to erect thirty-one houses on the land on the terms of such agreement, and also of a parol understanding communicated to the plaintiff on behalf of the defendant prior to the signing of the principal agreement. The chief stipulation of the parol understanding was the advance of moneys in definite instalments by or through the defendant to the plaintiff for the purposes of the buildings. The plaintiff afterwards took leases of the unfinished houses and executed two successive mortgages to enable defendant to raise money on them as a security for the same purposes. The defendant failed to supply the plaintiff with the required funds as stipulated under the parol agreement, which, however, had been successively departed from:—Held, in a bill praying specific performance of the parol understanding, together with damages, or at all events damages, that the plaintiff was entitled to neither, but that (the defendant submitting to it) the plaintiff might have the ordinary redemption decree. Thorpe v. Hogford, 20 W. R. 922.

2. Where a testator in advanced years and ill health induced his niece to reside with him as his housekeeper on the verbal representation that he would leave her property by his will, which he accordingly caused to be prepared and executed, but subsequently by a codicil revoked, the Court directed the trusts of the will to be performed. Loffus v. Maw, 3 Giff. 592; 32 L. J., Ch. 49; 8 Jur., N. S., 607; 10 W. R. 513; 6 L. T., N. S., 346.

A gift made by a revocable instrument in pursuance of a verbal representation, whereby the donee is influenced, and on the faith of which he confers a benefit on the donor, becomes irrevocable. Ib.

3. An intestate induced a woman to serve him as his housekeeper without wages for many years and to give up other prospects of establishment in life by a verbal promise to make a will leaving her a life estate in land, and afterwards signed a will, not duly attested, by which he left her the life estate:—Held, that there was no contract, and that even if there had been, and although the woman had wholly performed her part by serving till the intestate's death without wages, yet her service was not unequivocally and in its own nature referable to any contract, and was not such a part performance as to take the case out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4; and that she could not maintain an action against the heir for a declaration that she was entitled to a life estate in the land. Loffus v. Maw (3 Giff. 592) disapproved. Maddison v. Alderson, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 467; 52 L. J., Q. B., 737; 49 L. T. 303; 31 W. R. 820. Affirming S. C., sub nom. Alderson v. Maddison, 7 L. R., Q. B. I. AGREEMENTS TO REFER.

4. Bill for specific performance of agreement to refer to arbitration, will not lie. Street v. Rigby, 6 Ves. 818.

5. No specific performance of an agreement to refer to arbitration. Under particular circumstances, as in the case of the Opera House, or a brewery, where there were many partners, the parties were left to the remedy they had chalked out for themselves, the Court refusing all interposition; not acting through the agency of the arbitrators, appointing them to take the accounts, and adopting their decision as the decree. Gowlay v. Somerset, 19 Ves. 431.

The price is of the essence of a contract of sale; if therefore to be fixed by arbitrators, and they do not fix it, there is no contract, but the Court determining that an agreement ought to be executed, does not require foreign aid to carry the details into execution. Ib.

1. Specific performance of agreement to refer to arbitration, or to substitute Master for arbitrators, refused. Agar v. Macklow, 2 Sim. & S. 418; 4 L. J., Ch., 16.

2. Although a court of equity will not in general decree the specific performance of an agreement to refer to arbitration, or, on the death of an arbitrator, substitute the Master for the arbitrator, yet, where matters of account have been referred to arbitration, which fails by the death of the arbitrator, a party who refuses to supply the defect, by naming a new arbitrator, will receive no relief from a court of equity, except upon the terms of his doing equity; and those terms may consist in his consenting to the accounts being taken by the Master. Chestyn v. Dalby, 2 Y. & Coll. 170.

3. Where a bill prayed the specific performance of a contract, one of the terms of which was to the effect, that if any damage should result to the defendant from certain works, the erection of which had been agreed upon between the parties, the plaintiff would give to the defendant an equivalent in land, the amount of the damage, and the quantity of the compensatory land to be ascertained by certain arbitrators:—Held, that the Court had not jurisdiction to grant such relief, and that the execution of a deed containing covenants for the performance of that part of the contract which lay in fieri would not be a specific performance. Gervais v. Edwards, 2 Dr. & War. 80; 1 Con. & L. 242; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 555.

4. Effect of an agreement for a reference to arbitration of a dispute between a vendor and purchaser as to certain terms, or alleged terms, of the contract, and of an award thereupon, in a suit subsequently instituted for the specific performance of the contract. Clay v. Rufford, 8 Hare 290; 14 Jur. 803; 19 L. J., Ch., 295.

5. A contract for the sale of land provided that A. and B., or their nominees, should have power to decide any question as to certain houses to be built thereon. There having been no decision, specific performance was refused. Tillett v. Charing Cross Bridge Co., 26 Beav. 419.

II. AWARDS.

6. Award ordered to be performed. Reignolds v. Latham, Cary 106.

7. Performance of award enforced by subpoena. Baker v. Baker, Cary 57.

8. An award, though extra-judicial, and not binding in strictness of law, yet decreed to be performed in specie. Norton v. Mascoll, 2 Vern. 24.

9. Although an award of part of matters referred may be good, equity will not enforce it, unless of all matters referred. Hide v. Pettit, 1 Ch. Ca. 185.

10. Suit to have award by assent decreed; both parties must have notice. Wakefield v. Hanson, Cary 64.

11. Bond put in suit for performance of an award, stayed by injunction. Knight v. Hartwell, Cary 104.

12. Award not legally binding, is sometimes, in cases of part performance, enforced in equity, but not without such part performance. Bishop v. Webster, 1 Eq. Abr. 51.

13. Bill will not lie to carry an award into execution where the parties to the submission do not acquiesce in it, nor agree afterwards to have it executed; but it must be enforced at law. Thompson v. Noel, 1 Atk. 62.

14. A bill lies to compel specific performance of an award, where the party submitting has received the money in consideration whereof he is to convey the estate sued for. Hall v. Hardy, 3 P. W. 187.

Where husband, for a valuable consideration, covenants that his wife shall join with him in a fine, the Court will enforce performance of such covenant. Sed quare, Id. 189.

Quare, if it should appear that the wife will not join in the fine. Ib. (n.). And see Fonbl. on Equity, tit. "Baron and Feme."

Difference between award to pay money, and to do anything collateral, and why a bill may be proper only to compel specific performance of the latter. Id. 190.

15. If the terms of an agreement are to be ascertained by an award, being so ascertained, it shall be specifically performed, if anything is to be done in specie, as conveyances, etc.; not if the acts done towards executing it by an award are not valid at law as to the time, manner, or other circumstances, unless there has been acquiescence, notwithstanding the variation of circumstances or part-performance. Blundell v. Brettarch, 17 Ves. 241.

16. The specific performance of an award may be compelled in equity, on the principle that the award only ascertains the terms of a previous agreement between the parties; and although the illegality of the acts of which it directs the execution will afford a ground for refusing to decree the performance, the Court considering an award as the decision of judges chosen by the parties, will not examine whether it is unreasonable. Wood v. Griffith, 1 Swan. 43; 1 Wills. 34.

17. Where arbitrators are deceived or where they act clandestinely without hearing each party, a Court of Justice will interfere and avoid the award. Ives v. Metcalfe, 1 Atk. 64.

18. The jurisdiction to give effect to an award confirmed by a decree of the Court in the case of a charity is doubtful, but the renewal of a lease upon the terms of the award, having been twice directed by the Court, was again enforced. Att.-Gen. v. Clements, T. & R. 58.

19. In the course of the proceedings before an arbitrator the parties agree by parol that arbitrator shall determine as to a lease to be granted; such an agreement is within the Statute of Frauds, and the award, having directed a lease to be made, cannot be enforced. Walters v. Morgan, 2 Cox 369.

20. Award of arbitrators enforced in equity, although the submission to arbitration was to be made a rule of a court of common law. Hackworth v. Brammall, 5 Myl. & C. 281.

1. Upon a reference by order of this Court, the award may be enforced before it has been made a rule of court. Wood v. Taunton, 11 Beav. 449; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 207; 18 Jur. 954.

2. The ground on which the Court of Chancery interferes to decree specific performance of an award not made, a rule of that Court is, that the award is an agreement between the parties to the submission, and that most, if not all, of the principles regulating specific performance are applicable. If, therefore, the arbitrator exceeds his authority, or does not decide all the matters submitted to him, or decides something which cannot be carried out consistently with the intention of the parties as shown by the terms of the submission, specific performance of the award cannot be decreed, as the award, to that extent, does not embody an agreement between the parties. Nichols v. Hancock, 1 Jur., N. S., 1149; 7 De G. M. & G. 300.

Scumble, the Court cannot in such a case separate that part of the award which cannot be enforced, and decree specific performance of the rest. Id.

3. The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for specific performance of an award, although the submission has been made a rule of a court of law. An award directed the execution of a lease to the plaintiff of certain portions of a railway running over the defendant's land, and provided that the lessor might from time to time require the lessee to supply engine-power during such time as he should keep an engine or engines for use. Twelve months after the date of the award the plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance, and specific performance was decreed of so much of the award as related to the execution of the lease; and, by the same decree, after declaring that the defendant was entitled during the continuance of the lease, and during such time as the lessee should keep an engine or engines for use, but not otherwise, to require the lessee to supply engine-power, awarded an injunction to restrain the plaintiff from interfering with the defendant in the enjoyment of his rights and privileges. But upon appeal this decree was reversed, on the ground that the relief was not mutual, inasmuch as specific performance could not be granted of the portion of the award which required the plaintiff to supply engine-power. Blackett v. Bates, 1 L. R., Ch., 117; 35 L. J., Ch., 324; 12 Jur. N. S., 151; 13 L. T., N. S., 656; 14 W. R. 319. Reversing 2 Hem. & M. 610; 11 Jur., N. S., 500; 34 L. J., Ch., 515; 13 W. R. 736; 12 L. T., N. S., 884. And see 12 Jur., N. S., 874, n. 3.

The award was made in June 1863, a bill for specific performance was filed in July 1864; the interval was filled up by legal proceedings, which the plaintiff could not accelerate, whereby he sought to set aside the award. Scumble, such circumstances alone disentitled the plaintiff to specific performance. Id.

4. An award which leaves some of the questions undecided, or leaves in doubt whether some of the questions have been decided, cannot be enforced. Wakefield v. Llanelli Railway and Dock Co., 11 Jur., N. S., 456; 13 W. R. 823; 12 L. T., N. S., 509.

5. Uncertainty in award or valuation is ground for refusing specific performance. Hopcraft v. Hickman, 2 Sim. & S. 130; 3 L. J., Ch., 43.

III. BONDS.

6. A bond, conditioned to convey lands for money received, is considered in equity as articles, and the condition shall be performed in specie. The obligee having been in possession twenty years, need not prove the money paid. Anon., Mos. 37.

7. Under a marriage settlement tenant for life, with remainder to his first and other sons by his wife F., in tail, with remainder to himself in fee, had power to grant leases for ninety-nine years in possession at the most improved rent under an indenture of lease to be executed with certain formalities. Twenty-eight years after the marriage, the wife still living, and there being no issue of the marriage, the husband gave a bond conditioned for the granting a lease for ninety-nine years, at a rent of 20*l.* per annum, upon the expiration of a subsisting lease. As soon as the subsisting lease determined, the obligee of the bond entered into possession, and for some years paid the rent of 20*l.*—Held, notwithstanding some evidence of inadequacy in the rent, that the representatives of the obligee were entitled to a decree for specific performance of the agreement contained in the bond. Butler v. Powys, 2 Colly. 156; 9 Jur. 959.

IV. BUILDINGS AND WORKS.

8. Plaintiff's father seized in fee of land, articles to pay J. 1,000*l.* to build a house on the premises, and dies before the house is built. The plaintiff, the heir, may compel the builder to build it, and his father's executor to pay for it. Holt v. Holt, 2 Vern. 322; 1 Ch. Ca. 190.

9. Specific performance of a contract to build a house. Pembroke v. Thorpe, 3 Swan. 437.

10. The plaintiff's house being so near the church that the ringing of the five o'clock bell in the morning disturbed her; the plaintiff came to an agreement in writing with the churchwardens and inhabitants at a vestry, that she should erect a cupola and a clock at the church, in consideration of which the bell was not to be rung in the morning. This agreement good and decreed to be binding in equity, and an injunction was granted. Martin v. Nathan, 2 P. W. 266.

11. Small deviations from a plan agreed upon for building, not material; otherwise if obstinate or corrupt. Craven v. Tichell, 1 Ves. J. 80.

12. Specific performance of an agreement to build may be decreed if sufficiently certain; but a general covenant to lay out a certain sum in a building of a certain value cannot be so executed. Mosely v. Virgin, 3 Ves. 134.

13. The Court refused to decree specific performance of a covenant to make good a gravel pit. Flint v. Brandon, 8 Ves. 159.

Principle of specific performance, that the legal remedy is inadequate or defective. Id.

14. The Court has jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of a contract by a defendant to do defined work upon his property, in the performance of which the plaintiff has a material interest, and which is not capable of adequate compensation in damages. Storer v. Great Western Railway Co., 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 48; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 65; 3 Rail. Ca. 106.

1. Proceedings taken by defendants towards the fulfilment of a contract for the erection of a certain building may enable the Court to decree a specific performance of the contract in a case where, without such proceedings, it might have been difficult to define what would be a sufficient performance. Price v. Penanoe (Corporation), 4 Hare 509.

2. Specific performance decreed of an agreement, though an uncertain one. Allen v. Harding, 2 Eq. Abr. 17.

3. A bond for performance of covenants to build a bridge, and the sum agreed for actually paid, an injunction granted to restrain an action on the bond, and an issue quantum damni-ficatus ordered, the sum mentioned in the bond being penalty. Errington v. Aynesley, 3 Bro. C. C. 341; Dick 692.

4. Where a man in a building lease covenants to new build the brick messuages on the premises, rebuilding some and repairing others is not a sufficient performance of the covenant, for the lessee must rebuild the whole; neither is pulling down and rebuilding the fore and back fronts a rebuilding within the covenant; upon such a covenant the lessors are entitled to a specific performance. Sed secus of a covenant to repair. In this case, however, the Court, instead of decreeing a specific performance, left it to a jury to ascertain the damages sustained, and directed an issue accordingly. London (City of) v. Nash, 3 Atk. 512; 1 Ves. 12.

5. An order specifically to repair the banks of a canal, to stop gates, refused; but by injunction restraining defendant from impeding plaintiff from navigating, etc., by continuing to keep bank, etc., out of repair, etc.; the effect of such former order was given. Lane v. New-digate, 10 Ves. 192.

6. S. agreed to erect a house according to a plan to be approved by the lessors, and according to the regulations of the Metropolitan Building Act. A plan was sanctioned by the lessors, but the Metropolitan Board of Works objected to it on the ground that the house would project beyond the line of the adjoining houses:—Decree for specific performance of the agreement, subject to its being modified so as to make it conformable to the regulations of the Metropolitan Building Acts. Cubitt v. Smith, 10 Jur., N. S., 1123.

7. An agreement for a lease of premises containing a stipulation that the lessees should execute certain building works, and that the lessors should advance 1,000*l.* on mortgage to a limited company, was executed by the directors and secretary of the company as lessees. The money was advanced, and the lessor had in correspondence treated the company as liable to perform the stipulations of the agreement, and evidence was given that the directors and secretary were trustees of the benefit of the agreement for the company:—Held, nevertheless, that the directors and secretary who signed the agreement were personally liable, and decree made for specific performance of the agreement to take a lease, but specific performance of the building stipulations refused, and an inquiry as to damages granted in respect thereof. Kay v. Johnson, 2 Hem. & M. 118.

8. A plaintiff agreed to grant a lease to the defendant when and so soon as he, the defendant, should have built a new house on the land; and the defendant agreed to accept such lease when required, and, by a certain day, to pull down an old house standing on the land, and build a new one on the site:—Held, that the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, applied, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the non-building of the house, and to specific performance of the contract to accept the lease. Soames v. Edge, 1 Johns. 669.

9. The defendant agreed with the plaintiffs by a certain day to pull down an old house and build a new one on the site, agreeably to plans to be submitted by the plaintiff's contractor, and under the inspection and to the satisfaction of their architect; and the plaintiffs agreed, when the new building should be completed, to grant a lease of the premises for a certain term at a fixed rent, the defendant agreeing to accept such lease when required. A demurrer to a bill praying specific performance and damages was overruled on the ground that the plaintiffs, waiving the specific performance of that part of the agreement which related to the building of the house, might be entitled to damages for the breach thereof, and to specific performance of the other part, viz., the contract to accept the lease. London (Mayor of) v. Southgate, 38 L. J., Ch., 141; 17 W. R. 197; 20 L. T., N. S., 107.

10. A bill in equity stated an agreement by A. to grant a lease of premises to the plaintiff, and to execute such repairs as they should jointly agree upon, to the intent that the premises should be fit for the habitation of the plaintiff and his family; and upon the performance of such stipulations, the plaintiff agreed to accept a lease; and that the plaintiff entered. A. sold the premises, subject to the agreement, and died. A bill was filed against the purchaser and A.'s representatives, and prayed specific performance against the purchaser, and damages against the representatives of A. Demurrer for want of equity, and multifariousness. Demurrer allowed on both grounds. Norris v. Jackson, 1 John. & H. 319; 7 Jur., N. S., 540.

11. Specific performance of an agreement to let the workings of quarries, and account of moneys due for working the quarries in a particular manner, refused; the party's remedy being at law. Booth v. Pollard, 4 Y. & Coll. 61.

12. A. agreed to grant a lease to B. as soon as B. should have built a house, with the necessary outbuildings, on the land, of the value of 1,400*l.* at the least, "according to a plan to be submitted to and approved by A." B. agreed to build and take the lease. No plan had been approved of:—Held, that no decree could be made for specific performance. Brace v. Womert, 25 Beav. 348.

13. A lessor agreed with the lessee to grant a lease of certain specified property if within a specified time the lessee erected certain specified buildings; the time having nearly expired and the buildings not having been begun:—Held, at the suit of the lessor, that the Court could not decree specific performance of this contract. Asylum for Female Orphans v. Waterlone, 16 W. R. 1102.

14. Agreement to grant a lease of copyhold premises for twenty-one years, and to put the same in repair, there being no evidence that to grant such lease would work a forfeiture, or that the licence of the lord could not be obtained:—Decreed, to be specifically performed. Paston v. Newton, 2 Sm. & G. 437.

Though the Court will not ordinarily decree specific performance of an agreement to repair, it is the habit of the Court to decree specific performance of agreements involving the execution of leases or other instruments containing covenants to repair. Ib.

1. The Court will not decree specific performance of a building contract which provides that a party-wall shall be pulled down and rebuilt, after the adjoining owner has had the matter referred to arbitration under the Metropolitan Building Act, and an award has been made declaring that it is not necessary to take down such party-wall. Seacell v. Webster, 29 L. J., Ch., 71.

2. The plaintiff contracted to construct vaults and let them to the defendant, who was to use them for the purpose of keeping wine. The defendant entered upon the premises and occupied them, paying the stipulated rent, for more than two years, when he for the first time found fault with the condition of the premises, and shortly afterwards left them and repudiated the contract:—Held, that under the circumstances he was entitled to do so. Dizon v. Lamare, 19 W. R. 942.

3. The plaintiff, who was a builder, agreed with the defendant, who was an owner of freehold land, to erect thirty-one houses on the land on the terms of such agreement, and also of a parol understanding communicated to the plaintiff on behalf of the defendant prior to the signing of the principal agreement. The chief stipulation of the parol understanding was the advance of moneys in definite instalments by or through the defendant to the plaintiff for the purposes of the buildings. The plaintiff afterwards took leases of the unfinished houses and executed two successive mortgages to enable defendant to raise money on them as a security for the same purposes. The defendant failed to supply the plaintiff with the required funds as stipulated under the parol agreement, which, however, had been successively departed from:—Held, in a bill praying specific performance of the parol understanding, together with damages, or at all events damages, that the plaintiff was entitled to neither, but that (the defendant submitting to it) the plaintiff might have the ordinary redemption decree. Thorpe v. Hogford, 20 W. R. 922.

4. Though the Court will not, as a rule, specifically enforce contracts to build or repair, it will do so in cases where the contract for building is in its nature defined. Hopburn v. Leather, 50 L. T. 660.

5. A purchaser of a piece of land with a well or spring upon it covenanted with the vendor, who retained land adjoining intended to be disposed of for building sites, to erect a pump and reservoir, and to supply water from the well to all houses built on the vendor's land:—Held, first, that both the benefit and the burden of the covenant ran with the land, and that the case was not within the second resolution in Spencer's case (5 Rep. 16a; 1 Sm. L. C. 60), but if not, a sub-purchaser with notice of the covenant was bound by it. Cooke v. Chilcott, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 694; 34 L. T. 207.

Held, secondly, that, though the covenant was not one of which the Court would decree specific performance directly, as being for the construction of works which the Court could not superintend, it could be enforced indirectly by an injunction restraining the defendant from allowing the work to remain unperformed. Ib.

6. The Court will not decree the specific performance of a preliminary building agreement, nor give damages for the breach of such an agreement. Wood v. Silcock, 50 L. T. 251; 32 W. R. 845.

7. In a suit for specific performance of an agreement, vague in its language, a court of equity, having regard to the terms of such agreement, will consider the surrounding circumstances, and conduct of the parties in dealing with the property comprised in it, in the interval between the making of the agreement and the commencement of the suit for its enforcement. Oxford v. Prossand, 2 L. R., P. C., 135; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 150.

P. & Co. entered into an agreement with O. & Co. for the transfer to them of the unexpired term of a lease held by P. & Co. of land and houses at Shanghai, and to build or finish certain houses thereon, to proceed with the building at once, to consult O. & Co.'s wishes in building the houses then in progress, and in building other houses not then commenced. O. & Co., on their part, agreed to take the term so to be transferred, and to pay a certain rent divided into three portions, the liability for each portion to begin from the time when the house to which that portion related was finished by P. & Co., and possession delivered over by them to O. & Co. Both parties further agreed that a proper contract should be drawn for their mutual execution by a solicitor named by them. No such contract, however, was executed. Possession was given, and the buildings altered by P. & Co. at O. & Co.'s instance:—Held, decreeing specific performance of such agreement, that the terms of the agreement expressed with sufficient clearness the intentions of the parties to bind them, from the time it was made, to do the several acts stipulated for each to perform, and that the stipulation that a proper contract should be made by a legal adviser was so isolated from the other stipulations in point of sequence, that it might be performed either directly after the signing of the memorandum of agreement or when possession was given of the first house specified, or at any subsequent time, either before or after the completion of all or any of the houses to be erected. Ib.

Held, also, that that part of the agreement which provided that the wishes of O. & Co. should be consulted in erecting the buildings was not so vague or indefinite as to render the contract impossible to be enforced, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, and to the fact of a part performance by O. & Co. in respect of the buildings and alterations of the houses. Ib.

V. CHATTELS. SALE OF, AND OTHER TRANSACTIONS RESPECTING.

1. The Court refused an injunction to restrain the defendants from acting in violation of an agreement to sell the exclusive right of printing and publishing certain maps, for which the defendants were to supply drawings, because the Court could not have compelled them in a suit for specific performance to fulfil that part of the agreement. Baldwin v. Society for Diffusing Useful Knowledge, 9 Sim. 393; 2 Jur. 161.

2. Specific performance of a contract for the sale of a barge, stores, etc., decreed in equity upon a claim. Claringbould v. Curtis, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 541.

3. Courts of equity will not lend their assistance to enforce the specific performance of ordinary contracts for the sale and purchase of chattels, unless there be something very special in the nature of the contract. On the other hand, if a trust be created, the circumstance that the subject-matter is a personal chattel will not prevent this Court from enforcing the due execution of that trust. Pooley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34.

Trusts may be constituted not merely by direct declaration of trust, but also by the constructive operation of the consequences flowing from the acts of parties. Thus Equity will enforce the execution of a trust, not only against the trustees themselves, but against all persons who obtain possession of the property affected by the trust, provided they had notice of it. Id.

A., who sold 500 tons of iron stacked on his wharf to B., in consideration of a bill accepted by a third party, gave an acknowledgment engaging to deliver it to the bearer, he, A., "having been paid for the same." B. mortgaged the iron, and, the bill having been dishonoured, A. refused to deliver the iron. The mortgagee proceeded in equity to make A. responsible for the iron:—Held, that A. had no ownership or property in the iron so stacked, and was a trustee, and therefore a demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Id.

4. A court of equity has jurisdiction to enforce specific performance of an agreement relating to a copyright. Thomleson v. Black, 1 Jur. 198.

5. The principle of courts of equity in regard to cases of specific performance of contracts concerning mere chattels, is, that where courts of law, by awarding damages, can give adequate compensation, courts of equity will not interfere. Therefore that principle cannot apply where the defaulting party has become insolvent; and the Court of Review acts on this principle. Exp. Masterman, 4 Dea. & Ch. 751; 2 Mont. & A. 209; 4 L. J., N. S., Bk., 54.

6. Specific performance of agreement, made on dissolution of partnership, that particular book used in trade should become exclusive property of one of partners, and that copy of it should be delivered to other, will be decreed. Lingen v. Simpson, 1 Sim. & S. 600.

7. Where damages in action for breach of contract to sell chattel would be insufficient remedy for purchaser, although sufficient for vendor, specific performance decreed, as remedy must be mutual. Withy v. Cottle, 1

Sim. & S. 174; T. & R. 78; 1 L. J., Ch., 117. And see 1 L. J., Ch., 5.

8. Court will not decree specific performance of contract for purchase of debt. Wright v. Bell, 5 Pri. 325; Adderley v. Dixon, 1 Sim. & S. 607. But see 2 L. J., Ch., 102.

9. Articles by a guardian for sale of timber have been carried into execution by a court of equity. Clavering v. Clavering, Mos. 224; Buaton v. Lister, 3 Atk. 383.

10. An agreement is made between A., an iron company, and B., the owner of an adjoining colliery, for the supply of coals, to be raised and delivered at the rate of 500 tons per week, A. also agreeing to loose and drain the unworked coal in B.'s colliery:—Held, that no interval in the performance of this agreement (which was continuous in its nature), should have been allowed; and that A., after the lapse of eleven months between filing his bill and breach of the agreement, was precluded from relief upon it. Semble, that the Court will not decree specific performance of a contract for delivery of a chattel by instalments where mutual duties of a complicated nature are imposed upon the parties. Mere vicinity and convenience of situation will not induce the Court to decree specific performance of a contract for supply of goods. Observations upon Buaton v. Lister (3 Atk. 383). Pollard v. Clayton, 3 W. R. 349; 1 Kay & J. 462; 1 Jur., N. S., 342.

11. In a contract for the purchase of timber, time is of the essence of the contract; and if, by difficulties improperly raised by the vendor, the timber is prevented from being felled and carried away at the time limited by the agreement, the Court will not afterwards enforce the performance of the contract. Arkwright v. Stovell, 3 L. J., Ch., 49.

12. Property in a cargo transferred by bill of sale signed by vendor and vendee; but by a new agreement signed by them before they parted, that it shall be sold and accounted for by the factor for vendor, it is reduced to agreement, and therefore remedy in equity. Weymouth v. Boyer, 1 Ves. J. 416.

13. An agreement was entered into for the sale of a ship to A. and B. (one-third to A. and two-thirds to B.), at the price of 750*l.*; and, if default should be made by the purchasers, for the re-sale of the ship, the deficiency, if any, upon the re-sale, to be made good by the defaulting purchaser. Possession of the ship was delivered to the purchasers by the vendors, who received 250*l.* from A., and two bills of exchange, drawn by them, and accepted by A., for the remaining 500*l.* In the bills of sale, by which the agreement was carried into effect, the purchase money for the one-third and two-thirds of the ship was expressed to have been paid by A. and B. respectively. The acceptances of A. were dishonoured, and he became bankrupt. On a bill filed by the vendors, who had become entitled to the whole interest in the purchase money, against B., who had become the sole owner of the ship by purchase from A.'s assignee, praying specific performance of the agreement by B., or that the ship might be sold, and the proceeds applied in payment, the Court held that it had jurisdiction, and decreed an account and payment of the unpaid purchase money by B., or a resale of the ship, in default of payment in a limited time. Lynn v. Chaters, 2 Keen 521.

1. Held, on demurrer, that although the Court will not in general entertain a bill for specific performance of an agreement simply for the delivery of specific chattels, yet specific performance of an agreement of which one clause provides for the delivery of specific chattels will not of necessity be refused. Marsh v. Milligan, 3 Jur., N. S., 979.

2. Where a chattel, from being used in business or otherwise, has a peculiar value, the Court will entertain a bill for an injunction to restrain its sale or detention. North v. Great Northern Railway Co., 2 Giff. 64; 6 Jur., N. S., 244; 29 L. J., Ch., 301.

3. The Court will enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of a chattel where pecuniary damages would not be a sufficient compensation for the breach of the contract, as where the chattel is of unusual distinction and curiosity, and of doubtful value. Faleke v. Gray, 5 Jur., N. S., 645; 29 L. J., Ch., 28.

But where the contract, although not actually fraudulent, was one in which the parties were not on equal footing, the plaintiff knowing, and the purchaser being ignorant of the value of the thing sold, and the price appeared to be inadequate, the Court refused relief. S. C. 4 Drew. 651.

4. If there has been an engagement to appropriate to a certain individual a particular cargo, or a particular part of a larger cargo, as, for example, "100 quarters of wheat out of 500 quarters, which I have now sent;" in either of these cases equity will interfere to enforce performance of the engagement; but though the person who has made an engagement to sell a certain quantity of property may be shown to possess such a quantity of that property, equity will not treat the property so possessed as available for the engagement. Hoare v. Dresser, 7 H. L. Ca. 290.

5. D. & Co. are manufacturers of light fabrics, of which the patterns are supplied by their own artists. Every spring and autumn they introduce new patterns into the English market; and after the season is over they are in the habit of selling their surplus stock at a greatly reduced price, but always for the purpose of having it shipped to foreign countries, where its sale at the reduced price could not injuriously affect the home trade of the plaintiffs. G., the plaintiff's agent, accordingly sold some lots of such surplus stock to P., at Manchester, as he alleged upon the express understanding and agreement that the goods were to be shipped by P. to the United States and the West Indies, and were not to be sold in the home market. It appeared that P. obtained a longer than the usual term of credit in the transaction, as plaintiffs stated, at P.'s request, upon the ground that he could not sooner obtain the money from abroad in return for the goods. Upon a bill for specific performance, and praying for an injunction to restrain P. from selling the goods in England:—Held, that the evidence of the contract was insufficient, and the proper remedy in such a case is at law. Dollfus v. Pickford, 2 W. R. 204.

And that an injunction will not be granted to restrain breach of agreement where damages at law are adequate. Id. 220.

6. A defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, of which the material clause was in the following words. "Sold R. F., Esq., M.P., the whole of the get of the No. 3 coal out of the Newbridge Colliery property for five years, the quantity not to be less than at present delivered to his Taff Vale works, unless the coal should fail at 6s. a ton; payment as usual." He afterwards sold some of the coal to other persons, and contracted to sell the colliery itself:—Held, that the agreement was, in effect, for the sale of a chattel, and that not one of specific value, but a marketable commodity; that the plaintiff's remedy was at law for damages, and not in equity for specific performance; and that being so the Court would not extend its jurisdiction in granting an injunction to restrain a breach of a portion of an agreement when it could not enforce the whole. Fothergill v. Rowland, 43 L. J., Ch., 252; 22 W. R. 42; 29 L. T., N. S., 414; 17 L. R., Eq., 132.

Specific Delivery of Chattels.] See CHATTELS.

VI. DEBTS, SALE OF, AND MONEY DEMANDS.

7. Specific performance decreed, at suit of vendor, of contract for sale of debts proved under commission of bankruptcy. Adderly v. Dixon, 1 Sim. & S. 607; 2 L. J., Ch., 102.

8. Court will not decree a specific performance of contract for purchase of debt. Wright v. Bell, 5 Price 325.

9. By an agreement A. stipulated that he would transfer and assign all his property in the West Indies to B., as his chief creditor, on B.'s discharging A. from all obligations then existing relating to the business, and particularly a debt due to a creditor, from which B. was to obtain a release from creditor. To a bill by A. for specific performance of this agreement, a demurrer for want of equity was filed, and that the remedy was at law:—Held, that A. had a right to a specific performance of the agreement in a court of equity. Clowes v. Garraway, 7 L. T., N. S., 243.

10. The payee of two promissory notes being about to sue the maker, the brother of the maker agreed to pay 200*l.* to the payee, in trust for E., or 6*l.* 10*s.* per quarter, so long as the 200*l.* should be unpaid, so that the notes should be suspended and rendered inoperative so long as the brother continued to pay the 6*l.* 10*s.* a quarter to the payee, and on payment of the 200*l.* all claim on the notes to cease, and the same to be given up. The brother not having paid the 6*l.* 10*s.* to the payee for two quarters, but having paid these sums to E., the cestui que trust (as the latter admitted), the payee brought his action upon the notes against the maker:—Held, in error, reversing the judgment of the Queen's Bench, that the agreement could not be pleaded in bar to the action upon the notes, but might be the subject of a cross-action:—Held, in equity, that the agreement must be construed as a contract by the brother, to provide for E. the annuity of 25*l.* or the gross sum of 200*l.* as a substitute for the two notes, and by the payee that the two notes should thenceforth be only a security for the performance of such contract, and not as an agreement under which the original right of the payee against the maker would revive on any failure of the quarterly payments by the brother; that the brother was entitled to the specific performance of the agreement in equity, not on the ground of circuity of cross-actions which the rule of law occasioned, but on the ground that this Court, by modifying its decree, could give to all parties the benefit of the agreement, whilst a court of law, being unable so to modify its judgment, could not give to one party the benefit of the agreement without depriving another party altogether of such benefit. Beech v. Ford, 7 Hare 208.

1. Where a bill was filed for the specific performance of an agreement, and the whole scope and object of the bill were for a purely money demand, the amount of which, if ascertained, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover by an action at law, and compensation in money being sought on the footing of an account, the Court held that relief under the jurisdiction of specific performance could not be granted. Ord v. Johnston, 1 Jur., N. S., 1063.

The Court never interferes in support of a purely voluntary agreement, or where no consideration emanates from the individual seeking the performance of the agreement. Id.

2. A court of equity will not entertain a bill for the specific performance of an agreement, to pay in a certain event, which has happened, an annual sum by quarterly instalments. Brough v. Oddy, 1 Russ. & M. 55; Taml. 215; 8 L. J., Ch., 23.

3. The plaintiff, who was a builder, agreed with the defendant, who was an owner of freehold land, to erect thirty-one houses on the land on the terms of such agreement, and also of a parol understanding communicated to the plaintiff on behalf of the defendant prior to the signing of the principal agreement. The chief stipulation of the parol understanding was the advance of moneys in definite instalments by or through the defendant to the plaintiff for the purposes of the buildings. The plaintiff afterwards took leases of the unfinished houses and executed two successive mortgages to enable defendant to raise money on them as a security for the same purposes. The defendant failed to supply the plaintiff with the required funds as stipulated under the parol agreement, which, however, had been successively departed from:—Held, in a bill praying specific performance of the parol understanding, together with damages, or at all events damages, that the plaintiff was entitled to neither, but that (the defendant submitting to it) the plaintiff might have the ordinary redemption decree. Thorpe v. Hogford, 20 W. R. 922.

4. A bill does not lie for specific performance of a partnership agreement, where the sole relief sought is the payment of a sum of money, for which there is a remedy by action. Bagnoll v. Edwards, 10 Ir. B., Eq., 215.

5. The agent of a railway company made a verbal agreement with the contractor for the line, that if he would build on land of the company certain cottages more substantially than would be required for his own purposes, and would leave them for the use of the company, then the company would pay him 5,000*l.* The cottages were accordingly built, and when the railway was completed the contractor left them on the land, and the agent of the company made an agreement with the contractor that he should be paid 500*l.* a year for the cottages by way of rent, with an option to the company to purchase them for 5,000*l.* This agreement was confirmed by a resolution of the board of directors. The company paid the 500*l.* a year some years, and then refused to pay:—Held, that the claim of the contractor being simply for payment of money could not be enforced in the Court of Chancery; and that though the contractor was unable to sue at law because the agreement was not under seal, he did not thereby obtain an equity to enforce a claim for money. Crampton v. Varna Railway Co., 7 L. R., Ch., 562; 41 L. J., Ch., 817; 20 W. R. 713.

Held, also, that inasmuch as the contractor did not act in ignorance of the rights of the company, he could not claim compensation for having been induced to build on the land of the company. Id.

VII. INDEMNITY. CONTRACTS FOR.

6. Covenant to save harmless decreed in specie; to wit, the principal was decreed to indemnify the surety. Ranelagh v. Hayes, 1 Vern. 189.

7. Where a bill is filed to enforce a covenant for a simple indemnity the Court will not decree specific performance; but where the indemnifying party also covenants to do an act, the doing of which will constitute a complete indemnity, specific performance will be decreed in such a case. London & South Western Railway Co. v. Humphrey, 6 W. R. 784.

8. The payee of two promissory notes being about to sue the maker, the brother of the maker agreed to pay 200*l.* to the payee, in trust for E., or 6*l.* 10*s.* per quarter, so long as the 200*l.* should be unpaid, so that the notes should be suspended and rendered inoperative so long as the brother continued to pay the 6*l.* 10*s.* a quarter to the payee; and on payment of the 200*l.*, all claim on the notes to cease, and the same to be given up. The brother not having paid the 6*l.* 10*s.* to the payee for two quarters, but having paid these sums to E., the cestui que trust (as the latter admitted), the payee brought his action upon the notes against the maker:—Held, in error, reversing the judgment of the Queen's Bench, that the agreement could not be pleaded in bar to the action upon the note, but might be the subject of a cross-action. Held, in equity, that the agreement must be construed as a contract by the brother to provide for E. the annuity of 25*l.*, or the gross sum of 200*l.*, as a substitute for the two notes, and by the payee that the two notes should thenceforth be only a security for the performance of such contract, and not as an agreement, under which the original right of the payee against the maker would revive on any failure of the quarterly payments by the brother; that the brother was entitled to the specific performance of the agreement in equity, not on the ground of the circuitry of cross-actions which the rule of law occasioned, but on the ground that this court, by modifying its decree, could give to all parties the benefit of the agreement, whilst a court of law, being unable so to modify its judgment, could not give to one party the benefit of the agreement without depriving another party altogether of such benefit. Beech v. Ford, 7 Hare 208.

1. Where one insurance company, A., transferred all its business, property, effects, and liabilities to another company, B., on the terms of A., shareholders being indemnified, on a bill, by A. for specific performance of the agreement, the Court decreed such indemnity, and the other company, which was ordered to be wound up, having by its official manager filed a cross-bill, alleging fraud and misrepresentation; and that such agreement was ultra vires, the company, B., having had the benefit of the agreement:—Held, not to be entitled to object that the agreement was ultra vires and improperly entered into by the managing body. Anglo-Australian Life Assurance Co. v. British Provident Society, 3 Giff. 521; 8 Jur., N. S., 299; 4 De G. F. & J. 341.

2. In a suit by an assignor of a lease claiming from his assignee indemnity in respect of breaches of the covenants in the lease, the Court will direct merely payment on account of breaches of covenant already committed, and will not make a general declaration of the assignor's right to indemnity, giving liberty to apply from time to time in case of future breach. Lloyd v. Dimmack, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 398; 47 L. J., Ch., 398; 38 L. T., N. S., 173; 28 W. R. 458.

VIII. LOANS.

3 Where a person advancing money refuses after an absolute conveyance to execute a defeasance, the Court will relieve. Walker v. Walker, 2 Atk. 100.

4 A court of equity will not decree the specific performance of a contract to borrow a sum of money on mortgage. Rogers v. Challis, 27 Beav. 175; 6 Jur., N. S., 334; 29 L. J., Ch., 240.

The Court, notwithstanding 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, has no jurisdiction to award compensation or damages against a person who has refused to accept a loan of money for which he had contracted. Id.

5. An agreement to join the firm as partner, or otherwise to lend the firm 5,000*l.* for two years on the acceptances of the firm, is not a contract which can be specifically performed. Sichel v. Mosenthal, 8 Jur., N. S., 275; 31 L. J., Ch., 386; 10 W. R. 283; 5 L. T., N. S., 784; 30 Beav. 371.

6. Whether in the simple case of an advance of money with an agreement to execute a bond for its repayment, such an agreement would be executed in this Court. Quære. South Wales Railway Co. v. Wythes, 1 Kay & J. 186; 24 L. J., Ch., 1; 3 W. R. 3; 3 Eq. Rep. 70. S. C. on appeal 3 W. R. 133; 24 L. J., Ch., 87; 3 Eq. Rep. 153.

7. A court of equity will not entertain a bill for the specific performance of an agreement, to pay in a certain event, which has happened, an annual sum by quarterly instalments Brough v. Odby, 1 Russ. & M. 55; Tam. 215; 8 L. J., Ch., 23.

8. A Gibraltar firm entered into a contract with A., of Algeciras, in Spain, in consideration of property having been transferred to them, to open a credit in his favour to the extent of 9,400 dollars, and to honour his drafts to that amount. After advancing him some sums of money, they refused to accept a bill for 1,000 dollars, drawn upon them by him, and subsequently refused to make any further advances. Proceedings in equity were thereupon commenced by him in the Supreme Court of Gibraltar to enforce a specific performance of the contract, and to obtain an award of damages under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, for the non-performance of the contract:—Held, that a court of equity will not decree the specific performance of a mere agreement to advance money. Moreover, that that being so, it has no jurisdiction to award damages. However, the Court of Gibraltar might have proceeded with the case as if it had been commenced as an action. Larios v. Gurety, 5 L. R., P. C., 346.

On its being contended that the cause of action would be merely the breach of an agreement to pay a sum of money, and that accordingly nothing could be recovered by way of damage but the principal money contracted to be paid and interest:—Held, that inasmuch as the contract was a special one, whereby the firm became bound to honour, out of moneys agreed to be placed by them to his credit, the drafts of A. up to a certain amount, he was entitled to general and substantial damages for the breach of it. Id.

9. In an action to enforce specific performance of a parol agreement to execute a bill of sale of personal chattels, upon an ex parte motion before appearance of the defendant, there being evidence of immediate danger of the chattels in question being disposed of, an order was made appointing the plaintiff (without security) interim receiver for fourteen days, or until a receiver should be appointed under a reference to chambers for that purpose which the Vice-Chancellor had directed. The plaintiff undertook to deal with the property only under the direction of the Court, and to abide by any order which the Court might make as to damages or otherwise. Taylor v. Eekersley, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 302; 45 L. J., Ch. D., 527.

Agreements to give a Mortgage.] See MORTGAGE, I. IX.

IX. PERSONAL SERVICES.

10. The partners in certain brass works enter into articles with A., that he shall serve them as their manager and overseer during his life; and besides a stipulated yearly salary, he was to have 3*s.* 6*d.* for every hundredweight of brass wire made by him or any other person during his life. A. was afterwards discharged by the partners from their service, and on a bill brought for a specific performance of these articles, it was decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to all the advantages thereby stipulated for by him, except the

3s. 6d. payable to him for every hundredweight of brass wire made at the mills; which Lord Cowper conceived was intended as a reward attending the produce of the works, during such time only as the plaintiff supervised the same. But this part of the decree was reversed, and he was held to be entitled to this allowance during his life. Bull v. Coggs, 1 Bro. P. C. 140.

1. The Court cannot specifically perform an agreement, whereby A. agrees to compose and write reports of cases determined in a court of justice, to be printed and published by a particular individual for a stipulated remuneration, nor interfere by injunction to restrain the party from permitting reports written by him to be published by another person. The remedy, if any, is at law. Clarke v. Price, 2 Wils. 157.

2. A grant was made by Dr. Y., Bishop of Ely, in 1801, to P. for his life of the ancient office of receiver of the rents of the lands belonging to the see of Ely. For a long series of years the receiver for the time being had not only received the rents, but had prepared leases, surrenders, and counterparts of leases, had registered leases and assignments of leases in a register kept by the bishop, and had made searches in the muniment room in the residence of the bishop whenever requested by persons requiring information contained in the register and records belonging to the bishop, for all which duties he received fees. In 1836, Dr. A., immediately after his appointment as bishop, sent a notice to P. not to prepare any more leases, surrenders, or counterparts of leases, and not to receive any more rents. P. filed a bill against Dr. A., praying that it might be declared that P. was entitled to exercise all the duties and receive the perquisites hitherto exercised and received by the receiver, and that the bishop might be restrained from interfering with such exercise and enjoyment:—Held, that whatever might be the legal right of P. to the office, and to its alleged appurtenances, no relief could be given to him in equity, on the grounds of the hardship of forcing the services of a stranger in an office of trust upon the bishop and the want of mutuality, the nature of the duties and services asserted by the plaintiff being such as to preclude the possibility of a decree in this court against him compelling their specific performance. Pickering v. Ely (Bishop), 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 249; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 271; 7 Jur. 479.

3. Articles of agreement are executed between the crew of a vessel, of the one part, and the captain of the other part, containing a stipulation, that the seamen are not to have any demand against the owner of the ship: the owner subsequently acts under the agreement, and, in pursuance of it, makes payment to the seamen out of the proceeds of the cargo:—Held, that the owner, by such conduct, becomes a party to the agreement, and that a bill for the performance of the agreement may be maintained against him. Gosling v. Smith, 3 L. J., Ch., 5.

4. A bill was filed for the specific performance of an agreement, by which the plaintiff was to receive a percentage upon a certain number of bottles of mineral water, imported by the defendant from the Duchy of Nassau, in consideration of personal services rendered by him to defendant for procuring the right of exportation. An agreement was also made that a deed should be executed to carry out the terms of the agreement. The defendant appeared to the bill, and applied for an extension of time to answer. The defendant then died, and upon a bill of revivor and supplement being filed against his personal representative a general demurrer was put in:—Held, that the Court might direct the execution of a deed for carrying out an agreement of this nature, but at all events, the demurrer could not be sustained, since the original defendant had applied for further time to answer, and his representative was bound by that act, and was precluded from demurring. Granville v. Betts, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 32.

5. The Court has no jurisdiction to order the cancellation of articles of apprenticeship, and the return of a portion of the premium, on the ground of the wrongful refusal of the master to continue to instruct his apprentice in his trade, according to his agreement. Webb v. England, 29 Beav. 44; 7 Jur., N. S., 153; 30 L. J., Ch., 222; 9 W. R. 183; 3 L. T., N. S., 574.

A bill for the specific performance of articles of apprenticeship cannot be maintained. The proper remedy is to sue at law for damages. Ib.

6. An owner of a coal wharf agreed to let it, and at the same time agreed to act as agent in the coal business for the tenant, and not to act for any other person:—Held, that these agreements were inseparable, and that specific performance of the agreement to let would not be decreed, because the Court could not enforce performance on the other side. Ogden v. Fawcett, 9 Jur., N. S., 288; 32 L. J., Ch., 73; 11 W. R. 128; 7 L. T., N. S., 515.

The fact of the agreement having been acted on for some time made no difference. Ib.

7. The plaintiff, being owner of certain patents, entered into a written agreement with other persons to form a company for working these patents, he agreeing on his part to sell the patents in foreign countries, and to give his whole services to the company for two years, and to do his best to improve the invention, and to impart such improvements to the company:—Held, that he could not obtain specific performance of this agreement against his co-promoters, because from the nature of his own part of the agreement, the Court could not compel specific performance of it by him. Stocker v. Wedderburn, 3 Kay & J. 393; 26 L. J., Ch., 713.

8. Specific performance of an agreement between four persons, regulating the right to all their future inventions, refused, on the following grounds: first, that it was too vague and uncertain as to its duration; secondly, that it involved a contract for personal services of an uncertain duration; thirdly, the want of mutuality in regard to one of the stipulations; and fourthly, that the position of the parties had been materially varied by the assignment by one, to a stranger, of all his interest under the agreement. Firth v. Ridley, 33 Beav. 516.

9. A suit cannot be sustained which seeks to enforce an agreement for the continuance of the plaintiff's duties or personal services to the defendant, inasmuch as those services might be rendered in a manner productive of injury rather than benefit to the latter; and the Court does not possess the means of compelling a person to fulfil his duty to his employer under such a contract. Therefore, when it was agreed that the respondent should "continue to employ the petitioner as salesman," for the purpose of disposing of his stock in trade, on certain terms, some of which tended to show that a sale of that stock to the petitioner was thereby intended, but others positively showed that a relation approaching to that of shopman and owner was for a time to exist between the parties, a petition praying that the agreement might be specifically performed and carried into execution was dismissed. Fitzpatrick v. Nolan, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 671.

Semble, that vice versa, the employer could not have maintained a suit to oblige the other party to discharge his duty according to the agreement. Ib.

Semble, also, that where a date has not been specified in the agreement, although intended to be so, as that at which an important obligation is to arise, this would of itself be, on the ground of uncertainty, an adequate reason for not enforcing the contract. Ib.

1. Specific performance cannot be enforced of an agreement, the essence of which is that it is one for personal services. White v. Boby, 37 L. T., N. S., 652; 26 W. R. 133.

A plaintiff will not obtain damages instead of specific performance, unless he can show that he had an equity at the time of issuing the writ. Ib.

2. Where a person agrees with auctioneers for the sale by them of property in a particular manner, and he then changes his mind, the rule is that, subject to the claims of the auctioneers for their expenses incurred, the Court will not enforce such an agreement. Chinnock v. Sainsbury, 6 Jur., N. S., 1318; 9 W. R. 7; 3 L. T., N. S., 258; 30 L. J., Ch., 409; 5 N. R. 185.

In consideration of the plaintiffs (auctioneers) having advanced to the defendant a sum of money, the defendant agreed in writing, to deposit with them for sale the whole of his collection of pictures, upon the understanding that the amount of advances and the commission were to be deducted from the proceeds of the sale. The defendant deposited only a portion of the collection, which, however, the plaintiffs proceeded to sell, but it realised a very much smaller sum than was anticipated; in fact, not more than half the amount of the advances. The defendant refused to deposit for sale the remaining portion of the collection, and the plaintiffs filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement. A demurrer to the bill was allowed. Ib.

3. A contract by plaintiff to take the management of baths at a fixed salary, and a percentage on the profits, and a guarantee of a sum for life in the event of the baths failing or being disposed of:—Held, inter alia, that, the contract being for personal services, the Court would not decree performance of it. Gillig v. McGhee, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 48.

4. A railway company agreed with contractors that the contractors should work the line and keep the engines and rolling plant in repair at a specified remuneration, and that the contract should be in force for seven years, but with a proviso for its determination if the contractors did not, within forty-eight hours after notice given by the company, obey the instructions given in such notice:—Held, that the agreement was not of such a kind as to be enforceable by injunction restraining the company from determining the contract and resuming the possession of their line for non-compliance with impracticable requisitions. Quere, whether such an agreement is consistent with public policy. Johnson v. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co., 3 De G. M. & G. 914; 17 Jur. 1015; 22 L. J., Ch., 921.

Observations on the application of the principle of specific performance to contracts respecting personal services. Ib.

5. An agreement had been entered into by carriers and a railway company, by which duties were to be performed by the carriers in loading and unloading goods at the termini of the railway. It was declared and understood between the parties that it was not the intention of the company to take such duties into their own hands, unless their interests should appear to them absolutely so to require, in consequence of such duties not having been performed satisfactorily by the agents (the carriers), or by the servants under their control. The company came to a resolution that the system of dealing with the goods traffic inside the then station and other London stations of the company was unsatisfactory, and that the interests of the company required that the loading and unloading of the goods traffic in such stations should be performed by the company themselves:—Held, that the Court would not interfere by injunction to restrain the company from acting up to their resolution—the agreement involving personal service, and as such being one of which the Court was not in the habit of granting a decree for specific performance. Chaplin v. North-Western Railway Co., 5 L. T., N. S., 601.

6. The Court will not interfere by injunction to restrain a railway company from determining, even upon a notice which may be irregular and insufficient, an agreement with contractors for the performance of certain duties in reference to the goods traffic of the line; the agreement involving personal service, and as such being one of which the Court would not grant specific performance. Horne v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 10 W. R. 170.

7. The plaintiff being dismissed by the defendants from their service, filed his bill for an injunction to restrain the defendants from excluding him from the management:—Held, discharging the injunction which had been granted by the Vice-Chancellor, that the contract being of hiring and service, was one of which specific performance could not be enforced. Stocker v. Brocklebank, 3 Macn. & G. 250; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 401; 15 Jur. 591.

8. The defendant had agreed to act as servant to the plaintiff, and no other person, for seven years, with power to either party to determine the agreement on payment of 500*l.*, and subsequently engaged himself to another master without paying the 500*l*. An injunction having been granted by the Vice-Chancellor, on appeal, it was dissolved on the defendant bringing into court 600*l*. Thornton v. Kendall, 11 W. R. 352.

1. The Court will not decree specific performance of a simple contract of hiring and service: and if one party abandons such a contract, however wrongfully, he will not be restrained from committing a breach of a negative covenant which was part of the contract. Brett v. East India & London Shipping Co., 3 N. R. 688; 2 Hem. & M. 404.

2. The plaintiffs claimed the specific performance of an agreement for the composition of a literary work by the defendant, alleging that the agreement was contained in three written documents. At the trial the first and third of the documents were proved; the second was not produced, nor was any evidence given of its contents. The defendant, by his statement of defence, denied that he had agreed with the plaintiffs as alleged by them with reference to the second document:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to specific performance of the agreement contained in the first and third documents, or to damages for the breach of it. Post v. Marsh, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 395; 50 L. J., Ch., 287; 43 L. T. 628; 29 W. R. 198.

1. Suits between Company and Shareholder.

3. The defendant agreed in writing to take shares in a joint-stock company (which were transferable), "and to execute the deed of settlement when required." Specific performance was refused. Sheffield Gas Consumers' Co. v. Harrison, 17 Beav. 294.

4. Where there is a clear contract to accept shares, and the remedy at law is shown to be inadequate, the Court will decree specific performance. Oriental Inland Steam Co. v. Briggs, 2 John. & H. 625.

But where the validity of a contract to accept the shares was doubtful, and the inadequacy of the legal remedy not clearly made out, and there having been an unexplained delay of two years, a demurrer to a bill for specific performance of a contract to accept shares was allowed, with costs. Id.

A shareholder in a company applied to the directors for an allotment of new shares, which they were authorised to issue, and signed an undertaking to accept the same or any less number that might be allotted to him, to pay the calls thereon when due, and to sign the articles of association when required. The shares applied for were duly allotted; and in the notification of allotment he was informed that the articles of association must be signed by him, and in default the shares and deposit would be forfeited to the company. The articles of association contained no clause authorising the forfeiture of the shares for such a cause. The allottee having refused to sign the articles of association, or to pay the calls which were from time to time made upon the shares, the company filed a bill for specific performance of the undertaking contained in his application for the shares:—Held, that the contract had been varied by the notification of allotment, and that the bill could not be sustained. 8 C. 8 Jur., N. S., 201; 31 L. J., Ch., 241; 10 W. R. 125; 5 L. T., N. S., 477; 4 De G. F. & J. 191; 31 L. J., Ch., 241.

The company having delayed filing a bill for two years after the allottee's refusal to sign the articles:—Held, that such delay was not in itself fatal to their case. Id.

5. A bill by a company alleged that the defendant had agreed to accept shares. The articles of association were silent as to the mode of acceptance, and the Joint Stock Companies Act 1856, s. 9 and schedule B, applied, by which the acceptance must be in writing signed. Defendant had never signed any acceptance. This fact and the statute were set up by the plea:—Held, that the agreement was a good agreement to do that which the statute required. New Brunswick, etc., Co., v. Muggeridge, 4 Drew. 686.

6. Parts of an agreement can be separately enforced if an intention to separate the parts appears in the agreement. Odessa Tramways Co. v. Mendel, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 235; 47 L. J., Ch., 505; 38 L. T. 731; 26 W. R. 887. Affirming 37 L. T. 275.

The fact that an agreement is carried out by two instruments affords a presumption that the contracts in the two instruments are separable. Id.

A company was, by its articles of association, prohibited from issuing shares below par without the sanction of a general meeting. M. agreed to subscribe for 2,000 shares in the company, which should be taken up and paid for in full by him, in such numbers and at such times as should be required for the purposes of the company. On the same day on which he entered into this agreement, the board of directors agreed to pay him 4,000*l*. in consideration of the services rendered by him in connection with the company. The company failed. On an action brought by the company against M. for specific performance of his agreement:—Held, that, as M. had acted in collusion with the directors to defraud the company, he could not be heard to set up this fraud for the purpose of invalidating the agreement to take the shares; that as the parties had contemplated a piecemeal performance of the agreement, the Court could decree specific performance of a part of it; and that in the absence of mala fides the resolution of the directors to call up the shares was conclusive evidence that the money was required for the purposes of the company.

7. The owners of an English patent, and of certain foreign patents obtained for the same invention, agreed with A., in consideration of pecuniary advances made by him to them, to procure the transfer to him of certain fully paid-up shares in a proposed company, to be formed with the object of purchasing their English and foreign patents, and which were to be allotted to them in part payment of their interests in the patents. The company was to be called the Non-Radiating Steam Engine Company, and was to have a capital of 220,000*l.* The patentees also appointed A. their agent for the sale of a certain number of the shares that were to be allotted to them in such company, and it was arranged that the shares which A. should obtain for his advances should be applied towards fulfilment of the contracts which he, as their agent, should enter into with purchasers of shares. Under these arrangements A. became entitled to 847 shares, and sold 224 shares to different persons. The scheme of the company, as at first proposed, was abandoned, and the patentees brought out a company called the Patent Steam Engine Company, with a capital of 100,000*l.*, and formed with the object of purchasing the English patent only. The patentees then refused to transfer any of the shares which they had acquired in the second company to A., and the several persons to whom he had sold shares. On a bill by A. and the several purchasers of shares from him to enforce specific performance of the arrangements which had been entered into between A. and the patentees:—Held, that the second company comprehended, in effect, the substance of the contract which existed between the parties, and that an objection for want of mutuality in the contract could not be sustained. Turner v. Moy, 32 L. T., N. S., 56.

Held, also, that an objection for multifariousness, on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs, and that each plaintiff ought separately to make out his own case, could not, under the circumstances, be supported.

1. Directors of a company had power, on non-payment of calls, to sue for them, or forfeit and sell the shares. They proposed to a shareholder to relieve him from further liability, on his consenting to an absolute forfeiture. He assented, but the directors, having afterwards discovered that he was in good circumstances, refused to complete:—The Court declined to compel the directors specifically to perform the contract. Harris v. North Devon Railway Co., 20 Beav. 384.

2. In 1814 the Grand Canal Company created certain stock with peculiar advantages to the subscribers, the legality of which was doubtful. In 1831 they empowered the Court of Directors to exchange for new stock such stock of 1814 as the holders thereof were willing to bring in, upon certain terms. The plaintiffs, one of whom was a director and the other a stockholder, and both subscribers to the stock of 1814, refused to accede to the terms offered by the resolution of 1831; but having so acted that by their conduct they might have induced other stockholders of 1814 to accept of the arrangement proposed by the resolution of 1831, upon a bill filed for a specific performance of the terms of the resolution in 1814, they were refused relief in respect of the stock of 1814. Corballis v. Grand Canal Co., 3 Ir. Eq. R. 29.

2. Suits between Transferor and Transferee.

3. The Court will decree a specific performance of an agreement for the sale of a certain number of shares in a railway company. Dunouff v. Albrecht 12 Sim. 189.

4. A plaintiff asserted that he had contracted to purchase some shares from the defendant, but the contract was not in writing; the fact was contested, and it was proved by the plaintiff alone. There was, however, proof that the plaintiff had paid the defendant money, but on what account did not appear, and that the defendant had admitted, in writing, that the shares belonged to the plaintiff, though they had not been transferred for fourteen years:—Held, that the contract was sufficiently proved. Parish v. Parish, 32 Beav. 207.

5. The plaintiff agreed to transfer certain shares to the defendant, who agreed to take the same, and accept a transfer thereof, and to indemnify the plaintiff from future calls. No deposit had been paid by the plaintiff on the shares. A bill, filed for specific performance of the agreement, demurred to on the ground of no consideration. The decision of Romilly, M. R. (4 Jur., N. S., 576; 6 W. R. 576), allowing the demurrer, overruled. Cheale v. Kenward, 4 Jur., N. S., 984; 27 L. J., Ch., 784; 3 De G. & J. 27; 6 W. R. 810.

6. Specific performance was decreed of a contract to sell shares in a company, although the deed of settlement provided, that no shareholder should be at liberty to transfer his shares except in such manner as the board should approve; and the board refused to give its consent to the transfer. Poole v. Middleton, 7 Jur., N. S., 1262; 9 W. R. 758; 4 L. T., N. S., 631.

7. The deed of settlement of a company provided that the liability of a vendor of shares in the company should cease after the approval of the purchaser by the directors, and entry of his name in the share register book. A. verbally agreed with B. to sell him certain shares in the company, and received the purchase money for them, but the deed of transfer was not executed until after an order had been made for the winding up of the company. The official assignee refused to acknowledge the purchaser as proprietor of the shares:—Held, that the agreement was conditional on the approval of the purchaser by the directors, and that the vendor could not enforce specific performance of it. Seamble, that in the absence of special stipulations, the payment of the purchase money did raise a constructive trust, so as to entitle the vendor to indemnity from the purchaser against liabilities incurred in respect of the shares. Birmingham v. Sheridan, Re Waterloo Life, etc., Insurance Co., 33 Beav. 660. S. C. nom. Birmingham v. Sheridan, Re Waterloo Life Insurance Co., 10 Jur., N. S., 415; 33 L. J., Ch., 571; 12 W. R. 658; 10 L. T., N. S., 256.

8. W. S., being a provisionally registered shareholder in a railway company for 100 scrip certificates for shares, through a broker, employed auctioneers to sell them by public auction. R. F., the defendant, became the purchaser of twenty-five shares, and other persons purchased the remainder. Shortly afterwards, and without the concurrence of W. S., the defendant, through the medium of the same auctioneers, sold the shares at an advanced price to J. C. J. C.'s name was furnished to the plaintiff's stockbroker as the purchaser of the shares, and a transfer deed of the shares from the plaintiff to J. C. was executed by the plaintiff. The deed of transfer was never registered by the company under seal, but the shares continued provisionally registered in the name of the plaintiff. After several calls had been made by the company in respect of the shares, some of which the plaintiff paid, a bill was filed praying that the defendant might be ordered to execute a proper deed of transfer from the plaintiff, and to reimburse him the payments made in respect of the calls, and to indemnify him against costs and expenses; and on reference to the master, he found that the plaintiff could not make a good title to the twenty-five shares. On further directions, the Court held, first, that the plaintiff had no title; and, secondly, that the privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was broken by the transfer to J. C.; and the bill was dismissed, with costs. Shaw v. Fisher, 1 Jur., N. S., 971; 2 De G. & Sm. 11; 3 W. R. 601. Affirmed 1 Jur., N. S., 1064; 4 W. R. 35; 5 De G. M. & G. 596.

1. An arrangement having been made between a managing director of a bank and S., that the managing director should procure the transfer of 4,000 shares to S. or his nominees, the shares to be paid for by S. W., one of the shareholders who had acceded to this agreement transferred his shares to K., a nominee of S., by a deed, reciting a contract for sale by W. to K., and acknowledging the purchase money to have been paid. K. took this transfer at the request of and as a trustee for S., and on the faith of the acknowledgment in the deed, and the assurance of S. that the purchase money had been paid. The money was never in fact paid:—Held, that W. was entitled to recover it from K. by suit in equity. Wilson v. Keating, 4 De G. & J. 588; 5 Jur., N. S., 815; 28 L. J., Ch., 895; 27 Beav. 121.

2. A bonâ fide sale of shares in a company made after the presentation of a petition to wind up, but before advertisement of it, the parties being ignorant of the position of the company, may be supported by the Court in the exercise of its discretion given by the Companies Act of 1862, s. 153. But the Court will not compel a purchaser to complete the sale and register the shares in his name if the transaction is incomplete. Emmerson's case, 36 L. J., Ch., 177.

3. Although, in the sale of shares in mining concerns, the question of title is not the same as of so much land, the vendor is, nevertheless, bound to show a sufficient title for the satisfaction of the purchaser, considering the nature of the property sold: and a review of the report of the Master (made, as the Court thought, on erroneous grounds) was directed, varying the judgment below. Curling v. Flight,

3. Effect of Companies Act, s. 35.

4. The Court has no jurisdiction under the Companies Act of 1862, s. 35, to grant specific performance of an agreement to transfer shares or to enforce against the company an equitable claim to be registered as a shareholder; but where an applicant has a legal title the Court will compel the company to enter his name on the register, although his title is disputed by the person registered as holder. Exp. Sargent, Re Tahiti Cotton and Coffee Plantation Co., 43 L. J., Ch., 425; 17 L. R., Eq., 273; 22 W. R. 815.

5. A shareholder in a limited company sold his shares, and the purchaser sold them to a sub-purchaser. The vendor executed transfers—first, to the purchaser, and secondly, to a nominee of the sub-purchaser; but, owing to disputes between the purchaser and the sub-purchaser, neither transfer was registered; and at the date of a winding-up order subsequently made against the company, the name of the original vendor remained on the register as the holder of the shares, and he was placed on the list of contributories. An order made by the Master of the Rolls, removing the name of the original vendor, and substituting that of the sub-purchaser, was discharged by the Lord Justices,—by Turner, L. J., on the ground, that the jurisdiction to rectify the register depended on the Companies Act 1862, s. 35, and, being decretory, ought, under the circumstances, not to be exercised; and, by Cairns, L. J., on the ground, that the company being in no default in the matter, the jurisdiction under the Act could not be exercised. Ward's case, 36 L. J., Ch., 462; 2 L. R., Ch., 431; 15 W. R. 569; 16 L. T., N. S., 254.

Semble, the jurisdiction to rectify errors in the register is generally applicable in all cases of error, whether occasioned by default of the company or otherwise. Id.

Semble, the object of s. 35 is to provide for the correction of errors in the register caused by the default of the company, and of such errors alone. Id.

6. A shareholder in a company whose articles of association contained a clause prohibiting the directors from carrying on the business of the company or making calls, until all the shares were taken up, except after a resolution to continue the company, successfully resisted an action for calls, on the ground that the whole of the shares were not taken up, and that no such resolution had been passed. He then applied to have his name removed from the register:—Held, that the power of the Court to remove a shareholder's name from the register only existed in the two cases of his name having been improperly entered, and of his having ceased to be a member; and that neither circumstance occurred here. Exp. Ward, 37 L. J., Ch., 83; 18 L. T., N. S., 445; 16 W. R. 763.

1. When articles of association require transfers of shares to be executed by both parties, the Court has no power under the Companies Act 1862, s. 35, to rectify the register by removing the name of a transferor, unless the transfer has been executed by the transferee. Muggrave and Hart's case, 5 L. R., Eq., 193; 37 L. J., Ch., 161; 16 W. R. 247.

XI. STOCK.

2. A bill in equity will not lie for specific performance of an agreement to transfer stock; secus, where the thing contracted for may be particularly commodious to the party. Cud or Cudde v. Rutter, 1 P. W. 570; 5 Vin. Abr. 538, pl. 21.

A bill in equity will not lie for specific performance of covenant to transfer South Sea stock. Id.

3. No specific performance of agreement for transfer of stock. Nutbrown v. Thornton, 10 Ves. 161; Mason v. Armitage, 13 Ves. 37.

4. Bill will lie for specific performance of agreement to purchase Government stock, where it prays delivery of certificates which give legal title to stock. Doleret v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. & S. 590; 2 L. J., Ch., 125.

5. If an agreement or contract for South Sea Stock be executed, the Court will not break into it; if it be executory, the plaintiff must seek his remedy at law. Cappur v. Harris, Bunb. 135.

6. Bill for a specific performance of a contract for 1,000l. York Buildings stock, at 105l. per cent., dismissed, for equity will not execute these contracts, but leave the parties to their remedy at law. Dorison v. Westbrook, 5 Vin. 510, pl. 22.

7. On a bill to compel specific performance of an agreement, to transfer 5,000l. York Buildings stock at 7l. 5s. per cent., defendant demurred; but demurrer overruled, for the case might be attended with such consequences as would make it just to decree specific performance of the parties' own agreement, or at least to pay the difference. Colt v. Nctervill, 2 P. W. 304.

The judges equally divided upon this question, whether a contract for stock be within the Statute of Frauds, which mentions goods, wares, and merchandise, so as to require the contract to be in writing, or earnest money to be paid. Id. 308.

8. One is bound to transfer 300l. East India stock before the 30th September then next; though the stock was much risen, yet the defendant decreed to transfer the 300l. stock in specie, and to account for all dividends from the time it ought to be transferred. Gardner v. Pullen, 2 Vern. 394.

XII. OTHER CONTRACTS.

9. Agreement to procure A. to convey to B., decreed to be performed in specie. Bradshaw v. Sutton, Colles' P.C. 25.

10. A bill for an execution of agreement, it appearing by proof that the agreement was only to quit the possession, and not extending to convey the lands, the bill was dismissed. Gerrard v. Vauz, 1 Vern. 121.

11. A court of equity will not entertain a bill for the specific performance of an agreement, to pay in a certain event, which has happened, an annual sum by quarterly instalments. Brough v. Oddy, 1 Russ. & M. 55; Taml. 215; 8 L. J., Ch., 23.

12. Bill for specific performance of an agreement to grant a deputation of the office of register of a consistory court. Wheeler v. Trotter, 3 Swan. 174.

13. Bill for a specific performance of a covenant, whereby the plaintiff was solely to have a pit in the defendant's ground, for digging black stones. Proved that the defendant had for above sixty years been in quiet possession of another pit for digging black stones. Bill dismissed. Scholefield v. Whitehead, 2 Vern. 127.

14. P. being seized of an estate in a lease of lives renewable for ever, subject to a head-rent equal in amount to a rent which a sub-tenant of a moiety thereof held at, executed an agreement in writing to let the other moiety thereof, which was in his own possession, to D., his brother, for the lives of D. and two others, and the life of the survivor, free from rent and assessments during D.'s life, and after that to be subject to a yearly rent of 350l.; leases to be executed at the request of either party. There was evidence that the object of this gift was to enable D. to qualify as member of Parliament for the city of Cork, where the lands lay. P. died intestate, in possession, and without having executed the lease:—Held, by the Lords, affirming the decrees of Chancery, that this agreement could not be enforced against the heir of P., the object of it being to give D. a qualification for Parliament, and that there was no agreement for valuable consideration, and that as an imperfect gift the Court of Equity could not enforce it. Callaghan v. Callaghan, 8 Cl. & F. 374. And see S. C. 4 Ir. Eq. R. 441.

Courts of equity do not decree specific performance of incomplete gifts. Id.

Courts of equity will not decree specific performance of an agreement, the object of which is uncertain. Id.

15. A judge's order giving liberty to sign judgment, with a stay of execution in the event of certain conditions being performed, is not an agreement to perform those conditions; and even if the terms are ordered substantively to be performed, the remedy for default is in the court where the order was made, and not by a bill for specific performance. Thames Iron Works Co. v. Patent Derrick Co., 1 John. & H. 93; 6 Jur., N. S., 1013; 29 L. J., Ch., 714.

Therefore, where shipbuilders had built a ship according to contract, and retained her by virtue of their lien for the balance of price unpaid, and had, in an action, obtained by consent a judge's order for the amount, with a stay of execution in case the defendant should pay half, and give a mortgage on the ship for the remainder, to a bill alleging these facts, and that the retainer of the ship involved great expense, and praying a sale, or specific performance of the conditions of the judge's order, a demurrer was allowed. Ib.

1. Auctioneers advanced a sum of money to S., who agreed to put a miscellaneous collection of property in their hands for sale, from the proceeds of which they were to retain the money advanced. A part only of the property was delivered and sold, but it realised less than the sum advanced; S. refused to part with the remainder of his collection:—Held, that the Court would not compel the performance of the contract for an agency; that S. if he satisfied the claims of his agents, was at liberty to countermand the sale of his property, that the advance of the money to S. was not made on the security of the property mentioned in the contract, and that the claims of the agents must be determined in a court of law. Chinnock v. Sainsbury, 30 L. J., Ch., 409; 6 Jur., N. S., 1318; 9 W. R. 7; 3 L. T., N. S., 258.

2. The sole and exclusive privilege of selling books and publications, etc., at such of the stations upon a line of railway as he should think proper, was granted to A. B., by a railway company, with a covenant on the part of the company that all books and publications, etc., sent by A. B., to be sold pursuant to the privilege thereby granted, should be conveyed over all or any portion of the lines of railway and branches to any station without charge:—Held, that under this provision A. B. was not entitled to establish a general agency at the various stations for the supply of the neighbouring towns with books and publications, but that the sale (and privilege of free carriage) must be confined to persons bonâ fide at the stations for the purpose of travelling themselves or meeting their friends. In a suit for a specific performance of an agreement it is not the course of the Court to make declarations of right, or to put a construction upon the various clauses of the agreement, except so far as may be necessary to provide against its infringement. Holmes v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 5 W. R. 870; 3 Kay & J. 675; 3 Jur., N. S., 737.

3. The unstamped memorandum or slip, which by the practice of Lloyd's is initialised by the underwriters before granting a policy of marine insurance, is not enforceable in equity as a contract to grant a legal policy. Morocco Land Co. v. Fry, 5 N. R. 234; 11 Jur., N. S., 76; 13 W. R. 310; 11 L. T., N. S., 618.

4. A railway company contracted with A. to purchase not less than eight acres of his land, for which they were to pay at the rate of 1,000*l.* an acre over and above the compensation to be awarded to him for severing and otherwise injuring his estate. The company took more than the eight acres, for which they paid him the price agreed for, and also 2,660*l.*, being the amount awarded for injuring and severing his property. Some years after the railway was made A. alleged that by the true construction of the agreement he was entitled to receive payment at the above rate of 1,000*l.* an acre, for portions of his roads, amounting to about three roods, over which the railway company had thrown bridges:—Held, that, assuming the construction of the agreement to be as A. contended, it was such a contract as the Court would not decree specific performance of, but would leave A. to his legal remedy. Ingram v. Midland Railway Co., 3 L. T., N. S., 533.

5. On the 13th March A. commenced an action against B. to enforce specific performance of an agreement to execute a bill of sale of the chattels and effects in an inn. On the 16th March, A., on his ex parte application, was appointed interim receiver, pending a reference for the appointment of a receiver, and the same day he took possession of the inn, and left a man in charge. The same night B. left the inn, and the next day filed a liquidation petition. The trustee under the liquidation claimed the chattels and effects in the inn on the ground that the agreement was void as against him under the Bills of Sale Act, and that the chattels and effects were in the apparent possession of B. at the commencement of the liquidation:—Held, that the Bills of Sale Act did not apply, that the agreement created a good equitable charge in favour of A., and that the possession taken by A. as interim receiver took the chattels and effects out of the order and disposition of B. Taylor v. Eckersley, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 740; 36 L. T. 442; 25 W. R. 527.

6. Specific performance of an agreement to purchase the business of an attorney refused upon a bill by the vendor, there being no express stipulations by which the Court might be enabled to carry it into effect on his part, in return for the defendant's purchase money; and there being no condition generally applicable to transactions of this nature, so as to come within the description of "usual clauses" to be inserted in an instrument to be drawn up in pursuance of the agreement. Bowen v. Farlon, 1 Meriv. 459.

Whether such an agreement void at law, upon ground either of morality or of public policy. Ib.

Quære, if legally a valid agreement, whether it is of such a nature as is capable of being enforced in equity. Ib.

7. A., having a general shop in the country, agreed with B., against whom he had obtained a verdict in ejectment, and had other actions pending, to abandon them on condition that B. should execute a bond not to be concerned in any trading establishment within a certain range:—Held, good, and that A. having withdrawn his actions, he was entitled to a specific performance. Avery v. Langford, 2 Eq. Rep. 1097; 1 Kay 663; 18 Jur. 905; 23 L. J., Ch., 837.

Held, also, that B. having entered into the arrangement by advice of his solicitor, could not be regarded as acting under duress. Ib.

I. DELAY AND LACHES.

1. Specific performance refused, on account of the laches of the plaintiff, the vendor. Guest v. Homfrey, 5 Ves. 818.
2. Where time was not the essence of the contract, and great delay on the part of the purchaser, the plaintiff, yet specific performance was decreed. Reynolds v. Nelson, 6 Madd. 290; id. 18.
3. Under the circumstances of gross laches on part of purchaser, his bill for specific performance was dismissed. Harrington v. Wheeler, 4 Ves. 686.
4. Where one party to an agreement trifles, or shows a backwardness in performing his part of it, equity will not decree a specific performance in his favour; especially if the circumstances and situation of the other party are materially altered in the meantime. Hayes v. Carryll, 1 Bro. P. C. 126.
5. Specific performance decreed against purchaser without reference as to title on ground of possession, a correspondence, and no objection to title till two years after delivery of abstract. Anspach (Marquis) v. Noel, 1 Madd. 310.
6. Specific performance, the lapse of time being trifling and the result of fraud. Savage v. Brocksopp, 18 Ves. 335.
7. The time at which a contract is to be performed, is not essential in equity as at law. The relief against the lapse of time, is in the discretion of the Court upon the circumstances, as if the contract is abandoned. Radcliffe v. Warrington, 12 Ves. 326.
8. When a contract has lain dormant for many years, and nothing done by either party in pursuance of it, a court of equity ought not to decree a specific performance. Wingfield v. Whaley, 1 Bro. P. C. 200.
9. Lapse of time, if not an essential object of the contract, is no objection to a specific performance. Hearne v. Tenant, 13 Ves. 287.
10. Bill for specific performance of an agreement, dismissed upon the lapse of time without proceeding in the performance. Ally v. Deschamps, 13 Ves. 225.
11. The time of valuation is of the essence of a contract to sell at a price to be fixed by that valuation, but defendant cannot take advantage of it, if he improperly occasioned the delay. Morse v. Merest, 6 Madd. 26.

12. A vendor cannot come at any distance of time for a performance; but upon a bill filed fourteen months after the correspondence upon the objection to the title ceased by the defendant's returning no answer to the last letter, calling for a distinct answer, and threatening a bill; and the auctioneer not having been called on to return the deposit, it was referred to the Master. Hertford (Marquis) v. Boore, 5 Ves. 719.

13. When time is not the substance of a contract, a specific performance will be decreed, though the period for its completion have elapsed. Jessop v. King, 2 Ball & B. 91.

14. Equity will not decree specific execution of agreement upwards of fifteen years after it is dated, under which plaintiff had never been in possession, nor paid any consideration, more especially where there had been several conveyances in the interval, and the tenants had made expensive improvements, with plaintiff's knowledge. Gill v. Fleming, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 420.

15. Vendor being in possession for upwards of fifty years, and purchaser having done acts inconsistent with the notion of his being the owner, specific performance of agreement to sell was refused, as amounting to a waiver. Ross (Earl) v. Stirling, 4 Dow 442.

16. Great delay in the completion of a contract is no defence to a purchaser who has himself been accessory to that delay. Gunter v. Halsey, Amb. 386.

Where a contract of purchase is made, and delay is occasioned by the purchaser, and during that delay the legal estate descends to an infant heir, the purchaser cannot avail himself of that difficulty in the title to protect himself from specific performance. Id.

17. Quere, whether the descent of the legal estate to an infant heir, after the contract, will prevent the Court from decreeing specific performance, where there has been no improper delay on the part of the purchaser. King v. Turner, 3 L. J., Ch., 58.

18. Specific performance of an agreement to purchase may be decreed after considerable delay, if the vendee has not demanded his deposit or shown a determination not to proceed in the purchase. Pincke v. Cartels, 4 Bro. C. C. 329.

19. Under two agreements for sale (one of which was to be completed on the 1st June, and the other on the 29th September, both in 1846), disputes arose upon the title, and upon certain valuations incident to the purchase. The conveyances were engrossed on the 4th January 1847; and the vendor made two requisitions to the purchaser to complete the first on the 11th January, and the second on the 25th January 1847, and intimated that non-compliance with the requisitions would be treated by the vendor as a breach of the agreements. The purchaser did not comply, but his solicitors reiterated claims to certain deductions and abatements. The disputes continued until after the 13th February 1847, when the purchaser filed a bill seeking specific performance.—Held, that the circumstances and delay did not constitute a case of such default by the plaintiff as to preclude him from a title to specific performance; but it appearing on the correspondence that the claims of deduction and abatement had not been the cause which delayed the completion of the purchase, but that want of means on the part of the purchaser to pay even so much purchase money as, according to his view, he had to pay, was the cause of the delay up to and until after the date of filing of the bill, the Court held that the purchaser had so acted as to have lost the right to enforce a specific performance, and dismissed his bill; but the Court declined giving the costs, except upon the terms of his returning the deposit. Gee v. Pearce, 2 De G. & Sm. 325.

1. After bill, answer, and replication, no further steps were taken in a cause for upwards of twenty years. This is not of itself sufficient ground for refusing specific performance, there being acquiescence on both sides. But a good reason for refusing costs. Cane v. Allen (Lord), 2 Dow 289.

2. A bill for specific performance of an agreement is an application to the discretion, or rather the extraordinary jurisdiction, of the Court, which cannot be exercised in favour of persons who have slept on their rights, or acquiesced for a long time in a title and possession adverse to their claim. In cases seeking a specific execution, laches is equally as strong against a plaintiff in not prosecuting as in not commencing suit. Moore v. Blake, 1 Ball & B. 69.

A. conveys or assigns his interest in lands to B., in consideration, among other things, that B. shall make or give a lease back again to A. of half a portion of the lands, and, in consideration also of a loan of 200*l.* by B. to A., B. covenants to execute the lease accordingly, subject to the repayment of 200*l.*, for which B. has a judgment; no lease actually made, but A. remains in possession of his portion upon his equitable title; B. lends further sums of money to A., and obtains judgments for these sums, and then conveys the lands, and assigns the judgment to C. C. issues writs of f. fa. on the judgments, and in 1781 procures a sale by the sheriff of A.'s equitable interest, and on ejectment brought on the demises of the purchaser and of C., A. is turned out of possession. A., in 1782, files his bill in chancery for relief and execution of a lease to him according to the agreement, but from embarrassment in his circumstances does not further prosecute the suit till 1801; no steps taken between 1782 and 1801 to dismiss the bill. In 1808 the bill dismissed below, but House of Lords reversed decree, and decreed specific performance. 8 C. 4 Dow 230, reversing 1 Ball & B. 62.

3. Where the object of one of the parties contracting would be defeated by delay in the execution of it, if the other party delay, he shall not afterwards be allowed to insist on performance. So, if the delay were injurious to one of the parties. Crofton v. Ormsby, 2 Sch. & Lef. 604.

4. If the purchaser demand his deposit at the day for completing the contract, and the vendor has not delivered his abstract before that time, and also neglects to deliver it until after an action brought for the deposit, it is evidence of an abandonment of the contract by the vendor, who shall not be entitled afterwards to a specific performance. Lloyd v. Collett, 4 Bro. C. C. 469.

Motion for an injunction to restrain an action against the auctioneer for the deposit, refused where there had been great delay on the part of the vendor. Id.

5. Bill for performance of articles for the purchase of an estate dismissed with costs, the title not having been laid before the vendee's counsel within the time limited, and the South Sea stock, from whence the money was to be raised, having fallen in the meantime 168 per cent. Lewis v. Lechmere (Lord), 10 Mod. 503.

6. B. contracts for purchase of estate, and is let into possession. The estate being greatly incumbered, B. pays off some of the incumbrances. Great delay is used on part of vendor in clearing other incumbrances, and making good title:—Held, not sufficient to discharge purchaser from contract. Smith v. Dolman, 6 Bro. P. C. 291.

7. Laches will not be imputed to a vendor on account of delay, however long, in filing his bill for specific performance, where negotiations respecting the title have been going on the whole time. Murray v. Spicer, 16 W. R. 332; 5 L. R., Eq., 527; 37 L. J., Ch., 505.

8. An estate was sold by auction, and the purchase was to be completed in two months according to the conditions of sale. The buyer died soon afterwards, and suits were instituted both in the Spiritual Court and Chancery respecting his affairs, which prevented the completion of the contract. Four or five years after the sale, the vendor filed his bill to have the contract rescinded, and the affairs of the buyer still remaining unsettled, the Court rescinded the contract, and gave the plaintiff his costs out of the deposit. Mackreth v. Marlar, 1 Cox 258.

9. A contracts for the purchase of an estate, and is let into possession; the estate being greatly incumbered, A. pays off some of the incumbrances; great delay is used on part of vendor in clearing off the incumbrances and making a good title:—Held, not sufficient to discharge purchaser from contract. Smith v. Dolman, 6 Bro. P. C. 291.

10. H., in 1839, contracted with I. for the purchase of a piece of land, and subsequently sold his bargain to M. In May 1839 the abstract of title was delivered. The draft conveyance was prepared in July, and approved in August following. A covenant, not in the draft, was inserted in the ingrossment by the vendor, and objected to on behalf of the purchaser; and a correspondence on the subject, between their respective solicitors, was carried on at intervals down to 1843, when H. and M. filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, that there had been no abandonment of the contract. Moskay v. Inderwick, 11 Jur. 837.

11. The tendency of the Court in modern cases has been to restrict the exercise of its jurisdiction in enforcing specific performance of contracts to those cases in which the plaintiff has been prompt in seeking his equitable remedy. Southcomb v. Esoter (Bishop), 6 Hare 213; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 378; 11 Jur. 725.

A contract for the sale of the vendor's interest in a manor, under a lease for lives, was made on the 16th October 1840. Objections were taken to the title, and a correspondence between the solicitors of the vendor and purchaser took place, and continued until the 20th August 1841, when the purchaser gave notice to the vendor that, the title being defective, he rescinded the contract. The correspondence with reference to the title still proceeded (the purchaser's solicitor claiming his right to insist upon the notice, but giving the vendor two months more to complete the title), until the 17th January 1842, when the purchaser intimated that he should fall back to his position under the rescinded contract. The bill was filed on the 30th August 1843:—Held, that the interval between the 20th August 1841 and the 17th January 1842, ought not to be regarded in the question of laches, but that the delay, after the 17th January 1842, before the bill was filed, precluded the vendor from sustaining his suit for specific performance. The fact that the purchaser allowed the deposit to remain in the possession of the vendor from the time he (the purchaser) declared the contract to be rescinded, until shortly before the bill was filed, when he brought his action to recover it, did not affect the question of laches. The possession of part of the property comprised in the contract, taken under a mutual arrangement, and in ignorance of the objection to the title, which was afterwards discovered and relied on, did not affect the question of laches. Id.

1. The plaintiff, the vendor, having notice from the purchaser that the latter abandoned his contract, did not file his bill for specific performance till about a year afterwards; the bill was dismissed on the ground of unreasonable delay. Watson v. Reid, 1 Russ. & M. 236.

2. In June 1846 A. agreed to sell his share in a mine to B., and four months afterwards he agreed to sell it to C., who paid part of the purchase money. In the month following, A., having given notice to B. that he repudiated the first contract, conveyed to C. No steps were taken by B. for ten and a half years, when a suit was instituted against C. alone, to have a declaration that C. was a trustee, and for a conveyance:—Held, that the right was barred by lapse of time and laches. Allway v. Braine, 26 Beav. 575.

Held, also, that the result would have been the same if the subject had been ordinary instead of mining property. Id.

A specific performance will not be decreed after a delay of ten years, when nothing has been done in the meantime. Id.

3. A railway company contracted to purchase lands, agreeing to pay interest on the purchase money from the day they should commence their works on the lands till the purchase money should be paid. The company did not enter into possession, or commence works, for two years: suit for immediate specific performance dismissed. Bodington v. Great Western Railway Co., 13 Jur. 144.

4. Lands being settled to one for life, remainder to her ten children in fee, all parties agree to endeavour to effect a sale, in order, if possible, to increase the income of the tenant for life. W., one of the ten children, takes upon himself to act for all the others, and contracts in April 1851 to sell to F. No deposit is made, nor any step taken. An abstract is first asked for by the purchaser in February 1852, and delivered by W. on behalf of all parties. B., another of the children (who had certain liens on the shares of four others, which he perfected after April 1851), denied altogether the authority of W. to act for him. The tenant for life died in September 1852, and in the same year R., one of the four children whose interests B. had so got in for his benefit, confirmed the sale to F. No other step was taken against B. till May 1854, when K., having got five of the shares, filed a bill against B. for a conveyance of the other five:—Held, apart from the question as to the agency of W., that, on the ground of delay, the purchaser was not entitled to a specific performance against B., except as to the share of R. Bill dismissed, with costs, as to B.'s original share; no costs as to the other shares. Firth v. Greenwood, 1 Jur., N. S., 866; 3 W. R. 358.

5. In 1827, A. wrote to B., that he had credited B.'s account with 220*l.*, in consideration of an agreement by B. to convey two houses. The abstract was delivered, but there was no acceptance in writing on the part of B. Five years afterwards, B. filed a bill against A. for specific performance. A. swore, and it was not denied, that in 1827 he abandoned the contract, and that in 1829 it was considered broken off by both parties. It appeared, however, that B. had, in the meantime, the benefit of the credit for 220*l.* The Court dismissed the bill on the ground of the delay. Williams v. Williams, 17 Beav. 213.

6. A delay from May to December in filing a bill for specific performance, is sufficient to deprive a vendor of his right to have the contract enforced. Colby v. Gadsden, 34 Beav. 416.

A purchaser was let into the receipt of rents before completion, and without payment of his purchase money. Great delay having occurred, and no payment having been made to the vendor, he gave notice to the tenants, and prevented any further receipt of the rents by the purchaser:—Held, that this did not deprive the vendor of his right to have the contract specifically performed. S. C. 5 N. R. 456; 11 Jur., N. S., 760; 12 L. T., N. S., 197.

7. Claim filed in November 1853 for specific performance of a contract to purchase made in February 1852, dismissed (without costs) on the ground of plaintiffs' laches in taking no steps in the meanwhile to compel completion of the contract. Lloyd v. Wilkes, 2 W. R. 501; 2 Eq. Rep. 1081.

8. Specific performance refused on ground of delay for three years and a half. Eads v. Williams, 4 De G. M. & G. 674; 1 Jur., N. S., 193; 3 Eq. Rep. 244; 3 W. R. 98. Reversing 2 W. R. 506.

9. Bill by a company for smelting and manufacturing iron against proprietors of coal mines adjoining their works, for specific performance of an agreement to sell to the company, at a fixed price per ton, all of certain beds of coal, estimated to contain from 120,000 to 150,000 tons, to be raised and delivered by the defendants at the rate of 500 tons per week, and the company to drain the beds; and for an injunction to restrain defendants from selling any part to other persons. The bill averred that the coal was very conveniently situated with reference to the company's iron works, which adjoined thereto, and that the company had the power, by means of their engines and pits, to drain the beds, and had occasion for a large quantity of coal of that particular description. Demurrer allowed, mainly on ground of laches, the company having neglected to file their bill until eleven months after they discovered that defendants had ceased to deliver the coal, and were referred by defendants to their solicitors. Pollard v. Clayton, 1 Kay & J. 462; 1 Jur., N. S., 342.

In contracts relating to commodities fluctuating from day to day in market price, the Court expects persons to be unusually vigilant and active in asserting their right to specific performance, which it is inequitable to grant after such an interval, and when the parties may be no longer in the same position. Ib.

Such a contract is a positive contract, and does not give jurisdiction to restrain sale to other parties. Ib.

Leave to amend and account for laches refused, on the ground that the agreement, notwithstanding it was to be performed, not immediately, but by instalments, and at intervals extending over a long period, and notwithstanding the circumstances averred as to the vicinity of the coal and its convenience with reference to the company's works, and the importance to them of coal of that particular description, was an agreement the works of which the Court could not undertake the superintendence; for the application to the Court would be incessant to secure due industry and exertion on the part as well of plaintiffs as defendants; and semble, upon this ground alone the demurrer would have been allowed. Ib.

Semble, the benefit to be derived from vicinity of defendant's coal to company's iron works, is one which can be estimated by damages, and, taken alone, is not a ground for specific performance. Ib.

Observations on Taylor v. Neville, and the reports of Buxton v. Lister (3 Atk. 383). Ib.

1. Long delay may prevent a party to an agreement from calling for specific performance of it. Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Ca. 238; 27 L. J., Ch., 46.

2. Delay and laches, on the part of the plaintiff, are a good defence to a suit for specific performance; but they are inapplicable where the contract, though incomplete, has continued to be acted on, as where, under a contract for a lease, possession is taken and rent paid for a series of years. Sharp v. Milligan, 22 Beav. 606.

3. Delay, after the parties were at arm's length, of three calendar months and thirteen days, in filing a bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale and purchase of a colliery:—Held, a bar to relief. Glasbrook v. Richardson, 23 W. R. 51.

4. Delay of ten weeks held on bar to relief. Rummen v. Robins, 14 L. T., N. S., 717; 11 Jur., N. S., 631; 13 W. R. 979; 3 De G. J. & S. 88.

5. A vendor, under a power reserved to him by the contract, gave notice to the purchaser, on the 7th April 1869, that, as he could not comply with the requisitions made by the purchaser, he rescinded the sale. The purchaser filed a bill for specific performance on the 30th August 1870:—Held, that the delay was fatal to his claim for relief. Rick v. Gale, 24 L. T., N. S., 745.

There is no distinction between laches on the part of a vendor and laches on the part of a purchaser as a bar to a suit for specific performance. Ib.

6. When a plaintiff to a bill for specific performance has allowed five months to elapse after the defendant has rescinded the contract before filing his bill, it is not a sufficient explanation of the delay to state that the defendant's solicitor was suffering from mental aberration. Leave, however, to amend may be given. Husham v. Llewellyn, 21 W. R. 766.

7. Misrepresentation, whereby one has been induced to enter into an agreement, may afford a good defence to a suit for specific performance of the agreement, although it is not such a clear and direct misrepresentation as would afford a good ground for a suit to set the agreement aside or for an action for damages upon it. Lamare v. Dixon, 6 L. R., H. L., 414; 43 L. J., Ch., 203; 22 W. R. 49.

If the plaintiff in a suit for specific performance has delayed for a length of time to enforce the agreement, acquiescence in a breach of the agreement, or in a misrepresentation on the faith of which the defendant entered into the agreement, will not be imputed to the defendant by reason of a similar delay on his part in repudiating it, though accompanied by possession. Ib.

A decree for specific performance of a contract cannot be accompanied by directing an inquiry whether a matter which was a consideration for entering into the contract has been, or can be, properly performed. Ib.

When a suit is instituted for specific performance of a contract, and the defence set up is, that the contract was made in consideration of certain promises which the plaintiff has not fulfilled, a delay to defeat that defence must be such as amounts to an acquiescence in the non-fulfilment of the alleged promises. Ib.

Held, also, that as there had been delay on both sides, though the plaintiff's bill ought to be dismissed, it must be dismissed without costs. Ib.

II. FELONY.

8. The Court will not execute an agreement to grant a lease to a man who has committed a felony. Willingham v. Joyce, 3 Ves. 169.

III. FORFEITURE OR BREACH OF TRUST.

9. The provision in a contract for the sale of the property of a bankrupt, entered into by the creditor's assignees, that the purchase money is to be received by the solicitor of the assignees, is not a breach of trust which would induce the Court to refuse specific performance of the contract. Hughes v. Morris, 9 Hare 636. See S. C. 16 Jur. 603; 21 L. J., Ch., 761.

10. The Court will not enforce a contract involving a breach of trust. Wood v. Richardson, 4 Beav. 174; 5 Jur. 623.

11. The Court will not decree a specific performance which involves a breach of trust. Maw v. Topham, 19 Beav. 576.

1. Where act of sale by trustees takes place, under circumstances of breach of trust, Court will not decree specific performance in favour of bona fide or innocent purchaser. Ord v. Noel, 5 Madd. 438.

2. Contract by trustees under power of sale, though by subsequent events it cannot be executed under the power, shall be made good in equity by the effect of the interest acquired on the estate bound by the contract. Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 315. Affirmed 2 Dow 518.

3. By the 9 & 10 Vict., c. 87, s. 27 (Irish), similar to 9 & 10 Vict., c. 74, s. 271, the town council of a borough, or the commissioners of a city or town, are empowered, from time to time, to contract for the purchasing or renting of any lands necessary for the purposes of the Act, and to contract for the purchase or lease of any baths and washhouses, already or thereafter to be built and provided in any such borough or such city or town, and appropriate the same to the purposes of the Act, and the baths and washhouses so purchased or leased shall be deemed to be within the provisions of the Act, as fully as if they had been built or provided by the council or town commissioners; "lands" are defined to mean lands, tenements, or hereditaments, of whatsoever nature or tenure. The town council of a borough contracted to purchase baths and washhouses which had been commenced by a private society, and were held under a sub-lease of a portion of lands comprised in a lease of lands demised by the owner of the fee, and which were thus subject to a rent in addition to the rent reserved in the sub-lease, and to the covenants and conditions in the original lease:—Held (affirming 8 Ir. Ch. R. 204), that it would be a breach of trust for the town council to purchase lands, the interest in which might be lost by the default of others, and that specific performance ought not to be enforced. Mulholland v. Belfast Corporation, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 292.

4. An agreement by trustees of two properties held on different trusts for a mining lease of both at a rent of so much per acre worked:—Held, a breach of trust, and specific performance at the suit of the trustees refused. Tolson v. Sheard, 46 L. J., Ch. D., 815; 36 L. T., N. S., 756; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 19; 25 W. R. 667.

5. Trustees not to be compelled to perform an agreement entered into under mistake, to sell for an inadequate consideration. Bridge v. Rice, 1 Jac. & Walk. 74.

6. Bill for the execution of a covenant contained in a renewed lease granted by trustees dismissed, the covenant being ultra vires of the trustees. Bellringer v. Blagrove, 1 De G. & Sm. 63; 11 Jur. 407.

7. Equity will not decree a specific execution of a contract, the terms of which are uncertain as to its extent. Nor will equity decree specific execution against a party not lawfully competent to execute the contract. Harnett v. Yielding, 2 Sch. & Lef. 549.

8. Under a power to lease at the best rent, the very highest rent that can be obtained is not required; and the true criterion is, whether the rent has been fairly obtained without any private advantage to the donee of the power: and therefore an agreement which the Court treated as subject to the same rule was enforced, though the rent obtained was below the offers made by less solvent tenants, and below the average at which the lands were valued, where the agreement was fairly made and was a prudent one. The cases on this subject reviewed. Harnett v. Yielding (2 Sch. & Lef. 29) commented on. Dyas v. Cruise, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 407; 2 J. & L. 460.

9. A contract made, by trustees for sale, for the sale of the trust property, conjointly with property not subject to the same trusts, will not be decreed to be specifically performed unless it appears to the Court, both that due precautions have been taken for preventing injury to the trust premises by the conjunction, and also that the terms of the contract furnish means of ascertaining clearly the proportion of the proceeds of the sale to be attributed to the trust premises. Rede v. Oakes, 34 L. J., Ch., 145; 13 W. R. 303; 11 L. T., N. S., 549; 4 De G. J. & S. 505.

10. One of two executors erroneously believing that he was acting with the authority of the other, contracted to sell a leasehold house, part of the testator's estate:—Held, that the purchaser could not enforce a specific performance of the contract. Sneesby v. Thorne, 7 De G. M. & G. 399; 1 Jur., N. S., 1058.

Quare, whether he could have done so if the executor had been under no misapprehension. Id.

11. A trustee, without the authority of his co-trustees, signed an agreement for the sale of trust property. In an action for specific performance, to which the co-trustees were not parties:—Held, that specific performance could not be ordered either as to the whole or as to the part in which the contracting trustee had a beneficial interest. Naylor v. Goodall, 47 L. J., Ch., 53; 37 L. T. 422; 26 W. R. 162.

12. It is no defence to a suit for specific performance against trustees of a turnpike road, that the land they have contracted to sell is liable to pre-emption by the owner of the adjoining land under the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 39, even where the offer required has not, through inadvertence, been made to such owner, and it is in evidence that the owner insists on his right, the purchaser making no objection to the title, and being content to take such estate as the trustees could convey. Barrett v. Ring, 2 Sm. & G. 43.

13. A contract in writing had been entered into for sale of land by trustees to a Roman Catholic priest. The written contract did not specify the use that was to be made of the land, but the vendors represented, and the Court was satisfied by the evidence, that there had been an understanding that a church should be built on it. Before completion the purchaser contracted to sell the land to a third party, who intended to erect a manufactory on it, and the trustees then refused to complete:—Held, on a bill filed against the trustees, that the Court would not, under the circumstances, compel them to complete the contract. Trappes v. Cobb, 16 W. R. 117.

14. Where the acts of the party to a contract are such as would have worked a forfeiture of all benefit of the contract if it had been executed, the Court will not decree a specific performance. But when there is a doubt as to whether there has been any breach of the contract, and the evidence is conflicting, or the breaches of the agreement are nominal, the Court may make a decree, leaving the plaintiff to his remedy at law. Cartan v. Bury, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 387.

1. Agreement to grant a lease of copyhold premises for twenty-one years, and to put the same in repair, there being no evidence that to grant such lease would work a forfeiture, or that the licence of the lord could not be obtained:—Decreed, to be specifically performed. Puaton v. Newton, 2 Sm. & G. 437.

Though the Court will not ordinarily decree specific performance of an agreement to repair, it is the habit of the Court to decree specific performance of agreements involving the execution of leases or other instruments containing covenants to repair. Id.

2. Although a court of equity will not in general decree specific performance of an agreement, of which the forfeiture of a lease will be the consequence, it will not allow a person to set that consequence up as a defence to a decree for specific performance, where the act creating the forfeiture is one which he might himself have guarded against. Helling v. Lumley, 5 Jur., N. S., 301; 28 L. J., Ch., 249; 3 De G. & J. 493.

A., being lessee of the Opera House, assigned his lease to B., "subject to the right of possession of A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, to the box numbered 124," during the residue of the term thereby assigned, and the renewed term to be granted under a covenant for renewal contained in the lease to A. B., in pursuance of such covenant, subsequently took a renewal of such lease, and in the renewed lease the lessee was empowered to select such forty-one boxes as he might please, and to lease them otherwise than from year to year, and from season to season; and it contained a power of re-entry by the lessor in case the lessee should, without licence, lease more than forty-one boxes otherwise than as before mentioned. B. accordingly selected forty-one boxes, but the box numbered 124 was not included in such selection. A. thereupon filed a bill for obtaining a declaration that he was entitled to the box numbered 124, or to an equivalent in money or otherwise for the same, for the residue of the renewed term of years granted to B. B. declining to make the compensation prayed by the bill, A. was entitled, as against B., to the benefit of the reservation of the box numbered 124, contained in the assignment of A.'s lease to B. Id.

3. A trustee entered into a contract for the sale of trust property, and it was agreed that the purchaser should, out of the purchase money, retain a private debt due to him from the trustee. On a bill by the trustee:—Held, that this Court would not decree the specific performance of such a contract. Thompson v. Blackstone, 6 Beav. 470.

4. The Court will not compel a defendant specifically to perform an agreement when the result would be to compel him to commit a breach of a prior agreement with another person. Willmott v. Barber, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 96; 43 L. T. 95; 28 W. R. 911.

5. To a suit for specific performance by the purchaser against the vendor of a leasehold interest, it is not a defence that the lease contains a covenant against alienation without the consent of the landlord, and that it does not appear that the consent of the landlord has been obtained. Leitch v. Simpson, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 613.

In Agreements for Leases.] See LANDLORD AND TENANT, I. II. 8.

IV. HARDSHIP.

6. On the question of executing an agreement, hardship cannot be regarded, unless it amounts to a decree of inconvenience and absurdity so great as to afford judicial proof that such could not be the meaning of the parties. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swans. 329.

7. The Court will not give any assistance to a party seeking to enforce a hard bargain. Kimberley v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 115. And see Faine v. Brown, cited 2 Ves. 307; Talbot v. Ford, 13 Sim. 173.

8. Specific performance refused of covenants in dean and chapter leases of long standing. Ely (Dean) v. Stewart, 2 Atk. 44; Barn. 170.

9. Where father is possessed of advowson, which he apparently intended for his son, and is prevailed on, when in an infirm state, to enter into articles for sale of it. Specific performance was refused, though no fraud was imputed to purchaser. Bell v. Howard, 9 Mod. 302.

10. In cases of specific performance, courts of equity exercise a discretion. In cases of great hardship they will not interfere, but will leave the plaintiff to his remedy by recovery of damages at law. Trustees joined their cestui que trust in a contract for sale, and personally agreed to exonerate the estate from any incumbrances thereon. There were considerable incumbrances, and it did not appear whether the purchase money would be sufficient to discharge them, or what would be the extent of the deficiency. The Court refused to decree a specific performance against the trustees so as to compel them to exonerate the estate, but left the purchaser to his remedy by action for damages. Wodgewood v. Adams, 6 Beav. 600.

11. B. treats with A. for a piece of land, having an intention to build a mill, to which the consent of the corporation is necessary; but A. refuses to treat on condition. B. fails in obtaining consent: this failure in his speculation is no defence against a bill for specific performance. Adams v. Weare, 1 Bro. C. C. 567.

12. Where land is conveyed in fee by deed of feoffment, subject to a perpetual ground rent, and the feoffee covenants for himself, his heirs and assigns with the feoffor, the owner of adjoining lands, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, not to use the land in a particular manner, with a view to the more ample enjoyment by the feoffor of such adjoining lands, and the subsequent acts of the feoffor, or of those claiming under him, have so altered the character and condition of the adjoining lands, that with reference to the land conveyed, the restriction in the covenant ceases to be applicable according to the intent and spirit of the contract, a court of equity will not interpose to enforce the covenant, but will leave the parties to law. Whether upon such a covenant there could be any remedy at law against the assignees of the covenantor, quære. Bedford (Duke) v. Trustees of British Museum, 2 Myl. & K. 552; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129.

1. If a person contracts to do a thing which he may do himself, or has the means of compelling others to do, equity will compel him to do it, unless it be highly unreasonable, in which case the other party shall not be held to the contract. If in that case the other party refuses to give up the contract, equity will not enforce a specific execution of it, but leave him to recover damages at law. Costigan v. Hastler, 2 Sch. & Lef. 166.

A contract for a lease by mortgagor cannot be enforced against the tenant, without obtaining a reconveyance of the mortgage, or procuring the mortgagee to confirm same. Tenant holding under such contract cannot compel landlord to pay off the mortgage to give effect to the contract. Id. 160.

2. Specific performance of an agreement refused on the ground of want of specific mutuality of laches, misapprehensions in the party or parties of its nature and effect, inequality, improvidence, and other circumstances appearing in the case. Hamilton v. Grant, 3 Dow 33; 1 Bli. N. S. 594.

3. Bill for performance of written agreement, parol evidence read of different agreement, dismissed with costs; and plaintiff cannot resort to agreement set up by defendant; parol evidence allowed where a hard agreement, or in part executed. Legal v. Miller, 2 Ves. 299.

4. The fact that the performance of an agreement has, owing to circumstances which have subsequently occurred, become hard in its consequences to one of the parties, or that he is called upon to perform it under circumstances which he had not contemplated, is no objection to the specific performance of the contract in equity, there being nothing doubtful in the meaning of the agreement, and nothing hard or oppressive in its terms at the time it was made, semble. Webb v. Direct London & Portsmouth Railway Co., 9 Hare 129; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 566; 15 Jur. 697. Reversed 1 De G. M. & G. 521; 21 L. J., N. S., 1337; 16 Jur. 323.

The promoters of a railway company, in consideration of a landowner's opposition to the bill being withdrawn, agreed to pay him 4,500*l.* as the purchase money of land, not exceeding eight acres, to be taken by the company for the formation of this railway, and for consequential damage. The Act was obtained, and the agreement adopted by the company in consideration of the landowner releasing the promoters from their covenant. The agreement was so framed, as to render it doubtful whether it was not to be contingent on the formation of the railway. The railway was abandoned, and, after the expiration of the time limited for the acquisition of land for the purposes of the undertaking by the company, the landowner filed a claim for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, to be a case in which a decree would produce more injustice than justice, and a specific performance was therefore refused. S. C. 3

De G. M. & G. 521; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 15 Jur. 323.

5. A court of equity will not decree specific performance of an agreement more favourable to the plaintiff than to the defendant, involving hardship upon the defendant and damage to his property, if he entered into it without advice or assistance, and there is reasonable ground for doubting whether he entered into it under intoxication, i.e., without a knowledge and an understanding of its nature and consequences. In such a case the plaintiff will be left to his remedy at law. Vivers v. Tuck, 9 L. T., N. S., 554; 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 516.

6. The fact that a party was considerably in liquor when he entered into an agreement, is no reason for the Court refusing a decree for specific performance, if there was no fraud. Lightfoot v. Heron, 3 Y. & Coll. 586.

7. In a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of certain leasehold property, the defence raised was, that at the time the contract was entered into the vendor was so intoxicated that he was not conscious of what he was doing. No fraud was alleged:—Held, that such a defence was of no avail, and specific performance decreed with costs. Semble, that if a person by habitual intoxication so entirely destroys his mental powers as to render him incompetent to understand any transaction, any document executed by him would be invalid. Shaw v. Thackray, 17 Jur. 1045; 1 Sm. & Giff. 537.

8. Whether the existence of a nuisance in the neighbourhood of a house contracted to be purchased for a residence, which nuisance is known to the vendor, and is one which a provident purchaser could not discover, is a ground for refusing a decree for specific performance of the contract, and whether otherwise if the nuisance be not known to the vendor. Quære. Lucas v. James, 7 Hare 410; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 329; 13 Jur. 912.

9. A grant was made by Dr. Y., bishop of Ely, in 1801, to P. for his life of the ancient office of receiver of the rents of the lands belonging to the see of Ely. For a long series of years the receiver for the time being had not only received the rents, but had prepared leases, surrenders, and counterparts of leases, had registered leases and assignments of leases in a register kept by the bishop, and had made searches in the muniment room in the residence of the bishop whenever requested by persons requiring information contained in the register and records belonging to the bishop, for all which duties he received fees. In 1836 Dr. A., immediately after his appointment as bishop, sent a notice to P. not to prepare any more leases, surrenders, or counterparts of leases, and not to receive any more rents. P. filed a bill against Dr. A., praying that it might be declared that P. was entitled to exercise all the duties and receive the perquisites hitherto exercised and received by the receiver, and that the bishop might be restrained from interfering with such exercise and enjoyment:—Held, that whatever might be the legal right of P. to the office, and to its alleged appurtenances, no relief could be given to him in equity, on the grounds of the hardship of forcing the services of a stranger in an office of trust upon the bishop and the want of mutuality, the nature of the duties and services asserted by the plaintiff being such as to preclude the possibility of a decree in this court against him compelling their specific performance. Pickering v. Ely (Bishop), 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 249; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 271; 7 Jur. 479.

1. Quare, whether a court of equity will decree the specific performance of a contract by a railway company to purchase land, if the company should afterwards so exercise their powers as to disable themselves from taking the same land; and whether the vendor has any and what remedy in such a case. Tomlinson v. Manchester & Birmingham Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 104.

2. Where a man, in a building lease, covenants to new build the brick messuages on the premises, rebuilding some and repairing others is not a sufficient performance of the covenant; for the lessee must rebuild the whole; neither is pulling down and re-building the fore and back fronts a rebuilding within the covenant; for upon such a covenant, the lessors are entitled to a specific performance. Sed secus of a covenant to repair. In this case, however, the Court, instead of decreeing a specific performance, left it to a jury to ascertain the damages sustained, and directed an issue accordingly. London (City of) v. Nash, 1 Ves. 12; 3 Atk. 512.

3. Where the equitable title is complete, a legal conveyance will be decreed, though the property may have been much enhanced or depreciated in value. Subsequent events will not in equity vary a contract fairly entered into. Revell v. Hussey, 2 Ball. & B. 287.

Renewal decreed against a tenant under a bishop's lease, without any contribution from his sub-lessee, he having covenanted that, as often as the bishop should renew, he would renew without fine with his sub-lessee. The tenant and his lessor are necessary parties, the sub-lessee deriving his title from their covenants. Id. 280.

4. A. holding under a corporation (of which he was a member), and in the habit of obtaining renewals on favourable terms, demised to B. at a certain rent, with a covenant to renew at the same rent, as often as the corporation should renew to him. The corporation at length raised the rent payable by A. A. was bound, notwithstanding, to renew to B. on the former terms. Evans v. Walsh, 2 Sch. & Lef. 519.

5. A sub-lessee of a bishop's lease, demised to the plaintiff, covenanting to renew, and to use his best endeavours to obtain a renewal from his immediate lessor. He afterwards purchased his immediate lessor's estate. The bishop refused to renew, except at a greatly increased fine, which he paid:—Held, that he was bound to renew to the plaintiff without any contribution, in consequence of the increase of the bishop's fine. Lawder v. Blackford, Beat. 522.

6. A contract was entered into for the sale of a piece of land described as arable land, not stating anything as to the existence of a right of way to it. It turned out that it was extremely doubtful whether there was any right of cartway to it:—Held, that specific performance ought not to be decreed at the suit of the vendor, in the absence of any conduct on the part of the purchaser precluding his taking the objection. Donne v. Light, 3 Jur., N. S., 627; 26 L. J., Ch., 459; 8 De G. M. & G. 774.

7. A mortgagee, with power of sale, obtained a foreclosure decree, and then entered into an agreement to sell the estate, with a clause providing that as the vendor was mortgagee, with power of sale, she would only enter into the usual covenant that she had not incumbered. The purchaser objected to the validity of the foreclosure decree, and insisted upon having the conveyance under the power of sale; and on the vendor declining to convey in that form, instituted a suit for specific performance, in which the vendor adduced evidence, showing that the above-mentioned clause was inserted by inadvertence, and that she never intended to incur the risk of opening the foreclosure by conveying under the power:—Held, that the misapprehension was a sufficient defence to the enforcement of a conveyance under the power. Watson v. Marston, 4 De G. M. & G. 230.

8. A bill in Parliament to authorise a railway company to grant a lease in perpetuity to another railway company of certain projected lines was opposed by a third railway company, who withdrew their opposition on an agreement being come to that during the continuance of any lease to be authorised by the Act the companies should participate in portions of each other's profits, and that the two former companies should not take traffic on specified portions of their lines:—Held, differing from the opinion of Lord Cottenham on a demurrer (2 Macn. & G. 324), that the agreement was ultra vires, and ought not to be decreed to be specifically performed. Held, also, on the construction of the whole agreement, that if valid, it would have come into operation, although only a portion of the projected lines was completed. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co. v. London & North Western Railway Co., 4 De G. M. & G. 115; 17 Jur. 845; 22 L. J., Ch., 682; 6 H. L. Ca. 113.

The directors of a railway company are trustees (in an important sense of the word) of their statutory powers, and an agreement entered into by the company amounting to a breach of trust will not be enforced to the prejudice, or not according to the views of all or some of the shareholders, at the instance of parties cognisant of the circumstances. This proposition is not inconsistent with Hawkes v. Eastern Counties Railway Co. (1 De G. M. & G. 737). Id.

9. Leasehold property was sold by auction on the 8th June 1858, with a condition for completion on the 20th June following. The title was accepted by the purchaser on the 16th of July, but owing to disputes as to the value of the fixtures, the meeting for completion did not take place till the 26th August. The purchaser then discovered that the vendors had renewed the insurance, which expired on the 24th June, for one month only, so that the property became uninsured on the 24th July, and thereupon became forfeited to the lessors. On the 7th September the purchaser absolutely repudiated the contract. The vendors subsequently renewed the insurance, and obtained a waiver of the forfeiture from the lessors, and the purchaser refusing to complete, they filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, that, although the vendors were not bound to renew the insurance, yet having done so in so unusual a manner, the Court would not decree specific performance, and the bill was dismissed, but without costs. Dowson v. Solomon, 1 Drew. & Sm. 1; 29 L. J., Ch., 129.

1. A person contracting for the lease of a mine, cannot resist its performance, on the ground of his ignorance of mining matters, and of the mine turning out worthless. Haywood v. Cope, 25 Beav. 140; 4 Jur., N. S., 227; 27 L. J., Ch., 468.

Taking possession of a mine by intended lessee:—Held, not to be an acceptance of the title. Id.

A. had worked the coal under his estate, but abandoned it as unprofitable. Twenty years afterwards, B. cleared the pit and examined the coal in the shaft with two other persons, and subsequently contracted for a lease. The colliery turned out worthless:—Held, that B. could not resist a specific performance on the ground of A. not having communicated the fact of his having worked the mine and found it unprofitable. Id.

2. A contract in writing had been entered into for sale of land by trustees to a Roman Catholic priest. The written contract did not specify the use that was to be made of the land, but the vendors represented, and the Court was satisfied by the evidence, that there had been an understanding that a church should be built on it. Before completion the purchaser contracted to sell the land to a third party, who intended to erect a manufactory on it, and the trustees then refused to complete:—Held, on a bill filed against the trustees, that the Court would not, under the circumstances, compel them to complete the contract. Trappes v. Cobb, 16 W. R. 117.

V. ILLEGALITY.

3. Where an equal agreement cannot, by reason of a subsequent Act of Parliament, or some other lawful impediment, be performed in the whole, yet the same shall be specifically executed in such part of it as remains lawful. Bettesworth v. St. Paul's (Dean), 1 Bro. P. C. 240.

4. A court of equity will not enforce an agreement against a party, who was induced to enter into it, in order to save his sons from a threatened prosecution for felony. Dewar v. Elliott, 2 L. J., Ch., 178.

5. A clause in an agreement, providing that, if it should become necessary to stamp it and to pay any penalty for that purpose, the creditor may charge it against the debtor, is an evasion of the Stamp Acts, and the Court will not enforce it. Abbott v. Stratton, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 233; 3 J. & L. 603.

6. If an instrument contains distinct engagements, by which a party binds himself to do certain acts, some of which are legal and some illegal at common law, the performance of those which are legal may be enforced, though those which are illegal cannot. Australasia (Bank) v. Breillat, 6 Moo. P. C. 152. S. C. nom. Australasia (Bank) v. Australia (Bank), 12 Jur. 189.

7. When the plain intent of an agreement is unobjectionable, this Court will decree specific performance of it according to such intent, though in its terms the agreement was contrary to a statute; thus an agreement for a lease with a covenant by the tenant to pay all composition for tithes, entered into after the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119, will be enforced by decreeing a lease to be executed, reserving a rent compounded of the rent agreed upon, and the rent-charge in lieu of tithes, where such is the intention of the parties. Daly v. Duggan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 311.

8. The purchase of an estate for the purpose of setting aside a previous agreement affecting the property on the ground of fraud, partakes of the nature of champerty, and will not be enforced in equity. De Hoghton v. Money, 2 L. R., Ch., 164.

A purchaser cannot, before completing his contract, enforce any equities attaching to the property against persons not parties to the contract. Id.

Therefore, where a purchaser filed a bill for specific performance, and added as parties persons claiming under a previous agreement which the bill sought to impeach:—Held, that the bill could not be sustained. Id.

9. A "Government securities trust," or combination of more than twenty persons, formed on the principle of investing the subscriptions of the members and dividing the capital fund and profits among themselves, by means of certificates, convertible by annual drawings by lot into preference dividend bonds bearing interest, with a bonus, is an "association for the acquisition of gain" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Companies Act 1862, and is, therefore, unless registered under that section, an illegal association. Semble, the mode of distribution was a lottery, and therefore illegal under the Lottery Acts. A member of such an association, which had never been registered under the Companies Act 1862, but which was regulated by a trust deed, brought an action against the trustees named in the deed to have the trust administered by the Court, and to make the trustees liable for alleged breaches of trust whereby part of the trust fund had been lost. A demurrer by one of the defendants, a retired trustee, was allowed, on the ground that the association was illegal, and that the trust deed therefore constituted an illegal contract which the Court would not enforce. Sykes v. Beadon, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 170; 48 L. J., Ch., 522; 27 W. R. 464; 40 L. T. 243.

10. In an action for specific performance of an agreement for the composition of a literary work by the defendant, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendant had agreed that his name should not appear on the title-page of a work as the author of it; the defendant alleged that it was part of the agreement that his name should so appear. The plaintiffs proposed to publish the book with a title-page, stating that it was edited by K. (assisted by M., the defendant). K. was known as having published other books of a similar description, and had allowed the plaintiffs to make use of his name, but he had taken no part whatever in the compilation:—Held, that the proposed title-page would be a fraud on the public, and that on this ground the plaintiffs were disentitled to relief. Post v. Marsh, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 395; 50 L. J., Ch., 287; 43 L. T. 628; 29 W. R. 198.

VI. INADEQUACY OR WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

1. It was determined to enforce a specific performance of an agreement for a purchase, if the price was reasonable at the time of the sale, however disproportionate after accidents might make it; but in the principal case the price agreed for was forty years' purchase. The Lords therefore reversed the decree of the Court of Exchequer enforcing specific performance. Upon mutual articles there ought to be mutual remedies: and therefore the vendor may come into equity as well as the vendee. Keen v. Stukeley, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 155.

2. Trustees not to be compelled to perform an agreement entered into under mistake, to sell for an inadequate consideration. Bridge v. Rice, 1 Jac. & Walk. 74.

3. Inadequacy of consideration is not sufficient for refusing specific performance of purchase by auction, without something more, as fraud or surprise, etc. White v. Damon, 7 Ves. 30.

4. Inadequacy of consideration is not of itself a sufficient ground for refusing specific performance. Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 348; 1 Smith 233.

5. It is incumbent on purchaser of reversionary interest from a person in situation of an expectant heir, seeking specific performance of contract, to make out a case of adequacy of consideration. Ryle v. Swindells, 1 M'Cl. 519; 13 Price 758.

6. Inadequacy of value is not an objection to decreeing specific performance, unless the inadequacy is so great as to prove fraud, or that the parties could not have intended to execute the contract. Callaghan v. Callaghan, 8 Cl. & F. 374. See S. C. 4 Ir. Eq. Rep. 441.

7. Where, by a memorandum of agreement, the defendant agreed to sell certain cottages and gardens, lately purchased by him, to the plaintiff for an annuity payable to the defendant during his life, which was to be charged on the premises, and the defendant was empowered to sell for the purpose of raising any arrears:—Held, that the vendor was entitled not only to the security of the charge, but also of the covenant of the purchaser for payment. Held, also, that the consideration being dependent on the uncertainty of life, although gross inadequacy might be a ground for refusing a specific performance, yet that a difference of 7 or 8 per cent. was not such inadequacy; and performance of the agreement decreed. Bower v. Cooper, 2 Hare 408; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 287; 6 Jur. 681.

8. A wife who had been deserted by her husband, became entitled to a share of an intestate's property amounting to 3,600*l*. The husband, whilst he was ignorant of the amount of the share, assigned it in trust for his wife and children, subject to the payment of 10*s*. a week to himself for his life. Although the deed recited that the intestate's estate was very considerable, yet as the administrators, who were the wife's brothers, and parties to the transaction, did not disclose to the husband the amount of the share, the deed was set aside. Groves v. Perkins, 6 Sim. 576.

9. Mere inadequacy of price, where it cannot be used as evidence of fraud, is not itself sufficient to prevent the Court from decreeing a specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of land. Collier v. Brown, 1 Cox 428.

10. Where a written agreement is entered into for the purchase of an estate at a price far beyond its value, but without any circumstances of fraud or surprise, the Court will not decree a specific performance of such a contract, but, on the other hand, will not rescind it. Day v. Newman, 2 Cox 77.

11. Specific performance will not be decreed of an agreement to sell certain property at a price to be settled by two persons who are named, if the Court sees reason to believe that the price subsequently fixed by these persons is considerably below the real value of the property. Parken v. Whitby, T. & R. 366.

12. M. being in embarrassed circumstances, in consideration of a loan of 900*l*. makes a lease to D., with covenant for perpetual renewal of lands of yearly value of 450*l*., at rent of 150*l*., subject to private parol agreement, that M. might redeem within two years, on payment of 1,300*l*. S. knowing circumstances, with consent of M. purchases from D. his interest, to whom S. pays the 1,300*l*. S. afterwards purchases the whole interest of this and other lands of M., for additional sum of 3,700*l*. The clear profit rent at which the lands were let the year following being 600*l*. a year and other advantages:—Held, binding on M. Meredith v. Saunders, 2 Dow. 515.

13. Specific performance of agreement refused under circumstances of inadequate consideration. Underwood v. Hitchcock, 1 Ves. 279.

14. Inadequacy of consideration no ground for resisting the execution of a contract to sell, the vendor not being under any incapacity, deficiency of judgment, or led by accident or design into a misapprehension of the value. Western v. Russell, 3 Ves. & B. 187.

15. Contract executed though the consideration was inadequate; not amounting to fraud; but without costs. Burrows v. Lock, 10 Ves. 470.

16. A court of equity will not decree a specific execution of articles where they appear to be unreasonable, or founded on fraud. Young v. Clerk, Pre. Ch. 538. And see Tilly v. Peers, cited 10 Ves. 301.

17. A deed which incorrectly recites the consideration of a contract on which a conveyance was executed, does not thereby warrant a suit in equity to set aside the contract, but only to reform the conveyance. Harrison v. Guest, 8 H. L. Ca. 481.

Where no fiduciary relation exists between two parties dealing for the sale and purchase of an estate, mere inadequacy of consideration, or irregularity in the statement of it in the conveyance, is not sufficient to impeach the contract. Ib.

1. A. B., being desirous of raising money to enable him to prosecute his claim to a fund in court, applied to a solicitor for that purpose. An agreement was executed, by which the solicitor agreed to lend 1,000*l.*, and A. B. agreed to purchase from him some land for 6,000*l.* (ten times its value). The land was conveyed, and the funds in court mortgaged by A. B. for the 6,000*l.*; but the 1,000*l.* was not advanced at the time. The Court, on the ground of the gross inadequacy of value, coupled with the other circumstances of the case, set aside the whole transaction with costs. Cookell v. Taylor, Collett v. Preston, Preston v. Collett, 15 Beav. 103; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 545.

Inadequacy of value, though it is not by itself a sufficient ground for avoiding a sale, is yet of great weight when coupled with circumstances of oppression. Ib.

The Court looks with suspicion at the evidence of value derived from the mere opinion given by surveyors, unsupported by any other circumstances. Ib.

2. Inadequacy of value is not in itself sufficient to set aside a contract. Griffith v. Spratley, 1 Cox 383.

3. Where a purchaser, after viewing a farm, and being informed of the rent at which it was let, agreed to buy at 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the difference between this price and 3,500*l.*, which the Court considered to be the value of the property, was not so great as to shock the conscience and thus constitute of itself a defence, on the ground of exorbitance, to suit for a specific performance. Abbott v. Swooder, 4 De G. & S. 448; 22 L. J., Ch., 235; 3 N. R. 623; 12 W. R. 615; 10 L. T., N. S., 49.

4. A purchase of a contingent reversionary interest was set aside chiefly on the ground of inadequacy of value, the consideration being an annuity for the life of the vendor, whose life was a bad life, and was better known to the purchaser than to the vendor to be such. Davies v. Cooper, 5 Myl. & C. 270.

5. Principles upon which the Court acts in considering the question of value. Brinkley v. Hams, 1 Dr. 175.

6. Observations on the true consideration not appearing upon purchase deeds. Holman v. Loynes, 18 Jur. 829; 23 L. J., Ch., 529.

7. Specific performance is a matter of discretion, to be exercised, however, according to fixed rules, and the mere inadequacy of consideration is not a ground for exercising such discretion by refusing a specific performance. Haywood v. Cope, 25 Beav. 140.

8. But mere inadequacy of price is a sufficient reason to refuse specific performance of a contract. Flacke v. Gray, 5 Jur., N. S., 645; 29 L. J., Ch., 28; 4 Drew. 651.

9. A party who, under a misapprehension of his legal rights, parts with his property for a bona fide and valuable, but not an adequate, consideration, cannot have the transaction set aside on the mere ground of mistake. Marshall v. Collett, 1 Y. & C. 232.

10. A creditor applied to his debtor to give security for a balance of account, and the debtor promised to give such security, but afterwards refused to fulfil his promise. The creditor filed a bill for specific performance:—

Held, on demurrer, that the implied forbearance of the creditor was a sufficient consideration for the promise. Alliance Bank (Limited) v. Broom, 5 N. R. 69; 2 Dr. & Sm. 289; 34 L. J., Ch., 256; 13 W. R. 127; 11 L. T., N. S., 332; 10 Jur., N. S., 1121.

11. The executrix of a lessee agreed to sell to A. the residue of her term (except a day) and the fixtures on the premises for 400*l.* This agreement was entered into by the executrix without advice, and there was no memorandum of it except a letter written by the executrix to her own solicitor a few hours afterwards. Subsequently the landlord, knowing that there had been a negotiation, if not an agreement, between the executrix and A., agreed with her for the purchase of the residue of the term for 550*l.* A., on hearing of this, offered the executrix, if she would complete her contract with him, 1,000*l.* as purchase money, and indemnity against any proceedings on the part of landlord. She accepted the offer, and demised the premises to A. for the whole term, wanting a day:—Held, that the original agreement (if any) with A. was such in its nature and circumstances as not to be of any validity in equity, unless the price was shown to be equal or more than equal to the value of the property; and that as this was not shown the landlord was entitled to a specific performance of his agreement, not only against the executrix, but against A. Goodwin v. Fielding, 4 De M. & G. 90.

12. Plaintiff agreed to transfer to defendant ten shares in a railway company, on which nothing had been paid, and defendant agreed to accept the transfer, and indemnify the plaintiff from future calls. Bill by plaintiff for specific performance. Demurrer by defendant, allowed by the Master of the Rolls on the ground of no consideration, overruled on appeal. Cheale v. Kenward, 6 W. R. 810; 3 De G. & J. 27; 4 Jur., N. S., 984; 27 L. J., Ch., 784. Reversing 4 Jur., N. S., 576; 6 W. R. 494.

13. If a vendor of real estate dies before conveyance, intestate, and his heir-at-law contests the sufficiency of the consideration for the purchase, he ought to file a bill to have the agreement for sale set aside, and not rest upon inadequacy of consideration as a defence to a bill for specific performance. Hodder v. Pugh, 10 Jur., N. S., 534; 12 W. R. 782; 10 L. T., N. S., 446; 33 Beav. 489.

VII. INSOLVENCY.

14. Purchaser discharged on motion upon affidavit of imprisonment for debt and insolvency. Hodder v. Ruffin, 1 Ves. & B. 544.

15. Bankruptcy of a person who has agreed to purchase does not discharge the contract. Brooke v. Hewitt, 3 Ves. 255.

16. An act of bankruptcy and a docket struck, though no commission issued, a sufficient objection to a bill for specific performance of a previous contract for the sale of an estate to the plaintiff, in a case even where part of the money had been paid, and sub-contract for sale of part entered into by the plaintiff; and the defendants had agreed to convey accordingly. Franklyn v. Brownlow (Lord), 14 Ves. 550.

1. A., being in insolvent circumstances, suffers another person to become the apparent owner of his farm (though under a secret trust for him), A. shall not have, against the landlord, a specific execution of an agreement made by him with the trustee, the landlord supposing the trustee to have been the rightful owner, and confiding in his solvency. O'Herlihy v. Hedges, 1 Sch. & Lef. 123.

2. A trader makes a conveyance of all his real and personal property to trustees, to sell for the benefit of his creditors, under which the trustees contract to sell certain lands to defendant. The contract not being completed, they file a bill against defendant for specific performance; but, before answer, the trader becomes bankrupt, and his assignees file a supplemental bill to enforce the contract:—Held, that although the conveyance to the trustees was an act of bankruptcy, the assignees may compel the performance of the contract made under it. Goodwin v. Lightbody, Dan. 123.

1. Misrepresentation and Misdescription.

3. Misrepresentation, though in a slight degree, is an objection to a specific performance. Distinction upon a bill to rescind the contract. Cadman v. Horner, 18 Ves. 13.

4. Specific performance of agreement refused on ground of want of mutuality, of laches, misapprehensions in the parties of its nature and effect, inequality, improvidence, and other circumstances. Hamilton v. Grant, 3 Dow 33; 1 Bli. N. S. 594.

5. Unless it appear that the party seeking a specific execution of an agreement has acted not only fairly, but in a manner clear of all suspicion, equity will not interfere; for if there be a reasonable doubt on the transaction, the party will be left to his legal remedy for non-performance of the contract. O'Rourke v. Percival, 2 Ball & B. 58.

6. A court of equity will not decree a specific execution of articles where they appear to be unreasonable, or founded on fraud. Young v. Clerk, Pre. Ch. 538.

7. Where the manner of obtaining an agreement is not strictly just and regular, a court of equity ought not to decree a specific performance, although the agreement be in part executed. Rockford v. Creswick, 1 Bro. P. C. 171.

8. Equity will not decree an execution of articles unless fairly obtained, and without surprise or circumvention. Thus, when A. articles for the purchase of B.'s estate, pretending he bought it for one whom B. was desirous to oblige, but in truth bought it for another, and by that means got the estate at a less value; equity will not decree the execution of these articles. Phillips v. Bucks (Duke), 1 Vern. 227, 229.

9. When A. has refused to sell to B., except for ready money, and C. clandestinely attempts to purchase for B., and money is not ready, Court will not enforce agreement. Popham v. Eyre, Loft. 786.

10. Where a person having a clear title to 12l. for rent, and claiming the property of the land, is induced, by the representations of two professional persons, that he had no right to either rent or land, to agree to accept 10l. in full, for rent and land, the Court will not entertain a bill for the specific performance of the agreement. Stanley v. Robinson, 1 Russ. & M. 527.

11. If A. in contracting with B. falsely represents himself to be the agent of C., and thereby obtains better terms, the Court will, notwithstanding, enforce the contract, unless A. knew that such would be the effect of the misrepresentation. Fellows v. Gwydyr (Lord), 1 Sim. 63; 5 L. J., Ch., 43. Affirmed 1 Russ. & M. 83.

12. A purchase obtained by fraud would be, in effect, no purchase, and could not acquire any validity by the Confirming Statute, 54 Geo. 3, c. 173, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 100. Beaden v. King, 2 Hare 523.

13. There may be a degree of unfairness in obtaining articles for the purchase of an estate, for which this Court will not set them aside; but will refuse its aid to carry them into execution. And if the party who obtained such articles hath been in possession, and made lasting improvements, he shall be allowed for them on consenting to deliver up the articles and account for the profits; otherwise, if he go to law, and fails there. Savage v. Taylor, Forrest 234.

14. Specific performance was decreed in favour of a purchaser, though no solicitor acted for the vendor, and though the contract was executed under circumstances which might easily have led to fraud, no fraud being proved in the vendor or his agent. Lightfoot v. Heron, 3 Y. & Coll. 586.

15. A party contending for specific performance must show that his conduct has been fair. If he has made material misrepresentations to the defendant, it is no answer to say that the defendant might have found out that they were misrepresentations. Specific performance is not of course, because there is a contract, but a relief in the nature of indulgence peculiar to the jurisdiction of equity. Cox v. Middleton, 2 Drew. 209; 22 L. J., Ch., 618.

1. The Court will not apply the maxim, caveat emptor, to cover a false and positive representation, essentially material to the subject. Lomdes v. Lane, 2 Cox 363.

2. Party obtaining an agreement by a partial misrepresentation, not entitled to a specific performance, on waiving the part affected by the misrepresentation. The effect of partial misrepresentation is not to alter or modify the agreement, pro tanto, but to destroy it entirely, and to operate as a personal bar to the party who has practised it. Clermont (Viscount) v. Tasburgh, 1 Jac. & Walk. 112.

3. Specific performance refused on the ground of representations having been made at the sale on the part of the vendor, of improvements, affecting the value of the premises, intended by him, which were not carried into effect. Beaumont v. Duques, Jac. 422.

4. Misrepresentation of value of estate sufficient ground to refuse specific performance. Walls v. Stubbs, 1 Madd. 80.

5. Parol evidence of declaration of auctioneer at sale, warranting quantity, received as defence to bill for specific performance, on ground of fraud, though not for purpose of enforcing specific performance. Winch v. Winchester, 1 Ves. & B. 375.

6. In a case depending on allied misrepresentation of value, there cannot be a more effectual bar to the plaintiff than by showing that he was from the beginning cognisant of all the matters complained of, or after full information of them continued to deal with the property. Vigers v. Pike, 8 Cl. & F. 650.

7. Wilful misrepresentation of the yearly value of an estate, is a good reason for a court of equity to refuse decreeing a specific performance of a contract for the sale of it. Brereton v. Conper, 1 Bro. P. C. 211.

8. On a sale by auction of a life interest in certain funds, the life was described in the particulars of sale to be that of a very healthy gentleman, aged forty-eight. In a subsequent part of the particulars, the life was described as that of a healthy gentleman, aged forty-eight, whose life was insurable. At the sale, an insurance was guaranteed at five guineas per cent. On a bill by the vendors for a specific performance of the contract, it was proved that, shortly before the sale, the vendors had insured the life at a premium of 4l. 17s. 10d. per cent., though, according to the evidence of the actuary of the office where the life was so insured, the highest rate per cent. charged in London for a healthy life of that age was 4l. 6s. —Held, that, with the knowledge of this fact, the vendors were not justified in describing the life as a healthy life, and that the guarantee did not do away with the effect of this description, though the purchaser admitted he knew five guineas to be more than the premiums usually charged; and the bill was dismissed with costs. Brealey v. Collins, Younge 317.

9. A purchaser, offering to perform his part of the contract, required, by notice, the vendor to complete within a month:—Held, that the purchaser could not afterwards set up, as a defence to suit for a specific performance, misrepresentation of the vendor, of which he was aware at the time of giving the notice. Macbryde v. Weeks, 22 Beav. 533; 2 Jur., N. S., 918.

10. Where a purchaser can show that he entered into a contract in reliance on the truth of representations which turn out to be false, and without resort to other means of information, he will not be compelled to perform it; but if, not satisfied with the representations, he investigate and inquire for himself, and has a fair opportunity of testing the accuracy of them, the vendor is relieved from responsibility. Clarke v. Mackintosh, 4 Giff. 134; 9 Jur., N. S., 114; 7 L. T., N. S., 558; 11 W. R. 183; 1 N. R. 160. Afterwards compromised on appeal, 11 W. R. 652.

Therefore, where representations were in some respects vague and inconsistent, and required investigation, and the purchasers had books produced to them, saw the property, and had every facility for a full investigation into the accuracy of the representations, and subsequently entered into a formal contract, which was altered and approved by their solicitor, the Court decreed specific performance, with costs, and dismissed a cross-bill by the purchasers, praying that the agreement might be declared void. Ib.

11. The jurisdiction of the Court to decree specific performance will not be exercised in favour of the vendor who fails to satisfy the Court that he has done all he can to avoid misrepresentation. Turquand v. Rhodes, 37 L. J., Ch., 830; 18 L. T., N. S., 844; 16 W. R. 1074.

In dismissing a bill for specific performance by a vendor, the Court has jurisdiction to order a return of the deposit. Ib.

12. A. agreed to purchase part of an estate, on the faith of representations made to him by the vendor's agent, that the vendor would do certain acts on the remainder of the estate. Those acts, however, were not done; in consequence of which the value of the land purchased was considerably diminished. A bill for specific performance, filed by persons claiming under the vendor, was dismissed with costs. Myers v. Watson, 1 Sim., N. S., 523.

13. A solicitor contracts to purchase from A. B., not at that time his client, and being ignorant of his legal position, an estate at a low price, informing A. B. that the nature and title of the property were such as that no one but a professional man would purchase it—such representation not being justified by the state of the property, and no solicitor having been employed on behalf of A. B. in the transaction. Specific performance of the contract refused to the solicitor. Davis v. Abraham, 5 W. R. 465.

14. The mere assertion by a vendor that he has a good title, on the faith of which the purchaser relies without investigating the title, is not necessarily such a misrepresentation as will preclude the vendor from enforcing the contract. Hume v. Pooook, 1 L. R., Ch., 379; 12 Jur., N. S., 445; 35 L. J., Ch., 731; 14 W. R. 681; 14 L. T., N. S., 386.

Representations, which a purchaser has chosen to accept from the vendor's agent on the subject of the vendor's title, and which turn out, in fact, but not when made, to have been known by the agent to be untrue, do not amount to such fraud as absolves a purchaser from his contract. Ib.

1. Purchase at an auction of leaseholds stated to be sold "by order of executors;" the vendor was really administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo durante absentia A., who was the next of kin to the testator, and also to his last surviving trustee and executor, A. being in Canada. Bill for specific performance by the vendor dismissed, and interest on the deposit ordered to be paid. Webb v. Kirby, 5 W. R. 189; 26 L. J., Ch., 145; 3 Jur., N. S., 73. Reversing 4 W. R. 770.

2. Leaseholds were described in the particulars of sale as in the occupation of a company under a lease of which ten and a half years were unexpired at Lady Day 1856. At the sale C., who attended to purchase, asked to see the lease, which was not produced, but he was informed by the vendors' solicitor that he did not remember the name of the lessees, but believed N. and M. to be two of them. C. became the purchaser. The lease had been in fact granted to N., M., and another as trustees for the company. C. refused to complete on the ground of misrepresentation. Specific performance decreed against C. Farebrother v. Gibson, 1 De G. & J. 602.

3. A purchaser cannot be compelled to complete a contract entered into by him, on the faith of a balance sheet produced by the vendor, as being, though subject to slight errors, substantially correct; the errors being, in fact, so serious as to amount to nearly 1,480*l.*, and reducing the balance of 1,500*l.* stock in favour of the business to some 20*l.* or 30*l.*, and showing that the concern was barely solvent. Charlesworth v. Jennings, 11 L. T., N. S., 439.

4. C. and M., by verbal agreement, cause a lease to be prepared of a house and stable in consideration of 600*l.*, and 5*l.* a year ground rent, which is only executed by C.; but C. and M. subsequently agree in writing that M. shall give 625*l.* for the premises, C. paying the expenses of the lease to the occupant. M. then objects to complete, on the grounds that, C. having represented the house to be substantially and well built, it was seriously defective. C. files a bill for specific performance, denying the representation, but, on his examination under the new practice, merely saying he was never asked. M., by his answer, swears such representations were made, and his statement is corroborated:—Held, that the written agreement was not sufficiently definite to satisfy the statute, and the misrepresentations of the plaintiff were proved. Bill dismissed with costs. Cow v. Middleton, 2 W. R. 284; 2 Drew. 209; 23 L. T. 6; 2 Eq. Rep. 631.

5. A real estate was devised to trustees to sell, invest the produce, and pay the dividends to a husband and wife for life, and after the death of the survivor to her children as she should appoint. The estate was not sold, and the wife, having nine children, appointed it to the six younger, and all the nine joined with the husband and wife in raising money upon annuities, and, finally, in selling the estate to the annuitant. The trustee refused to join in any of the deeds, but he paid the rent of the estate to the purchaser during the life of the surviving tenant for life; after whose death he refused to make any further payments. Upon a bill by the purchaser against the trustee and the cestuis que trustent, to obtain a conveyance of the legal estate, they alleged that the deed was executed by them under pressure, that none of the children received any part of the money paid for the annuities or for the purchase of the reversion; that the youngest was under age at the time she executed the purchase deed, and that she had refused to confirm it:—Held, that the purchaser must prove the transaction fair and perfect, before the Court will interfere to give a complete title; that there was no proof of the owners of the reversion having received any consideration; that it was not necessary to consider whether the youngest child was of age, and the bill was dismissed against the defendants, without costs, but as against the trustee with costs. Hannah v. Hodgson, 30 L. J., Ch., 738; 9 W. R. 129.

6. A. agreed to purchase all B.'s interest in a coal and fire-clay pit, in the belief that B. had some lease from R., owner of the mine; and A. had been let into possession, and had worked the mine for four years under the agreement. At the date of the agreement B. had no lease from R., but only a memorandum of an agreement for a lease, which was never shown to A., but two years after the agreement with A., B. obtained a lease of the mine from R.:—Held, that the agreement could be specifically enforced against A., subject, however, to the Court finding on an inquiry that B. had made no substantial misrepresentation to A. as to the area of the workings. Southern v. Harriman, 12 W. R. 704.

Held, also, that an offer by A. to give up possession upon certain terms not acceded to by B. was no abandonment of the contract. Ib.

Held, also, that a question of misrepresentation as to the area of the workings round a coal pit is not waived by the purchaser taking possession and working the pit. Ib.

7. Where a misrepresentation has been made by a vendor, the Court applies the rule caveat emptor with great caution. Colby v. Gadsden, 15 W. R. 1185; 17 L. T., N. S., 97.

Where a purchaser agreed to buy an estate upon a statement that it lay upon coal, which coal afterwards proved to have been mostly worked out, and subsequently the purchaser entered into an agreement with a third party to sell the colliery at a price implying the existence of a considerable quantity of coal, and then afterwards discovered the exhaustion of the coal:—Held, that the transaction between the purchaser did not invalidate his defence of misrepresentation to a bill by the vendor for specific performance. Ib.

Property was sold which was represented as standing on a fine vein of anthracite coal:—Held, that the doctrine of caveat emptor applied, and that it was the business of the purchaser to inquire as to the extent to which the coal had already been worked. S. C. 34 Beav. 416.

8. The owners of a house with outhouses and curtilage, which adjoined a yard communicating with it by an open doorway and used by the tenants of the house, the whole being enclosed by a wall, put up a notice on the premises that they were to be sold. An intending purchaser having inspected them, and being under the impression that the whole formed the property which was to be sold, made an offer. Before any contract was entered into an abstract was sent by the owner's solicitors to the solicitor of the intending purchaser, in which the property was described as a dwelling-house, curtilage, coal-house, outhouses and garden, and a piece of ground between the dwelling-house, coalhouse and garden on the one side and the river and ditch on the other, except a small piece of land, part thereof, lately sold to a person named in the abstract. The purchaser's solicitor required to be informed of the particulars of the excepted piece of land, and that it should be marked on the plan. The vendors' solicitor replied that the premises were too distinctly defined to admit of any mistake, and were bounded in by walls. He afterwards filled in a blank, left to be filled in by him in the draft contract, with the above description, adding, "and which premises are sufficiently distinguished by boundaries," and the agreement was so signed. The vendors had no title to the yard, which in fact was the piece of land sold to the person named in the abstract:—Held, that the purchaser was not bound to inquire further as to this excepted piece, nor to blame for supposing the yard was comprised in the agreement; and that, as the representation of the vendors' solicitor had tended, not to remove, but to confirm the error, a bill by the vendors for a specific performance ought to have been dismissed with costs. Mozey v. Bigwood, 4 De G. F. & J. 351; 8 Jur., N. S., 803; 6 L. T., N. S., 450. Affirmed 10 Jur., N. S., 967; 12 W. R. 811; 10 L. T., N. S., 466.

1. B. signed a written contract with R. to purchase a brickfield. In the negotiations B. asked R. whether he had ever put the property into the hands of an agent to sell for less money than he was then asking, saying that he fancied, as the fact was, that it must be the same as had been offered to him for less. R. falsely answered, "No:—"Held, that this was such a material misrepresentation as to prevent the Court enforcing the contract in an action brought by R. Roots v. Snelling, 48 L. T. 216.

2. An agent, commissioned by a vendor to find a purchaser, has authority to describe the property, and to state any fact or circumstance which may affect the value, so as to bind the vendor: and if an agent so commissioned makes a false statement as to the description or value (though not instructed so to do), which the purchaser is led to believe, and upon which he relies, the vendor cannot recover in an action for specific performance. A surveyor was employed by the owner of a leasehold house to find a purchaser. He represented to the defendant that another person, H., was ready to buy the property for 700*l.*, and that if the defendant were to give 50*l.* more, he would make a clear profit of 7 per cent.; that H. had further offered to rent the property at 300*l.*, or the ground floor only at 200*l.* The defendant, relying on the above representations and others, which were unauthorised by the vendor, and untrue, contracted to purchase for 750*l.*; but afterwards, finding out the falsehood, refused to complete. The vendor himself also made a misleading statement to the purchaser:—Held (independently of the statement made by the vendor himself), that the false statements made by the agent, being within his authority, were sufficient to vitiate the contract; and specific performance refused. Mullens v. Miller, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 194; 52 L. J., Ch., 380; 48 L. T. 103; 31 W. R. 559.

2. Concealment.

3. Specific performance not decreed where there is a concealment on the part of the vendor. Shirley v. Stratton, 1 Bro. C. C. 440.

4. A contract having been made for sale of an estate, it afterwards appeared that there were several outgoings from the estate which were not disclosed at the time of the contract, yet these being matters which lie in compensation, the contract shall be carried into execution, with an allowance only to the purchaser for those particulars which diminish the value. Homland v. Norris, 1 Cox 59.

5. A small incumbrance which may be the subject of compensation, no objection to a specific performance. Guest v. Homfray, 5 Ves. 818.

6. Where a purchaser (who was a solicitor), after viewing a farm, and being informed of the rent at which it was let, agreed to buy at 5,000*l.*:—Held, first, that the difference between this price and 3,500*l.*, which the Court considered to be the value of the property, was not so great as to shock the conscience, and thus constitute of itself a defence, on the ground of exorbitancy, to a suit of the vendor for a specific performance. Secondly, that the omission on the part of the vendor to inform the purchaser of the result of a late valuation, or of the tenant having complained of the rent being excessive, and of the full amount not having been exacted, did not constitute a defence to such a suit. Thirdly, that the refusal by the defendant to complete having arisen from a cause other than that of insufficiency of title, he ought to pay the general costs of the suit, although the original decree directed an inquiry when the title was first shown, and the report found it to have been first shown in the Master's office. Abbott v. Swoorder, 4 De G. & Sm. 448; 22 L. J., Ch., 235; 3 N. R. 623; 12 W. R. 615; 10 L. T., N. S., 49.

7. It is not generally the duty of a purchaser to inform a vendor of any circumstances which may make it desirable for him to purchase such as a contract for re-sale at a higher value. Dolman v. Nokes, 22 Beav. 402.

8. An estate was put up to sale by auction. The conditions of sale were drawn out in manuscript, but were not printed or circulated. They were shown in this state to B., a solicitor for a person who was likely to be a purchaser. He objected at once to one of the conditions of sale, as one which the contemplated purchaser could not be advised to assent to. The auction took place, and the objection to this condition was publicly noticed by an indifferent attendant at the sale. The property was bought in. On the following day the proprietor of the estate called upon the contemplated purchaser, and persuaded him to sign an agreement for the purchase of the estate, as it was alleged, at a most exorbitant price, and containing a reference to the objected condition of sale:—Held, that, under such a state of circumstances, specific performance of the agreement could not be enforced. Lee v. Dawson, 4 L. T., N. S., 464.

1. In a suit for specific performance of an agreement for a lease of clay, sand, and other substances, of which the defendant had recently become the owner, it was alleged by the defendant that there had been misrepresentation and concealment as to value:—Held, that the bill could not be sustained on that ground, but as there was evidence that the defendant had been taken by surprise, and had been induced by the plaintiff to sign the agreement in ignorance of the value of his property, and upon the representation that the defendant would make a fair allowance should the property turn out more valuable, the bill was dismissed. Walters v. Morgan, 4 L. T., N. S., 758; 3 De G. F. & J. 718.

There being no fiduciary relation between a vendor and a purchaser in a negotiation, the purchaser is not bound to disclose any fact exclusively within his knowledge, which would influence the price of the subject sold. Ib.

Simple reticence does not amount to legal fraud; but if a purchaser in any manner induces a vendor to believe the existence of a non-existing fact, which might influence the price of the subject contracted to be sold, the contract cannot be supported. Ib.

Where, therefore, an intended lessor and lessee of minerals were in the above position as to knowledge, and the intended lessee brought to the lessor a lease ready prepared, without previous negotiation as to the details of it, and induced the latter to sign it, saying that he might trust to the proposed lessee for making a fair allowance if the minerals turned out more valuable than was supposed:—Held, that a bill for specific performance by the intended lessee, offering to make a fair extra allowance, could not be sustained, and its dismissal was confirmed on appeal. Ib.

2. The owners of a colliery entered into a contract with an adjoining landowner for the purchase of his estate, without disclosing the fact, of which he was ignorant, that they had, without authority, gotten a considerable quantity of coal from under it:—Held, that the Court would not enforce the contract at the suit of the purchasers, though the sale was not shown to be at an undervalue. Phillips v. Homfray, 6 L. R., Ch., 770.

3. Property was sold by auction on the 15th June. The principal conditions of sale, which were read aloud before the sale, were—(3) that the abstract of title was to be delivered to the purchaser within ten days from the day of sale; (4) that no objection was to be made in respect of the title prior to a lease of the 10th April 1809; (6) that all requisitions and objections in respect of the title or matters appearing on the abstract should be sent in writing within ten days after the delivery of the abstract to the purchaser or his solicitor otherwise it shall be considered that all such requisitions or objections were waived by the purchaser, and that he had accepted the title, and for that purpose time should be deemed of the essence of the contract; (8) that the purchaser shall not object to the title in connection with the sale of the premises to B., to whom the assignment of them, dated the 29th January 1870, was made, but should assume that B. acquired under and by virtue of the deed a valid title to the premises by the deed expressed to be assigned to him; (9) that the purchaser should not object to the title because L., in 1858, as a trustee for B., purchased from the trustees of the then owners, B. being one of the last-mentioned trustees. The purchaser's solicitor had not been furnished with any copy of the conditions before the day of sale, though he had asked for them, and had only hastily perused them in the vendor's solicitor's office on the morning of that day, and had no knowledge of the title or its defects. The abstract of title, which was very long and complicated, was delivered to the purchaser's solicitor on the 25th June, and he sent the abstract and a case to counsel on the 26th. The purchaser's solicitor received the opinion of counsel that the title was bad on the 8th July. The title was bad on the ground that R., the assignee of the deed of 1870, had purchased the premises sold for X. and others, X. being one of the trustees for sale of the property so bought, and also on the ground that L., the assignee in the deed of 1858, had purchased for B., who was also a trustee for sale:—Held, in a suit for specific performance by the vendor, first, that whatever opinion might be entertained as to the ninth condition, the eighth condition was so framed as to deceive the purchaser, and entirely throw him off his guard by unwarrantably suppressing and masking a fatal defect in the title. Boyd v. Dickson, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 239.

Held, secondly, that, having regard to the object and frame of the eighth and ninth conditions, and the length and complication of the title, the vendor could not avail himself of the sixth condition, as he could not be heard to say that an objection should be sent in within the limited time, which his other conditions showed could never have been made. Ib.

4. A. agrees to be bound in a bond as a surety to B., and signs and seals it accordingly; but, by the neglect of the clerk, A.'s name was not inserted. The obligee shows the condition, and his name and seal, demands payment, and threatens to sue him unless he would give fresh security, which A. agrees to, but after finding the mistake, refused, not being bound by law; yet equity will compel him. Crosby v. Middleton, Pre. Ch. 309.

5. Specific performance of an agreement which is clearly worded, cannot be resisted on the ground that other terms must have been in contemplation of the parties, shown by the improvidence of the express contract; and was decreed, notwithstanding the act upon which the right depended appeared under the circumstances to have been done diverso intuitu. Sullivan v. Jacob, 1 Moll. 473.

1. Parol evidence admissible in opposition to specific performance of written agreement upon heads of mistake or surprise, as well as of fraud, and upon such evidence the bill was dismissed. Another bill for specific performance of agreement, contracted according to the same evidence, contradicted by answer, was also dismissed. Townsend v. Stangroom, 6 Ves. 328.

2. Specific performance of an agreement the subject of discretion, refused in the case of mistake, though no fraud. Mason v. Armitage, 13 Ves. 25.

3. Though a defendant to a bill for specific performance of a contract may have a decree for performance, according to his construction, if adopted by the Court, without a cross-bill, the decision being, not according to his construction, but only that he had contracted under a mistake, created by the plaintiff, the bill was merely dismissed. Higginson v. Clowes, 15 Ves. 516.

4. Trustees not to be compelled to perform an agreement entered into under mistake, to sell for an inadequate consideration. Bridger v. Rice, 1 Jac. & Walk. 74.

5. Where a party by mistake bid for the wrong lot, and was declared the purchaser:—Held, that as it was a clear mistake, the Court would leave the party to his remedy at law, and the bill for a specific performance dismissed, without costs. Malins v. Freeman, 2 Keen 25; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 133.

6. A vendor contracted to sell a certain leasehold messuage, but through a mistake in the parcels actually conveyed the next door to it, which also belonged to him:—Held, on an application to compel the purchaser to accept the title and pay the purchase money into court, that the purchaser had no reason for refusing to do so. Grissell v. Peto, 2 W. R. 178; 2 Sm. & Gif. 39; 18 Jur. 591.

7. Where one party seeks the execution of a contract which is still in fieri, the other may show that the contract was not conformable to the real intention of the parties. Law v. Warren, 1 Dr. 31; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 299.

But where the contract has been executed, it is not open to a party, by way of defence, to allege that the instrument does not truly ascertain the real contract of the parties. Ib.

To sustain such a defence, the defendant must file a bill to reform the contract. Ib.

8. Verbal declarations of an auctioneer at the time of sale not to be received in contradiction to the printed particulars. But quære as to the effect of personal information of a mistake in the particular. Ogilvie v. Folyjambo, 3 Meriv. 53.

9. The Court will not decree a specific performance against a party who has mistaken a material fact in the agreement. Where, on an agreement for the sale of a garden, it was clear that the vendor could never have intended that buildings which had been erected on part of the garden, and necessary to the enjoyment of his own premises, were within the agreement, and formed part of the premises to be conveyed, a specific performance was refused. Neap v. Abbott, C. P. C. 333.

10. Premises were advertised to be sold according to certain printed particulars and conditions of sale. Before the sale took place several of the printed copies were altered by the vendor's solicitor, who introduced in writing a reservation of a right of way to other premises belonging to the vendor. Several of the altered copies of the particulars were laid on the table in the auction room without any remark with regard to the alteration; and an altered copy was delivered to the auctioneer, who read the same aloud before the biddings commenced; but the party who became the purchaser did not hear or notice the alteration. The contract was signed by the auctioneer (inadvertently) and by the purchaser on a copy of the particulars of sale not containing the reservation. After the purchase money was paid and possession given, the purchaser filed his bill for a specific performance of the contract by a conveyance from the vendor, without a reservation of the right of way; and the bill was dismissed without costs. Manser v. Bach, 6 Hare 443.

11. Specific performance of a written agreement refused, on parol evidence that one term of the actual agreement was omitted. Garrard v. Grinling, 2 Swan. 244; 1 Wils. 460.

12. The proof must be very clear which should induce a court of equity to refuse to enforce a written agreement, upon the ground that a term of the real agreement between the parties has been omitted by mistake. Clay v. Rufford, 8 Hare 281; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 295; 14 Jur. 803.

13. Equity has jurisdiction to compel the specific performance of a complete contract, but cannot supply any term not agreed on. Ormond v. Anderson, 2 Ball & B. 369.

14. When a contract is composed of an offer by letter and an acceptance of the offer by letter, if the offer is clear and unambiguous, and the party who answers it wishes to add to it any condition or qualification, the onus rests upon him of stating clearly and precisely what that condition or qualification is; if the answer, though ambiguous, is capable of being construed as an acceptance, pure and simple, of the offer, the party making the offer is justified in acting upon it in that sense. English and Foreign Credit Co. v. Arduin, 5 L. R., H. L., 64; 40 L. J., Exch., 108.

15. In applying the rule of caveat emptor to the case of lessees of coal mines, it must be remembered that every one acquainted with that kind of property is aware that coal mines are liable to be interrupted by faults. Ridgway v. Sneyd, 1 Kay 627.

If all the coal had been gotten by ancient workings, that might be a case for equitable relief. Ib.

16. A contract for the sale and purchase of an uncertain thing, the extent and value of which is understood to be unknown to both parties, is valid, and neither party can resist completing, merely because the reality has turned out to be different from what was anticipated. Bazendale v. Seale, 19 Beav. 601; 1 Jur., N. S., 581; 24 L. J., Ch., 385.

But where something different from what is claimed by the purchaser was intended to be sold by the vendor, the Court will not compel the latter specifically to perform the contract, which, in substance, though not in terms, is really different from that which was entered into. Ib.

Where the terms of a contract are ambiguous, and, by adopting the construction of the purchaser, would compel the vendor to convey property not intended, or believed by him to be included in the contract, the Court will not decree a specific performance. Ib.

The Court will not decree specific performance of a contract for the sale of a manor, with the lord's rights indefinitely stated, so as to include therein valuable rights not intended to be sold by the vendor, and discovered only in consequence of inquiries made, at the instance of the vendee, as to what the lord's rights were. Ib.

1. The defendant S., being the owner of a newly built public-house called "The Q.," sent to the plaintiffs W. (who were brewers) a letter, in which he stated the terms for a twenty-five years' lease to be 30*l.* the first year, and 68*l.* from the time of obtaining the licence. The plaintiffs thereupon sent an agent to view the premises, who saw the defendant there, and accepted those terms. The plaintiffs were thereupon let into possession, and commenced alterations and additions. The engrossed lease contained a covenant on the part of the lessees to pay, in addition to the above rent, a premium of 500*l.* on obtaining a licence which the defendant insisted had been mentioned visà voce at the interview with the plaintiff's agent, and taken down by him in writing in the defendant's presence. This turned out to be an entire misapprehension, although positively sworn to by the defendant. But in the defendant's letter containing the first offer of terms to the plaintiffs, there was the following passage: "I am giving to all the brewers who have left cards the offer in rotation;" and it was proved, that immediately before the offer to the plaintiffs, the defendant had offered the premises to another brewer on the same terms as those in the ingrossed lease to the plaintiffs, viz., the same as in the letter, with the additional term of the 500*l.* premium:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of a mistake by the defendant in accidentally omitting the premium in the terms first mentioned to the plaintiffs. Wood v. Scarth, 1 Jur., N. S., 1107; 2 Kay & J. 33; 4 W. R. 31.

The defendant was not prevented from setting up the defence of mistake in his original proposition because he had also set up the defence (which failed) that the plaintiffs had agreed to vary the terms of that original proposition. Ib.

2. Principles on which the Court proceeds in refusing specific performance in cases of mistake. Swaisland v. Dearsley, 29 Beav. 430.

When the description of property sold is ambiguous, and the purchaser swears he made a mistake, and this is not disproved, the contract will not be enforced; but if there appears no ground on the particulars for the mistake, it is not sufficient for the purchaser to swear that he has made a mistake. Ib.

Where, upon a sale by public auction, there was in the description of the property something about which a person might bonâ fide make a mistake, and the purchaser swore positively that he did make a mistake, the Court refused to enforce specific performance of the contract against him. 8 C. 7 Jur., N. S., 984; 30 L. J., Ch., 652; 9 W. R. 526; 4 L. T., N. S., 432.

3. Where a vendor made a bonâ fide mistake as to the authority which he had given to an auctioneer, and the property was knocked down to a purchaser for a less sum than that at which the vendor considered that he had instructed the auctioneer to sell, the Court refused to decree specific performance of the contract at the instance of a purchaser. Day v. Wells, 7 Jur., N. S., 1004; 9 W. R. 857; 30 Beav. 220.

4. A., by letter, offered to sell some property to B. for 1,250*l.* B., by letter, accepted the offer. A. had by mistake inserted 1,250*l.* instead of 2,250*l.* in his letter, and he immediately gave notice of the error. The Court refused to enforce the contract. Webster v. Cecil, 30 Beav. 62.

5. A defendant, being the owner of a cotton mill or factory, and also of a small piece of land lying between it and a canal, agreed to sell the factory to the plaintiff. By the Canal Act, owners of land within twenty yards of the canal were authorised to draw water for the sole purpose of condensing steam. In 1808 the owners of the mill purchased the intermediate plot, and laid down pipes, and the canal water was used for the general purposes of the mill until 1857, but the legality of this use of the water was at various times disputed by the proprietors of the canal. At the date of the contract, all the machinery was removed from the mill, which was used solely as a warehouse. The contract was silent as to the right to the water; but the plaintiff alleged that he bought on the faith of having the water, while the defendant alleged that he never intended to sell it. The defendant removed some of the underground pipes from the intermediate plot, and then offered a conveyance with the usual general words. The plaintiff filed a bill for a mandatory injunction as to the pipes, and a specific performance of the agreement, including the right to the water:—Held, that he was not entitled to a decree for specific performance, as it was a case of mistake, the plaintiff intending to buy what the defendant never intended to sell. Buttornorth v. Walker, 13 W. R. 168; 11 L. T., N. S., 436.

6. It is a settled principle, that if a purchaser contracts under a bonâ fide mistake, not attributable to any negligence of his own, the Court will not enforce specific performance; and if that mistake is in any degree occasioned or confirmed by erroneous statements on the part of the vendor, although innocently made, the Court will not decree a specific performance. Mosey v. Digwood, 8 Jur., N. S., 803; 6 L. T., N. S., 460; 4 De G. F. & J. 351. Affirmed 12 W. R. 811; 10 L. T., N. S., 466.

Where a purchaser contracts under a natural mistake, which is not attributable to any negligence on his part, it is the duty of the vendor to relieve him from that mistake. Ib.

Where a purchaser, after an inspection of some property, had entered into a contract under a mistake that a piece of ground was to form part of the conveyance, and the mistake was not attributable to any neglect upon his part, but was in some degree occasioned by statements of the vendor, in answer to inquiries as to boundaries:—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to have a specific performance of the contract. Id.

1. Where a contract cannot be performed specifically, the Court will not interfere, in the absence of any step taken to reform the agreement, so as to make a new contract, even although there has been a virtual mistake, but will leave the plaintiff to his relief in damages, to be ascertained either by a jury at law, or by directing an inquiry. Raphael v. Thames Valley Railway Co., 12 Jur., N. S., 656; 14 W. R. 750; 34 L. J., Ch., 659; 14 L. T., N. S., 652.

2. In the draft articles of an agreement a mistake of a name had been made; a bill was filed for the specific performance of those articles. The Court of Chancery, on a consideration of what appeared in the bill and answer, and on a consideration of the articles themselves, directed the specific performance of them according to what appeared to be their plain intention:—Held, that the decree of the Court of Chancery was correct. Wilson v. Wilson, 23 L. J., Ch., 697; 5 H. L. Ca. 40. Affirming 11 Jur., N. S., 124; 34 L. J., Ch., 241; 13 W. R. 361; 2 De G. J. & S. 475; 11 L. T., N. S., 692; 5 N. R. 692; 34 Beav. 187; 10 Jur., N. S., 1064; 13 W. R. 4; 11 L. T., N. S., 327.

3. The plaintiff and the defendant, farmers occupying their own small farms, which adjoined each other, met at ten o'clock at night at a public-house, where the plaintiff drew out an agreement between the defendant and himself for the sale and purchase of forty-five acres of land for 2,000*l.* The agreement, which was almost illegibly written, was executed by both parties and attested by two witnesses, and a cheque for 200*l.* deposit was drawn by the plaintiff on a plain piece of paper. This was the next day exchanged for one drawn on the banker's ordinary form. No abstract was asked for for nearly four months, and three months after that the defendant asked for a copy of the contract, and he then objected that he had only thirty-five acres to sell, and was so drunk when he entered into the agreement that he did not know what he was doing, and he offered to sell for the 2,000*l.*, or give up the agreement and return the deposit. This was refused, and an abatement claimed in respect of the ten acres short, and a bill filed for specific performance:—Held, that on the evidence the defendant was incapable of contracting at the time, and the circumstances were such as to bring the case within the rule of surprise and mistake, and bill dismissed with costs. Cow v. Smith, 19 L. T., N. S., 517.

4. A plaintiff filed a bill for a specific performance of an agreement into which he had entered with the defendant. The parties disputed the construction of one of the clauses in the agreement, the defendant swearing that his intention at the time of executing the agreement was not according to the construction contended for by the plaintiff. The Court was of opinion that the defendant's construction was plainly the correct one, but independently of that, being satisfied that there had been no concord between the parties, dismissed the bill. Griffin v. Coleman, 28 L. T., N. S., 493.

5. A. offered for sale a plot of land fronting the street, 176 feet deep, possessing a frontage of about 40 feet, which he described as well adapted for bank or insurance buildings, a public institution, carriage factory, or any building requiring space, or two good houses or shops. B. contracted to purchase it as a site for a carriage factory, but subsequently discovered that he would not be able to build within 62 feet 3 inches of the street, by reason of the restriction placed on building beyond the general line of buildings in the street by the Metropolis Local Management Act, 25 & 26 Vict., c. 102, s. 75:—Held, that B. was at liberty to resist a suit for specific performance on the ground that he had purchased under a misapprehension. Bray v. Briggs, 20 W. R. 962; 26 L. T., N. S., 817.

6. Specific performance of a contract will not be enforced where the defendant has contracted under a mistake to which the plaintiff has by his acts even unintentionally contributed. Bascomb v. Beckwith, 38 L. J., Ch., 536; 17 W. R. 812; 20 L. T., N. S., 862; 8 L. R., Eq., 100.

The owner of an estate put up the whole estate, except a small piece of land, for sale in lots, subject to conditions which provided that no public-house should be built and no trade carried on upon the property. In the particulars of sale the property was described as the M. estate, and there was nothing to show that any part of the vendor's estate was not included, and in the plan annexed to the particulars the different lots were coloured, and the excepted piece of land was uncoloured, but was not marked with the vendor's name, though the names of the adjoining owners were printed. It was improbable that a public-house would be built on any of the adjoining estates:—Held, that a purchaser of one of the lots, consisting of a mansion-house a hundred yards distant from the excepted piece of land, who had purchased in the belief that the whole of the vendor's estate was included in the particulars of sale, and consequently would be subject to the restrictive conditions, could not be compelled to complete his purchase unless the vendor would enter into restrictive covenants as to the excepted piece of land. Id.

7. Upon the sale of a property, one of the terms of the contract was that the purchaser should assume that A. was at the time of his death seised in fee simple of a certain lot, and should not require the production of or investigate or make any objection in respect of the prior title to the lot. Before completion of the contract, the purchaser discovered from documents supplied by the vendor, not to him, but to a sub-purchaser from him, that the lot was in fact the purchaser's own property, and he thereupon declined to complete, although he had accepted the vendor's title. In a suit for specific performance by the vendor:—Held, that the purchaser was not precluded by the condition from raising the objection, and an inquiry was directed as to the title to the lot at the date of the contract. Jones v. Clifford, 24 W. R. 979; 45 L. J., Ch. D., 809; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 779; 32 L. T., N. S., 93.

Semble, that the Court will, even in the case of a completed contract, give relief against a common mistake without fraud. Id.

1. Plaintiff being the lessor of a public-house subject to a covenant against Sunday trading, put the same up for sale, having previously obtained from the freeholder a letter which was stamped as an agreement offering to release the restrictive covenant. Defendant at the sale became the purchaser, both parties being under the impression that the freeholder could alone release the covenant. The abstract delivered to the purchaser showed that the plaintiff held under an underlease by demise, a reversion of one day being vested in A. and B., whose consent to a release of the covenant was necessary, which fact was overlooked by the purchaser, he taking an underlease at an increased rent, in which the covenant was omitted, and he paid his purchase money partly by a cheque and entered into possession. The day after, the mistake as to the parties to release the covenant was discovered, and the defendant stopped payment of the cheque. The plaintiff had offered to rescind the contract:—Held, that the defendant, not having discovered the mistake till after completion through his own negligence, was too late in taking his objection, and specific performance was decreed. Allen v. Richardson, 49 L. J., Ch., 137; 28 W. R. 318; 41 L. T. 614; 13 L. R., Ch. D., 524.

2. Property was put up for sale under the description of "All that inn with the brew-house, outbuildings, and premises known as The Ship, together with the saddler's shop and premises adjoining thereto, situate at N., Nos. 454 and 455 on the tithe map, and containing by admeasurement twenty perches more or less." In the sale-room were plans of the property, which consisted of the closes numbered 454 and 455 on the tithe map. At the back of the property were two pieces of garden ground containing together about twenty perches, not belonging to the vendors, one of which had for many years been occupied with the inn and the other with the saddler's shop, and which were but slightly fenced off from the premises with which they were occupied. The defendant, who was acquainted with the property, and knew that the gardens were occupied together with the inn and saddler's shop, did not look at the plans, and bought in the belief that he was buying the whole of the property in the occupation of the tenants:—Held, that the purchaser could not resist specific performance on the ground of mistake. Tamplin v. James, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 215; 43 L. T. 520; 29 W. R. 311.

Where specific performance is refused on the ground of mistake by the defendant, so that under the old practice a bill for specific performance would have been dismissed without prejudice to an action, the Court will proceed to consider the question of damages. Id.

3. In 1866 A. purchased a house of residence and grounds from B. The conveyance was prepared by the purchaser's solicitor, but by a mistake the minerals under the house were excepted from it. The purchaser entered into possession, and expended money in repairs and improvements; the vendor afterwards discovered the mistake, and attempted to deal with the minerals; thereupon, five years after the purchase, the purchaser filed a bill against him, praying for specific performance of the original agreement, and to have the conveyance rectified; the vendor had died, and the suit had been renewed against his legal personal representative:—Held, that she must have the option either of having the conveyance rectified or having the whole purchase set aside, she repaying the purchase-money, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum, and all sums expended by the purchaser in repairs and permanent improvements, and he being charged with an occupation rent. Bloomer v. Spittle, 41 L. J., Ch., 369; 13 L. R., Eq., 427; 20 W. R. 435.

4. On a sale of a small residential property the plan exhibited showed the western side as bounded by a strip of ground covered with a mass of shrubs or trees. An intending purchaser went with the plan in his hand, inspected the property, found on the western side a belt of shrubs bounded on the west by an iron fence, and including three magnificent trees. He then bid for the property, believing that he was buying everything up to the fence. He afterwards discovered that the three trees and the iron fence stood on the glebe land which adjoined this property, the real boundary being denoted by stumps, which were so shrouded by the shrubs as not easily to be seen. The plan represented in a conspicuous way all the detached trees standing on the property, none of which were nearly so large as the trees in question, but did not show these trees. The existence of these trees was a material element in the value of the property as a residence:—Held, that the purchaser inspecting the property with the plan in his hand would naturally conclude the iron fence to be the boundary; that there was nothing to put him on inquiry whether it was not; that he had been misled by the fault of the vendors; and that specific performance could not be decreed against him. Denny v. Hancock, 6 L. R., Ch., 1; 23 L. T., N. S., 686; 19 W. R. 54.

Held, also, that whether the purchaser's motive for resisting specific performance was that he objected to having the property without the trees, or that for some other totally distinct reason he wished to escape from his bargain, was a question with which the Court had no concern. Id.

5. The Court will not refuse to decree the specific performance of an agreement on the ground that one of the contracting parties has mistaken its legal effect. Powell v. Smith, 14 L. R., Eq., 85; 41 L. J., Ch., 734; 20 W. R. 602.

Therefore, where a lessor's agent had contracted to grant a lease for seven or fourteen years, which the lessor understood to mean a lease determinable at the lessor's option, and alleged that the agent had acted without authority:—Held, that the lessee was entitled to have the agreement specifically performed, and to have a lease for fourteen years, determinable at his own option at the end of seven years. Id.

Held, also, that the lessee having been put into possession of the farm under the agreement, the lessor was precluded from disputing the agent's authority. Id.

6. It is no answer to a suit for specific performance for the defendant to say that though he understood what the words of the agreement were he was under a mistake as to their legal effect. Hart v. Hart, 18 L. R., Ch.

D., 670; 50 L. J., Ch., 697; 45 L. T. 13; 30 W. R. 8.

1. Where an agreement is in writing and is unambiguous, it is the duty of the Court to construe it quite independently of the ideas of the parties as to what it means, but where an agreement is ambiguous or capable of two constructions, semble, it would be very strange indeed if a plaintiff, who had always acted on the one construction, should succeed in persuading the Court to grant specific performance on the footing that it ought to bear the opposite construction. Marshall v. Berridge, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 241; 61 L. J., Ch., 329; 45 L. T. 599.

2. Where a written agreement has been signed, though it is in some cases a defence to an action for specific performance according to its terms that the defendant did not understand it according to what the Court holds to be its true construction, the fact that the plaintiff has put an erroneous construction upon it, and insisted that it included what it did not include, does not preclude the plaintiff from waiving the question of construction and obtaining specific performance according to what the defendant admits to be its true construction. Preston v. Luck, 27 L. R., Ch. D., 497.

A negotiation took place as to the sale by L. to P. of a British patent and certain foreign patents for the same invention, and ultimately an offer was made for sale at 500*l.* and accepted by letter, though it was not quite clear whether the offer and acceptance related to all the patents or to the English patent only. P. brought an action for specific performance, and moved for an injunction as to the British patent only:—Held, that an injunction should be granted, for that where a written agreement has been signed, the fact that the plaintiff has put a wrong construction upon it, and insisted that it included what it did not include, does not prevent there being a contract, nor preclude the plaintiff from waiving the question of construction and obtaining specific performance according to what the defendant admits is its true construction. Id.

3. In an agreement for the sale of seventeen undivided shares of a coal mine there was an article stating two conveyances by which six undivided shares of the land, beneath which the coal lay, had been conveyed to the vendors' predecessor in title, but stating that there was no express mention in the conveyances of the minerals under the land, and requiring that the purchasers should assume that six undivided shares of the minerals passed by the conveyances of the land, and thereby became absolutely vested in the vendors' predecessor in title. In the abstract of the vendors' title sent to the purchasers, mention was made of a certain indenture, but nothing further was said about it. The purchasers' solicitor inquired of the vendors' solicitor what this deed was, and was told that it could not be found, and no abstract of it or information about it could be furnished, but that it was believed not to affect the property sold. The vendors' solicitor also said, as he really believed to be the case, that though the title to the six undivided shares could not be strictly proved, yet the vendors had a good holding title to them. After these transactions the purchasers entered into the agreement, and paid the deposit money. Subsequently, the deed which was supposed to have been lost, was found, when it was discovered that by virtue of it the six undivided shares of the mine belonged to some person quite different from the vendors, and that neither they, nor their predecessor in title, had ever had any title to those shares. The purchasers refused to proceed with the agreement, whereupon the vendors brought this action for specific performance of it. The purchasers contended that without these six shares the mines would be useless to them, and claimed to be entitled to be released from the agreement:—Held, that as there had been no fraud in the matter, but the vendors had acted under a bonâ fide mistake, and the purchasers had had the fact that there was a doubt as to the title brought to their notice before entering into the agreement, and had thought fit to run the risk of taking the property without having the matter cleared up, specific performance of the agreement ought to be decreed, but that a deduction must be made from the purchase money as compensation to the purchasers for the loss of the six shares. English v. Murray, 49 L. T. 35; 32 W. R. 84.

4. Vendors in September issued particulars of sale, headed, "particulars and conditions of sale, first edition." The document contained no conditions, and stated that the property would be sold on October 18th. Lot 8 was therein described as a corner public-house and cottages, without mention of any mortgage. Shortly before the time fixed for the sale the vendors found that a mortgage for 800*l.* upon lot 8 could not be paid off for some years, and thereupon issued a second edition of particulars which postponed the sale till the 16th November, and stated that lot 8 would be sold subject to the mortgage for 800*l.* The sale took place on the 16th November; the defendant, who had the day before received a copy of the first edition of particulars from a friend of his own, attended with that copy in his hand, and bought lot 8. The contract was signed upon a copy of the second edition, from which the auctioneer read the particulars of lot 8. It was also proved that he stated, in answer to special questions, in the defendant's hearing, that lot 8 would be sold subject to the mortgage. The defendant refused to complete his contract, on the ground that he had supposed the lot to be free from incumbrances:—Held, that, if he had made any mistake, it was owing to his own gross negligence, and the vendor was entitled to specific performance. Goddard v. Jeffreys, 51 L. J., Ch., 57; 45 L. T. 674; 30 W. R. 269.

Both editions of the particulars stated the rents of lot 8 at a sum not then actually received, but which would, as notice had been given to the tenants, be payable upon the completion of repairs then contracted to be finished before the day fixed for completion. The particulars described the public-house as let to a responsible tenant for a term of which seventeen years were unexpired. It appeared that only fifteen years of the term were unexpired, and it was determinable in 1881 or 1888, at the option of the tenant:—Held, that neither of these statements was such misrepresentation as to entitle the purchaser to resist specific performance of his contract. Id.

1. Where a vendor instructed an auctioneer to sell certain premises, and where according to the evidence, by mistake on the part of the vendor, such instructions were wide enough to take in certain premises to which the vendor had no title, and a person who heard the particulars read at the auction became the purchaser, in the belief that he would obtain the whole of the premises, and brought an action for specific performance or damages:—Held, that mistake in such circumstances was no defence to the action. Dyas v. Stafford, 7 L. R., Ir., 590.

X. WANT OF MUTUALITY.

2. The written undertaking of any party will be enforced, although the other party is not mutually bound by writing. Palmer v. Scott, 1 Russ. & M. 391; 1 Taml. 488; 8 L. J., Ch., 127.

3. Where damages in action for breach of contract to sell chattel, would be insufficient remedy for purchaser, though sufficient for vendor, specific performance decreed, as remedy must be mutual. Withy v. Cottle, 1 Sim. & S. 174; T. & R. 78; 1 L. J., Ch., 117.

4. A., on the marriage of his daughter to B., covenants that B. should have his land, called C., for 1,500l. less than any other would give for it, and afterwards devises the premises to his grandson for life, with remainder over, and dies. Court refused to decree a specific performance of this agreement, by reason of the uncertainty and want of mutuality in it. Bromley v. Jefferies, 2 Vern. 415; Pre. Ch. 138.

5. Specific performance of agreement refused on ground of want of specific mutuality, of laches, misapprehensions in the parties of its nature and effect, inequality, improvidence, and other circumstances. Hamilton v. Grant, 3 Dow 33; 1 Bli. N. S. 594.

6. An infant cannot sustain a suit for the specific performance of a contract, because the remedy is not mutual. Flight v. Bolland, 4 Russ. 298.

7. Husband and wife may maintain a suit for specific performance of an agreement by them with a third party, for the sale to him of lands whereof the husband is seised in right of the wife. Fennelly v. Anderson, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 706.

8. A feme covert, one of several devisees in trust for sale, cannot bind herself to convey the estate, and a bill by the purchaser to enforce specific performance of a contract by such trustees was dismissed. Avory v. Griffin, 6 L. R., Eq., 606.

9. Equity will not decree a specific execution of contract, the terms of which are uncertain as to its extent. Nor will equity decree specific execution against a party not lawfully competent to execute the contract. Harnett v. Fielding, 2 Sch. & Lef. 549.

10. Specific performance refused on the ground of want of specific mutuality and other circumstances. Hamilton v. Grant, 3 Dow 33; 1 Bli. N. S. 594.

11. Where nothing has been done under an agreement, the Court ought not to decree a specific performance, except when the right to compel it exists both in plaintiff and defendant. Lawrenson v. Butler, 1 Sch. & Lef. 13.

12. Equity will not decree the specific performance of a covenant by the mesne landlord with his lessee for the renewal of the lease after the lessee has wilfully neglected or refused to renew, and the non-payment after demand of the fine which the mesne landlord has paid to the superior landlord, amounts to such neglect or refusal. Chestorman v. Mann, 9 Hare 206.

13. Specific performance of a contract for sale of an estate in fee-simple decreed (subject to the usual inquiry as to title) in favour of a vendor, who, at the time of the contract, was tenant for life only; the purchaser not having rejected the purchase as soon as he had ascertained the real position of the vendor, and the vendor being able by means of the consent of the parties interested in remainder to make a good prima facie title to the fee-simple at the hearing. Salisbury v. Hatcher, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 54; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 68; 6 Jur. 1061.

14. Where lessees of way-leaves (colliery) entered into a correspondence with the tenant for life with power of leasing for a new lease, proposed as a renewal of the former, which contained a usual clause giving the lessees an option of determining the lease on notice, but the correspondence was silent as to the insertion of such a clause:—Held, that the lessees might reasonably have understood (whether it were mutual or not) that the new lease was to contain such a clause, and that they ought to be compelled to accept the lease without it:—Held, also, that the tenant for life not having under the will a power to grant such a lease, the reversioner, although able to do so, was not entitled to enforce a specific performance of it. Ricketts v. Bell, 1 De G. & Sm. 355; 11 Jur. 918.

15. Litigation of a complicated character was carried on both in this country and in Peru, between the plaintiff and the defendant, and also two sons of the plaintiff, who had acted as his agents. An agreement was afterwards signed in England between the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby it was agreed that a patent, standing in the name of the plaintiff, but the right to which was claimed by the defendant, should be held for their mutual benefit, the defendant to pay 100l. towards the expenses of taking out the patent. The plaintiff agreed to "raise" all proceedings here and in Peru by the plaintiff and his sons, each party paying his own costs, "it being agreed that all claims between the defendant and the plaintiff and his sons are settled up to this date; the eight pianofortes in litigation in Peru to be delivered up by the defendant to the plaintiff, or his representatives." The differences continuing, the defendant was suing the plaintiff at law. The plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement. By a letter of the plaintiff's solicitor, it appeared that the plaintiff intended that a release should be executed by the defendant and himself, and also by his sons. The defendant demurred:—Held, that the agreement was such an one as the Court would decree the performance of; and that it was not bad on any of the grounds urged, viz., neither for uncertainty, nor for want of mutuality, nor for that the Court could not enforce some of the stipulations, nor for that adequate remedy and compensation could be had at law. Marsh v. Milligan, 3 Jur., N. S., 979.

16. Specific performance refused because lien of remedy was not mutual. Armiger v. Clarke, Buhb. 111.

1. The rights of parties to agreements to enforce a specific performance in equity are not co-extensive, for their respective rights depend upon their conduct; and the conduct of one may give him the right to apply to the Court, where the conduct of the other may debar him from that right. South Eastern Railway Co. v. Knott, 10 Hare 122.

2. The circumstance that an agreement of which specific performance is sought in equity, contains stipulations on the part of a plaintiff which could not themselves be specifically enforced, affords no valid objection to making a decree in favour of the plaintiff if the intention of the parties was, that the performance of those stipulations should be secured by covenant only. Wilson v. West Hartlepool Harbour & Railway Co., 11 Jur., N. S., 124; 34 L. J., Ch., 241; 13 W. R. 361; 5 N. R. 289; 2 De G. J. & S. 475; 11 L. T., N. S., 692. Affirmed 23 L. J., Ch., 697; 5 H. L. Ca. 40. Affirming 34 Beav. 187; 10 Jur., N. S., 1064; 13 W. R. 4; 11 L. T., N. S., 327.

A., an officer of a company, but whether the general or only the traffic manager was disputed, proposed, by a letter referring to a prior agreement which was not produced, terms for the sale by the company of some of its lands to B., one of the terms being that B. should use the railway "whenever reasonably practicable, and for the longest distance it is reasonably capable of use." B. accepted the terms unconditionally, and thereupon took possession of the land; and as might be inferred from the facts, with the connivance, if not with the co-operation of the directors, put it to various uses. On the subsequent repudiation of the contract by the company, after the death of A., on the ground that no valid contract was ever made by the company, a decree was made for specific performance of the contract made by A. with B. Ib.

3. The Court will not entertain a bill for specific performance of an agreement, which contains terms that cannot be enforced against the plaintiff, where the effect of a decree would be that, on the plaintiff refusing to perform his part of the contract, the defendant could not be restored to his former position. Stocker v. Wedderburn, 3 Kay & J. 393; 26 L. J., Ch., 713; 5 W. R. 671.

The plaintiff, being owner of certain patents, entered into a written agreement with other persons to form a company for working these patents, he agreeing on his part to sell the patents in foreign countries, and to give his whole services to the company for two years, and to do his best to improve the invention, and to impart such improvements to the company:—Held, that the plaintiff could not obtain specific performance of this agreement against his co-promoters, because from the nature of his own part of the agreement, the Court could not compel specific performance of it by him. Ib.

The difference in the cases where a negative term of an agreement has been enforced by injunction, although the rest of the agreement could not have been specifically performed in equity, is, that the Court could, at any time, upon a breach of any other term in the agreement, restore the parties to their former position, or nearly so, by dissolving the injunction; but if in such a case as the above the Court were to compel the defendants to become a registered company, that could not afterwards be undone, if the plaintiff were to fail in his part of the agreement. Ib.

4. When the terms of a contract are such that the Court cannot superintend so as to secure the performance by a plaintiff on his part, it will not decree specific performance. Peto v. Brighton, Uckfield, & Tonbridge Wells Railway Co., 11 W. R. 874; 9 L. T., N. S., 227; 1 Hem. & M. 468.

If, on non-performance by a plaintiff, both parties cannot have equal justice it will not, in the absence of an express negative covenant, grant an injunction to restrain acts, the doing of which is inconsistent with the maintenance of the contract. Ib.

5. A defendant agreed to become tenant to the plaintiff, of a shop, with a right to lease for a term when he desired it. He wished to take possession speedily. At the date of the contract the plaintiff, who was lessee of the premises, was unable to make the lease, but after bill filed, and before the hearing, he acquired power to do so:—Held, that he could not enforce specific performance. Farrer v. Nash, 11 Jur., N. S., 789; 14 W. R. 8; 6 N. R. 361.

6. An agreement by which a father stipulated that the mother of his deceased wife should have the custody of the infant children during three months of every year is bad for want of mutuality, and cannot be enforced against the deceased wife's mother, as she could not compel the father to deliver up the children to her for the stipulated period, nor restrain him from removing them out of the jurisdiction. Kennedy v. May, 11 W. R. 358; 7 L. T., N. S., 819.

7. Where a bill was filed for the specific performance of an agreement, and the whole scope and object of the bill were for a purely money demand, the amount of which, if ascertained, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover by an action at law, and compensation in money being sought on the footing of an account, the Court held that relief under the jurisdiction of specific performance could not be granted. Ord v. Johnston, 1 Jur., N. S., 1063.

The Court never interferes in support of a purely voluntary agreement, or where no consideration emanates from the individual seeking the performance of the agreement. Ib.

8. A foreign contract, though valid in the country where it is made, will not be enforced here if it infringes the laws and policy of England; nor will the fact that the only part of it remaining to be performed is legal induce the Court to enforce that part of it. Hope v. Hope, 3 Jur., N. S., 454; 26 L. J., Ch., 417; 22 Beav. 351; 8 De G. M. & G. 731; 4 W. R. 583.

9. A railway company, wishing to obtain a bill for another railway, with a diverging line, which latter they could not make without the purchase of a particular property, which by their Act they had not the power to obtain, entered into an agreement with the tenant for life to purchase the same, and to perform all such acts as might enable him and the parties in remainder to sell the estate. All opposition to the proposed bill was withdrawn, and it passed, but with the omission of the diverging line, and the powers to buy this property. The tenant for life filed a bill for the specific performance of the agreement; and the company objected, that the plaintiff, being only tenant for life, had no title. The objection was overruled, and a decree for specific performance was made, and the defendants were ordered to pay the purchase money into court. Hawkes v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 243; 15 Jur. 979. Affirmed 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 77; 16 Jur. 1051. And see S. C. nom. Eastern Counties Railway Co. v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Ca. 331; 24 L. J., Ch., 601.

1. In a contract for sale of land, the vendor, being a tenant for life, with a proviso against alienation, agreed to apply for an Act of Parliament to enable him to convey; the Court refused, upon demurrer, to stop a suit for specific performance on the ground that the Act of Parliament had not been yet obtained. Devenish v. Brown, 2 Jur., N. S., 1043; 26 L. J., Ch., 23.

2. A tenant for life under a settlement, with an ultimate reversion to himself in fee, enters into an agreement by himself as absolute owner to sell part of the settled land. This agreement, the trustees of the settlement, who had a power to sell at the request and by the direction of the tenant for life, refused to adopt. Upon a bill filed against them and the tenant for life, it being held that the Court could not control the discretion of the trustees, a decree against the tenant for life for such performance as was in his power, was refused, on the ground that it would be prejudicial to the other parties interested in the settlement. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen 729; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267; 1 Jur. 211, 427.

3. A., by deed, contracted with B., in consideration of 100*l.*, to maintain, educate, and apprentice B.'s child, and if he had no child of his own, on B.'s child attaining twenty-one years to give him all his real and personal estate at his death, subject to a life interest for his widow. It appeared, from the circumstances of the case, probable, that the apparent consideration of 100*l.* was not, in fact, paid, or intended by either party to be paid, and that it was stated in the deed pro forma only. There was some evidence that the child was at A.'s house after the date of the deed, but it appeared doubtful whether the child ever lived with A. in the manner provided by the contract, and he soon after was residing with his father (B.), and the Court was satisfied that A. and B., by agreement between themselves, abandoned the contract, and that the status of the child had not been altered by anything done by A. in pursuance of the contract. Upon a bill filed by the child after the death of A.:—Held, that the contract, having been abandoned by the contracting parties, could not be enforced by the child. Hill v. Gomme, 5 Myl. & C. 250; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 54; 4 Jur. 165. Affirming 1 Beav. 540; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 350.

Whether this Court would perform a contract by which a person, for a sum of money, deprives himself of the possibility of realising property which he can dispose of by will, and thus destroys an active motive for bettering his condition in life, quære. Id.

Whether, if the contract had been so acted on by A. as to alter the status of the child, the child could have enforced the contract, quære. Id.

4. By a grant or patent, dated in 1801, the then Bishop of Ely having, as the grant stated, "confidence in the probity, fidelity, care, and industry of P., granted to P.," who was a solicitor, "the office of receiver of all issues, profits, sum and sums of money, arising and issuing" from the possessions of the see, to hold to P. by himself or his sufficient deputy or deputies, to be approved of by the bishop and his successors, for his life. The office of receiver was an ancient office, and had been exercised before the restraining statute of 1 Eliz., c. 19. P. held the office under three successive bishops, during the whole of which time he not only received the rents, but negotiated the renewal of leases, and prepared the leases of the see, and likewise attended all searches for records in the bishop's muniment room, of which he kept a key, for the performance of which acts he received fees and emoluments. It appeared also that his predecessor in office, who had held the office since 1875, had done the same. Upon the accession of A. to the bishopric in 1836, he refused to admit P.'s claim of right to perform these last-mentioned acts; upon which P. filed his bill against the bishop, praying a declaration of the rights in question in his favour, that he might be quieted in the possession of the office, and that the bishop might be restrained by injunction from obstructing the plaintiff in the exercise of such rights, and from doing acts in contravention of them:—Held, first, that the plaintiff's claim was not of such a nature as to induce this Court to interfere to protect them, without being well satisfied (which the Court was not) that his legal remedy was insufficient to do him complete justice; and, secondly, that the relief sought being analogous to the specific performance of an agreement, the bill must fail on the ground of want of mutuality; the nature of the duties and services asserted by the plaintiff being such as to preclude the possibility of a decree in this Court against him, compelling their specific performance. Pickering v. Ely (Bishop), 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 249; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 271; 7 Jur. 479.

5. The owners of an English patent, and of certain foreign patents obtained for the same invention, agreed with A., in consideration of pecuniary advances made by him to them, to procure the transfer to him of certain fully paid-up shares in a proposed company, to be formed with the object of purchasing their English and foreign patents, and which were to be allotted to them in part payment of their interests in the patents. The company was to be called the Non-Radiating Steam Engine Company, and was to have a capital of 220,000*l.* The patentees also appointed A. their agent for the sale of a certain number of the shares that were to be allotted to them in such company, and it was arranged that the shares which A. should obtain for his advances should be applied towards fulfilment of the contracts which he, as their agent, should enter into with purchasers of shares. Under these arrangements A. became entitled to 847 shares, and sold 224 shares to different persons. The scheme of the company, as at first proposed, was abandoned, and the patentees brought out a company called the Patent Steam Engine Company, with a capital of 100,000*l.*, and formed with the object of purchasing the English patent only. The patentees then refused to transfer any of the shares which they had acquired in the second company to A., and the several persons to whom he had sold shares. On a bill by A. and the several purchasers of shares from him to enforce specific performance of the arrangements which had been entered into between A. and the patentees:—Held, that the second company comprehended, in effect, the substance of the contract which existed between the parties, and that an objection for want of mutuality in the contract could not be sustained. Turner v. Moy, 32 L. T., N. S., 56.

1. The plaintiffs had entered into an agreement with the defendant's vendor to become lessees of premises with the option of purchasing within a given period at a sum fixed. A second memorandum was afterwards signed by the lessor alone, prolonging the term, and giving the plaintiffs the chance of purchasing during the enlarged term, but not fixing any price:—Held, that the Statute of Frauds being out of the question, the agreement was not void for want of mutuality, but was in all respects good and valid. Heys v. Astley, 12 W. R. 64; 9 L. T., N. S., 356; 4 De G. J. & S. 34.

Where the plaintiff has acted upon an agreement, want of mutuality is not a sufficient ground for refusing specific performance. S. C. 3 N. R. 19.

2. Where a contract is made which both parties to it know at the time cannot be carried out without the act or consent of a third party, and that act or consent is done or given by the third party within a reasonable time, and he does nothing inconsistent with such act or consent, want of mutuality at the time of contract is no bar to its performance. Blackburn Union v. Brooks, 26 W. R. 57.

XI. OTHER DEFENCES.

3. In equity there is a marked distinction between what is necessary to resist a suit for specific performance of a contract, and a suit founded on a contract executed. Vigers v. Pike, 8 Cl. & F. 645.

4. A defendant to a bill for specific performance of a clear contract for a specific sum, cannot resist it by way of set-off, on the ground that, on an account between him and the plaintiff in respect of antecedent transactions affecting the subject matter, there would be a balance due to the defendant. Phippes v. Child, 3 Drew. 709.

5. A bill for specific performance of a contract against the heir-at-law of a vendor was dismissed without costs, and the parties left to their remedy at law, the Court not being satisfied with the evidence as to the circumstances under which the contract was signed by the vendor. Valentine v. Dickinson, 7 Jur., N. S., 857; 9 W. R. 625.

6. B. treats with A. for a piece of land, having an intention to build a mill, to which the consent of the corporation is necessary; but A. refuses to treat on condition. B. fails in obtaining consent: this failure in his speculation is no defence against a bill for specific performance. Adams v. Wear, 1 Bro. C. C. 567.

7. A purchase upheld which was agreed to on the vendor's death-bed, and in consideration of an annuity for his life, the vendee having afterwards acquired the legal estate, and the agreement having been in pursuance of a contract made out by letters written some months previous to the final agreement. Barry v. O'Grady, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 550.

8. Per Lord St. Leonards. It is no objection to the specific performance of an agreement that collateral circumstances necessarily flowing out of the agreement are not mentioned in it. Ridgway v. Wharton, 5 W. R. 804; 2 Eq. Rep. 839; 6 H. L. Ca. 238; 27 L. J., Ch., 46. And see S. C. 3 De G. M. & G. 677.

9. A bill for an execution of an agreement, it appearing by proof that the agreement was only to quit the possession, and not intending to convey the lands, the bill was dismissed. Gerrard v. Vaux, 1 Vern. 121.

10. A railway company arranged by private contract the price of the interest of a tenant in lands they required, there being a covenant in his lease not to assign without the consent of his landlord. The contract provided an apportionment of rent:—Held, that the company could not resist specific performance, because the lessor was not a party to such apportionment. Slipper v. Tottenham & Hampstead Junction Railway Co., 36 L. J., Ch., 841; 4 L. R., Eq., 112.

11. It is no defence to a suit for specific performance against trustees of a turnpike road, that the land they have contracted to sell is liable to pre-emption by the owner of the adjoining land under the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 39, even where the offer required has not, through inadvertence, been made to such owner, and it is in evidence that the owner insists on his right, the purchaser making no objection to the title, and being content to take such estate as the trustees could convey. Barrett v. Ring, 2 Sm. & G. 43.

12. A conveyance of one moiety of an estate being set aside, a contract for the sale of the other moiety, to the same party, based on the previous conveyance of the first moiety, cannot be supported. Reynell v. Sprye, Sprye v. Reynell, 8 Hare 222. Affirmed 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 633.

13. It is not a defence to a purchaser's suit for specific performance that the vendor's solicitor and agent in the sale had a short time previously been professionally employed by the purchaser in relation to his intended purchase. Hesse v. Briant, 2 Jur., N. S., 922.

14. Where three joint lessees of an ecclesiastical manor agreed with M., upon the expiration of a subsisting grant, by copy of court-roll to make a fresh grant to him, and entered into a bond for performance of the agreement; one of the lessors afterwards conveyed his interest subject to the agreement, and afterwards died, leaving the plaintiff his executor, who, pending a suit against him, and the co-lessors impeaching the title of the lessors, were unable to make the grant pursuant to the agreement, upon which several actions on the bond were respectively brought against the plaintiff and the other lessors, but a consolidation rule was obtained to abide the event of one of the actions:—Held, that M., being a party to the rule, and the question as against him being the same at law and in equity, he could not maintain a suit for specific performance of the agreement; and the suit was dismissed without prejudice to the question of contribution as between the obligors. Hole v. Pearce, 5 Hare 408.

1. Specific performance refused of agreement to purchase, no good title being made to a small part which was essential to enjoyment of the rest, and on the ground of defendant having been let into possession and turned out again by plaintiff. Knatchbull v. Grueber, 1 Madd. 153. Affirmed 3 Meriv. 124.

2. A vendor let a purchaser into possession of the rents of an estate before the completion of the contract; but subsequently, after the time fixed for completion of the contract, he, in consequence of the non-payment of the purchase money, turned the purchaser out of possession:—Held, that he did not thereby abandon his right to a specific performance of the contract. Knatchbull v. Grueber (3 Meriv. 124) explained and distinguished. Colby v. Gadsden, 11 Jur., N. S., 760; 12 L. T., N. S., 197; 5 N. R. 456.

3. A purchaser raised valid objections to the title, which the vendor refused to satisfy. The vendor gave notice that if the purchaser refused to complete within five days, he should re-sell and charge the purchaser with the expenses. The purchaser thereupon gave the vendor notice that he should bring an action for the deposit if the requisitions were not complied with within a week. The action was commenced, and the vendor some time subsequently agreed to satisfy the requisitions at the purchaser's expense; upon the purchaser's refusal, a bill was filed by the vendor for a specific performance:—Held, that the notice by the vendor of an intention to resell, was equivalent to a declaration that he would not seek specific performance of the contract, and that the purchaser's action to rescind was effectual, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Royon v. Paul, 28 L. J., Ch., 555.

4. Directors having entered into a contract, ultra vires, and which was not binding on the company:—Held, that it could be neither specifically performed, nor could the Court order them to make good their representations. Ellis v. Colman, 25 Beav. 662; 4 Jur., N. S., 350; 27 L. J., Ch., 611.

5. Certain moneys and benefits were secured to A. under an agreement with the provisional trustees of a projected company. A mortgaged his interest in the moneys secured by this agreement:—Held, that the assignees of A.'s mortgagee could sustain a bill for specific performance of the agreement against the company for the purpose of enforcing their charge. Specific performance of the agreement was, however, refused; the benefits stipulated to be furnished to the company by A. not having been obtained through his medium, while the provisional directors had, ultra vires, introduced clauses as to the application of the capital, etc., of which the future shareholders had received no notice, and by which they could not be bound—while the saving clause introduced into the Act of incorporation at the instance of A. had not the effect contended for of confirming the agreement and curing its defects. Brown v. London Necropolis & National Mausoleum Co., 6 W. R. 188.

VIII. Parties to Suits. In General. See PRACTICE (PARTIES).

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES. PARTY TO CONTRACT.

6. To a bill founded on a contract, the parties to the contract are in general the only necessary parties. Humphreys v. Hollis, Jac. 75.

7. To a common bill for the specific performance of a contract of sale, the parties to the contract are the only proper parties. Wood v. White, 4 Myl. & C. 460; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 209; 3 Jur. 117; 2 Keen 664; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203.

8. A person, not a party to the contract, ought not to be made party to a suit for specific performance. Peacock v. Penson, 11 Beav. 355; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 12 Jur. 954; 14 id. 518.

9. Though in general none but the persons who sign the contract ought to be parties to a bill for specific performance, yet a purchaser may, under special circumstances, make other persons, who are interested in the estate, defendants to the bill. Tasker v. Small, 6 Sim. 633; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 321. Reversed 3 Myl. & C. 63.

10. Entire strangers to an agreement, and claiming under an adverse title to it, cannot be parties to a suit for its specific performance. De Houghton v. Money, 15 W. R. 214; 15 L. T., N. S., 403.

11. If a person, not originally a party to an agreement, acts under it, and professes to render accounts and make payments according to its provisions, a bill for the performance of it may be maintained against him, even though the original agreement stipulated that it was not to extend to create any demand against him. Cochell v. Whiting, 3 L. J., Ch., 6.

1. Five persons contracted to sell an estate in land, and a formal agreement was prepared, but before execution it was discovered that the entirety belonged to four only; and accordingly it was verbally agreed that the fifth should not be required to execute. The agreement was executed by the four only as vendors and by the purchaser, but as an alteration was made in the body of the agreement it still purported to be an agreement by the five to sell and convey:—Held, that the four who executed could not maintain a bill for specific performance against the purchaser. Hornby v. Bird, 38 L. J., Ch., 244; 17 W. R. 367.

2. It is a rule of equity that specific performance can only be decreed against parties to the original contract, or persons claiming under them. Lumley v. Tinsley, 21 W. R. 319; 28 L. T., N. S., 157.

A lessee of premises covenanted with an under-lessee that in case he should obtain an extension of the term, or renewal of his lease, he would grant to the under-lessee a renewal of his under-lease for such extended term. The lease having been renewed in the name of a trustee for the separate use of the wife of the lessee, the under-lessee filed a bill against the lessee, his wife and her trustee, charging that the taking the lease in the name of the trustee was a scheme to defeat his rights, and praying that the wife of the lessee and her trustee might be decreed to grant a lease to the plaintiff for the extended term:—Held, that no relief could be granted, the suit being virtually one for specific performance against persons not parties to the original contract. Id.

II. WHERE SALE IN LOTS.

3. A bill brought by a purchaser for the specific performance of an agreement to sell lot A. as described in the particulars of sale, was resisted by the vendors on the ground (stated in their answer) that by an arrangement, to which the plaintiff was a party, part of lot A., as described, was deducted from that lot, and added to lot B.:—Held, that the plaintiff, on amending his bill, and putting in issue this averment, was bound to make the purchasers of lot B. defendants to the suit. Mason v. Franklin, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 239.

4. Two houses, held under one lease, were sold in separate lots, and it was stipulated that the purchasers should be parties to each other's assignment:—Held, that the purchaser of lot 2 was not a necessary party to a suit for specific performance against the purchaser of lot 1. Paterson v. Long, 5 Beav. 186.

5. The plaintiff sold and conveyed some land to a building society, retaining an equitable mortgage on it for the purchase money. The land was divided and sold in lots to the members:—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain a suit against the purchasers of some of the lots to recover his debt, in the absence of the purchasers of the other lot. Peto v. Hammond, 29 Beav. 91.

6. Contracts for sale of different parts of an estate held under the same title had been entered into with different purchasers by a father and son who had a joint power of appointment under a settlement. The son died before the conveyances were executed. The legal estate under the settlement thereupon became vested in the father for life, with remainder in tail to an infant. A bill was filed by one of the purchasers, on behalf of himself and all other purchasers, etc., for the purpose of having the several contracts carried into effect. The cause coming on to be heard before Turner, L. J., when V.-Ch., he declined to make a decree against the infants in a suit of that form, but suggested his willingness to do so if the bill were amended by making the several purchasers parties as co-plaintiffs, and the defendants undertook not to raise the objection of multifariousness. The bill having been amended accordingly, the decree was now made, and directions given for the completion of the several purchases against the infants and unborn persons claiming under the settlement. Hargreaves v. Wright, 1 W. R. 408.

7. Particulars of sale described lot 5 as consisting of a leasehold house, No. 20, of a certain description, with a yard, at the end of which were a coachhouse and stable, and small yard beyond, with extra stable; and stated that the house was occupied by W., the yard, coachhouse, etc., by H. Lot 6 was described as a leasehold house, "No. 21, adjoining lot 5, and of similar design and accommodation, is now, and has been for years, in the occupation of T." The two houses were built on adjoining strips of land, each held under a separate lease. The small yard and extra stable lay behind No. 21, and were comprised in the lease of lot 6. The occupation was as stated in the particulars. The plaintiff purchased lot 5, H. lot 6. The plaintiff took an assignment from the vendor of the property in the lease of lot 5, and no more. H., on the following day, took an assignment of all the property comprised in the lease of lot 6, thus obtaining the legal estate in the small yard and extra stable:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an assignment from H. of the small yard and extra stable, for that, according to the true construction of the particulars, H. had not contracted to purchase them, but the plaintiff had. Leuty v. Hillas, 2 De G. & J. 110; 27 L. J., Ch., 534. S. C. (before Kindersley, V.-Ch.) 4 Jur., N. S., 1166.

Held, that the vendor was not a proper party to the suit. Id.

8. Where an estate is vested in trustees who sell in plots for building subject to restrictive covenants, each purchaser has an equity against the others to compel the observance of the covenants. In a suit to enforce such an equity the trustees are necessary parties, and the remaining purchasers ought to be represented on the record. Eastwood v. Lever, 12 W. R. 195. S. C. nom. Eastwood v. Levers, 33 L. J., Ch., 355; 9 L. T., N. S., 615.

III. DERIVATIVE PURCHASER.

9. An original vendee of an estate is not a necessary party to a bill against his assignee for specific performance of an agreement to purchase. Hall v. Laver, 3 Y. & Coll. 191.

10. H., in 1839, contracted with J. for the purchase of a piece of land, and subsequently sold his bargain to M. In May 1839 the abstract of title was delivered. The draft conveyance was prepared in July, and approved in August following. A covenant, not in the draft, was inserted in the engrossment by the vendor, and objected to on behalf of the purchaser; and a correspondence on the subject between their respective solicitors was carried on at intervals down to 1843, when H. and M. filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, that H. and M. were not improperly made co-plaintiffs. Mowhay v. Inderwick, 11 Jur. 837.

1. Quere, in what cases successive purchasers are properly made parties to a suit for specific performance. Nelthorpe v. Holgate, 1 Colly. 208; 8 Jur. 551. See cases stated, 1 Colly. 228. n. et seq.

A. entered into a written agreement with B. for the purchase of certain premises. This agreement was entered into by A. at the request of C.; which circumstance, however, was not known to B. By a subsequent agreement, A. agreed to sell the premises to C., upon the same terms, etc., under which he had contracted to purchase of B. D., the mother of B., had a life estate in the premises; which circumstance, though known to B. and his solicitor, was not known to either A. or C. D. did not, in respect of her life estate, sanction the agreement. A. and C., as co-plaintiffs, filed their bill against B. and D. for a specific performance of the original agreement. After that bill had been answered, but before either party had gone into evidence, A. died intestate, and C. then filed a bill of revivor and supplement against the original defendants and the heir-at-law and personal representative of A. Upon these two bills, no answer to the latter having been filed, the parties joined issue:—Held, first, that A. and C. were not improperly co-plaintiffs in the original bill, and that, after the former's death, the suit was properly revived by the latter. Ib.

2. Bill for specific performance of an agreement to purchase against the original vendee and assignee of his contract, dismissed as against the former, the plaintiff being held, by delivery of abstract and offer to execute a conveyance, to have accepted the latter as purchaser. Quere, if the bill had been filed against the original purchaser only. Holden v. Hayn, 1 Meriv. 47.

3. A party claiming an interest in a purchase by virtue of a contract, as having been entered into on his behalf, is a proper party to a suit by the vendor for the specific performance of the contract; otherwise, if he claim merely as a sub-purchaser, semble. Chadwick v. Maden, 9 Hare 188; 21 L. J., Ch., 876.

4. B. agreed to sell property to W., who, before the completion of the agreement, contracted to sell a portion of the property to F. Subsequently F. filed a bill against B. and W., praying for the specific performance of his agreement, and of so much of the agreement between B. and W. as related to the property comprised in his agreement:—Held, that B. was a proper party to the suit. Fenwick v. Bulman, 21 L. T., N. S., 628; 9 L. R., Eq., 165; 18 W. R. 179.

5. The Mid-Kent Railway Company entered into a contract for the purchase of land, but did not pay the purchase money, and subsequently thereto an Act of Parliament was passed, transferring all the property of that company to the South-Eastern Railway Company. On bill against both companies for the specific performance of the contract, a demurrer by the South-Eastern Railway, on the ground that they ought not to have been made parties, was overruled, with costs. Hacker v. Mid-Kent Railway Co. & South-Eastern Railway Co., 11 Jur., N. S., 634.

IV. PARTIES INTERESTED.

6. Specific performance decreed at the instance of a person entitled to the benefit of an agreement, though not a party to it. Hook v. Kinnear, 3 Swan. 417.

7. In a bill to compel performance of covenant to surrender copyhold estate to A. in trust for others, A. must be a party. Cope v. Parry, 2 Jac. & Walk. 538.

8. Upon a bill for the specific performance of a covenant with A. for the benefit of B., A. must be a party. Cooke v. Cooke, 2 Vern. 36.

9. A party claiming an interest in a purchase by virtue of a contract as having been entered into on his behalf, is a proper party to a suit by the vendor for the specific performance of the contract; otherwise if he claim merely as a sub-purchaser, semble. Chadwick v. Maden, 9 Hare 188; 21 L. J., Ch., 876.

10. A purchaser may, under special circumstances, make other persons than the parties to the contract who are interested in the estate parties to a bill for specific performance. Tucker v. Small, 6 Sim. 633; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 321. Reversed 3 Myl. & C. 63.

11. Plaintiff, having become surety for the defendant for due payment of an annuity granted by the latter, and defendant, who was tenant in tail in remainder of certain freehold premises, expectant on the death of his father, by indenture, dated in 1823, covenanted with the plaintiff, that, on the decease of his, the defendant's father, he would suffer a recovery of the entailed premises for the benefit of the plaintiff, as a security against any payment or expenses he, the plaintiff, might make or be put to in respect of the annuity. Upon a bill being filed in 1847, after decease of defendant's father, for a specific performance of the contract by the execution of a disentailing deed by the defendant, the defendant objected, by his answer, that certain creditors, upon judgments entered up against the defendant subsequently to the date of the indenture of indemnity, but before the death of the defendant's father, had, by the operation of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 13, acquired charges upon the entailed premises prior in point of date to the plaintiff's claim under the deed, and submitted, that such creditors were necessary parties to the suit:—Held, overruling the objection, that, whether the interest of the judgment creditors were prior or subsequent, in point of date, to the plaintiff's claim, the objection went to the relief, and not to the want of parties. Petre v. Duncombe, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 370; 12 Jur. 261.

1. Although a person claiming land by title paramount is not a proper party to a suit for specific performance, a person who, by virtue of an antecedent agreement with the vendor, claims to be interested in the purchase money, is a proper party to a suit by the purchaser to have the right to the purchase money ascertained, and for specific performance against the vendor. West Midland Railway Co. v. Nisom, 1 Hem. & M. 176.

2. Vendors, to their bill against their purchaser for specific performance of, or for rescinding the agreement, made a sub-purchaser a defendant; and the sub-purchaser afterwards filed a bill against his vendor for specific performance of his agreement, and made the original vendors defendants. A demurrer by the original vendors to the sub-purchaser's bill was overruled, on the ground that they had made him a defendant to their bill. Fenwick v. Bulman, 9 L. R., Eq., 165; 21 L. T. 628; 18 W. R. 179.

V. REAL OR PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

3. To a suit by the personal representative of a vendor of real estate for specific performance of the contract, the real representative of the vendor is a necessary party. Roberts v. Marchant, 1 Ph. 370; Hare 547; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 56.

4. A bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate was brought against the heir of a purchaser, alleging that he in his ancestor's lifetime took upon himself the contract. To this suit the administratrix of the purchaser, who died many years before the filing of the bill, was made a defendant, and upon her death (after alleging by her answer that the intestate's estate had been duly administered) the suit was revived against the grantee of limited letters of administration, de bonis non of the effects of the purchaser, the plaintiff not seeking any general administration; quære, whether such grantee was a proper and sufficient party to the revived suit; or whether the general personal representative of the purchaser ought to have been made a party. Cave v. Cork, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 180; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 156; 7 Jur. 461.

Where the purchaser dies before completion, his real and personal representatives are necessary parties, unless not interested in the subject matter. 8 C. 6 Jur. 385.

5. Bill by devisees in trust to sell for specific performance of an agreement to purchase, that the heir of the deviser is not a party to the suit, is not matter of exception to the report in favour of the title. Wakeman v. Rutland (Duke), 3 Ves. 234.

6. A vendor of a real estate died before completion, intestate as to his real estate:—Held, that the legal personal representatives of the vendor might maintain a bill against the vendor's heir and the purchaser for a specific performance, although the interest of the vendor was equitable and the purchaser had since got in the legal estate. Hoddel v. Pugh, 33 Beav. 489; 10 Jur., N. S., 534; 12 W. R. 782; 10 L. T., N. S., 446.

VI. OTHER CASES.

7. A. agreed to sell to B. a piece of land in the occupation of his tenant, and to buy up the tenant's interest. B. having entered on the land before payment of his purchase money, A. and his tenant served him with notices not to trespass, and afterwards A. filed a bill against B. for a specific performance, and to restrain the trespass:—Held, that the tenant was not a necessary party to the suit. Robertson v. Great Western Railway Co., 10 Sim. 314; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 17; 1 Rail. Ca. 459.

8. Whether the owner of the inheritance is a necessary party to a suit, against tenant for life, for specific performance of an agreement for a lease for lives renewable for ever, quære. Lovry v. Dufferin, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 281.

9. A party having purchased land, and signified at the time that he made the purchase on behalf of the trustee in his marriage settlement, who had money vested in him to be laid out in land, and a bill being filed against him for specific performance, the Court would not allow the case to proceed until the trustee was made a party, and the cause stood over for that purpose. Wynnias v. Lindo, Tam. 512.

10. Claim for specific performance of an agreement of a railway company to purchase land from trustees:—Held, that persons beneficially interested in the land were not necessary parties to the suit. Potts v. Thames Haven Dock & Railway Co., 15 Jur 1004.

11. An agreement by trustees of a will to grant an underlease of their testator's property, is prima facie inconsistent with a trust for sale of it. There may, however, be circumstances to justify the agreement, but the Court cannot enter into the consideration of those circumstances in a suit for specific performance between the trustees and the underlessee, the caveat que trustent not being parties to it. Evans v. Jackson, 8 Sim. 217; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 8.

12. To a suit by the directors of a joint-stock company on behalf of themselves and all other the shareholders, seeking to have the benefit of an agreement entered into by an agent of the company, it is not necessary that all the shareholders should be made parties. Taylor v. Salmon, 4 Myl. & C. 134.

A person who sets up a title adverse to the company, may be properly made a defendant in such a suit, although he also sustains the character of a shareholder. Ib.

13. To enforce specific performance of an agreement entered into by the directors of a company, it is sufficient to make the company a defendant. Scott v. Oakley, 4 N. R. 258; 10 Jur., N. S., 648; 33 L. J., Ch., 612; 10 L. T., N. S., 801; 12 W. R. 897.

14. A bill was filed for the specific performance of a contract, by one of two joint purchasers, against the other purchaser and the vendor. An objection taken by the defendant, the vendor, on the ground of multifariousness, and that the plaintiff could not support his bill, unless the joint purchaser joined him as a co-plaintiff therein, was overruled. Mackreth v. Dunn, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 367.

15. Tenant for life, who is restricted by the instrument under which he holds from alienating his estate, or from agreeing or attempting so to do, contracts to sell a portion of the property to the visitors of the County Lunatic Asylum, and agrees to take such steps as may be necessary to enable him to convey by Act of Parliament or otherwise. Upon a bill by the vendor for specific performance, the Court refused to stop the suit by allowing a demurrer, although the title was not such as could be forced upon an unwilling purchaser at the institution of the suit, the plaintiff being entitled to fair opportunity for application to Parliament to cure the defect in the manner suggested upon the contract. The clerk of the Visitors of the County Lunatic Asylum is a sufficient party to a suit for specific performance of an agreement by them to purchase, without making the treasurer of the county in respect of the money voted and raised by the Court of Quarter Sessions for the purpose of carrying out the agreement, he being a trustee of the money which has come to his hands, and bound to pay it over to the clerk. Devenish v. Brown, 4 W. R. 783.

I. ALLEGATIONS IN BILL.

1. Bill alleging a written agreement, may be sustained by evidence of a parol agreement. Spurrier v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ves. 548.

2. Where letters are stated in bill as the agreement, no testimony aliunde is admissible; otherwise, where stated as evidence of the agreement only. Bird v. Bletchley, 6 Madd. 17.

3. The terms of an agreement sought to be specifically executed must be accurately stated, and the case must be proved as stated on the record. Ormond v. Anderson, 2 Ball. & B. 270.

4. If bill for specific performance of agreement state that agreement was in writing, signature will be presumed. Rist v. Hobson, 1 Sim. & S. 543; 2 L. J., Ch., 86.

5. Where the want of signature to an agreement for the sale of lands clearly appears on the bill, the objection may be taken advantage of by general demurrer, but the statements of this bill not being inconsistent with a signature by the party to be charged, and containing allegations of part performance, a general demurrer thereto was overruled. Field v. Hutchinson, 1 Beav. 599; 3 Jur. 792.

6. An allegation in a bill by a purchaser for specific performance, that he was informed by his agent that a written agreement was executed, followed by statements referring to the agreement as actually made, is a sufficient allegation of the execution of a written contract. Heard v. Pilley, 4 L. R., Ch., 548; 38 L. J., Ch., 718; 21 L. T., N. S., 68; 17 W. R. 750.

7. Where a joint contract of sale is alleged, a joint contract must be proved, and if a contract by some only of the alleged contracting parties be proved, the claim must be dismissed as to all. Wollaston v. Osborn, 1 W. R. 163; 22 L. J., Ch., 274.

8. Bill by a vendee for specific performance, insisting that the vendors could not make a good title, dismissed with costs. Nielson v. Wordsworth, 2 Swan. 365.

9. In a suit for specific performance of an agreement to take a lease, it must be alleged and charged in the bill that the defendant has waived the production of the lessor's title, if such waiver is intended to be relied on; and it is not enough to allege such facts as, if proved, would amount to a waiver. Gaston v. Frankum, 2 De G. & Sm. 561; 13 Jur. 739.

10. A bill by a vendor for specific performance of a contract to sell, stating or showing by reasonable inference that the vendor cannot give a valid conveyance, is demurrable; otherwise, where the allegations only disclose difficulties in the mode of conveyance. Beaufort (Duke) v. Glynn, 3 Sm. & G. 213.

II. ANSWER OR STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

11. Where answer to bill for specific performance raises other objections to performance besides defect of title Court will not, on motion by plaintiff for reference of title after answer, decide whether other objections are frivolous or not, semble. Withy v. Cottle, 1 Sim. & S. 174; 1 L. J., Ch., 117. S. P. Gordon v. Ball, 1 Sim. & S. 178.

12. If defence to bill for specific performance of agreement for a purchase depends merely on want of title in vendor, defendant ought to rest on his answer, and not file a cross-bill to have it delivered up or to prevent an action, for plaintiff cannot succeed at law. Hilton v. Barrow, 1 Ves. J. 284.

13. Bill for specific performance of a parol agreement to renew, plaintiff having built a house; the only witness for the plaintiff proved an agreement different from that in the bill; two defendants by an answer stated an agreement different from both: in strictness the bill ought to be dismissed, but specific performance was decreed according to the answers, with costs against the plaintiff. Mortimer v. Orchard, 2 Ves. J. 242.

14. The former practice, which, in a suit for specific performance, required the authority of an agent to enter into a binding contract on behalf of his principal to be specially pleaded, still prevails. Vale of Noath Colliery Co. v. Furness, 45 L. J., Ch., 276; 34 L. T., 231; 24 W. R. 631.

When, therefore, a plaintiff in his statement of claim alleged that the defendant "duly authorised J. to act as his agent in and about the purchase" of a colliery, that J. acting as such agent wrote a letter to B., "who was then duly authorised to act in the matter of the sale of the colliery as agent for the plaintiff," offering 6,000*l.* for the colliery, and that B. by the plaintiff's direction by letter accepted the offer, adding, "I will send you draft contract in due course:"—Held, that there was no sufficient allegation that J. and B. were duly authorised to sign a binding contract on behalf of their principals. Ib.

The words, "the property," in reference to a colliery, are not sufficient description of the colliery plant and stock on which to found an action for specific performance. Ib.

1. In an action for specific performance of an agreement made by an agent, the statement of defence, after alleging unsoundness of mind of the principal, denied that any agreement had been entered into by a person lawfully authorised, and claimed the benefit of the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that the defendant had not put in issue the question of the authority of the agent, and was only entitled to adduce evidence with respect to the unsoundness of mind. Byrd v. Nunn, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 284; 47 L. J., Ch., 1; 37 L. T. 585; 26 W. R. 101.

- IV. Generally. See PRACTICE.

I. TRIAL OR HEARING.

2. In suits for specific performance, all questions as to the validity of the contract, and whether it is such as ought to be specifically enforced, must be raised upon the hearing. Hood v. Oglander, 11 Jur., N. S., 498; 34 L. J., Ch., 528; 34 Beav. 513.

3. On a bill for specific performance, the questions whether time was originally of the essence of the contract, and whether, being so, the defendant has done any act whereby he has waived it as a ground of objection to the performance, are questions depending on evidence, and not to be decided except upon the hearing. Levy v. Lindo, 3 Meriv. 81.

4. It is the duty of the Court, in a bill for specific performance arising out of a doubtful point of law, to settle the law on the subject. Bell v. Holtby, 15 L. R., Eq., 178; 42 L. J., Ch., 266; 28 L. T. 9; 21 W. R. 321.

5. In a suit for a specific performance of a contract for the sale to the plaintiff of certain bonds, the plaintiff cannot at the bar abandon his case as to the particular bonds, and ask specific relief by the delivery of other bonds of the same kind, admitted by the defendant to be in his hands. Simpson v. Malherbe, 13 W. R. 887; 13 L. T., N. S., 112; 6 N. R. 245.

6. Where a plaintiff sought the specific performance of an agreement, and the defendant set up by his answer a different agreement, the terms of which the plaintiff had always repudiated:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled, upon the hearing, to have the agreement set up by the defendant specifically performed. Jeffery v. Stephens, 6 Jur., N. S., 947; 8 W. R. 427.

7. Where a plaintiff has failed at the hearing to prove his title to a decree for a specific performance on a point not raised by the pleadings, the Court dismisses the bill, without prejudice to any other bill that the plaintiff may be advised to file. Clay v. Rufford, 5 De G. & Sm. 768.

8. Bill for specific performance dismissed, although an issue had been tried and had resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, the Court being of opinion that the agreement was one of which specific performance could not be decreed, and that the issue ought not to have been directed. Morrison v. Barron, 1 De G. F. & J. 633.

9. In a suit for specific performance of an agreement to let a house for a short term, the plaintiff should apply to have the cause advanced so that it may be heard before the term has expired. De Brassac v. Martyn, 11 W. R. 1020; 9 L. T., N. S., 287.

II. INQUIRIES. IN GENERAL.

10. Bill for specific performance against vendor, the vendor being in possession, and an account being necessary of the vendee's personal estate, referred to the Master to fix a short day for the payment of the purchase money, otherwise the bill to be dismissed as against those defendants, with costs. Lowther v. Andover, 1 Bro. C. C. 396.

11. Where contract for the purchase of an estate is not complete in the lifetime of the ancestor, the terms of it not being ascertained, heir is not entitled to have the personal estate applied in payment of the purchase money. A reference or issue will not be granted to ascertain the terms of the contract. The application of the personal estate by the heir, in completing the contract for purchase by the ancestor, but not binding on him, raises no trust in the lands for the next of kin. The money so laid out is a charge on the purchased lands. Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 265.

12. If, in the course of proceedings in a suit for specific performance, there comes out a fact, not put in issue in the cause by either party, which affects the legality of the contract, or tends to show that the contract is not fully stated in the bill, the Court will direct an inquiry into the fact so disclosed. Parken v. Whitty, T. & R. 366.

13. Semble, in a suit for specific performance of a written agreement, a parol variation, not set up by the answer, but coming out on the cross-examination of the defendant's agent, who was one of the plaintiff's witnesses, is a proper subject for inquiry before the Court finally disposes of the case. London & Birmingham Railway Co. v. Winter, Cr. & Ph. 57.

14. Where a parol agreement, varying the terms of the written agreement, is set up by the defendants in a suit for specific performance, and supported by evidence affording presumption or suspicion of its existence, an inquiry will be directed. Van v. Corpe, 3 Myl. & K. 269; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 208; 1 Jur. 101, 149.

1. Decree for specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease, rejecting one item for such conditions, etc., as shall be judged proper by J., and substituting reference to the Master, the agency of J. not being of the essence of the contract. Gourlay v. Somerset (Duke), 10 Ves. 429.

2. When estates and other property forming a mixed fund are settled, subject to a power of appointment there, the Court, where the parties entitled to this mixed fund are numerous, will not, as against a purchaser of part of the mixed fund in which purchase one of its objects acquiesced, act as against that purchaser without knowing all the dispositions of that mixed fund, and will direct inquiries accordingly. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

3. If the common decree for specific performance and for inquiry as to title be made, and no special directions, the purchaser may under it raise objections which he had abandoned before suit. Curling v. Austin, 2 Drew. & Sm. 129; 10 W. R. 682.

The Court will not add any special inquiry on the subject to the decree, or direct the chief clerk to state special circumstances. Ib.

And on further consideration the Court will not, upon the question of costs or interest, look at any evidence but that in the cause, and will not look at the proceedings and evidence in chambers or on interlocutory motion. Ib.

I. RESCISSION BY VENDOR AFTER JUDGMENT.

4 After a decree in a suit for specific performance, the defendant, the purchaser, refused to complete by payment of the purchase money. At the instance of the plaintiff, who had executed the conveyance, which had been approved in chambers, an order was made appointing a time and place for the defendant to pay the purchase money on delivery to him of the conveyance executed by the plaintiff. Morley v. Clavering, 9 W. R. 801; 30 Beav. 108.

5. A decree for specific performance was made against a purchaser. Not having paid the purchase money, he was ordered, on motion, to pay it within a limited time, and in default, that the contract should be rescinded and all proceedings stayed. He was also ordered to pay the costs of the motion. Simpson v. Terry, 34 Beav. 423.

6. After a decree for specific performance of a contract to purchase for payment, and an attachment for default, on motion by the plaintiff, the Court ordered the contract to be rescinded, and all proceedings stayed, except as to such application to the Court as might be made by the plaintiff to assess the damages occasioned by the breach of contract by the defendant. Sweet v. Meredith, 4 Giff. 207; 32 L. J., Ch. 147; 7 L. T. N. S., 664.

7. After decree against a purchaser for specific performance, the defendant made default in payment of the purchase money:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to rescind the contract. Foligno v. Martin, 16 Beav. 586.

8. A decree for specific performance was made against a purchaser in possession, but he was unable to complete the purchase. The Court rescinded the contract and ordered the purchaser to pay to the vendor the rents received by him, together with the costs of suit and those occasioned by the non-completion of the purchase. Clark v. Wallis, 35 Beav. 460.

9. When a purchaser by decree in a suit for specific performance was decreed to pay the purchase money within a specified time, and failed to do so, the Court, on the application of the vendor, ordered the contract to be rescinded, and stayed all proceedings in a suit with costs, to be paid by the purchaser, and refused to make an order for the return of the deposit to him. Dunn v. Vere, 23 L. T. 432; 19 W. R. 151.

10. A plaintiff in a specific performance suit may obtain a rescission of the contract on the defendant's default to obey the decree. Watson v. Coar, 42 L. J., Ch., 279; 21 W. R. 310; 27 L. T., N. S., 814; 15 L. R., Eq., 219.

A decree was made for specific performance of an agreement to take a lease of a house, and an order on further consideration for payment of a sum of money by the defendant, and thereupon for the execution of the lease. The defendant having made default and absconded, an order was made on the plaintiff's motion for rescission of the contract, and the stay of all proceedings in the suit except as to his costs and damages. Ib.

11. After a decree for specific performance of an agreement against a purchaser who was unable to complete,—on a motion by the plaintiffs that the agreement might be rescinded, and all further proceedings in the action stayed except as to any application which might be made to the Court to award and assess the damages which the plaintiffs had sustained by the breach of the agreement:—Held, that the plaintiffs were only entitled to have the agreement rescinded, and could not at the same time claim damages for its breach. Henty v. Schröder, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 666; 48 L. J., Ch., 792; 27 W. R. 833.

II. WRIT OF EXECUTION.

12. Where a covenant in an agreement for a lease was broken, and a verdict obtained for 1,500*l.* as damages for the breach, but the plaintiff in the action died before the judgment was perfected, so that the damages were lost at law, the Court, on a bill by his representatives for specific performance of the agreement, refused a writ of ne exeat regno for the amount. Jenkins v. Parkinson, 2 Myl. & K. 5; Coop. temp. Brough, 179; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 36.

13. When a person has been directed to execute a lease, but refuses to do so, the Court can only enforce such execution by attachment, the Trustee Act 1850, having omitted to provide for such a case. Grace v. Baynton, 25 W. R. 506.

I. OF SUITS FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE WHERE TITLE DOUBTFUL.

1. General Principles, 6597.
2. Liability of Vendor for, 6597.
3. Liability of Purchaser for, 6598.

1. General Principles.

1. The fact of a title having been perfected in the Master's office does not determine the question of the costs of a suit for specific performance, which depends upon whether the defects which have been removed there were the occasion of the suit. Soones v. Morrell, 1 Beav. 251.

2. The rule, that the costs of a suit for specific performance depend upon when the title was first shown, is to be strictly adhered to. Wilkinson v. Hartley, 15 Beav. 183.

3. The rule which makes the costs of a suit for specific performance depend upon when the title was first shown relaxed; first, where the requisition was not made until after a bill was filed; and, secondly, where, although the requisition was made before the bill was filed, the non-compliance was attributable to the circumstance of the purchaser having claimed abatement or compensation, in respect of which his bill had been dismissed with costs. Lyle v. Yarborough (Earl), 1 Johns. 70.

4. The costs of a suit for specific performance do not depend upon when a good title was first shown, but upon the conduct of each party in causing the litigation. Parr v. Lovogrove, 4 Jur., N. S., 600.

5. A purchaser having unsuccessfully insisted that an instrument of republication did not sufficiently refer to the will so as to identify it, no costs were given on either side on a bill for specific performance by vendor, who had not made out his title. Weddall v. Nison, 17 Beav. 160; 17 Jur. 642; 22 L. J., Ch., 939.

2. Liability of Vendor for.

6. Vendor not making good title when bill filed, pays costs till report of good title. Harford v. Purrier, 1 Madd. 532.

7. If vendor can make a good title at hearing, on further directions, it is sufficient for specific performance, vendor paying costs. Paton v. Rogers, 6 Madd. 256.

8. Vendor not making a good title ordered to pay costs, though he was only a trustee to sell. Edwards v. Harvey, Coop. 40.

9. Where a Master's report is against the title, a vendor's bill may now be dismissed with costs upon motion. Bennett College v. Carey, 3 Bro. C. C. 390.

10. Purchaser brought into court on a doubtful title ought to be discharged with costs. Blosse v. Clannorris, 3 Bligh 62.

11. Specific performance without costs, the suit being occasioned by the refusal of the vendor to produce documents insisted on by the purchaser, some of which were necessary and others not. Nevall v. Smith, 1 Jac. & Walk. 263.

12. On the report against vendor's title, his bill for specific performance dismissed with costs on motion. Walters v. Pym, 19 Ves. 351.

13. Costs to a purchaser; the vendor having established his title before the Master, after contest, upon a different ground from that in the abstract delivered. Felder v. Higginson, 3 Ves. & B. 142.

14. Title established before Master not being clear on abstract, vendor pays costs. — v. Collinge, cited 3 Ves. & B. 143 n.

15. Specific performance decreed without costs, the abstract delivered not containing a satisfactory title. Wilson v. Clapham, 1 Jac. & Walk. 36.

16. A vendor seeking a specific performance, should have his title prepared, and therefore, where the abstract delivered is imperfect, he pays the costs of the suit up to the time of the defects being supplied. Wilson v. Allen, 1 Jac. & Walk. 623.

17. Where a vendor does not show a good title till after the commencement of the suit, he must pay the costs, though specific performance be decreed. Townsend v. Champenone, 3 Y. & Coll. 505.

18. Where in a suit by a vendor, for specific performance, the Master reported in favour of the title, but the Court, on an exception taken by the purchaser, deemed the title doubtful, an order was made, dismissing the bill without costs, but neither allowing nor disallowing the exception. Willcos v. Bellaers, T. & R. 491.

19. A vendor filed a bill for specific performance, alleging that the defendant had accepted the title; the defendant resisted it, on the ground that the bankruptcy, under which the plaintiff claimed, was invalid. Neither allegation turned out correct, and, though a good title was first shown in the Master's office, the decree was made without costs. Sidbotham v. Barrington, 5 Beav. 261.

20. Where it appears on the face of a bill for a specific performance, that the plaintiff could not convey, according to the agreement, without the direction of the Court, he will not have the costs up to the hearing; but if the defendant insists on inquiries into the title, and fails in them, the plaintiff's costs incurred in these inquiries, and at the hearing on further directions, must be paid by the defendant. Allen v. Currie, 1 L. J., Ch., 135.

1. In a doubtful case of title, where the doubt is only removed at the hearing by an act of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs must pay the defendant's costs. Ashley v. Waugh, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 31; 4 Jur. 572.

2. Vendor not making a good title ordered to pay costs, though he was only a trustee to sell. Edwards v. Harvey, Coop. 40.

3. Bill by purchaser for specific performance ordered to be dismissed for defect of title, a necessary party not choosing to concur in conveying; order to dismiss without costs, it being against the principles of the Court to order the defendant to pay the plaintiff his costs in such case. Lewis v. Loaham, 3 Meriv. 429.

4. A bill for a specific performance of an agreement was made necessary by trustee refusing to join in the conveyance. The Court being of opinion that the trustees ought to pay all the costs of the suit, the decree was, that the plaintiff should pay the costs of all the other defendants (although he had a decree against them), and recover over the whole costs from the defendant, the trustee. Jones v. Lewis, 1 Cox 199.

5. Where the Court has declared, in a suit for specific performance by a vendor, that the concurrence of judgment creditors was necessary, that being the substantial ground of the litigation, although a question of conveyance and not of title, the vendor plaintiff falling must pay the costs of the suit. It is the duty of the vendor plaintiff who has a defective title, when the objection is removed, to offer the purchaser the costs up to that time, and to give him a conveyance. Freer v. Hesse, 23 L. J., Ch., 338; 1 Eq. Rep. 336; 2 Eq. Rep. 13.

6. The purchaser of a house in London having taken various objections to the title, the vendor filed a bill for specific performance, and obtained a reference as to title. The objections were overruled; but before the certificate had been signed the purchaser discovered in a long blank wall, which formed one side of the house and fronted on a street, a stone with an inscription, dated in 1776, stating that the wall had been built by and belonged to the East India Company, who had thrown the adjoining ground into the street. It turned out that the wall had been rebuilt in 1831 by the tenant of the house, and the stone set up again; but under what circumstances did not appear. No rent had from that time been paid to the company, or any acknowledgment of their title given; but their successors in title, on being applied to, claimed the wall as theirs, and the vendor obtained a release from them:—Held, that the vendor had not a good title when the bill was filed, for that there was no ground for holding a title to have been gained by possession adversely to the East India Company. Phillipson v. Gibbon, 6 L. R., Ch., 428; 40 L. J., Ch., 406; 24 L. T. 602; 19 W. R. 661.

Held, that the vendor was to blame, as he might, with reasonable diligence, have informed himself of this defect before selling, and that, therefore, although he had been right on all points which arose before the bill was filed, he ought not to receive costs. Id.

3. Liability of Purchaser for.

7. Purchaser making fair objection to title, does not pay costs. Aislalie v. Rice, 3 Madd. 256.

8. If purchaser makes frivolous objections to title, he pays costs, but not otherwise. Thorpe v. Freer, 4 Madd. 466. And see Litchfield v. Brown, 23 L. J., Ch., 176.

9. Specific performance decreed with costs in a case when the defendant, objecting to title, had been served with notice of a prior decision in a different cause in favour of the same title, against a similar objection. Biscoe v. Wilks, 3 Meriv. 456.

10. A tenant having by his conduct made his title to a renewal doubtful, and thereby rendering a suit for it necessary, was, on obtaining a renewal, decreed to pay all the costs. Barrett v. Pearson, 2 Ball & B. 189.

11. In a suit for specific performance by a vendor, the costs will be thrown upon the purchaser, though the Master reports that a good title was not shown till after the filing of the bill, if that finding proceeded on the ground that certain evidence had not been previously furnished, which the vendor had offered to produce, but which had not been actually produced, before the institution of the suit, in consequence of the purchaser insisting upon other unsubstantial objections. Long v. Collier, 4 Russ. 269.

12. Purchaser after long possession and vexatious objections to complete the purchase:—Held, to have waived his right to an investigation of the title, and decreed to perform the agreement specifically, to pay interest at 4 per cent. on the unpaid purchase money from the time of taking possession, and to pay the costs of the suit. Hall v. Laver, 3 Y. & Coll. 191.

13. To a bill by a vendor for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of property, the defendant raised three objections, and at the hearing failed in two; the usual reference was made to inquire if the plaintiff could make a good title:—Held, that the defendant ought to pay so much of the costs of the suit as had been occasioned by his unsuccessful objections. Smallwood v. Cotty, 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 265.

14. In a suit for specific performance, where an objection to the contract had been overruled at the hearing, and the defendant had afterwards raised an objection to the title in the Master's office, and that objection was cleared up, the Court ordered that the costs after the decree should be paid by the defendant, but that up to the decree on the hearing there should be no costs on either side. Woodward v. Miller, 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 16. S. C. 10 Jur. 1027.

15. If a defendant questions the title of a plaintiff and fails, and by that course puts the plaintiff to any costs, such defendant should pay so much of the costs as has been occasioned by the objection; but where such objection has caused so trifling an increase of expense to the plaintiff, that the inquiry would cost him more than the amount he would have to receive, the Court will not direct. Jones v. Morral, 2 Sim., N. S., 254; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 630.

16. Bill by purchaser for specific performance, insisting that the vendors could not make a good title, dismissed with costs. Nicolson v. Wordsworth, 2 Swan. 365.

17. Where, on a reference as to title in a suit for specific performance, the plaintiff, the vendor, showed a good title, in the opinion of the Master, from the time of producing certain evidence, the existence of which was well known to the defendant, but it had formed the subject of dispute between him and the vendor:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the suit. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Macn. & G. 713; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 525. Affirming 8 Hare 51.

1. Where a bill for specific performance is filed by a purchaser, and it turns out that the vendor cannot make a good title, the bill is dismissed, but without costs. Malden v. Fyson, 9 Beav. 347.

2. Where, upon a contract to purchase, a third party puts in a claim, which is not merely a frivolous one, but upon which there is a reasonable doubt, the Court will not decree specific performance against the purchaser. Where a third person, not a party to a suit for specific performance for a contract for sale, made such a claim independently of vendor and purchaser, the bill was dismissed without costs. Heseltine v. Simmons, 6 W. R. 268.

3. Bill by purchaser for specific performance ordered to be dismissed for defect of title, a necessary party not choosing to concur in conveying; order to dismiss without costs, it being against the principles of the Court to order the defendant to pay the plaintiff his costs in such case. Lewis v. Loxham, 3 Meriv. 429.

4. When a vendor succeeds in a suit for specific performance, he is entitled to costs, notwithstanding the title was first shown in the Master's office, if the suit was occasioned solely by the conduct of the defendant. Peers v. Sneyd, 17 Beav. 151.

5. A purchaser was ordered to pay all the costs, though a good title was not shown until after the institution of the suit by the production of a declaration which was not the cause of dispute, and had not been previously required. Bridges v. Longman, 24 Beav. 27.

6. Plaintiffs in a suit for specific performance, in which the only question was one of title, which was decided against them, ordered to pay the costs, though a decree was made in their favour. Hood v. Oglander, 6 N. R. 57.

7. No costs given against the purchaser who had failed in his objections, the error having occurred in the vendor's deed. Lecoy v. Mogford, 4 W. R. 805; 2 Jur., N. S., 1084.

8. Where a purchaser objects to specific performance of contract for sale upon other grounds than those of title, and fails, and the vendor does not make out his title until after decree, the purchaser is liable to the costs of the vendor's suit for specific performance, except the costs of making out the vendor's title. Abbott v. Caltou, 22 L. J., Ch., 936.

9. On a sale of real estate by a trustee under a will open to suspicion as having been obtained by undue influence, the title was approved; but before the actual completion of the contract, the heir-at-law gave notice that he intended to dispute the will, and brought an action against the tenant for rent; the purchaser having thereupon refused to complete, a bill for specific performance was filed; but before it came to a hearing the action brought by the heir was tried, and a verdict given against the heir. A reference as to title was then directed, and the Master having reported in favour of the title, a decree was made for specific performance. On appeal, however, by the purchaser, the Lord Chancellor (Lord Cottenham) ordered the case to stand over generally, with liberty for the vendor to take such proceedings for establishing the will as he should be advised. The vendor then instituted a suit against the heir, which resulted in the will being established. The Lord Chancellor (Lord Truro) thereupon confirmed the decree for specific performance, and directed the purchaser to pay interest from the time when under the contract the sale ought to have been completed, and also to pay the costs of the suit subsequently to the hearing, when the reference as to title was directed. His lordship held, that at that time there had been such reasonable inquiry into the title as ought to have satisfied the purchaser, and that therefore the consequences of the further proceedings by which the will was established, both in reference to the costs of the suit for specific performance and the payment of interest, must fall on the purchaser. Grove v. Bastard, 1 De G. M. & G. 69.

II. OF SUITS FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ON DEATH OR INSANITY OF VENDOR.

1. Infant devisees or Infant Heir, 6599.
2. Insanity of Vendor, 6600.

1. Infant Devisees or Infant Heir.

10. Where a party who had contracted for the sale of certain lands died previously to the execution of the conveyance, having, by a will antecedent to the contract for sale, devised all his real estate to trustees (who took the legal estate) upon trust for A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to C., an infant in tail; a suit for the completion of the contract having been rendered necessary by reason of the infancy of C., the Court decreed specific performance, with costs of the suit. Heard v. Cuthbert, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 369.

11. A vendor, after the contract, and before the conveyance to the purchaser, died, without having devised the legal estate in the premises in trust to complete the purchase, and a suit for a specific performance of the contract against the trustees and the infant devisees of interests in his estate having become necessary, the Court made the decree without costs, there having been no default on either side. Hinder v. Streeten, 10 Hare 18; 16 Jur. 650.

12. Where, after contracting to sell land, the vendor devises to parties, some of whom are infants at his decease, his estate must bear the costs of the suit which he has thus voluntarily rendered necessary to a completion of the contract, and a mere devise of trust estates does not in such a case avoid the necessity of a suit. Purser v. Darby, 4 Kay & J. 41.

13. Distinction in this respect between suits rendered necessary by the voluntary act of the deceased and those caused by the mere act of God, as where the deceased has died intestate, leaving an infant heir. Id.

1. A testator had granted to the plaintiff the right of pre-emption of an estate which he had previously devised to an infant. The plaintiff exercised his option after the testator's death, and filed his bill against the infant and executor for specific performance. The Court gave no costs against the defendants. Hale v. Bushill, 35 Beav. 343; 12 Jur., N. S., 243; 35 L. J., Ch., 381; 14 W. R. 495; 14 L. T., N. S., 246.

2. A suit for specific performance being necessary in consequence of a vendor having died, and the property becoming vested in his infant children, a small sum for costs was allowed to the purchaser. Williams v. Glenton, 35 L. J., Ch., 284; 12 Jur., N. S., 175; 14 W. R. 294; 13 L. T., N. S., 727. Affirming 34 Beav. 528; 11 Jur., N. S., 801; 13 W. R. 1030; 13 L. T., N. S., 10.

3. Testatrix devised a freehold property, in which she had an equitable estate in fee, to A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to the family of B. (who were infants) in strict settlement; she then contracted to sell part of the estate, and died before conveyance. After her decease, the legal estate was got in, and the owners of it, together with the tenants for life, were willing to complete the purchase.—Held, nevertheless, that in order to give the purchaser an immediate estate in fee, both legal and equitable, a decree for specific performance of the contract, under the stat. 11 Geo. 4, and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 17, was necessary, and that as this was a question of title, and the vendor had contracted to deduce a good title at her own expense, and there were no laches on either side, the costs of the suit must be paid out of the vendor's estate. Farrar v. Winterton (Earl), 4 Y. & Coll. 472.

4. A., who was under an obligation to convey land to a railway company, died, having devised his property to his children (of whom some were infants) equally, without giving any sufficient power of sale to trustees. The company having filed a bill for specific performance.—Held, that the suit was necessary, and that each party must bear his own costs. London & South Western Railway Co. v. Bridger, 12 W. R. 948; 4 N. R. 261.

5. On a decree for specific performance against the infant heir-at-law of a vendor, the Court, where there has been no default on either side, will give no costs on either side. Hanson v. Lake, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 328. And see Bannerran v. Clarke, 3 Drew. 632; 26 L. J., Ch., 77.

6. After decree in a suit for specific performance against the infant heir of the vendor, a petition must be presented under 11 Geo. 4, and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for an order that the infant may convey to the purchaser. The costs of the suit were ordered to be paid out of the purchase money. Prytharch v. Havard, 6 Sim. 9.

7. A petition in a cause for a conveyance under the Trustee Act having been presented by a party in the cause, in his character of purchaser, the Court refused him his costs. Robinson v. Wood, 5 Beav. 246.

8. Where a vendor of real estate contracted for a sale and died before completion, having by his will (dated prior to the contract) devised the estate to an infant:—Held, that in a suit instituted for the purpose of obtaining a conveyance, each party must bear his own costs. Mudin v. Patey, 1 N. R. 566.

9. Where a person having contracted to sell or lease an estate dies leaving a will, which renders the institution of a suit for specific performance necessary, his estate must bear the costs—Secus, if he dies intestate. Sanderson v. Chadwick, 2 N. R. 414.

10. A., having devised his real estate to B., contracted to sell a portion to the plaintiffs, and died before the contract was completed, leaving B. his infant heir and devisee:—Held, on the authority of Hinder v. Streeten (10 Hare 18), that the heir was entitled to his costs up to the hearing of a suit by the plaintiffs for specific performance. Midland Counties Railway Co. v. Rice, 2 Eq. Rep. 1109.

11. A contract for the sale of real estate had been entered into, but before completion, the vendor died intestate, leaving an infant heir-at-law:—Held, that in a suit instituted by the purchaser for specific performance, no costs of suit would be given on either side, otherwise if the estate had been devised by the vendor. Hodson v. Carter, 7 L. T., N. S., 504; 1 N. R. 179.

12. A vendor died intestate, and it became necessary to file a bill to make his infant heir a trustee:—Held, that each party must bear his own costs. Scott v. Scott, 11 W. R. 766; 8 L. T., N. S., 450.

13. If a vendor dies before completion, his infant heir, not disputing the contract, is entitled to be paid out of the purchase money his costs and expenses of a suit to carry the contract into effect. Barker v. Venables, 11 Jur., N. S., 480; 34 L. J., Ch., 420; 13 W. R. 803; 12 L. T., N. S., 796.

14. The heir-at-law of a vendor, who refused to convey to the purchaser an estate sold by his ancestor, was ordered to pay costs of a suit to compel him. Hoddel v. Pugh, 33 Beav. 489; 10 Jur., N. S., 534; 12 W. R. 782; 10 L. T., N. S., 446.

See TRUSTEE ACTS.

2. Insanity of Vendor.

15. Where, by reason of one of several vendors becoming of unsound mind before the purchase money is paid, a suit for specific performance becomes necessary, no costs of the suit will be given on either side. Cresswell v. Haines, 8 Jur., N. S., 208; 21 L. J., Ch., 237.

Several owners of shares in a copyhold estate agreed to sell it. The purchase money was made payable by instalments, and the surrender of the premises by the vendors was, by arrangement, delayed until the whole should have been paid. Before the last instalment was payable, one of the vendors became of unsound mind, but was not found lunatic by inquisition, and therefore a bill for specific performance of the contract became necessary:—Held, that as the delay of the surrender had been for the convenience of both parties, there ought to be no costs given on either side up to the hearing. S. C. 10 W. R. 121.

16. On a claim by vendor for specific performance by purchaser found by inquisition to have been lunatic at the time of the contract, the Court declared the contract to have been null and void, and ordered the residue of the deposit, after deducting the vendor's costs, charges, and expenses, to be repaid to the committee of the lunatic's estate. Frost v. Beavan, 17 Jur. 369; 22 L. J., Ch., 638.

III. OTHER DEFENCES OR CONDUCT OF THE PARTIES.

1. The vendors having by their misrepresentations occasioned the suit, were ordered to pay all the costs. Harrison v. Coppart, 2 Cox 319.

2. The costs of a suit for specific performance do not depend upon when a good title was first shown, but upon the conduct of each party in causing the litigation. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Jur., N. S., 600.

3. In conditions of sale of leaseholds it was stated, that the purchaser should have possession on a certain day; "all outgoing" up to that day being cleared by the vendors. The vendors refused to pay half a quarter's rent which had accrued due between the last quarter day and the date fixed for completion. The purchaser, after several attempts at accommodation, declined to complete:—Held, that the vendors were entitled to specific performance, subject to paying the half-quarter's rent; but that, as the purchaser had refused to accede to inexpensive modes which had been proposed for adjusting the dispute, there should be no order as to costs. Lames v. Gibson, 11 Jur., N. S., 873; 14 W. R. 25; 13 L. T., N. S., 316.

4. Devises in trust for sale contract to sell in the ordinary form; an abstract of title is delivered, when the counsel for the purchaser advises him to claim indemnity against covenants not to build, etc., not set out in the contract but contained in the testator's purchase deed. Answers are returned to these requisitions not touching the question of indemnity, and a draft conveyance tendered, when the vendors insert a proviso embodying the covenants in the conveyance, and the purchaser objects to execute it in that form. On claim for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that the disclosure of the covenants on the draft conveyance brought the contract down to that date, and the purchaser had the option to rescind or give the covenants. Claim dismissed without costs. Lukey v. Tiggs, 3 W. R. 306; 1 Jur., N. S., 200; 3 Eq. Rep. 510; 24 L. J., Ch., 495.

5. A contract was entered into for the purchase of property as to which the vendor, whose interest was subject to his wife's dower, stated that she would release her dower. The wife refused to join, and the purchaser obtained a decree for specific performance with the usual reference as to title. At the hearing, on further consideration, the purchaser asked for specific performance with compensation in respect of the wife's interest:—Held, that it was a case in which the purchaser was entitled to specific performance with compensation, and that there was nothing in respect to the compensation now asked inconsistent with the relief originally prayed or decreed so as to deprive the purchaser of his costs upon further consideration. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur., N. S., 810.

6. In a suit by a vendor for specific performance against a purchaser, if the contract stipulated that the possession should be given at a specified day, it is competent for the purchaser to insist that both time and a vacant possession are the essence of the contract, and the Court will receive as evidence that such was the purchaser's object statements made by the agent of the purchaser at the time of signing the contract. Where a purchaser has consented to enlarge the time for completion, and where a vacant possession was of the essence of the contract, it is competent for him to object to complete at the expiration of such enlarged time, if the possession is not then vacant, and if he has done no act towards completion of the contract after he had notice that vacant possession could not be given at the day. But where a purchaser had by his acts waived the time for completion in the first instance, and had gone on for some time inducing the vendor to incur expenses to perfect his title, and suddenly, upon the discovery that vacant possession could not be given according to stipulation, declined to complete, the Court, although it dismissed a bill filed against such a purchaser for specific performance, dismissed it without costs. Nokes v. Kilmorey, 1 De G. & Sm. 444.

7. If the purchaser, in his answer, besides insisting on the want of title in the vendor, sets up a defence that he was seduced into the contract by fraud and misrepresentation, and that defence is not supported by evidence, he will be loaded with so much of the expense of the suit as was occasioned by those improper allegations. Wright v. Howard, 1 L. J., Ch., 94.

If the defendant, in such a cause, files a cross-bill to have the agreements cancelled, not relying merely on the vendor's want of title, but charging him with fraud and misrepresentation (which charges are disproved), though the agreements will be decreed to be cancelled yet no costs will be given. Id.

8. A. and B. having entered into a verbal treaty for the purchase of certain premises belonging to A., and not being able to agree as to the amount of the purchase money, A. addressed a letter to C., a third person, stating that he would take a certain sum from B. for the premises, reserving a small portion of same for his sister, if C. approved of it; B. subsequently lodged the sum named by A. with C., of which lodgment C. made a memorandum on A.'s letter, with a remark that it was "a great price." During the period of this negotiation between A. and B., A. entered into a contract with D. for the sale of the same premises, and although notice of the agreement between A. and B. was given to D., actually conveyed the premises to D.:—Held, on a bill filed by B. for the specific performance of her agreement, that C. must be considered the agent of A., and that as he had signed the contract acknowledging the receipt of the purchase money, A. was bound to perform the agreement. Also that D. having had notice of the agreement between A. and B., the conveyance to him must be considered fraudulent, and should be delivered up to be cancelled, and that the conduct of A. having been very fraudulent, the costs of B. should in the first place be paid out of the funds lodged by him in the hands of C. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

1. In a suit for specific performance, a purchaser, who set up a defence which prevented the plaintiff obtaining, on motion, a reference as to title, and failed in establishing it, was ordered to pay the costs up to, and inclusive of the hearing. Hyde v. Dallaway, 4 Beav. 606; 6 Jur. 119.

2. In a suit for specific performance, where the purchaser insisted that the contract was abandoned and he was decreed to complete the contract on a good title being shown, he must pay the costs of the suit up to the hearing, the litigation up to the hearing having arisen out of the question whether the contract was abandoned. Taylor v. Brown, 2 Beav. 180; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 14.

3. Specific performance of an agreement refused, under the circumstances, but the costs occasioned by the defendant setting up the Statute of Frauds were disallowed. Cornell v. Watts, 2 H. & Tw. 224.

4. A claim of compensation being the sole cause of suit, plaintiff to pay the costs; bill dismissed without costs against subsequent purchaser, with notice of plaintiff's contract, who had formally abandoned, but given plaintiff no notice thereof. Fenster v. Turner, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 161; 6 Jur. 144.

5. A landlord who does not litigiously oppose a covenant for renewal shall be entitled to his costs. Doneraile v. Chartres, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 137; Jones v. Lewis, 1 Cox 137.

6. A bill for specific performance was dismissed with costs in the court below. On appeal, the defendant, whose harsh and unreasonable conduct had made the suit necessary, was ordered to pay the whole costs, including the costs of the appeal. Lillie v. Legh, 3 De G. & J. 204.

7. Bill to have execution of articles for the sale of some copyhold lands to plaintiff, on payment of 538l. to defendant R., a guinea being paid in part, and to compel the lord of the manor to admit plaintiff in fee, according to the agreement, which was decreed; but there being no tender of a surrender to the lord, and consequently no refusal, he was to have his costs. Sayle v. Reeves, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 188.

8. A purchaser, who had altogether denied the vendor's right to a specific performance, ordered to pay the costs of a suit, instituted by the vendor for that purpose, down to the hearing, although the title was not finally completed until after the decree, but where since that time both parties claimed what they were not entitled to, no costs on either side were given. Carrodus v. Sharp, 20 Beav. 56.

9. Party having contracted with person, since dead, for the purchase of advowson, but had taken no steps during the life of vendor to enforce contract, and for a considerable time after his death (objecting to title on ground of outstanding judgment and creditors' suit pending):—Held, not entitled as against devisee to present, if a vacancy occur in the meanwhile, though he insists on completion of contract; and if, in consequence of his insisting on such right, bill to ascertain it become necessary, a decree for plaintiff will carry costs as far as his claim comes in question, though it be part of decree that, subject to next presentation, he be permitted to complete the contract. Wyrill v. Exeter (Bishop), 1 Price 292.

10. Where the plaintiff (vendor) has shown a good title according to the conditions of sale prior to the hearing, but has been the means of great expense being incurred in prosecuting the inquiry at chambers, whither the cause was referred, instead of having the question decided at the hearing, the Court will, in decreeing a specific performance, give him his costs up to the hearing only. Gould v. White, 2 Eq. Rep. 1100.

11. The defendants' solicitors, two days before a bill for specific performance was filed, but while the bill was in course of being printed, wrote to the plaintiff's solicitor, to propose an early day for completing the purchase, and the plaintiff's solicitor, on the very day on which the bill was filed, wrote to accept the appointment, but afterwards claimed the costs of the suit, which the defendants refused to pay:—Held, that the plaintiff must pay the costs of the suit. Chester v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 13 W. R. 333; 11 L. T., N. S., 699.

12. On a bill for a specific performance of an agreement for the sale of a house, the plaintiff made out his case; but it appeared that the defendant had actually sold the house to another person for a valuable consideration. The Court directed the Master to inquire what damages the plaintiff had sustained by the non-performance of the agreement, and that such damages, together with the costs of the suit, should be paid by defendant. Denton v. Stewart, 1 Cox 258.

13. In a suit for specific performance and damages, an issue was directed to be tried at common law to ascertain the amount of damages. The plaintiff set up a very large claim based on special user, but this claim was disallowed, and only a much smaller claim for common user allowed. On the cause being brought back into chancery the plaintiff was disallowed the extra costs occasioned by the excessive claim. Cory v. Thames Iron Works & Ship Building Co., 16 W. R. 475.

14. A lease contained a covenant by the lessor to grant a further lease, and a stipulation that the lease should be prepared by the lessor's solicitor. The lessor's solicitor raised various untenable objections, and put the lessee to considerable expense. The lessee required the lessor to pay the costs occasioned thereby, and threatened to file a bill for specific performance of the covenant. The lessor then wrote, withdrawing all his objections, but refused to pay the costs occasioned by them. The lessee filed a bill the day afterwards:—Held, that the lessor's solicitor was bound to prepare a proper lease, and the lessor was ordered to pay the costs of the suit, and of the dispute occasioned by him. Mappin v. Savory, 20 L. T., N. S., 777.

15. When in a suit against a vendor for specific performance of a contract the refusal to complete arose from a claim made by the defendant T. under a prior contract, but which claim T. was held to have abandoned in favour of the plaintiff, a decree was made with costs against both defendants, but with a declaration that as between the defendants the costs should be borne by T. Wilson v. Thomson, 23 W. R. 744; 44 L. J., Ch., 527; 20 L. R., Eq., 744.

16. A verbally agreed with B., his solicitor, for the sale of land to B. This agreement, which was never reduced to writing, provided that B. should bear all expenses of making out the title, that possession should be at once given, and that the purchase money should be paid at a fixed future date, with interest in the meantime. B. entered into possession, but took no further steps in completion of the purchase, and, before the purchase money became due, died. In a suit by A. for specific performance against the executor of B.:—Held, that B., as A.'s solicitor, ought to have had an agreement in writing prepared, and that the executor was bound to complete the purchase and pay the costs of the suit. Brafield v. Scriven, 22 W. R. 202.

1. By a contract T. Watts agreed to sell an estate to a purchaser with the following reservation: T. Watts "reserves the necessary land for making a railway through the estate to Prince Town."—Held, on suit for specific performance by the purchaser, that the contract was too uncertain for the Court to make a decree for specific performance of it. The vendor might have raised the defence by demurrer, which he had not done. But held, that, notwithstanding, he was entitled to full costs, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Pearce v. Watts, 20 L. R., Eq., 492; 44 L. J., Ch., 492; 23 W. R. 771.

2. When, after a contract for the sale of land has been entered into, a notice is given to make time of the essence of the contract, the question whether the notice is reasonable or not must be judged of as at the date when it is given. The plaintiff held a lease from the defendant which gave him an option of purchasing the demised property at any time during the term, on giving the lessor three months' previous notice in writing. On the 24th March 1877, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice of his intention to exercise the option. There were some difficulties in completing the defendant's title to the property, and an abstract of title was not delivered to the plaintiff's solicitor till the 17th June 1878. The plaintiff's solicitor not having acknowledged the receipt of the abstract, and having neglected to answer several letters from the defendant's solicitors, they, on the 16th September, wrote to the plaintiff himself, asking whether he intended to complete the purchase. The plaintiff replied the next day that he would write at once to his solicitor. On the 24th September 1878, no further communication having been received from the plaintiff or his solicitor, the defendant gave the plaintiff a notice in writing, requiring him to complete the purchase, and stating that, unless he completed it on or before the 31st October 1878, the defendant would treat the contract as rescinded, and that in that respect time should be deemed of the essence of the contract. On the 26th September 1878, the plaintiff acknowledged the receipt of the notice, and said that he had seen his solicitor, who had promised to proceed as soon as possible. On the 1st November 1878, no further communications having been received from the plaintiff or his solicitor, the defendant's solicitors wrote to the plaintiff that the defendant, in pursuance of his notice, declared the contract at an end; and they requested the return of the abstract, and demanding payment of rent for the property. The plaintiff had been in possession of the property ever since his notice to purchase, but had refused to pay any rent after the 24th June 1877. On the 21st November 1878 the plaintiff commenced his action for the specific performance of the contract to purchase:—Held, that the notice of the 24th September fixed an unreasonably short time for the completion of the purchase, and was therefore invalid. Specific performance was decreed, and the defendant was ordered to pay the costs of the action up to and including the trial. Cramford v. Tboogood, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 153; 49 L. J., Ch., 108; 41 L. T. 549; 28 W. R. 248.

3. Property was put up for sale, and in the particulars, which were advertised, was described as being an absolute reversion in a freehold estate, falling into possession on the death of a lady in her seventieth year; and by the conditions of sale, which were read for the first time at the auction just previously to the commencement of the biddings, the property was stated to be sold subject to two mortgages, and his solicitor paid the deposit on his behalf after having read the conditions. On a bill by the purchaser at the auction, who stated that he was deaf, and did not understand that by the conditions he was buying only an equity of redemption in the property:—Held, that though in an ordinary case, inasmuch as the purchaser's carelessness had contributed to the mistake, he would not have been entitled to the costs of the suit, he might have them on account of having, previously to the commencement of the suit, offered, on condition of having the contract rescinded and the deposit returned, to pay the costs of the sale. Torrance v. Bolton, 14 L. R., Eq., 124; 41 L. J., Ch., 643; 20 W. R. 718; 27 L. T., N. S., 19. Affirmed 21 W. R. 134; 42 L. J., Ch., 177; 8 L. R., Ch., 118; 27 L. T., N. S., 738.

4. A purchaser refused to complete his contract to buy real estate, on the grounds that the original title was at least doubtful, and that lis pendens was a charge on the property. The lis pendens was afterwards decided to form no charge on the property; after which the vendor offered to stay all further proceedings if the purchaser would complete his contract and pay the costs up to the time of the offer. He refused to do so:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to a decree for specific performance, and with costs up to and inclusive of the hearing. Bull v. Hutchons, 9 Jur., N. S., 954; 11 W. R. 866; 8 L. T., N. S., 716.

IV. SET-OFF.

5. One of the terms of an agreement was, that the contract should be void if the purchaser's counsel should be of opinion that a marketable title could not be made good by a certain time. The counsel being of that opinion, a bill by the purchaser for a specific performance, with a compensation, was dismissed with costs; and an application afterwards made by the plaintiff that his deposit might be set off against the defendant's costs, and the surplus (if any) paid to him, was refused with costs. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 78.

1. An estate was sold by auction, and the purchase was to be completed in two months, according to the conditions of sale. The buyer died soon afterwards, and suits were instituted both in the Spiritual Court and the Court of Chancery respecting his affairs, which prevented the completion of the contract. Four or five years after the sale the vendor filed his bill to have the contract rescinded, and the affairs of the buyer still remaining unsettled, the Court rescinded the contract, and gave the plaintiff his costs out of the deposit. Mackreth v. Marlar, 1 Cox 259.

2. A vendor brought an action claiming a declaration that his contract for sale was at an end. The purchaser made a counter-claim for the specific performance of the contract. Judgment was given for the defendant, with costs, on both claim and counter-claim:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to deduct his costs from his purchase money in priority to a mortgage of the plaintiff, whose mortgage had been created after the contract for sale, but before the commencement of the action. Green v. Sevin, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 589.

V. OTHER CASES.

3. Agreement for a lease of a farm, referred to a paper containing the terms, bill for specific performance according to such clauses as had been read to the plaintiff; parol evidence to prove that was refused, and the bill dismissed. Bill being dismissed without costs as a hard case, parties made trustees without their knowledge, and as such being necessary parties to the bill, cannot have costs against plaintiff, but left to their remedy against their principal; otherwise, perhaps, if plaintiff had prevailed, because then those costs might have been given over against other defendants. Brodie v. St. Paul, 1 Ves. J. 326.

4. Upon a bill for specific performance, the Court thought that it would press too severely on the defendants, who were mere trustees, to make a decree. The Court held that, in dismissing the bill, it had no authority to give the plaintiff his costs. Wedgwood v. Adams, 8 Beav. 103.

5. A trust to sell with all convenient expedition, and within five years:—Held, to authorise a sale after the five years. Costs of specific performance not given. Pearce v. Gardner, 1 W. R. 98; 10 Hare 287.

6. A trustee having power to sell land in order to raise 600*l.* and the expenses, put it up to sale in two lots, and sold the first for 600*l.*, and the second for 510*l.* The second lot consisted of more than three acres of land, and was described in the particulars of sale as readily convertible into building ground:—Held, that the sale of the second lot was not improper, and that the purchasers must pay the costs of a suit for specific performance brought against them by the trustee. Thomas v. Townsend, 16 Jur. 736.

7. Where plaintiff's bill for specific performance of an agreement for sale was dismissed, plaintiff must pay the costs, though he was only a trustee for sale. Edwards v. Harvey, Coop. 40.

8. Interpretation of a subsequent correspondence, in reference to the original contract. The agreement is not impaired nor altered by proposals which the purchaser makes subsequently, with a view to an amicable arrangement. Such proposals may have an influence on costs. Bunning v. Bunning, 1 L. J., Ch., 56.

9. Although time is not of the essence of the contract, yet, where there is unnecessary delay, the purchaser has a right to limit by notice the time for completing it, or to abandon the contract; where the purchaser failed in this defence:—Held liable to costs up to the hearing, and the usual reference ordered. Taylor v. Brown, 2 Beav. 180; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 14.

10. Where there was a sufficient part-performance to take a parol contract for sale out of the Statute of Frauds, and the purchaser became bankrupt:—Held that the vendor, wishing to have effect given to his lien for unpaid purchase money, was entitled to have his costs out of the estate sold. Exp. Cooper, Re Taylor, 3 M. D. & De G. 717.

11. A vendor resisted a bill for specific performance. He became bankrupt, and his assignee afterwards continued the resistance, but failed at the hearing:—Held, that the assignee must pay the plaintiff's costs of suit incurred subsequently to the bankruptcy. Fozzwell v. Grotorez, Fozzwell v. Turner, 33 Beav. 345.

12. Semble, where a decree has been made for specific performance, and an objection is subsequently raised for the first time, which the Court cannot get over, the proper course is to dismiss the bill without costs. Jenkins v. Green, 5 Jur., N. S., 304; 28 L. J., Ch., 820.

13. Purchaser pendente lite, on filing supplemental bill, is liable to all costs from beginning of suit. Anon., 1 Atk. 89.

14. A defendant, a purchaser, demurred to a bill for specific performance, and his demurrer was overruled. He then asked for a case to be sent to a court of law, which was granted, and the opinion of the judges was against him. Ultimately, however, the bill was dismissed with costs:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to his costs at law as well as in equity. Forbes v. Peacock, 12 Sim. 528; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 46; 7 Jur. 688. And see S. C. 6 Jur. 476.

15. W. lets premises to V. upon a contract written in pencil by V., and signed by him in a notebook belonging to W.; both act under the contract, but V. ultimately alleges non-performance by W. of certain things not contained in it, and W. makes like charges. On a claim for specific performance, decree for specific performance made without costs. Waller v. Vigurs, 2 W. R. 51.

16. In suits as to the specific performance of a contract to purchase large colliery works, the purchasers alleged as a defence misrepresentation by the vendors as to the value. As to several allegations the purchasers were held to have failed, and specific performance was decreed, but with compensation to the purchasers in respect of an alleged misrepresentation as to the amount of stores consumed in the collieries, and a consequent excess in the statement of income. An inquiry was directed as to such compensation, and it was found that there was a large excess in the statement of income beyond its true amount:—Held, that the purchasers were entitled to a deduction from their purchase money bearing the same proportion to the whole purchase money as the excess bore to the income stated. Powell v. Elliot, 10 L. R., Ch., 424; 33 L. T. 110; 23 W. R. 777.

Held, also, that as no direction as to costs was given by the original decree in the suits, and that as the purchasers were held to be entitled to a considerable abatement, the vendors must pay the costs of the suits, and could not on the hearing on further consideration be relieved from payment of any part of the costs on account of the failure of the purchasers as to parts of their case on the original hearing. Id.

1. In a suit by the purchasers of certain mines to set aside a sale, a decree with costs was made in favour of the plaintiffs. The House of Lords reversed the decree, and remitted the cause to the Court below. The Court directed the costs to be repaid to the defendants, but without interest. Small v. Attwood, 3 Y. & Coll. 105; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 67.

2. In the absence of special circumstances, a court of equity will not enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of land which is silent as to the means of access to it, when it is reasonably uncertain whether any means of entering on the land at all times can be conferred on the purchaser. And where the circumstances of such a case did not appear to the Court sufficient to constitute a waiver of the objection, a bill for specific performance was dismissed with a fixed amount of costs. Denne v. Light, 8 De G. M. & G. 774; 26 L. J., Ch., 459; 3 Jur., N. S., 627.

II. AGREEMENT TO EVADE THE STAMP ACTS, 6606.

III. OTHER MATTERS, 6606.

I. ON WHAT INSTRUMENTS.

5. It is not in violation of the Stamp Act to comprise several lettings in court in one instrument: and where a lease was made to one tenant of the entire lands, with an agreement that he should continue the other tenants in their holdings at the same rent, instead of separate leases, Lord Chancellor held there was no objection on the statute or on principle; and with respect to fees to officers on separate leases, that it was the duty of the Court to cut down the expense of persons dealing under its administration of suitors' property, without regard to that consideration. Anon., 1 Moll. 438.

6. Where plaintiffs were mortgagees in fee of freeholds in M., and of a lease for lives of a rectory, etc., in B., and had appointed H. and W. as receivers as to both, but the defendant, as tenant of the tithes, etc., in B. under an agreement with the mortgagee, was allowed to receive them, and, being in arrears, the mortgagee by letter directed him to pay a sum, part of the arrears, to H. and W., and charge it in the account of the year's tithes, etc.:—Held, to be, in effect, an order to pay money due from the defendant to the mortgagee as arrears, and not as receiver to the mortgagees; and, therefore, void for want of a stamp. Braybrooke (Lord) v. Meredith, 13 Sim. 271; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 287; 7 Jur. 144.

7. An order, signed by A., addressed to his bankers, directing them, out of the balance due to him on the final arrangement of his account, to pay to B. a certain sum, and which order was forthwith placed in the hands of B., who, accompanied by A., immediately proceeded to the banking-house, and delivered it to the bankers:—Held, to be an instrument requiring a bill stamp within the stat. 55 Geo. 3, c. 184; held, also, that, although the intention of A. and B. was that the order should be forthwith delivered to the bankers, yet the fact that the order was, according to the agreement, delivered by A. to B. (the payee) brought it within the provisions of the Stamp Act applicable to an instrument of that character. Parsons v. Middleton, 6 Hare 261.

1. A., being entitled to the sum of 365*l.*, payable to him by B., addressed the following note to B. "I hereby authorise you to pay to C. the sum of 365*l.*, being the amount of my contract:—Held, that this document did not require a stamp, as "an order for the payment of a sum of money out of the particular fund," etc., in the schedule to the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184. Diplock v. Hammond, 23 L. J., Ch., 550; 2 Eq. Rep. 783; 2 W. R. 500. Affirming 2 W. R. 287; 2 Sm. & G. 141; 2 Eq. Rep. 409.

2. M., being indebted to the plaintiffs, gave them an unstamped document addressed to C., who was trustee of his father's will, in the following words:—"I hereby authorise and direct you to pay to the plaintiffs on their order the sum of 140*l.* out of the moneys now due or hereafter to become due to me under the will of my late father, and before making any payment to me thereout:—Held, that such document was an equitable assignment and not a bill of exchange under s. 48 of the Stamp Act 1870, and could, therefore, be produced in evidence on the payment of the proper duty and penalty. Buck v. Robson (3 L. R., Q. B. D., 686; 48 L. J., Q. B., 250; 39 L. T. 325; 26 W. R. 804) followed. Fisher v. Calvert, 27 W. R. 301.

3. An agreement made between two persons residing in Calcutta, relating to property in Calcutta, need not necessarily be written on stamped paper. Gilchrist v. Herbert, 20 W. R. 348; 26 L. T., N. S., 381.

4. Objection to an award to be ready to be delivered in writing to the parties by a certain day as not having a deed stamp overruled. Blundell v. Brettargh, 17 Ves. 232.

5. Securities given on account of a benefit building society are within the exemptions of the statute, notwithstanding the required formalities may not be fully completed till after the dates of the securities. Williams v. Hayward, 22 Beav. 220.

6. An order of the Court making a settlement should bear the usual settlement stamp. Re Gowan, Gowan v. Gowan, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 778; 50 L. J., Ch., 248.

7. The taxing master ought not to require a receipt stamp to be affixed to counsel's signature to a fee before allowing the charge on taxation. Re Beavan, 5 De G. M. G. 40; 23 L. J., Ch., 536; 2 W. R. 299.

[On Other Instruments.] See BILLS OF EXCHANGE, PROMISSORY NOTES AND CHEQUES, V.—VENDOR AND PURCHASER, XX. III.—and other SPECIFIC TITLES.

II. AGREEMENT TO EVADE THE STAMP ACTS.

8. The Court cannot sanction an agreement between the parties that an objection for want of a proper stamp shall be waived; if, therefore, the objection comes to the knowledge of the Court, no decree will be made until the instrument duly stamped is produced to the registrar. Owen v. Thomas, 3 Myl. & K. 353; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 205.

9. An agreement that, if it should become necessary to stamp a document, and pay any penalty for doing so, one of the parties to it should be at liberty to charge the other with the expense of stamping it, is an evasion of the Stamp Act, and will not be enforced by the Court as to the penalty. Abbott v. Stratton, 3 J. & L. 603; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 233.

III. OTHER MATTERS.

10. Deeds, altered by consent, require re-stamping. — v. Lee, 2 Eq. Abr. 414.

11. A bond is valid though not duly stamped till after the death of the obligor. Handley v. —, 8 L. J., Ch., 49.

12. Distinction between an agreement that may be stamped, paying the penalty, which the party will be permitted to stamp, pending the cause, and one upon which no action can be brought unless stamped. Huddleston v. Briscoe, 11 Ves. 595.

13. Held, a stamp was equal to a seal in the execution of a power which requires sealing. Sprange v. Bernard, 2 Bro. C. C. 585.

14. In a pressing case, leave was given to file a written copy of a bill without any stamp, where the stamp-office was closed for the day, on the undertaking by the plaintiffs' solicitor to stamp the copy bill the next day. Kershaw v. Kalow, 1 Jur., N. S., 974.

I. WHAT ARE.

1. In the reign of Richard 2, an earldom was created of an apparently non-descendible dignity. The earl was beheaded by Henry of Lancaster when he invaded England, and before he received or even claimed the crown. There was no evidence whether there had been any trial, or form of trial, before the beheading. When Henry was declared king a proceeding took place in Parliament in which the Commons were represented to have prayed that all that was done in the pursuit, arrest, and judgment of the earl might be declared good for the common profit of the realm. The king, with the assent of the lords temporal, declared that it was so. This proceeding was entered on the placita coronæ in Parliament, but not on the rolls of Parliament. Semble, that this was not an Act of Parliament. Wilkes Peerage, 4 L. R., H. L., 126.

But it was a solemn declaration pronounced by the king in open Parliament at the prayer of the Commons, and with the advice of the Lords, and must be taken as a parliamentary declaration that, whatever had been the nature of the grant to the earl, it was wholly at an end. Id.

II. HOW CITED.

2. The statute written in the statute book under the year secundo (vulgo primo) Jac. 1, c. 15, ought to be pleaded as of the first year. Bryant v. Withers, 2 M. & S. 123; 2 Rose 8.

III. OPERATIVE PARTS.

1. Title and Marginal Notes, 6608.
2. Recitals, 6608.
3. Preamble, 6608.
4. Interpretation Clause, 6609.
5. Exceptions and Proviso, 6609.

1. Title and Marginal Notes.

1. The title of an Act of Parliament is no part of the Act. Att.-Gen. v. Weymouth, Ambli. 22. S. P. Rea v. Williams, 1 W. Black. 95.

2. The title cannot be resorted to for the purpose of construing the provisions of an Act of Parliament. Hunter v. Nockolds, 1 Macn. & G. 640; 1 H. & Tw. 644; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177; 14 Jur. 256. And see S. C. 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 407.

3. The enacting part of an Act is not to be controlled by the title or recitals unless the enacting part is ambiguous, and then the title and recitals may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the Legislature. Bentley v. Rotherham Local Board, 46 L. J., Ch., 284; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 588.

4. The headings of different portions of a statute are to be referred to in order to determine the sense of any doubtful expression in a section ranged under any particular heading. Hammersmith and City Railway Co. v. Brand, 4 L. R., H. L., 171.

6. The dictum in Re Venour's Settled Estates, Venour v. Sellon (2 L. R., Ch. D., 525), is not correct, and the marginal notes to the sections of an Act of Parliament are not to be taken as part of the Act. Sutton v. Sutton, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 513; 52 L. J., Ch., 334; 48 L. T. 96; 31 W. R. 370

2. Recitals.

7. The recitals in the Disabling Statute do not limit the force of the subsequent enactment to cases in which the mischief by the alienation is done to the personal interest of the successor of the alienor; for it is evident from the enactment that the legislature intended to apply the prohibition to the case of persons who were seised either as mere trustees, or in a great measure in trustees, and among other persons to the master or guardian of an hospital. York (Dean) v. Middleborough, 2 Y. & J. 196.

8. A clear and explicit enactment is not to be cut down by a more limited preamble or recital; but if the enactment is not explicit in itself, it may be explained and cut down by the preamble or recital. Hughes v. Chester and Holyhead Railway Co., 1 Dr. & Sm. 524; 9 W. R. 760.

9. A recital in an Act will not bind those who are not within its enacting part. Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Co. v. Linlithgow (Magistrates), 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 704.

10. Semble, that the recitals in private Acts of Parliament of recent date are not evidence of the facts stated in them, such recitals being no longer submitted to the previous approval of the judges. Shremsbury Peerage, 7 H. L. Ca. 1.

11. The object of the Act 32 & 33 Vict., c. 46, is to abolish the distinction between specialty and simple contract debts, and the recital of the Act is that that alone is the object. The Act must therefore be read as corresponding with the express recital of its object; and if words are found that may be carried further, they must be read with reference to the mischief intended to be remedied, and to the express recital of the Act. Crowder v. Stenart, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 370; 50 L. J., Ch., 136; 29 W. R. 331.

12. The enacting part of an Act is not to be controlled by the title or recitals unless the enacting part is ambiguous, and then the title and recitals may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the legislature. Bentley v. Rotherham Local Board, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 588; 46 L. J., Ch., 284.

3. Preamble.

13. The preamble of an Act of Parliament is proper to explain the general body of it. Cope-man v. Gallant, 1 P. W. 317. But see Ryall v. Rowles, 1 Ves. 365; 1 Atk. 175.

14. If the enacting part of a statute will bear only one interpretation, the preamble shall not confine it; but if it is doubtful, the preamble may be applied to throw light upon it. Mason v. Armitage, 13 Ves. 36.

15. The preamble of an Act of Parliament, though it may assist ambiguous words, cannot control a clear and express enactment. Lee v. Summersgill, 17 Ves. 508.

16. By the preamble of the Registry Act, the object of the legislature appears to be to secure purchasers, and to prevent forgeries, fraudulent gifts, and conveyances; but a judgment creditor is not a purchaser, and does not fall within the provision of the preamble. Crymble v. Adair, Beat. 124.

The preamble is a good mean to find out the meaning of the statute, and is a key to open the understanding thereof. Id.

17. Enacting words, if they take in the mischief, shall be extended for that purpose, though the preamble does not warrant it; and where a new statute is made to alter the law, the judges should so mould their practice as to render it conformable to the legislature. Basset v. Basset, 3 Atk. 207.

18. The enacting part of a statute extends further than the preamble in many instances, even in criminal matters. The 33 Hen. 8, c. 23, for trying treasons, etc., within the King's dominion or without, has been extended to trials in the West Indies. Kinaston v. Clark, 2 Atk. 205.

19. A clear and explicit enactment is not to be cut down by a more limited preamble or recital; but if the enactment is not explicit in itself, it may be explained and cut down by the preamble or recital. Hughes v. Chester & Holyhead Railway Co., 1 Dr. & Sm. 524; 9 W. R. 760.

20. Though the preamble of one Act may appear to be directed against a particular evil, and though another Act may be passed to aid its application, the enactments of the second Act are not necessarily to be confined to the special purpose which seemed to be the particular object that the first had in view. Its own words must be considered as explaining and defining its objects and its means. Copland v. Davies, 5 L. R., H. L., 358; 21 W. R. 1.

1. The preamble of an Act of Parliament cannot be resorted to in order to ascertain the intention of the Act unless there is an ambiguity in the enacting part. Taylor v. Oldham Corporation, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 395; 25 W. R. 178.

2. In construing an Act, the Court is at liberty to regard the state of the law at the time, and the facts which the preamble or recitals of the Act prove to have been the existing circumstances at the time of its preparation. Att.-Gen. v. Powis (Earl), 1 Kay 186.

3. Semble, the Court ought not to restrict a section in an Act of Parliament by the preamble or general purview of the Act where the section is not inconsistent with the spirit of the Act. Sutton v. Sutton, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 521; 52 L. J., Ch., 338; 48 L. T. 98; 31 W. R. 372.

4. Semble, the Court ought to give effect to the preamble to this extent, namely, that it shows what the Legislature are intending; and if the words of enactment have a meaning which does not go beyond that preamble, or which may come up to the preamble, in either case that meaning should be preferred to one showing an intention of the Legislature which would not answer the purposes of the preamble or which would go beyond them. To that extent only is the preamble material. West Ham (Overseers) v. Iles, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 387; 52 L. J., Q. B., 650; 49 L. T. 206; 1 W. R. 928.

5. A market company obtained a special Act, the preamble of which recited that a convenient site might be obtained between certain streets on the east and certain other streets on the west, and which enacted that the Market and Fairs Clauses Act was incorporated therewith. The 24th section authorised the erection of a market-house on land described in the deposited plans, and by the 25th the company were enabled to alter and widen streets in the way pointed out on the deposited plans, and by the 30th to buy additional lands, not exceeding two acres. A. B. was the owner of land on the west side of one of the streets on the western boundary of the area spoken of in the preamble, and his land was described in the deposited plans, but it did not thereby appear that more was intended to be taken than enough to widen one of the streets named in s. 25. The company proceeded to take the whole land of A. B. compulsorily, and to build upon it a covered building, in addition to the market-house authorised by s. 24; whereupon A. B. filed his bill for an injunction, which was granted, the Master of the Rolls deciding that the company could only erect one market-house and not two, and that on the east side; and that although the preamble could not control the enactments, it might be resorted to to remove obscurity. The company appealed:—Held, that as the land of the plaintiff was described in the plan, and as therefore it might be wanted, the company were authorised to take it; and as by the general Act “the singular may mean the plural,” the company were not restricted by the word “market-house;” that the enactments of the special Act did not require a reference to the preamble to explain them, and the injunction must be dissolved, the company being the proper judges of what lands were necessary for the works. Richards v. Scarborough Public Market Co., 23 L. J., Ch., 110.

4. Interpretation Clause.

6. An interpretation clause in an Act should be understood to define the meaning of the word thereby interpreted in cases as to which there is nothing else in the Act opposed to or inconsistent with that interpretation. Midland Railway Co. v. Ambergate, Nottingham, & Boston & Eastern Junction Railway Co., 10 Hare 359.

5. Exceptions and Proviso.

7. Where in a fiscal Act of Parliament (54 Geo. 3, c. 92, s. 6) there is a saving co-extensive with and therefore repugnant to the enactment, the enactment must prevail. The rule of law, that an exception must be of part of the thing only, and not of all, applies as well to Acts of Parliament as to deeds. Cleland v. Ker, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 35; 1 Dr. 227.

8. In general a right cannot be raised out of a mere salvo or an exception in an Act. Advocate (Lord) v. Hamilton, 1 Macq. H. L. Ca. 46.

IV. COMMENCEMENT, AND WHEN RETROSPECTIVE.

9. Before the 33 Geo. 3, c. 13, every Act, in which no particular time was specified for its commencement, operated and took effect from the first day of that session of Parliament wherein it was made. Panter v. Att.-Gen., 6 Bro. P. C. 486.

10. An Act made to correct an error by omission in a former statute of the same session relates back to the time when the first Act passed, and both must be taken together as if they were one and the same Act. Att.-Gen. v. Pougett, 2 Price 381.

11. An Act is not to be construed as retrospective by inference, but only by express enactment. Evans v. Williams, 2 Dr. & Sm. 324.

12. Statutes are prima facie deemed to be prospective only. Pettamberdass v. Thackoorseydass, 5 Moo. Ind. App. 109; 7 Moo. P. C. 239; 15 Jur. 257.

13. The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 37, enacted that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners should make or cause to be made a valuation of all livings, etc., from which they were to deduct all rents, synodals, proxies, and other charges, and levy therefrom a yearly tax computed and imposed on such valuation, and to be paid on the 1st of July and 1st of January and that if the tax should be in arrear and unpaid more than a reasonable time after demand, the commissioners might apply to the Court by petition in a summary way for relief in that behalf:—Held, that the Court had no power to set aside or alter the valuation, and, the tax being fixed in respect of the valuation, was bound to make an order for payment. Quære, whether poor-rate, which was imposed by a subsequent statute (1 & 2 Vict., c. 56), is a charge which should be deducted from the valuation. By the 11 & 12 Vict., c. 80, after reciting that doubts have arisen whether the commissioners were authorised to allow any sum for poor-rate, it was enacted that it should and might be lawful for the commissioners to deduct the poor-rate from any valuation made or to be made:—Held, that the Act was not declaratory, and did not apply to a tax made on a valuation, and due, prior to the Act:—Held, also, that the tax was due on the gale-day, though no demand was made. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Armstrong, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 445.

See also XI. 4 post.

V. REMEDY UNDER.

1. Semble, when a statute refers generally to powers to enforce obedience, and does not prescribe any procedure, those powers generally referred to would be the powers of the Court in which the proceedings are deemed to be taken. Green v. Penzance (Lord), 6 L. R., App. Cas., 675; 51 L. J., Q. B., 25; 45 L. T. 353; 30 W. R. 218.

2. It is a settled rule that if a statute creates a new right and gives a particular remedy for enforcing it, there is no other remedy. Semble, West v. Downman, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 111; 42 L. T. 340; 29 W. R. 6. See also Colley v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 5 L. R., Exch. D., 277.

3. Where a new offence and a penalty for it are created by statute, a person proceeding under the statute is confined to the recovery of the penalty, and no other relief can be asked for. This is true as a general rule, but there are two exceptions to this rule—(1) The ancillary remedy in equity by injunction to protect a right; that is, a mode of preventing that being done which if done would be an offence. (2) The remedy created by s. 25, sub-s. 8, of the Judicature Act. Cooper v. Whittingham, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 501; 49 L. J., Ch., 752; 43 L. T. 16; 28 W. R. 720.

4. As a general rule, where a penalty is affixed by an Act of Parliament to an act or omission, such penalty is the only punishment or loss incurred by the party guilty of such act or omission. Re Knowle, 37 L. T., N. S., 351; 25 W. R. 822; 46 L. J., Ch., 625.

VI. PRIVATE AND LOCAL.

1. What are, 6610.
2. Construction. Principles of, 6610.
3. Judicial Notice of, 6611.

1. What are.

5. An Act of Parliament contained a clause declaring it a public Act; but it related merely to the affairs of a particular corporation:—Held, that it was a private Act as to the public at large, but that the persons who had leased to a member of their body, being members of the corporation, had notice, and were bound by it. Att.-Gen. v. Ball, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 146.

6. An Act of Parliament for the formation of a railway, containing a declaration that it is to be judicially taken notice of as a public Act, cannot be treated or construed as a private assurance. Hargreaves v. Lancaster & Preston Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 416.

7. By the 43rd section of the Kirkcaldy and Dysart Waterworks Act 1867, it was provided that the commissioners under the Act "should be bound to make good to the Countess of Rothes and her heirs, etc., all damages which may be occasioned to her or them, by reason of or in consequence of any bursting, or flow, or escape of water from any reservoir, or aqueduct, or pipe, or other work connected therewith" which may be constructed by the commissioners. Per Lord Watson: Statutory provisions, such as here, in a local and personal Act must be regarded as a contract between the parties, whether made by their mutual agreement, or forced on them by the Legislature. Roths (Countess) v. Kirkcaldy Waterworks Commissioners, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 694.

8. Whether an Act of Parliament is to be deemed a public Act, binding on all the Queen's subjects, or merely a private Act, depends upon the nature and substance of the case, and not upon the technical consideration whether the Act does or does not contain a clause declaring that it shall be deemed to be a public Act. Dawson v. Paver, 5 Hare 415; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 274; 11 Jur. 766.

2. Construction. Principles of.

9. Semble, statutory provisions, as to compensation for damage in a local and personal Act, must be regarded as a contract between the parties, whether made by their mutual consent or forced on them by the legislature. Roths (Countess) v. Kirkcaldy Waterworks Commissioners, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 707.

10. The domestic statutes of a charitable foundation say, that the trustees "shall and may" turn out, etc. This shall be construed imperatively that they "must." Att.-Gen. v. Lock, 3 Atk. 164. S. P. Stamper v. Miller, 3 Atk. 212.

And the same words shall be construed imperatively in Acts of Parliament. Id.

11. Construction of charitable bequests with reference to a local Act of Parliament, concerning charitable bequests to the parish, etc. Att.-Gen. v. Freeman, 5 Price 425; Dan. 117.

12. A railway company caused a nuisance to their neighbours by the noise of the cattle received, detained, and forwarded by them at and from a cattle dock and siding on land outside their limits of deviation, but acquired under a parliamentary power to purchase land for that purpose by agreement. There was no negligence on the part of the company in managing the cattle traffic, but they brought no evidence to show that some other site might not have been selected where the nuisance would not be caused:—Held, that the company might be restrained from carrying on their cattle traffic on the premises in question so as to cause a nuisance. Truman v. London, Brighton, & South Coast Railway, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 423; 53 L. J., Ch., 209; 50 L. T. 89; 32 W. R. 364.

13. Construction of a private Act of Parliament. Howard v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 17 L. R., Eq. 378; 43 L. J., Ch. 495; 22 W. R. 290; 29 L. T., N. S. 862.

14. In a proceeding against B. and C. to have it declared that they had been trespassers on the lands of A., it was pleaded to the effect that B. and C. had a right of way over these lands as inhabitants of a neighbouring town and as two of the public. To this it was replied, that upon the true construction of an Act of Parliament (local and personal) the right of way, if any such had existed, which was denied, had been thereby extinguished:—Held, that such an Act of Parliament is not to be construed strictly as against the public, who were, in fact, no parties to the passing of the Act; and that the provisions of such Act and the works which had been constructed thereunder were not inconsistent with the existence of a public footpath over these lands. Campbell v. Lang, 1 Eq. Rep. 98; 1 Macq. H. L. Ca. 451.

Held, also, that issues directed to try the fact of the existence of such right of way were properly directed, and that notwithstanding the confluence of two rivers, the locus ad quem might or might not be held to be a public place. Id.

Consideration of what is a public place as the terminus of a public footway. Id.

1. A party interested in the subject matter of a private Act of Parliament will have his rights affected by its provisions, though it may have been introduced and passed without notice duly given to him. Edinburgh Railway Co. v. Wauchope, 8 Cl. & F. 710; 3 Rail. Ca. 233.

2. Where an Act interferes with private rights and private interests, it ought to receive a strict construction, so far as those rights and interests are concerned. Hughes v. Chester & Holyhead Railway Co., 8 Jur., N. S., 221; 31 L. J., Ch., 97; 10 W. R. 219; 7 L. T., N. S., 197.

3. Construction of the Glamorganshire Canal Acts. Principles applicable to the construction of Acts of Parliament establishing public companies, with extraordinary powers, for the execution of works of local or general utility. Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Navigation, 1 Myl. & K. 154; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 95.

4. An Act empowering a company to contract for purposes of public advantage ought not to receive a narrow construction. Dover Gas Light Co. v. Dover (Mayor), 7 De G. M. & G. 545.

Therefore, in construing a gas company's Act, which, after requiring the consent of certain local commissioners to breaking up of the pavements, provided, that where any consent was required and should be obtained by the company to break any pavement, to lay down pipes, or for any other purpose which might be required under the Act, nothing in the Act contained should (after such consent obtained, and after twenty-four hours' notice) prevent the company from breaking up the pavement for the purpose of laying down pipes, or for any other purpose which might be required under the Act:—Held, that a construction reddendo singula singulis was not the correct one, and that the power to break the pavement was not to be confined to the particular purpose to which the consent had been expressly given. Id.

Waiver.] 5. A statute, or charter having the force of a statute, may be waived by the party for whose benefit it was enacted, so as to render the acts of persons disregarding it legal. Goldmid v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 25 L. R., Ch. D., 511; 53 L. J., Ch., 371; 49 L. T. 717; 42 W. R. 341.

VOL. VII.

3. Judicial Notice of.

6. A local Act must be judicially noticed, and must have all the operation of a public statute. Aiton v. Stephen, 1 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 456.

VII. RULES.

7. The rules made in pursuance of the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 78 (the Slave Compensation Act), when allowed by His Majesty in Council, and declared to have the same force and effect as the Act, must, when made, be construed with reference to the provisions of the Act itself. The second and fifth rules of the commissioners of compensation to be construed and applied upon this principle. Richards v. Jamaica (Att.-Gen.), 6 Moo. P. C. 381; 13 Jur. 197.

VIII. SUCCESSIVE STATUTES.

See also IX. 9 post.

1. Repeal of Public Acts, 6611.
2. Repeal of Private and Local Acts, 6612.
3. Operation inter se, 6612.

1. Repeal of Public Acts.

8. No point is more clear, than that a subsequent affirmative statute may repeal a prior one, if the words are contrariant; but it is equally clear, that if there be two affirmative statutes made on the same subject, in all points in which they do not contradict each other, both shall stand; therefore, in every case where a banker commits an act of bankruptcy, and a commission of bankruptcy issues against him, it seems certain that the assignees under that commission will be bound by every clause in the Acts of 29 & 30 Geo. 2, not altered or repealed by the bankrupt laws, as fully and effectually as trustees would be bound by the same clauses acting under a deed of trust executed under the authority of the latter Act. So it is equally evident, that where the provisions of that Act do so attach upon the property of the bankrupt as to prevent the operation of the bankrupt laws, no commission of bankruptcy can issue against a banker; and that in such case, though bankers are expressly named in the bankrupt laws, they cease to be the objects of them. Semble, Hayden v. Carroll, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 592. And see Hayden v. Rivers, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 448. n.

9. Where two inconsistent Acts are passed at different times relative to the same subject matter, the last is to be obeyed and take effect, although it may subvert the former. Ely (Dean) v. Bliss, 5 Beav. 582; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 351; 6 Jur. 496.

10. An affirmative statute is not repealed by a subsequent affirmative statute, unless the two cannot stand together. Exp. Warrington, 3 De G. M. & G. 159; 17 Jur. 430; 22 L. J., Bky., 33.

11. If there are two affirmative statutes inconsistent and incompatible with each other, the earlier statute is repealed by the later one. O'Flaherty v. M'Donnell, 6 H. L. Ca. 142; 4 Jur., N. S., 33.

The 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, is repealed so far as banking companies in Ireland are concerned, by the Imperial Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 45, though the former is not mentioned in the latter statute, the provisions of the two statutes being entirely incompatible with each other. Id.

1. Clauses which limit in any way the right of the Crown must be considered as repealed by subsequent statutes, unless expressly re-enacted. Att.-Gen. v. Newman, 1 Price 438.

2. No proceedings can be pursued under a repealed statute, though commenced before the repeal, unless by special exception. Miller's case, 3 Wils. 420; 1 W. Bl. 451.

3. Where an Act or part of an Act is repealed, it must, except as to transactions which are past and closed, be considered as if it had never existed. Exp. Grisewood, 5 Jur., N. S., 1191; 28 L. J., Ch., 769; 4 De G. & J. 544.

4. Effect of the repeal of a statute which modified a former statute considered. Glaholm v. Barker, 1 L. R., Ch., 223; 12 Jur., N. S., 82; 35 L. J., Ch., 259; 14 W. R. 296; 13 L. T., N. S., 653.

5. Observations upon the repealing effect of subsequent statutes. London & Blackwall Railway Co. v. District (Board of Works), 5 W. R. 64; 26 L. J., Ch., 164; 3 Kay & J. 123.

6. A section in a private Act cannot by implication repeal a provision of the common law, or of a public statute. The Clan Gordon, 7 L. R., P. D., 190; 46 L. T. 490; 30 W. R. 691; 1 Asp. M. C. 513.

7. If a statute professes merely to repeal a former statute of limited operation, and to re-enact its provisions in an amended form, an intention to extend the operation of its provisions to classes of persons not previously subject to them is not to be presumed as a necessary inference, unless the intention to the contrary is clearly shown. Brown v. McLachlan, 4 L. R., P. C., 543; 42 L. J., P. C., 18; 21 W. R. 277; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 384.

See also IX. 9 post.

2. Repeal of Private and Local Acts.

8. The rule of law as to the construction of Acts of Parliament which, though declared public Acts, are substantially and in their nature private Acts, is, that one, though inconsistent with another prior in point of date, cannot operate as a repeal of such prior Act except by words which would operate as an express repeal thereof. Birkenhead Docks (Trustees) v. Birkenhead Dock Co., 18 Jur. 883; 23 L. J., Ch., 457; 4 De G. M. & G. 732.

Where, therefore, a private Act gave power to commissioners to construct a sea wall, the property in which was to be vested in them, with liberty to proprietors of adjoining lands to purchase portions of the wall, and to make openings in it, under the superintendence of the engineer of the commissioners:—Held, that under a subsequent Act empowering a dock company to take some adjoining lands and to make such work for the purposes of their undertaking “as they might deem expedient,” the power thus conferred was subject to the provisions of the former Act. Id.

9. A local Act is not, in the absence of any indication of intention to the contrary, repealed by a subsequent public general Act. Fitzgerald v. Champneys, 2 John. & H. 31; 7 Jur. N. S., 1006; 30 L. J., Ch., 777; 9 W. R. 850. S. P. Parnell v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co., 4 L. T., N. S., 513; 10 C. B., N. S., 576.

The rule of construction, that a general Act does not repeal or affect a prior special Act without express words of reference, applies to church building Acts. Id.

The insertion in a general Act of a saving clause, providing that the Act shall not apply to a special case which had previously been regulated by a special Act not otherwise referred to, will not prevent the application of the above rule of construction. Id.

3. Operation inter se.

10. An Act repealed existing statutes and gave certain powers “in terms of the said recited Acts,” which were the repealed statutes:—Held, that this phrase incorporated the provisions of the repealed statutes and consolidated them. Blantyre (Lord) v. Clyde Navigation Trustees, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 273.

11. A prior statute may operate upon the provisions of a subsequent one, without express words. Re Perrin, 2 Dr. & War. 147; 1 Con. & L. 567; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 362. Affirming 4 Ir. Eq. R. 89.

12. Where statute A. incorporates sections of statute B., and those sections in statute B. refer to a particular class of cases (e.g. Settled Estates), statute A. must not be construed as to these sections as only referring to the particular class of cases affected by statute B., but must be construed in a fair manner and not with any such restriction. Re Barker, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 241; 50 L. J., Ch., 334; 44 L. T. 33; 29 W. R. 873.

13. When a statute is incorporated in another, the effect is the same as if the provisions of the former were re-enacted in the latter for all its purposes; and the repeal of the former does not repeal its provisions so far as they have been incorporated in an Act which is not repealed, and which incorporation was for the purpose of providing for a subject matter not within the original statute. Exp. Rossmore (Lord), 8 Ir. R., Eq., 366.

IX. PRINCIPLES OF CONSTRUCTION.

1. General Rules and Canons, 6612.
2. General Words, 6613.
3. Particular Words, 6614.
4. Intention of Legislature, 6616.
5. Commissioners' Report, 6616.
6. In Pari Materia, 6616.
7. Usage, 6616.
8. Ancient Statutes (Contemporanea Expeditio), 6616.
9. General and Special Acts, 6617.

1. General Rules and Canons.

14. When a doubt arises upon the construction of the words of an Act of Parliament, it is the duty of the Court to remove the doubt by deciding it; and when the Court has given its decision, the point can no longer be considered doubtful. Bell v. Holby, 15 L. R., Eq., 178; 42 L. J., Ch., 266; 28 L. T. 9; 21 W. R. 321.

1. When a clause in an Act which has received a judicial interpretation is re-enacted in the same terms, the Legislature is to be deemed to have adopted that interpretation. Exp. Campbell, Re Cathcart, 5 L. R., Ch., 703; 18 W. R. 1056; 23 L. T., N. S., 289.

2. Semble, when a statute enacts that something should be deemed to have been done which in fact was not done, the Court is entitled and bound to ascertain for what purposes and between what persons the statutory fiction is to be resorted to. Exp. Walton, Re Levy, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 756; 50 L. J., Ch., 662; 45 L. T. 1; 30 W. R. 395.

3. If upon ambiguous words or expressions the balance of hardship or inconvenience seems to be strongly against the public upon one construction, or strongly against a private person upon another construction, semble, it is consistent with all sound principles to have regard to the balance of inconvenience in determining the question of construction. Dixon v. Caledonian Railway Co., 5 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 827; 43 L. T. 513; 29 W. R. 250.

4. Semble, the proper course is to read a section of an Act, and to ascertain its meaning, and not to trouble about decisions upon a former Act. Any other course would be apt to lead us astray. If the later Act can clearly have only one meaning, we ought to give effect to it accordingly. If instead of doing that the Court compares it with the former Act, and says that it differs from it only to such and such an extent, and then considers the decisions upon the former Act, it might in that way go back to half-a-dozen older Acts, and, after considering the decisions on them, it might at last arrive at a conclusion exactly contrary to the later Act. Exp. Blaiberg, Re Toomer, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 258; 52 L. J., Ch., 463; 49 L. T. 16; 31 W. R. 906.

5. Semble, the Court ought to find out the meaning of a word from the section itself, and if it can do that, it need not have recourse to the use of the same word in the other sections of the Act. If it cannot find out the meaning of the word by reading the particular section, then it may look through the other sections to see in what sense the word is there used, for, as a general rule, a word is to be considered as used throughout an Act of Parliament in the same sense. Spencer v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 262; 53 L. J., Ch., 252; 47 L. T. 465; 31 W. R. 351.

Semble, the Court construes a word in one statute by reference to its use in another, in which the context may be different. Semble, the Lord Chancellor in Metropolitan District Railway Co. v. Sharpe (5 L. R., App. Cas., 425) did not intend to lay down any general rule to the contrary. Id.

6. As a general principle, Acts of Parliament, especially when they alter the rights of parties, are not to be construed retrospectively, unless otherwise provided. Hickson v. Darlow, 52 L. J., Ch., 454; 31 W. R. 362. And see Althusen v. Brooking, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 564; 53 L. J., Ch., 520; 51 L. T. 57; 32 W. R. 657.

7. Semble, it is a well-settled rule that the Court is not to construe an Act to be retrospective, so as to alter existing rights, unless it finds from the Act itself that such was the intention of the Legislature. Quilter v. Mapleson, 9 L. R., Q. B. D., 672; 52 L. J., Q. B., 44; 47 L. T. 562; 31 W. R. 75.

8. In construing an Act of Parliament the Court is bound by the verbal construction of the section in question if plain and simple; but if there is doubt upon that, it is entitled to look, first, at the circumstances attending the passing of the Act; next, to the preamble; and, lastly, to the whole purport and scope of the Act, beyond the section immediately under consideration; that, prima facie, the Acts of an independent legislature must be supposed to deal with those matters only which are within its own jurisdiction. Cope v. Doherty, 4 Jur., N. S., 699; 27 L. J., Ch., 600; 2 De G. & J. 614. Affirming the 4 Kay & J. 367; 4 Jur., N. S., 451.

9. Ambiguous words occurring in an Act of Parliament ought not to be extended to institutions which are well known to exist, but are not named in the Act. Re St. James's Club, 16 Jur. 1075; 2 De G. M. & G. 383.

10. Observations as to the construction of doubtful passages of Acts of Parliament, as between a company and the public. Exp. Eton College, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 1; 15 Jur. 45.

11. Section 11 of the Mercantile Law Amendment (Scotland) Act 1856, is in the same terms with s. 6 of the corresponding English Act; and enacts that "no acceptance of any bill of exchange . . . shall be sufficient to bind or charge any person unless the same be in writing on such bill . . . and signed by the acceptor or some person duly authorised by him." On the 2nd March 1878, in Hindlaugh v. Blakey (3 L. R., C. P. D. 136), it was held, that an acceptance by the drawee was null by reason of there being no writing except the signature. On the 16th April 1878 the Bills of Exchange Act was passed, which, after reciting the above-quoted section of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, and that "it is expedient that the meaning of the said enactment should be further declared," provides "that an acceptance of a bill of exchange is not and shall not be deemed to be insufficient under the provisions of the said statutes by reason only that such acceptance consists merely of the signature of the drawee written on such bill:"—Held, that the Act of 1878 was in effect a declaration by the Legislature, that the decision in the case of Hindlaugh v. Blakey was erroneous; and as no distinction whatever was made by the terms of the English enactment corresponding with the 11th section of the Scottish Act between one kind of acceptance and another, the effect of that declaration, although in terms confined to an acceptance by the drawee of a bill, was necessarily to displace the whole construction of the English statute on which that decision was founded. Steele v. McKinlay, 5 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 754; 43 L. T. 358; 29 W. R. 17.

2. General Words.

12. General words in a statute must receive a general construction, unless there is in the statute some ground for restraining their meaning by reasonable construction, not by arbitrary addition or retrenchment. Beckford v. Wade, 17 Ves. 91.

Where the words of a law in their ordinary signification are sufficient to include infants, the virtual exception must be drawn from the intention of the Legislature, manifested by other parts of the law, from the general purpose and design of the law, and the subject matter of it. Id.

Thus the Statute of Limitations would have bound infants, etc., without any express exception. Id.

1. General words in an Act do not always extend to every case which falls literally within them. Cope v. Doherty, 2 De G. & J. 614; 4 Jur., N. S., 699; 27 L. J., Ch., 600.

2. If an Act of Parliament, by general words, purports to confer a power upon several donees, one of whom possesses the same power more amply at common law as incident to his estate, the statute shall not be intended to apply to him, so as by implication to abridge his power; and acts of his, therefore, which the statute would have authorized, will be referred to his common law right. Exp. Clayton, 1 Russ. & M. 369.

3. Rules of construing a statute where a general enactment in it would override a particular one, and where two parts of it are contradictory. Pretty v. Solly, 26 Beav. 606.

4. Where one clause of an Act directs specific acts to be done, but such acts would be included in the general terms of a subsequent prohibitory clause, the former clause is not controlled by the latter. De Winton v. Brecon (Mayor), 26 Beav. 533.

5. Where words have been long used in a technical sense, and have been judicially construed to have a certain meaning, and have been adopted by the Legislature as having a certain meaning prior to a particular statute in which they are used, the rule of construction requires that the words used in such statute should be construed according to the sense in which they have been so previously used, although that sense may vary from the strict literal meaning of the words. Ruckmaboy v. Lallobhoy Mottickund, 8 Moo. P. C. 4; 5 Moo. Ind. App. 234.

6. Where an Act empowers persons to deal with their own property, or with property in a place or district, or defined by a description, and does not by express words, or by necessary implication, import that the Legislature intended to affect the rights of other persons in other property, courts of law do not construe mere general words in the Act as affecting the rights of strangers as to property not within the description of that with which the Act expressly purports to deal. Dawson v. Paver, 5 Hare 415; 11 Jur. 766; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 274; 24 Rail. Ca. 81.

7. General provisions in an Act do not override special provisions; so that where an Act contains special provisions as to particular property, they must be read as exceptions from general provisions, whether contained in the same or any other Act. Taylor v. Oldham Corporation, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 395; 46 L. J., Ch., 105; 35 L. T. 696; 25 W. R. 178.

8. The general words of a statute are not to be so construed as to alter the previous policy of the law, unless no sense or meaning can be put upon those words consistently with the intention of preserving the existing policy untouched; but the title and preamble of the General Inclosure Act, 8 & 9 Vict., c. 118, being quite general, the words of the 147th section appear to be so general as to make it impossible to limit them to exchanges of freeholds of the same species, notwithstanding inconveniences and seeming injustice to parties. Minet v. Leman, 20 Beav. 269; 24 L. J., Ch., 545.

These possible evils and inconveniences are provided for by the appointment of commissioners, whose duty it is to ascertain and approve of the propriety of the exchanges before they can be effected. Id.

9. The general law of the country is not altered or controlled by partial legislation, made without any special reference to it. Denton v. Manners (Lord), 4 Jur., N. S., 151; 27 L. J., Ch., 199. Affirmed 4 Jur., N. S., 714; 27 L. J., Ch., 623.

The 13 & 14 Vict., c. 94, passed in general terms for a special object, without reference to the Mortmain Act (9 Geo. 2, c. 36), will not enable a society, when its purpose is the purchase of incorporeal hereditaments, to be applied for charitable purposes. Id.

10. Semble, as a matter of ordinary construction, where several words are followed by a general expression which is as much applicable to the first and other words as to the last, that expression is not limited to the last, but applies to all. Great Western Railway Co. v. Swindon & Cheltenham Railway Co., 9 L. R., App. Cas., 787; 53 L. J., Ch., 1075; 32 W. R. 957.

11. One of the safest guides to the construction of sweeping general words which it is difficult to apply in their full literal sense is to examine other words of like import in the same instrument, and to see what limitations must be imposed on them. If it is found that a number of such expressions have to be subjected to limitations or qualifications, and that such limitations or qualifications are of the same nature, that forms a strong argument for subjecting the expression in dispute to a like limitation or qualification. Blackwood v. Reg., 8 L. R., App. Cas., 94; 52 L. J., P. C., 14; 48 L. T. 441; 31 W. R. 645.

12. Though the word "street" may include the houses abutting or fronting upon a public thoroughfare, as well as the actual roadway or footways, yet the strict and primâ facie meaning of the word "street" is confined to the roadway and footways. See on the construction of the Holborn Valley Improvement Act 1864. Galloway v. London (Mayor), London (Mayor), v. Galloway, 1 L. R., H. L., 84; 12 Jur., N. S., 747; 35 L. J., Ch., 477; 14 L. T., N. S., 865; 2 De G. J. & S. 213.

3. Particular Words.

13. The meaning of particular words in a statute, in the absence of express definition, is to be found not so much in a strict etymological propriety of language, nor even in popular use, as in the subject or occasion on which they are used, and the object that is intended to be attained. Semble. The Lion, 6

Moo. P. C., N. S., 163, 171; 2 L. R., P. C., 525; 38 L. J., Adm., 51. And see 1 B. & C. 136.

1. The words "insolvent circumstances" in 19 Geo. 2, c. 32, s. 1, are to be understood in the popular sense; and do not mean a state of utter and complete insolvency. Teale v. Younge, 1 McCl. & Y. 497. See Biddlecombe v. Bond, 4 Ad. & Ell. 332.

2. The word "insolvent" in 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 10, means a person who has taken the benefit of an insolvent debtors' Act; and not one who has merely made an assignment of his effects for the benefit of his creditors. Re Birmingham Benefit Society, 3 Sim. 421.

3. Quere, the meaning of the words "shape or configuration" in the Act 6 & 7 Vict., c. 65. Margetson v. Wright, 2 De G. & Sm. 420.

4. "Now" to be construed retrospectively or prospectively in an Act of Parliament. See Larpernt v. Bibby, 5 H. L. Ca. 481; 24 L. J., Q. B., 301; and Noble v. Gadban, 5 H. L. Ca. 504.

5. In stat. 3 Will. & M., c. 11, the apparent meaning of the word "unmarried" is "not married at the particular time," contrary to its usual import. Maberly v. Strobe, 3 Ves. 452.

6. The 27 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 5, by the word "square" meant all rectangular figures only. Att.-Gen. v. Cast Plate Glass Co., 1 Anst. 39.

7. The word "near" in a penal case must be construed strictly, and is not equivalent to the word "next." Rex v. Hervey, 1 W. Bl. 20.

8. The words in 13 Geo. 3, c. 21, s. 3, are to be read, "aliens' duties, customs, and impositions," and not "aliens, duties, customs, and impositions"; and therefore the grandchild of a natural-born subject, born out of the Queen's allegiance, is entitled to the benefit of that statute in regard to holding lands as a natural-born subject, although he has not complied with the formalities specified in the third section. Barrow v. Wadkin, 24 Beav. 327.

9. The domestic statutes of a charitable foundation say, that the trustees "shall and may" turn out, etc. This shall be construed imperatively that they "must." Att.-Gen. v. Lock, 3 Atk. 164.

And the same words shall be construed imperatively in Acts of Parliament. Id. 166. S. P. Stamper v. Miller, 3 Atk. 212.

10. The presentation to certain livings was by an Act of Parliament vested in the corporation of Shrewsbury (for whom a body of trustees was afterwards substituted), with a direction that they should nominate a fit and proper person duly qualified according to law, with a proviso that "ceteris paribus" preference should be given to a favoured class.—Held, that the cetera were the qualifications mentioned before, and not the whole of the qualifications of a clergyman. That the words "fit and proper person, duly qualified," etc., were not thus rendered surplusage; and that every person whom a bishop would be bound to accept, if presented to him by a patron, would not necessarily be fit and proper within the meaning of the statute. Att.-Gen. v. Powis (Earl), 1 Kay 186, 566.

11. There is a very serious consideration whether the word "convenient" in the 8th section of the Prescription Act can be altered by putting the word "easement" instead. That is a question which appears to be one of very considerable difficulty. A judge may take the view that the 8th section as it stands is so absurd that the word "convenient" cannot stand there, but that does not quite conclude the question as to whether it is right to insert another word. Semble. Laird v. Briggs, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 33; 45 L. T. 238.

12. The Crown Lands Alienation Act 1861, of New South Wales, by s. 13, provides that, on and after the 1st day of June 1861, Crown lands, with certain exceptions, shall be opened for conditional sale by selection in manner following, viz.: "Any person may, upon any Land Office day, tender to the land agent for the district a written application for the conditional purchase of any such lands:—Held, that the word "person" in the above section is not limited to persons of the age of twenty-one years. O'Shanassy v. Joachim, 45 L. J., P. C., 43; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 82; 24 W. R. 792; 34 L. T., N. S., 265.

13. An action against the Melbourne Harbour Trust Commissioners is an action brought against a "person" within the meaning of s. 46 of the Melbourne Harbour Trust Act. Union Steamship Co. of New Zealand v. Melbourne Harbour Trust, 9 L. R., App. Cas., 365; 53 L. J., P. C., 59; 50 L. T. 337.

14. In modern times, when the Legislature has intended that the word "person" should in any particular statute include a corporation, it has been usual to introduce an interpretation clause, declaring that the word shall have such extended meaning. The other sections of the statute under discussion were also opposed to that meaning. Pharmaceutical Society v. London and Provincial Supply Association, 5 L. R., Q. B. D., 310; 49 L. J., Q. B., 338; 42 L. T. 569; 28 W. R. 608; 44 J. P. 408. Affirmed 5 L. R., App. Cas., 862; 49 L. J., Q. B., 736; 43 L. T. 389; 28 W. R. 957.

If a statute provides that no person shall do a particular act except on a particular condition, it is, prima facie, natural and reasonable to understand the Legislature as intending such person as by the proper means may be able to fulfil the condition; and not those who, though called "persons" in law, have no capacity to do so at any time, by any means, or under any circumstances whatever. Id.

15. In all cases where jurisdiction is given to a court of justice by Act of Parliament by the words "it shall be lawful," those words, unless they are controlled by other parts of the Act, give the Court a discretion in the exercise of that jurisdiction. Re Bridgman, 1 Dr. & Sm. 164.

16. The words in a statute "it shall be lawful" of themselves merely make that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. Their natural meaning is permissive and enabling only. But there may be circumstances which may couple the power with a duty to exercise it. It lies upon those who call for the exercise of the power to show that there is an obligation to exercise it. Julius v. Oxford (Bishop), 5 L. R., App. Cas., 214.

Enabling words are always compulsory where they are words to effectuate a legal right. Semble. Id.

Where an Act recites that the manner of proceeding in certain cases requires amendment, its provisions may be construed independently of the practice under the previously-existing law. At all events, the previous practice is a matter of very slender and remote consideration. Semble. Ib.

1. Whatever meaning may be given to the word "on" in an Act of Parliament, it is very difficult to extend it to above a year. It is not necessary to express an opinion as to what time should be allowed, but it is not to be conceived that a period of more than a year can be included in the word "on." "On," if not confined to the time of making the decree, must mean shortly after. Robertson v. Robertson, 8 L. R., P. D., 96; 48 L. T. 591; 31 W. R. 652.

4. Intention of Legislature.

2. The intention of the Legislature must be ascertained from the words of a statute, and not from any general inferences to be drawn from the nature of the objects dealt with by the statute. Fordyce v. Brydges, 1 H. L. Ca. 1.

3. The Court knows nothing of the intention of an Act of Parliament except from the words in which it is expressed, as applied to the facts existing at the time. Logan v. Courtown (Earl), 13 Beav. 22; 20 L. J., N. S. Ch., 347.

4. The language of a statute taken in its plain ordinary sense, and not its policy or supposed intention, is the safer guide in construing its enactments. Philpott v. St. George's Hospital, 6 H. L. Ca. 338; 3 Jur., N. S., 1269.

5. The rule for the construction of Acts is, that they should be construed according to the intent of the Parliament which passed the Act. If the words of the statute are of themselves precise and unambiguous, then no more can be necessary than to expound those words in their natural and ordinary sense. The words themselves do, in such case, best declare the intention of the Legislature. Semble. Sussex Peerage, 11 Cl. & F. 86; 8 Jur. 793.

6. The Court cannot impute to the Legislature, in passing statutes confirming titles created by means of parliamentary powers, ignorance of the transactions which had taken place in exercise of such powers. Headen v. King, 9 Hare 522; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111.

7. If the Court can fairly construe an Act so as to carry out what must obviously have been the intention of the Legislature, although the words may be a little difficult to deal with, and although they may possibly admit of more than one interpretation, it ought from those general considerations to adopt the interpretation which will make the law uniform, and will remedy the evil which prevailed in all the cases to which the law can be fairly applied. Semble. Freme v. Clement, 44 L. T. 399; 30 W. R. 3.

8. The more literal construction of a section of a statute ought not to prevail if it is opposed to the intentions of the Legislature as apparent by the statute, and if the words are sufficiently flexible to admit of some other construction by which that intention will be better effectuated. Semble. Caledonian Railway Co. v. North British Railway Co., 6 L. R., App. Cas., 122; 29 W. R. 685.

9. No court is entitled to depart from the intention of the Legislature, as appearing from the words of the Act, because it is thought unreasonable. But when two constructions are open, the Court may adopt the more reasonable of the two. Semble. Rother (Countess) v. Kirkcaldy Waterworks Commissioners, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 702.

10. If an Act of Parliament uses the same language which was used in a former Act of Parliament referring to the same subject, and passed for the same purpose and for the same object, the safe and well-known rule of construction is to assume that the Legislature, when using well-known words upon which there have been well-known decisions, uses those words in the sense which the decisions have attached to them. Semble. Greaves v. Tofteld, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 563, 571; 50 L. J., Ch., 119; 43 L. T. 100; 28 W. R. 840.

11. Unless the Court is obliged to do so, it must not suppose that the Legislature intended to do a palpable injustice. Semble. Exp. Corbett, Re Shand, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 122.

12. Semble, a statute is not to be construed literally when a literal construction would end in an absurdity or inconsistency with the intention of the Legislature, as evidenced by the provisions of the statute, but is to be construed in harmony with common sense and the intention of the Legislature. Exp. Walton, Re Levy, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 756; 50 L. J., Ch., 662; 45 L. T. 1; 30 W. R. 395.

13. Where the Legislature have reproduced words upon which a case has been decided, they must be taken to have known the interpretation that had been put upon them in that case. Clark v. Wallond, 52 L. J., Q. B., 322.

5. Commissioners' Report.

14. Where a statute is supposed to have been founded on a report of commissioners appointed by the Crown, that report ought not to be referred to in a court of justice as a guide in construing the statute. Martin v. Hemming, 18 Jur. 1002. S. P. Ewart v. Williams, 3 Drew. 21, 24; Arding v. Bonner, 2 Jur., N. S., 763.

6. In Pari Materia.

15. It is a rule that several statutes on the same subject are to be read as one statute. M. William v. Adams, 1 Macq. H. L. Ca. 120.

16. A repealed statute in pari materia with an existing one may properly be referred to for the purpose of construing the latter. Exp. Copeland, 2 De G. M. & G. 914; 17 Jur. 121; 22 L. J., Bky., 17.

7. Usage.

17. Long usage is of no avail against plain statutory enactments; and it can be binding on parties only as the interpreter of a doubtful law, and as affording a contemporaneous exposition. Dunbar (Burgh) v. Roxburghe (Duchess), 3 Cl. & F. 335.

Where a statute expressive as to some points is silent as to others, usage may well supply the defect, if not inconsistent with express directions of the statute. Ib.

8. Ancient Statutes (Contemporanea Expositio).

18. Ancient statutes are to be construed with reference to the state of things at the time of their passing. McWilliam v. Adams, 1 Macq. H. L. Ca. 120.

1. The construction of an old Act may be cleared by contemporanea expositio, showing the conduct and understanding of parties at the time of its passing, and subsequently; and for this purpose the annals or histories of the period, and antiquarian researches, may be referred to. Montrose Peerage, 1 Macq. H. L. Ca. 401.

2. Semble, when there are ambiguous expressions in an Act passed one or two centuries ago, it may be legitimate to refer to the construction put upon these expressions throughout a long course of years, by the unanimous consent of all parties interested, as evidencing what must presumably have been the intention of the Legislature at that remote period. A recent statute should be construed according to its own terms, when these are brought into controversy, and not according to the views which interested parties may have hitherto taken. Clyde Navigation Trustees v. Laird, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 673.

9. General and Special Acts.

3. Rules of construing a statute where a general enactment in it would override a particular one, and where two parts of it are contradictory. Pretty v. Solly, 26 Beav. 606.

4. General provisions in an Act do not override special provisions; so that where an Act contains special provisions as to particular property, they must be read as exceptions from general provisions, whether contained in the same or any other Act. Taylor v. Oldham Corporation, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 395; 25 W. R. 178.

5. Where one clause of an Act of Parliament directs specific acts to be done, but such acts would be included in the general terms of a subsequent prohibitory clause, the former clause is not controlled by the latter. De Winton v. Brecon (Mayor), 26 Beav. 533.

6. Where the Legislature has vested special powers in a particular body for special purposes, a general Act subsequently passed will not over-ride those special powers. London & Blackwall Railway Co. v. Limehouse District Board of Works, 3 Kay & J. 123; 26 L. J., Ch., 164.

7. Whether a special Act only incorporates "such parts of a general Act as are applicable to, and not inconsistent with, the special Act," or "the whole Act, except so far as its provisions are expressly varied by the special Act," makes no difference in the application of the general to the special Act. Weld v. London & South-Western Railway Co., 1 N. R. 415.

8. The effect of the incorporation of a general Act of Parliament into the special Act of any such company is, that the general Act must be looked at with reference to the powers conferred upon companies of dealing with the land when required; but it is to the special Act that regard must be had for the purpose of ascertaining the contract between the landowner and the company, and the power which the company has of taking the land. Simpson v. South Staffordshire Waterworks

Co., 4 De G. J. & S., 679; 34 L. J., Ch., 380; 13 W. R. 729, 908; 11 Jur., N. S., 463; 12 L. T., N. S., 360.

9. If there is an inconsistency between the general Act and a subsequent special Act, the latter must prevail. Yarmouth (Mayor) v. Simmons, 47 L. J., Ch., 792; 38 L. T., N. S., 881; 26 W. R. 802.

10. In adjusting the general provisions in a general Act to the particular provisions of the special Act, considerations of reason and justice, and the universal analogy of such provisions in similar Acts of Parliament, are proper to be borne in mind, and ought to have much weight and force. Semble. Metropolitan District Railway Co. v. Sharpe, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 431; 50 L. J., Q. B., 16; 43 L. T. 130; 28 W. R. 617.

11. When a general Act of Parliament is incorporated with a special Act, if there is any contradiction between them, the special Act is to prevail. Att.-Gen. v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 41 L. J., Ch., 505; 7 L. R., Ch., 475; 20 W. R. 599; 26 L. T., N. S., 749.

A special Act of Parliament, with which was incorporated the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, empowered a railway company to stop up all streets within a certain area in the city of London. The deposited plans showed that Sun Street, which was within the area, was not to be stopped up, but to be crossed by an arch. The same plans showed that other streets within the area were to be stopped up. Subsequently the company obtained another Act, authorizing them to make an underground instead of an aboveground railway, and re-enacting the powers given them by the previous Act:—Held, that the plans were not incorporated in the special Act, and that the power to stop up all streets within the area, including Sun Street, was an existing power and capable of being exercised. Id.

Representations made on plans deposited by the promoters of an intended railway in pursuance of the Standing Orders of the Houses of Parliament previously to an application for an Act do not bind the railway company after the Act is obtained nor give other persons any equity against the company, except so far as they are incorporated with the Act. Id.

12. Semble, it is now well settled, that a general enactment of a later Act cannot repeal a specific enactment in an earlier Act merely by implication. Gard v. Commissioners of Sewers, 49 L. T. 327.

X. CONSTRUCTION OF PARTICULAR STATUTES.

1. Affecting Foreigners, 6617.
2. Prohibitory or Penal, 6618.
3. Remedial, 6618.
4. Fiscal, 6618.
5. Imposing Rates, 6619.
6. Imposing Tolls, 6619.
7. Statutory Powers, 6619.
8. Statutory Forms and Conveyances, 6620.

1. Affecting Foreigners.

13. Primâ facie an English statute affects only English subjects, or foreigners who come either permanently or temporarily within the allegiance of the English crown. Exp. Blain, Re Savers, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 522; 41 L. T. 46; 28 W. R. 334.

2. Prohibitory or Penal.

1. The 9 Geo. 2, c. 36 (Mortmain Act), is a prohibitory, not a penal, statute. Philpott v. St. George's Hospital, 6 H. L. Ca. 338; 3 Jur., N. S., 1269.

Prohibitory statutes must not be interpreted on a principle of tendency; if anything done is substantially that which is prohibited, the thing is void, not because of its tendency, but because it is, within the true construction of the statute, the thing prohibited. Id.

2. Subsequent statutes in the affirmative giving new penalties do not repeal former methods of proceeding ordained by previous Acts without negative words. Middleton v. Crofts, 2 Atk. 265 (Appendix).

3. Forbidding a thing under a penalty, to protect the revenue, does not make void the thing if done, nor prevent an action thereon. If a thing is prohibited for other than revenue purposes, no action lies thereon. Swan v. Scotland (Bank of), 2 Mont. & A. 661.

4. Where a penalty is imposed by an Act of Parliament upon any transaction, the transaction will be illegal, though it is not expressly prohibited by the Act. Re Cork & Youghal Railway Co., 4 L. R., Ch., 748.

5. Penal laws are not to be construed according to rules of equity. Harrison v. Southcote, 1 Atk. 537.

6. Statutes restrictive of the common law receive a restrictive construction. Ash v. Abdy, 3 Swans. 664.

7. Every statute which introduces a capital punishment must be construed strictly. Re v. Harvey, 1 Wils. 164.

8. When a statute inflicts a penalty for not doing an act provided for, the penalty enacted implies that there is a legal compulsion to do the act in question, and this principle is not affected by the fact that the penalty has a particular destination. Redpath v. Allen, 4 L. R., P. C., 511; 42 L. J., Adm., 8; 21 W. R. 276; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 340; 27 L. T., N. S., 725.

9. As a general rule, where a penalty is affixed by an Act of Parliament to an act or omission, such penalty is the only punishment or loss incurred by the party guilty of such act or omission. Re Knowle, 46 L. J., Ch., 626; 37 L. T. 351; 25 W. R. 822.

10. Where a penalty is created by statute and nothing is said as to who may recover it, and it is not created for the benefit of a party aggrieved, and the offence is not against an individual, it belongs to the Crown, and the Crown alone can maintain a suit for it. Bradlaugh v. Clarke, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 354; 52 L. J., Q. B., 505; 48 L. T. 681; 31 W. R. 677. Reversing 7 L. R., Q. B. D., 38; 50 L. J., Q. B., 342; 44 L. T. 667; 29 W. R. 516.

3. Remedial.

11. In the case of a remedial statute, everything is to be done in advancement of the remedy that can be done consistently with any construction that can be put upon it. Johnes v. Johnes, 8 Dow. 15. S. P. Atchison v. Everett, Cowp. 391.

12. It is by no means unusual, in construing a remedial statute, to extend the enacting words beyond their natural import and effect, in order to include cases within the same mischief. York (Dean) v. Middleborough, 2 Y. & J. 196.

13. Statutes intended to remedy a grievance ought to be construed liberally, so as to afford the utmost relief which the fair meaning of their language will allow. Daputo v. Wyllie, The "Pieve Superiore", 5 L. R., P. C., 482; 43 L. J., Adm., 20; 30 L. T. 887; 22 W. R. 777.

4. Fiscal.

14. Fiscal statutes must be construed strictly. Partington v. Att.-Gen., 21 L. T., N. S., 370; 38 L. J., Exch., 205; 4 L. R., H. L., 100.

15. An intention to impose a charge on the subject must be shown by clear and unambiguous language. Oriental Bank Corporation v. Wright, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 842, 856; 43 L. T. 177.

16. Where the intention to impose a charge on the subject is doubtful, that meaning must be adopted which is most beneficial to the public. Pryce v. Monmouthshire Canal & Railway Co., 4 L. R., App. Cas., 187; 49 L. J., Exch., 130; 40 L. T. 630; 27 W. R. 666.

The cases which have decided that taxing Acts are to be construed strictly, probably meant little more than this—that, inasmuch as there was not any a priori liability in any subject to pay any particular tax, or any antecedent relationship between the taxpayer and the taxing authority, no reason founded on any supposed relationship of the taxpayer and the taxing authority could be brought to bear upon the construction of the Act, and therefore the taxpayer had a right to stand upon a literal construction of the words used, whatever might be the consequences. Semble, this principle does not apply to any considerable extent where the payment spoken of in the Act is a payment to be made in return for services rendered, and above all in a case where Parliament does not step in to give the right to payment, but rather to moderate and limit a right to payment which otherwise might exist without limit, or, at all events, with only such limits as would be placed upon it by a quantum meruit assessment. Id.

The respondents had the preparation of their own measure, and were bound to see that it fitly expressed the purposes of Parliament. They were not forced to adopt the Act if they had reason to complain of its harshness or injustice; and it behoved them to have any terms favourable to themselves and involving burdens on the public explicitly and unequivocally stated. If they have not done so, the fault is theirs, and they must take the consequences. Semble. Id.

17. Decisions of the House of Lords upon questions of law, as to the construction of statutes, and especially of fiscal Acts, are binding on the House in subsequent cases. Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Harrison, 7 L. R., H. L., 1; 43 L. J., Exch., 138; 30 L. T. 274; 22 W. R. 559.

5. Imposing Rates.

1. Whenever it is sought to impose a rate, the burden lies on those seeking to enforce it to show that the words used by the Legislature are clear and unambiguous in order to charge the subject. Ingram v. Drinkwater, 44 L. J., P. C., 83; 32 L. T. 746.

6. Imposing Tolls.

2. When an Act authorises the exaction of a toll, the accommodation for which the toll is authorised must be provided. Aiton v. Stephen, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 466.

7. Statutory Powers.

3. Persons authorised by Act of Parliament to cut a canal, and required to appropriate certain sums for the construction and maintenance of works to protect a harbour in which the canal was intended to terminate, not restrained from cutting through their own lands, at a distance from the harbour, in the event of a present insufficiency of funds for the completion of the undertaking, pending an application to Parliament for farther powers to levy money. King's Lynn (Mayor) v. Pemberton, 1 Swan. 244.

But persons authorised by Act of Parliament to cut canal, if their funds are insufficient for completion of undertaking, may, on the prompt application of the owner of lands through which they are cutting, be restrained from proceeding. Id. 250.

4. Semble, the case of Ashbury Railway, etc., Co. v. Riche (7 L. R., H. L., 653; 44 L. J., Exch., 185; 33 L. T., N. S., 451) appears to decide this, at all events, that where there is an Act of Parliament creating a corporation for a particular purpose, and giving it power for that particular purpose, what it does not expressly or impliedly authorize is to be taken to be prohibited. Att.-Gen. v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 5 L. R., App. Cas., 481.

5. When powers to make certain works are granted by Act of Parliament they can only be exercised once and for all, and the grantees have no power afterwards to enlarge such works. Taylor v. St. Helens (Corporation), 46 L. J., Ch., 857; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 264.

6. In construing statutes creating bodies corporate, such as the corporation in question, the Legislature must be considered, unless the contrary appears, to intend that the corporate body shall have the same duties and liabilities as are imposed by the general law upon private persons doing the same things. Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Penhallow, Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Ca. 686; 12 Jur., N. S., 571; 35 L. J., Q. B., 226; 14 W. R. 872; 14 L. T., N. S., 677.

7. Semble, if the Legislature prescribe that a public body shall provide hospital accommodation, no injunction could issue provided it were proved that the directions of the Act could not be complied with at all without creating a nuisance. And if a position has not been specified in the Act for the hospital, the onus of proof that the creation of a nuisance will be the inevitable result lies on the persons seeking to justify the nuisance. The justification depends on their making good these two propositions, (1) that such are the imperative orders of the Legislature, and (2) that they cannot possibly obey those orders without infringing private rights. Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 208; 50 L. J., Q. B., 353; 44 L. T. 653; 29 W. R. 617.

8. Primâ facie nobody is authorised to commit a nuisance under an Act of Parliament unless it appears from express words or by necessary implication that the Act was to be done or might be done notwithstanding its tending to the creation of a nuisance. Vernon v. St. James (Vestry), 16 L. R., Ch. D., 466; 50 L. J., Ch., 81; 44 L. T. 229; 29 W. R. 222.

9. A power to borrow money from the Public Works Loan Commissioners for the purpose of repairing churches must be exercised in exact accordance with the authority given, and the restrictions imposed, by the Act itself. Reg. v. All Saints, Wigan (Churchwardens), 1 L. R., App. Cas., 611; 35 L. T. 381; 25 W. R. 128.

10. Where persons have special powers conferred on them by Parliament for effecting a particular purpose, they cannot be allowed to exercise those powers for any purpose of a collateral kind. Galloway v. London (Mayor), 1 L. R., H. L., 34; 12 Jur., N. S., 747; 35 L. J., Ch., 477; 14 L. T., N. S., 865.

When a statute prohibits, under a penalty, any person from agreeing to pay certain expenses, an agreement to pay such expenses is invalid, and no action is maintainable upon it, although the statute does not expressly prohibit the other party obtaining the funds to carry its declared objects into effect, and in order to effect them it must not exceed the limits of its powers. Id.

A company authorized (making due compensation) to take compulsorily the lands of any person for a definite object may be restrained by injunction from any attempt to take them for another object. Id.

Where the Legislature has conceded power to a body of adventurers for a certain purpose (as, for example, the formation of a railway), such a body must show some ground for the concession, and the Legislature has no concern with its means for obtaining the funds to carry its declared objects into effect, and in order to effect them it must not exceed the limits of its powers. But the case is different where an existing public body, such as the corporation of a city, is entrusted by the Legislature with the duty of making public improvements in its city, and the powers thus entrusted to it for such a purpose will not be subject, as in the other case, to a strict and restrictive construction. Id.

Before the royal assent was given to an Act of this description, the corporation of London entered into a contract with a railway company to sell to the company certain lands which the corporation expected to be authorized by the Act to take. When the Act had been passed, notice to take the land was given, and the taking was resisted by the landowner. A subsequent Act recited the contract, and declared the company entitled to the benefit of it. Notice to take the land under this later Act was given by the corporation to the landowner, but the notice expressly reserved to them all the rights under the former Act:—Held, that the original contract was valid, and that this later Act was a parliamentary recognition of it. Ib.

Where the promoters of a bill giving discretionary powers over property conditionally agree that, if the bill passes, they will dispose of the property to be acquired in a particular way, this anticipation of the possession of their powers does not deprive them of discretion to exercise those powers when obtained. Ib.

1. Whenever the Legislature has, by a special Act, conferred powers upon a corporation or a body of commissioners for an object of public benefit, those powers are not affected by a subsequent statute giving to other persons, for another public purpose, inconsistent powers, in terms which, from their generality, would seem to overrule the powers given by the former Act. London & Blackwall Railway Co. v. Limehouse District Board of Works, 3 Kay & J. 123; 26 L. J., Ch., 164.

A railway company was empowered by its special Act to widen a branch of the railway passing through London, and to build additional stations. In conformity with the powers so given, the company proceeded to erect a station on its land by the side of a highway, within the distance required to be left between buildings and highways in London by the Metropolis Management Act, which had passed shortly after the special Act of the company:—Held, that the powers conferred on the company by their special Act were not controlled by the later statute, and that the company was authorized so to build their station. Ib.

By a statute passed prior to the special Act, the trustees of the particular highway had power to prevent any building being erected so near to the road as the station was being built. The Metropolis Management Act repealed this statute, and vested this authority in the managing body thereby constituted:—Held, that the trustees of the road must be taken to have been present at the passing of the special Act, as well as of the Metropolis Act, and, therefore, the powers given by the railway Act must prevail. Ib.

2. Persons obtaining from the Legislature power to interfere with the rights of property are bound strictly to adhere to the powers so conceded to them, to do no more than the Legislature has sanctioned, and to proceed only in the mode which the Legislature has pointed out; but (except in a proceeding at the instance of the attorney-general) any one seeking the assistance of a court of equity, to restrain the violation of such a contract with the Legislature, is bound to show that he has a private interest in the matter. Liverpool (Mayor) v. Chorley Waterworks Co., 2 De G. M. & G. 852.

3. When commissioners appointed by a private Act are authorized to do all things necessary for carrying out the object of the Act, that will not give them authority to apply to Parliament for a further Act, so as to allow their applying funds raised for the purposes of the first Act in discharging the expenses of obtaining the second Act. Att.-Gen. v. West Hartlepool Improvement Commissioners, 10 L. R., Eq., 152; 39 L. J., Ch., 624; 18 W. R. 686.

8. Statutory Forms and Conveyances.

4. If the Legislature prescribes formalities to be observed by parties contracting inter se, and one of them endeavours to avail himself of the want of such forms to postpone or avoid the completion of a contract entered into, the Court will itself ascertain whether the intentions of the Legislature have, in substance, been complied with; and if they have, it will carry the contract into effect. Baker v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 32 L. J., Ch., 7; 11 W. R. 18; 7 L. T., N. S., 494; 31 Beav. 504; 9 Jur., N. S., 61.

5. By the Bedford Level Act, it was enacted, that all conveyances by indenture of the 95,000 acres allotted to the Earl of Bedford, or any part thereof, entered with the registrar of the Levels, should be of equal force to convey the freehold and inheritance as if the same were, for valuable considerations, enrolled within six months in one of the courts of record at Westminster; and that no lease, grant, or conveyance of or charge out of or upon the 95,000 acres or any part thereof, except leases for seven years or under in possession, should be of force but from the time it should be entered with the registrar. Conveyances were afterwards made of part of the 95,000 acres, but were not registered:—Held, that those conveyances were nevertheless valid for all purposes, except for entitling the grantees to the privileges conferred by the Act on the owners of lands within the Level, and for the other purposes of the Act. Willis v. Brown, 10 Sim. 127.

6. By a local and personal Act, transfers of debentures were to be by indorsement by deed, and in a given form, and were to be entered in the books of the company, and "after such entry, but not till then, the assignee was to be entitled to the benefit":—Held, that this did not apply to a transfer by act of law, as in the case of bankruptcy. Lane v. Smith, 14 Beav. 49; 15 Jur. 735.

7. A conveyance by the commissioners of the Court for the Sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland is, under 12 & 13 Vict., c. 77, s. 27, "effectual to pass the fee simple discharged of all former estates," subject only to "such tenancies, leases, etc., as shall be expressed therein." Where such a conveyance is duly executed by the commissioners, it becomes under s. 49 conclusive evidence that everything required by the Act to be done has been rightly done. Rorke v. Errington, 7 H. L. Ca. 617; 9 Ir. C. L. R. 357; 5 Jur., N. S., 1227.

8. A conveyance made under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 72, is, by s. 85, for all purposes conclusive evidence that all previous proceedings leading to such conveyance have been regularly taken. Where, therefore, proceedings had been taken for the sale of estates, and their sale and resale had been directed in a manner which was declared by the House of Lords to be marked with great irregularity, but the party complaining had not brought the matter before the Court of Appeal until after the conveyances had been executed:—Held, that the House was precluded by the provisions of the statute from affording the appellant relief against the consequences of such irregularities. Power v. Reeves, 10 H. L. Ca. 645.

9. By 23 & 24 Geo. 3, c. 39 (Irish), for the encouragement of planting timber trees, tenants for lives by settlement, impeachable for waste, or tenants for years exceeding fourteen unexpired, who should plant or cause to be planted any timber trees, might fell and dispose of them at any time during the term. To secure the landlords, s. 2 enacted, that "any tenant so planting," etc., "should within twelve calendar months after such planting lodge with the clerk of the peace of the county" "an affidavit," etc., "reciting the number and kinds of trees, and the name of the lands, in form following:—I, A. B., do swear that I have planted," etc., "on the lands of —, in the parish of —, held by me from —, the following trees [here reciting the number and kinds of trees.]" The form throughout was couched in the first person, and in fact, in its terms, was only applicable to a tenant for years. A lessee for three lives having planted many trees, his agent made the affidavit required in his own name, as agent for the lessee:—Held, that as the form given in the statute could not possibly apply to the majority of the cases which its provisions sought to meet, it did not mean that no one but the tenant was to make the affidavit; and that the form, if another person made the affidavit, might be varied. Mountcashell (Earl) v. O'Neill (Viscount), 2 Jur., N. S., 1030; 5 H. L. Ca. 937.

1. By the 70th section of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the title of the purchaser is protected even where an objection to the order appears on the face of it. Re Hall Dare's Contract, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 41; 51 L. J., Ch., 671; 46 L. T. 755; 30 W. R. 556.

XI. OPERATION.

1. On Contracts, 6621.
2. Where Observance Optional, 6622.
3. Cumulative, 6622.
4. On Private Rights and Privileges, 6622.

1. On Contracts.

2. Distinction between Acts of Parliament denying legal effect to instruments, as the Act for Inrolling Bargains and Sales, and the Registry Act, 7 Anne, c. 20, and Acts declaring instruments void to all intents, as the Annuity and the Ship Registry Acts; notwithstanding the former, the party is bound in equity by the contract. Davis v. Strathmore (Earl), 16 Ves. 428.

3. Where an equal agreement cannot, by reason of a subsequent Act of Parliament, or some other lawful impediment, be performed in the whole; yet the same shall be specifically executed in such part of it as remains lawful. Bettesworth v. St. Paul's (Dean), 1 Bro. P. C. 240.

4. The lessee of slaves entitled to claim a portion of the compensation money awarded under the Act for the Abolition of Slavery in respect of them, notwithstanding a covenant in the lease to refer to arbitration in case of loss by the abridgment of the labour of the slaves, or diminution of the returns of the lessee in consequence of any Act of Parliament or regulation of the Colonial Legislature, the Act for the Total Abolition of Slavery not being contemplated by the parties, and not therefore within the meaning of the clause. Gordon v. Bruce, 2 Moo. P. C. 261.

5. A contract declared by a statute to be illegal is not made good by a subsequent repeal of the statute. Jaques v. Withey, 1 H. Bl. 65.

6. Where a corporation, previously to an Act giving them compulsory powers of taking land, entered into an agreement for the resale of certain lands if the Act should (as it did) authorise them to be taken:—Held, that such agreement was invalid, as being an abuse of the powers conferred by Parliament, and as fettering the discretion of the corporation as to the quantity of land necessary for the purposes of the Act. Subsequently an Act was passed by which it was enacted, that nothing therein contained should prejudice the rights under the agreement of the party taking under it, but that all its covenants and provisions should be as applicable to a purchase under that Act as to a purchase under the Act in contemplation of the passing of which the agreement was entered into:—Held, that by this Act the Legislature had recognised the agreement, and had removed the former objection to its validity. Galloway v. London (Mayor), 1 L. R., H. L., 34; 35 L. J., Ch., 477; 11 Jur., N. S., 474; 13 W. R. 701; 12 L. T., N. S., 319.

7. A statute cannot make an act done in connection with a private contract an actionable wrong if it was not actionable independently of the statute. Ward v. Hobbs, 27 W. R. 114; 4 L. R., App. Cas., 13; 48 L. J., Q. B., 281; 40 L. T., N. S., 73.

8. Heads of agreement for a lease were sanctioned by majorities of three-fifths at meetings of the two companies without any certificate of the Board of Trade being obtained, and were acted upon for several years, but no formal lease, or agreement for a lease, was ever executed. The heads of agreement were also invalid as providing for payment of the rent out of profits not so applicable:—Held, that the arrangement was not ratified by references to it in subsequent local and personal Acts of Parliament not expressing any direct intention to confirm it. Kent Coast Railway Co. v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 3 L. R., Ch., 656; 19 L. T., N. S., 174; 16 W. R. 1027.

9. See as to effect of the subsequent Acts of Parliament not being retrospective, and not altering the effect of a previous bargain and conveyance. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Sprot, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 449; 2 Jur., N. S., 623.

10. The defendant let the basement of a store to the plaintiff, and covenanted to keep the premises in proper repair and condition, so that the same might be available for storing cartridges and for quiet enjoyment by the plaintiff. Other parts of the store were let to other persons for the storage of gunpowder. Soon afterwards the Explosives Act 1875 was passed, making it illegal to store cartridges and gunpowder in the same store, without a licence, under pain of forfeiture. On the Act coming into operation the defendant removed the cartridges which the plaintiff had deposited in the store, and gave notice that he would inform the authorities if the plaintiff stored any more:—Held, that there had been a trespass but no eviction by the defendant, and that there had been no breach of covenant by the defendant, the covenant to keep the demised premises in proper condition for storing cartridges only referring to physical condition, and there being no obligation on the defendant to procure a licence to make the storage legal notwithstanding the Act. Newby v. Sharpe, 26 W. R. 685; 38 L. T., N. S., 583; 47 L. J., Ch., 617; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 39.

1. By an agreement between the N. Local Board and the C. Local Board, it was agreed that the N. board should make a sewer and allow the sewers of the C. district to drain into it, but the sewage of any other districts or places was not to be permitted by the C. board to pass into their sewers so as to discharge into the sewer to be made by the N. board. Under Acts of Parliament then in existence the owner of premises beyond the limits of a district had power to make a sewer to communicate with the sewers of the district, and by an Act subsequently passed similar powers were given:—Held, that the provisions of the agreement were overruled by the subsequent Act, and that the N. board could not restrain the C. board and the owners of premises beyond their district from making sewers which would discharge into the sewer of the N. district:—Held, also, that the agreement must be taken to have been made subject to the provisions of the law then existing, under which the owners of premises beyond the C. district had similar powers. Newington Local Board v. Cottingham Local Board, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 725; 41 L. J., Ch., 226; 40 L. T. 58.

2. Where Observance Optional.

2. Where an Act directs that, under certain circumstances, one or other of two matters shall be done, the party to do the act has the option of doing which act he pleases. Reg. v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 3 H. L. Ca. 471; 1 C. L. R. 932; 17 Jur. 901.

3. A railway company obtained an Act for making a branch within seven years. They gave the usual notices. While their bill was before Parliament, they agreed to purchase the land of a certain owner. It was a term of this contract that it should not be enforced against the company within the seven years, and the purchase money was to be paid when the company, on obtaining their Act, should have "begun to execute the branch." The company obtained their Act, but never executed or began to execute the branch. The seven years expired:—Held, that permissive words in the Act of Parliament were not obligatory. Edinburgh, Perth, & Dundee Railway Co. v. Philip, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 514; 3 Jur., N. S., 249.

3. Cumulative.

4. An Act giving a summary remedy, though in terms apparently prescribing such remedy, is cumulative, and does not take away a previous right to sue by action. Sharpe v. Warren, 6 Price 131.

5. If an Act, by general words, purports to confer a power on several donees, one of whom possesses the same power more amply at common law, as incident to his estate, the statute will not be intended to apply to him so as by implication to abridge his power; and acts of his, therefore, which the statute would have authorized, will be referred to his common-law right. Exp. Clayton, 1 Russ. & M. 369.

4. On Private Rights and Privileges.

6. No inference from a statute designed in favour of the liberty of the subject to the prejudice of that liberty. Cromley's case, 2 Swan. 68; Buck 264.

7. Where an equal agreement cannot, by reason of a subsequent Act of Parliament, or some other lawful impediment, be performed in the whole; yet the same shall be specifically executed in such part of it as remains lawful. Bettesworth v. St. Paul's (Dean), 1 Bro. P. C. 240.

8. An affirmative statute, giving a new right, does not of itself and necessarily destroy a previously existing right, created by another statute to which it does not refer; but will do so if it appears to have been the intention of the Legislature that the two rights should not exist together. O'Flaherty v. M'Dowell, 6 H. L. Ca. 142.

9. A party interested in the subject matter of a private Act of Parliament will have his rights affected by its provisions, though it may have been introduced and passed without notice duly given to him. Edinburgh Railway Co. v. Wauchope, 8 Cl. & F. 710; 3 Rail. Ca. 233.

10. When an Act confers upon a landowner a private right creating a burden upon a railway and restraining the directors from regulating the traffic so as best to accommodate the public it must be construed strictly. Turner v. London & South Western Railway Co., 17 L. R., Eq., 561; 43 L. J., Ch., 430.

11. A statute relating to the corporate property of a city, with the usual clause declaring that it shall be deemed a public Act, does not bind strangers with notice; and the mere probability of a purchaser knowing it, or precautions taken by him in a purchase of corporate property, will not fix him with constructive notice. Att.-Gen. v. Marrett, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 167.

12. When persons having, as a class, certain privileges, are by statute subjected to certain liabilities, their privileges being expressly reserved to them, and other persons having the same privileges are afterwards, as a class, subjected to the same liabilities, but nothing is said of their privileges, these privileges still continue to exist. Newcastle (Duke) v. Morris, 4 L. R., H. L., 661; 19 W. R. 26; 23 L. T., N. S., 569; 40 L. J., Bky., 4.

13. If a statute professes merely to repeal a former statute of limited operation, and to re-enact its provisions in an amended form, an intention to extend the operation of its provisions to classes of persons not previously subject to them is not to be presumed as a necessary inference, unless the intention to the contrary is clearly shown. Brown v. McLaughlan, 4 L. R., P. C., 543; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 384; 21 W. R. 277; 42 L. J., P. C., 18.

14. As a rule, existing customs or rights are not to be taken away by mere general words in an Act. But, without words especially abrogating them, they may be abrogated by plain directions to do something which is wholly inconsistent with them. And this may be the case though the Act is a private Act, and though the particular custom may have been confirmed, years before, by a verdict in a court of law. Green v. Reg., 1 L. R., App. Cas., 513; 35 L. T., N. S., 495.

1. If a party bonâ fide, and not absurdly, believes that he is acting in pursuance of a statute, he is entitled to the special protection which the Legislature intended for him, although he has done an illegal act. Spooner v. Juddon, 6 Moo. P. C. 257; 4 Moo. Ind. App. 353.

2. A statute which refers to the matter of a common law liability and declares to whom it shall attach will not thereby create a new and extended application of that liability, unless it contains words expressly declaring such a purpose. River Wear Commissioners v. Adamson, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 743; 37 L. T., N. S., 543.

3. Where an Act of Parliament interferes with private rights and private interests, it ought to receive a strict construction, so far as those rights and interests are concerned. Hughes v. Chester & Holyhead Railway Co., 8 Jur., N. S., 221; 31 L. J., Ch., 97; 10 W. R. 219; 7 L. T., N. S., 197.

4. Prima facie the general rule of construing Acts of Parliament is that they are prospective, and you are not to interfere with rights unless you find express words to that effect. Allhusen v. Brooking, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 564; 53 L. J., Ch., 520; 51 L. T. 57; 32 W. R. 657.

5. It is a well-settled rule that you are not to construe an Act to be retrospective, so as to alter existing rights, unless you find from the Act itself that such was the intention of the Legislature. Quilter v. Mapleson, 9 L. R., Q. B. D., 672; 52 L. J., Q. B., 44; 47 L. T. 562; 31 W. R. 75.

6. As a general principle, Acts of Parliament, especially when they alter the rights of parties, are not to be construed retrospectively, unless otherwise provided. Hickson v. Darlow, 52 L. J., Ch., 454; 41 W. R. 362. Affirmed 23 L. R., Ch. D., 690; 48 L. T. 449; 31 W. R. 417.

7. A statute must not be deemed to take away or extinguish the right of a subject, unless it appear by express words or by plain implication, that it was the intention of the Legislature so to do. Western Counties Railway Co. v. Windsor & Annapolis Railway Co., 7 L. R., App. Cas., 188; 51 L. J., P. C., 34; 46 L. T. 351.

8. On those who seek to establish that the Legislature intended to take away the private rights of individuals lies the burden of showing that such an intention appears by express words or necessary implication. Semble. Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 208; 50 L. J., Q. B., 353; 44 L. T. 653; 29 W. R. 617.

Where the terms of a statute are not imperative, but permissive, the fair inference is that the Legislature intended that the discretion, as to the use of the general powers thereby conferred, should be exercised in strict conformity with private rights. Semble. Ib.

XII. JURISDICTION OF CHANCERY.

1. In General, 6623.
2. By Injunction where Construction doubtful, 6623.

1. In General.

9. Chancery cannot relieve against statute. Cavendish v. Worsley, Hob. 203.

10. Courts of law and equity can only enforce the rights of parties under Acts of Parliament by the application of their known rules and principles. If they are inadequate to the purpose, the Legislature alone can supply the defect. Weale v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co., 1 Jac. & Walk. 371.

11. Relief cannot be given against a forfeiture created by Act of Parliament; but a court of equity will see that the proceedings working the forfeiture have been regular. Blennerhassett v. Day, 2 Ball & B. 128.

12. One Act giving final jurisdiction, and another Act giving jurisdiction subject to appeal, the Court cannot proceed on both Acts. Re Bedford Charity, 2 Swan. 518.

2. By Injunction where Construction doubtful.

13. Semble, where the construction of an Act of Parliament is doubtful, the Court will send the question to a court of law, in the meantime granting, continuing, or dissolving the injunction (as the case may be) in favour of the party who will sustain the greater injury. Clarence Railway Co. v. Great North of England, Clarence, & Hartlepool Junction Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 763; 6 Jur. 269.

14. The Court will not grant an injunction to restrain parties from proceeding to deal with property, whose right, if it exists, depends upon the construction of a doubtful statute, where the granting of the injunction would for ever deprive them of an opportunity of exercising the right, especially if no irreparable mischief is to be apprehended from allowing them to proceed. Principles of the Court with respect to ex parte injunctions. Att.-Gen. v. Liverpool (Mayor), 1 Myl. & C. 171.

15. Where the construction of a particular section of an Act of Parliament is doubtful, the Court will not interfere by interlocutory injunction. Dover Harbour (Warden and Assistants) v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 9 W. R. 523.

It is highly inconvenient for the Court to grant an injunction to restrain the performance of works "in any other manner than authorised by the words of an Act of Parliament" unaccompanied by a statement of what, in the opinion of the Court, is the right mode of constructing those works. S. C. 30 L. J., Ch., 474.

16. Where a defendant claimed a right under an Act of Parliament to do the acts sought by a bill to be restrained, a perpetual injunction was granted by a Vice-Chancellor:—Held, on appeal, that it not being clear upon the construction of the Act of Parliament that it did not authorise what the defendant proposed to do, he was entitled to the opinion of a court of common law upon the question. Cardiff (Mayor) v. Cardiff Waterworks Co., 4 De G. & J. 596.

2. If a statute be acknowledged in the name of A. by a stranger, A. shall have an action of discheat against him, but he cannot avoid statute. Anon., Cary 22.

3. A creditor of S., by statute, if S. become bankrupt, and the statute not sued and executed before the bankruptcy, shall come in only pro ratâ, though there were lands in fee bound by the statute. Newland v. —, 1 P. W. 92.

VII. OTHER MATTERS, 6636.

I. Unclaimed Stock. National Debt Commissioners.

1. Order made for a transfer of stock under the 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, without a reference. Re Avery, 1 Russ. & M. 356.

2. Court will not, under 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, order, on petition, a retransfer of unclaimed stock that has been transferred to sinking fund when title is disputed. Exp. Lavell, 2 Jac. & Walk. 397.

3. The proper form of proceeding to recover stock and dividends unclaimed for ten years, and carried over to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, under the statute 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, is by petition, to be served upon the attorney-general and the commissioners, and not by bill in the first instance; and if there be conflicting claims to the fund, the Court will then give directions for the trial of the rights of the parties between themselves, either by suit or otherwise. Hunt v. Peacock, 6 Hare 361; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 163; 12 Jur. 154.

To a suit by three out of four residuary legatees to recover three-fourths of a sum of stock which the executors had omitted to get in, and which had been transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, under the stat. 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, the legatee entitled to the other fourth part of the stock is a necessary party. Id.

4. Unclaimed dividends (which had been transferred to Commissioners for Reduction of National Debt) standing in name of A., who had become bankrupt and died, were claimed by A.'s assignees and B., who alleged A. to have held stock as trustee for B. Stock ordered to be transferred to the accountant-general, and reference directed to Master to ascertain who entitled to stock. Exp. Gillett, Exp. Bacon, 3 Madd. 28.

5. On petition, under the stat. 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, for a retransfer of an unclaimed stock that has been transferred to the sinking fund, the costs are in general to be paid out of the stock in question. Exp. Martin, Jac. 55.

6. The taxed costs of the attorney-general and the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, upon application under the 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, are, in the absence of special circumstances, to be paid out of the fund recovered. Re Holland, 1 Ph. 379; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 167; 8 Jur. 253.

7. A sum (stock) was standing in the name of a testatrix, which her executors overlooked, and the dividends remaining unclaimed, the stock was transferred to the National Debt Commissioners; afterwards one Sanders procured a probate in the name of T. Hunt of a forged will of the testatrix, and obtained a transfer:—Held, that the probate did not authorise a payment to Sanders, and that a party giving faith to the probate was bound to see that the person claiming under it was a real T. Hunt. Under the above circumstances, a transfer from the aggregate fund in the name of the commissioners was ordered to be made to the real executor. Costs out of the fund. Exp. Jolliffe, 8 Beav. 168; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 134; 10 Jur. 818.

8. To obtain a retransfer of stock under the provisions of the 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, it is not necessary for the petitioners to show that they are beneficially entitled to it; it is sufficient if they prove their legal claim. Re Bigge, 1 Y. & Coll. 245; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 41.

9. When stock has been transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, in consequence of the dividends upon it not having been claimed for ten years, it is not a matter of course to order it to be retransferred to a person who subsequently makes out a legal title, upon which a transfer of the stock would have been made to him if the ten years had not elapsed. Thus, where stock had stood in the joint names of two persons, of whom one had survived the other upwards of ten years, but had not, during that time, claimed any dividends, the Court would not, upon the petition of the widow and personal representative of the survivor, order the stock to be transferred into her name, or into the names of the two deceased persons; but directed the Master to inquire who was entitled to the stock, with liberty to state special circumstances. Exp. Ram, 3 Myl. & C. 25; 1 Jur. 668.

10. The Court upon petition, under the stat. 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, will direct stock, which has been transferred to the sinking fund, to be retransferred to the petitioners where their title is clear without any reference to the Master to ascertain who is beneficially entitled to the stock. Exp. Nicholl, T. & R. 119.

11. Where stock which had been standing in the names of two persons had been transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, in consequence of the dividends not having been claimed for ten years, the Court, upon the petition of the administrator of the survivor of the two persons to have the stock transferred to him, directed a reference to inquire who was entitled to the stock. Re Bishton, 27 L. J., Ch., 168; 6 W. R. 289.

12. What evidence will be requisite in a petition under the 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 8 & 9 Vict., c. 62, quære. See Howard v. Kay, 4 Drew. 151.

13. Upon a petition for the transfer of stock, under 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, service on the commissioners, and also on the attorney-general, is required by the Act. The Court will presume, at the hearing of the petition, that the attorney-general represents not only the commissioners, and the Crown as parens patriæ, but also the Crown in its beneficial capacity. Lawrence v. Maule, 4 Drew. 472; 28 L. J., Ch., 682.

Therefore, where the testimony of a witness, since deceased, was received upon a petition under that Act, that testimony is receivable in a subsequent proceeding against an administrator nominated by the Crown, and the Crown by a party to the former proceedings, or his representatives. Id.

1. In 1806 S. B., in the names of herself, C. H., and H. B., purchased a sum of 47. per cent. annuities (subsequently reduced to 37. per cent.), the dividends of which were received by S. B. till her death in 1821, and by C. H. till his death in 1838. In consequence of no dividends having been received since 1838, the stock had been transferred into the names of the Commissioners for Reducing the National Debt. On a petition presented by H. B., showing that he was the survivor of the three persons, the Court ordered the stock to be retransferred, and the dividends paid to him, but subject to the payment of the costs of the petition. Exp. Bouts, 5 Jur., N. S., 951; 28 L. J., Ch., 648.

2. Where unclaimed stock has for some years been standing in the names of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, the Court will not order a transfer to the personal representative of the party entitled without inquiry as to the parties beneficially interested. Re Malony, 1 John. & H. 249; 7 Jur., N. S., 42; 3 L. T., N. S., 465; 9 W. R. 68.

3. A fund was carried over, in 1847, to the separate account of B., a sailor, of whom nothing had been heard since 1844, although numerous inquiries had been made. In 1857 it was transferred, together with all accumulations on it, to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. In 1860 administration of his estate was duly granted, and the administrator petitioned for payment of the fund and the accumulations to him:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of the death of B.; and the petition was ordered to stand over, with liberty to apply. Woodhouselee (Lord) v. Dalrymple, 7 Jur., N. S., 615; 30 L. J., Ch., 608; 9 W. R. 564; 4 L. T., N. S., 455.

4. A sum of 600*l.* consols standing in the name of a lady now of unsound mind, and residing abroad, having been transferred to the commissioners in consequence of the dividends having been unclaimed since 1839; the fund ordered, under the 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, to be transferred into the name of the attorney-general in trust in this matter, and the arrears of the dividends ordered to be paid to the "curator" of the lunatic. Re Sargazurieta, 1 W. R. 171.

5. A retransfer of stock which has been placed in the names of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt must be carried out in accordance with the terms of the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 62, and the practice of the Bank of England. Rushworth v. Walden, 18 W. R. 204.

6. A legacy to an infant was invested in stock in the names of two executors, and the dividends not having been claimed for ten years, the stock was transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. One of the executors having died, the survivor presented a petition for a retransfer of the stock:—The Court, without requiring the concurrence of the beneficiaries, made an order directing the stock to be transferred to him, and that he should thereout pay the costs of the attorney-general and the commissioners. Re Ackland, 26 L. T., N. S., 418.

7. When stock has been transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt by reason of no application for dividends having been made, a retransfer cannot be obtained, nor can inquiries be directed as to the beneficial title to the stock in the absence of a legal representative of the person in whose name the stock stood at the date of the transfer. Re Ashmead, 42 L. J., Ch., 314; 8 L. R., Ch., 113; 28 L. T., N. S., 1; 21 W. R. 65.

When a person establishes a right to the retransfer of stock which has been transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, he is only entitled to a retransfer of the stock and the payment of the amount of the dividends, but not to the invested accumulations of such dividends. Id.

8. When stock in the name of a trustee holding upon trust for a beneficiary has been transferred to the National Debt Commissioners, the retransfer will be ordered to be made, not to the beneficiary, but to the trustee. Exp. Jameson, 19 L. R., Eq., 430; 44 L. J., Ch., 480; 23 W. R. 591.

II. Dividends.

9. The purchaser of a life interest in stock, sold before a Master, is entitled to a dividend becoming due on the day following the sale. Anson v. Towgood, 1 Jac. & Walk. 637.

10. Dividends of bank stock being choses in action, cannot be sequestered. McCarthy v. Gould, 1 Ball & B. 387.

11. One is bound to transfer 300*l.* stock before the 30th of September, then next; though the stock was much risen, yet the defendant decreed to transfer the 300*l.* stock in specie, and to account for all dividends from the time it ought to have been transferred. Gardener v. Pullen, 2 Vern. 394.

12. It was proposed to make an order on the Bank of England to pay half the dividend on stock to the plaintiff, leaving the other half to be received by the defendant. The bank objected that this splitting of the dividend would cause confusion in the public accounts, and the Court yielded to the objection. Skyner v. Pelichet, 9 W. R. 191.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Where one person entrusted with sums of money to invest for the benefit of another, has signed an agreement admitting an amount due on investments made, equity will compel their transfer. Stanton v. Percival, 5 H. L. Ca. 257.

2. Where an intestate had executed transfers of railway shares and stock to a fictitious person, the Court, on a bill filed by his administrator, declared that the intestate used the fictitious name as another designation of himself, and that the administrator was entitled to transfer the shares and stock, and to receive the dividends. Arthur v. Midland Railway Co.; Arthur v. London & North Western Railway Co., 3 Kay & J. 204.

3. On petition for transfer of stock standing in the name of the accountant-general, subject to the order of the Court, under a power in an Act of Parliament, the facts alleged being disproved, the petition is not dismissed, but an order made for the transfer to the persons appearing to be entitled. Exp. Williams, 1 Jac. & Walk. 89.

4. The Court will, in certain cases, permit an executor to transfer a principal sum of stock standing in bank to his name, purchased out of the testator's estate a considerable time before, without the dividends which have accrued in the meantime. Della Cainea v. Hayward, M'Clel. 16.

5. Where by a decree made thirty years ago, an account had been directed of a testator's personal estate, and of his debts and testamentary expenses, and an injunction had been granted to restrain the bank from permitting the transfer of a small sum of stock, belonging to the testator's estate, but no further proceedings had been had in the suit; the Court, upon the petition of the only party interested, dissolved the injunction, so that an immediate transfer of the stock might be made to the petitioners, without carrying the suit any further. De Beaufort v. Archdeacon, 1 Y. & Coll. 549; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Bq., 72.

6. An old woman was induced, without consideration, to transfer her stock into the name of another, who, by his answer, swore that there had been a gift of it to him, subject to a trust for the transferee for life.—An injunction to restrain the transfer and receipt of the dividends was continued. Custance v. Cunningham, 13 Beav. 363.

7. The Court has not authority under the Contempt Act to order one of the Masters to transfer stock standing in the name of a party committed for contempt in not making the transfer; the transfer being a ministerial act of the bank, and not of the party. Cutler v. Comd., 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 194.

8. One is bound to transfer 300l. stock before the 30th of September then next; though the stock was much risen, yet the defendant decreed to transfer the 300l. stock in specie, and to account for all dividends from the time it ought to have been transferred. Gardener v. Pullon, 2 Vern. 394.

II. UNDER POWER OF ATTORNEY.

9. On the 20th July 1840 M. K., being seriously ill, duly executed and delivered to her sister, E. K., a power of attorney for transfer of stock into the name of E. K., intending the same to be for her benefit. On the 21st July 1840 she died, and two days subsequently thereto the stock was transferred into the name of E. K., who received the dividends to the period of her death, in September 1853. M. K. died intestate. The power of attorney contained a clause to the effect that if it were not acted on until after the death of the grantor, the transfer made thereunder should, so far as the Bank of England was concerned, be as binding on the personal representatives of the grantor as it would have been if such transfer had been made in her lifetime, unless notice of death had been previously given. Evidence was given of the intention of M. K. to give all her property to her sister, E. K., by her will, after giving legacies, bequeathed all the residue of her money, securities for money, and personal estate to the plaintiff. The next of kin of M. K. contended that the power of attorney, which was revocable in her lifetime, was by her death actually revoked, and that consequently the transfer was made without any valid authority, and the stock formed part of M. K.'s estate. On a bill filed by the residuary legatee of E. K.:—Held, that he was entitled to the stock. Kiddill v. Farnell, 3 Jur., N. S., 786; 26 L. J., Ch., 818; 3 Sm. & G. 428.

III. BY BANK OF ENGLAND.

2. Transfer by Executor, 6628.
3. Liability of Bank, 6628.
4. Practice and Evidence, 6628.
5. Costs. See PRACTICE (COSTS).

1. In General.

10. Bank having notice of bill, refused to permit transfer of stock, though no injunction; ordered that it should permit transfer on a certain day, unless plaintiff obtained injunction in the meantime. Ross v. Shorer, 6 Madd. 1.

11. Where money in the public funds is the subject of a suit to which the bank is made a defendant, the Court will not, on the application of the bank, make any order on the litigating parties to restrain them from proceeding at law against the bank to compel a transfer; but they must file a bill of interpleader. Birch v. Corbin or Corbyn, 1 Cox 144; 1 Bro. C. C. 571.

12. Where, by a decree made thirty years ago, an account had been directed of a testator's personal estate, and of his debts and testamentary expenses, and an injunction had been granted to restrain the bank from permitting the transfer of a small sum of stock belonging to the testator's estate, but no further proceedings had been had in the suit; the Court, upon the petition of the only party interested, dissolved the injunction, so that an immediate transfer of the stock might be made to the petitioners, without carrying the suit any further. De Beaufort v. Aroh-deacon, 1 Y. & Coll. 549; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 72.

1. Where money had been invested by a bankrupt under a fictitious name, in order to defeat his creditors, the bank was ordered to erase such name, and insert the name of the bankrupt. Green v. England (Bank of), 3 Y. & Coll. 722.

2. Semble, that the Court of Chancery cannot, under any circumstances, direct the Bank of England to transfer stock which has been invested in the names of an infant and other persons. Bannister v. Rogers, 2 Jur. 393.

3. Where a trust deed has been executed for the benefit of creditors, and registered, and the deed contains a general assignment of property to the trustees, the trustees are entitled to require from the Bank of England a transfer of bank stock standing in the name of the debtor and belonging to him without the debtor's concurrence in the transfer, or, in case of his death, without the concurrence of his legal personal representative. Re Price, Exp. England (Bank of), 36 L. J., Bky., 24; 15 W. R. 1066; 16 L. T., N. S., 760; 2 L. R., Ch., 662.

Form of order for such transfer. Id.

2. Transfer by Executor.

4. Though a residue is specifically given, the bank has no right to restrain the executor from transferring the funds. England (Bank of) v. Moffat, 3 Bro. C. C. 260.

5. Bequest of stock to executor for life, remainder to W.; the executor having bought W.'s reversionary interest, and the bank refusing to allow a transfer, the Court ordered a transfer to be made accordingly, but nevertheless gave the bank its costs. Pearson v. England (Bank of), 2 Bro. C. C. 529; 2 Cox 175. But see note there.

6. Specific bequest of stock to the executrix for life, and after her death to her daughter absolutely at twenty-one. The bank resisting a transfer according to an agreement to relinquish the life interest without direction of the Court is entitled to costs. Austin v. England (Bank of), 8 Ves. 522.

7. The Bank of England is not to look beyond the legal title of the trusts of the will, and therefore cannot prevent the executor from selling out or transferring stock into his own name. England (Bank of) v. Parsons, 5 Ves. 665.

8. Demurrer allowed to a bill by the Bank of England for an injunction against the action of an executor, claiming a transfer of stock, considering the stock as specifically bequeathed (which was doubtful) to trustees in France, upon special trusts. If the executor cannot maintain the action, upon the nature of the bequest, or as having assented, the injunction is unnecessary; if he can upon his title to the stock, to be applied as the other property, there is no equity. England (Bank of) v. Lunn, 15 Ves. 569.

9. Although the bank is bound to allow the transfer to or by the executor of stock specifically bequeathed, if the executor has not assented to the legacy, yet it does not follow that, if he has assented to the legacy, the bank is bound to transfer it to the legatee. Humberstone v. Chase, 2 Y. & Coll. 209.

10. Where a testator possessed of stock in the government fund bequeaths it specifically, the bank cannot refuse to permit the executor to transfer it, he not having assented to the legacy. The bank having, under these circumstances, refused to permit the executor to transfer, a decree was made against it with costs. Franklin v. England (Bank of), 1 Russ. 575; 4 L. J., Ch., 214.

3. Liability of Bank.

11. The bank stands in relation to stock, as a depositary of goods in relation to the goods. The bank, therefore, can only be made responsible for a transfer of stock, after distinct notice given to them of an existing claim upon the stock. Humberstone v. Chase, 2 Y. & Coll. 209.

8. made a specific bequest of the dividends of certain stock to W. and his wife for their lives; the principal, after the decease of the survivor of them, to go to such of his children as should attain twenty-one, and, in default of such children, to sink into the residue. Upon the death of the testatrix, the various bequests of the will were appropriated to the respective legatees, and W. regularly received the dividends, the principal stock still standing in the name of the testatrix. Afterwards the wife of W. died, leaving one child by W. In consequence of this event, the executrix of S. colluding with W., and other interested parties, applied to the Bank of England to have part of the stock transferred to the residuary legatee, upon the representation that there was no child of W. The bank consented to the transfer, but took a bond of indemnity, containing recitals, from which it appeared that they had notice of the will, and of the appropriation of the legacies. The stock in question was transferred to the residuary legatee, and ultimately sold out:—Held, that the bank was not liable for the misapplication of the stock. Id.

12. Bank stock specifically bequeathed to A. in trust, to pay a bond debt to himself, and as to the rest for B. for life, remainder over; the trustee being also executor, transferred to persons not entitled under the will. The bank is not chargeable. Hartig v. England (Bank of), 3 Ves. 55.

13. Where one of two trustees sold out stock under a forged power of attorney of his co-trustee:—Held, that in equity the bank was liable to replace the fund. Sloman v. England (Bank of), 14 Sim. 475; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 226; 9 Jur. 243.

When Bound by Orders under the Trustee Acts.] See TRUSTEE ACTS, II. XIII.

4. Practice and Evidence.

14. Notwithstanding Act of Parliament 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 36, Bank of England may still be made party to bill to restrain transfer of stock filed since that Act. Demurrer by bank overruled. Temple v. England (Bank of), 6 Ves. 769.

1. Application under 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 36, to restrain bank from making transfer, without making it party, must be upon notice to defendant, and on affidavit, as in cases of waste. Hammond v. Maundrell, 6 Ves. 772. n. 8.

Proof of Death and Identity of Stockholder.]

2. The Bank of England is a body having a discretion to exercise for the benefit of the public as well as itself; and is not bound to accept as sufficient evidence of the death of a stockholder, on a joint account in its books, such proof as would satisfy the Court of Chancery. Prosser v. England (Bank of), 41 L. J., Ch., 327; 13 L. R., Eq., 611; 20 W. R. 362; 26 L. T., N. S., 60.

P. died in 1871. At her death new 3 per cent. annuities, and no other fund, was standing in her name and in the names of the applicants jointly in the books of the bank. The burial of P. was entered in the proper parish register. An extract from the entry, together with a statutory declaration of his identity, was forwarded to the bank, in order that they might affix to her name in their books the usual memorandum of death. The bank, however, would not do so, on the ground that "the declaration did not aver that the extract had been compared with the original register for the parish where P. was buried." A motion for an injunction to restrain the bank from continuing the name of P. in their books without the memorandum was refused with costs. Id.

IV. RESTRAINING TRANSFER.

3. Injunction not granted to restrain transfer of stock until defendants have appeared, or are in contempt, and upon notice. Doolittle v. Walton, Dick. 442.

4. Widow being, as administratrix, possessed of property of intestate consisting of bank stock, motion to restrain her from disposing of it, to pay into court, refused; but, being clearly entitled to her third, ordered to pay two-thirds into court. Rogers v. Rogers, 1 Anstr. 174.

5. Injunction granted to restrain transfer, and receiver appointed to preserve property pendente lite in Ecclesiastical Court, upon the will. King v. King, 6 Ves. 172.

6. Injunction until answer restraining a transfer of stock, standing in the name of a steward, on strong evidence by affidavit, that it was the produce of his Master's property, rents, etc., received for many years with account; refused as to money at his banker's in his name. Chedworth v. Edwards (Lord), 8 Ves. 46.

7. Where a transfer is about to be made of stock to wrong persons through mistake, the Court will not grant an injunction ex parte against the defendant to restrain the transfer, unless the plaintiff swears that he believes the defendant will avail himself of the error, and will refuse to make a retransfer. Arkwright v. Grylles, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 303.

8. A bankrupt, after the issuing of the commission and appointment of assignees, transferred French stock, his property, to his wife, who afterwards transferred it to her three sisters. Under a settlement, the wife had a power of appointment over a sum of money in the funds in England, which she exercised by will in favour of one of the sisters, and died in her husband's lifetime: the sister, who resided in France, took out administration with the will annexed: an injunction was granted to restrain the trustees, in whom this fund was vested, from transferring it, on the ground that if the French stock should be proved to be the property of the bankrupt, the assignees would have a claim upon the assets of the wife. Stead v. Clay, 4 Russ. 550.

The wife of a bankrupt, having separate property, died in France in possession of other property there, which was claimed by the creditors as belonging to the husband; she by will disposed of all her separate estate, except 1,500*l.* consols, which, in default of appointment, was held in trust for her executors or administrators, and appointed a lady resident in France her executrix. Injunction granted at the suit of the assignees to restrain the transfer of the consols, but refused as to the rest of the separate estate. S. C. 1 Sim. 294.

Under the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 5.] 9. Semble, that the 4th and 5th sections of the stat. 5 Vict., c. 5 relate to different subjects. Exp. Field, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 1; 5 Jur. 986.

To authorise an application to the Court, under the former section, it must be founded on an affidavit expressed in positive terms. Id.

10. Semble, that the remedies given by the 4th and 5th sections of the 5 Vict., c. 5, are cumulative; and consequently, that a party who has sued out a distringas under the 5th section is not thereby precluded from afterwards applying for an injunction under the 4th section. Exp. Hertford (Marquis), 1 Ph. 129; 1 Hare 584; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 317.

The order which under the Act 5 Vict., c. 5, s. 4 may be issued, upon motion or petition without bill filed, to restrain the bank or any public company from permitting the transfer of stock or shares, or the payment of dividends, cannot be continued after time has been afforded for filing a bill, and no bill has been filed. Id.

11. An order made under 5 Vict., c. 5, s. 4, to restrain the transfer of stock, continues in force until discharged, after a bill has been filed for the same purpose; and on a motion being afterwards made to discharge it, the Court will allow affidavits to be read as well in opposition to the answer if then filed, as in support of it. Re Hertford (Marquis), 1 Ph. 203. See 1 Hare 584; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 317; 8 Jur. 71.

12. The remedies given by the 4th and 5th sections of 5 Vict., c. 5, are in substitution for the writ of distringas under the former practice in the Exchequer; and therefore, where a party had put a distringas upon a sum of stock before the passing of that Act, and that distringas had been removed upon the usual notice:—Held, that it was not competent to him, after the passing of the Act, to apply for an injunction under the 4th section of it. Exp. Amyot, 1 Ph. 130. n.; 6 Jur. 137.

13. The stat. 5 Vict., c. 5, s. 4 has conferred on the Court no new summary jurisdiction with respect to granting injunctions; but the remedy provided thereby was intended only for limited and interim purposes, viz., to protect stock until the party having a claim to it can have time to assert that claim by bill. Re Suisse, 6 Jur. 654.

H. obtained a restraining order under the above statute on the 30th May, but he neglected to file a bill. Upon motion made the 30th June to discharge the order:—Held, first, that the order could not stand without a bill filed; and, secondly, that although the Court had power to continue the order until a bill should be filed, yet that this was not, by reason of H.'s delay in filing a bill, a proper case for the exercise of such power. Ib.

A party having issued a distringas under under the 5th section of 5 Vict., c. 5, without filing a bill in due time afterwards, in consequence of which the distringas is taken off by the bank, is not thereby precluded from making an application to the Court under the 4th section of the Act. Ib.

The executors of A. indicted S. for embezzling in A.'s lifetime certain moneys belonging to A., with which S. had purchased stock in his own name. H., who was A.'s residuary legatee, obtained an order under the above statute restraining the transfer of the stock, which, upon the application of B., pending his trial, was discharged; but upon appeal:—Held, that H. was entitled to the order. Ib.

1. The Court will not accede as of course to an application, by a creditor, under s. 4 of 5 Vict., c. 5, to restrain the transfer of shares belonging to his debtor, but will require special grounds in support thereof. Re East of England Bank, 6 N. R. 81.

2. The Court has jurisdiction, under 5 Vict., c. 5, s. 4, to restrain the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt from paying or transferring an annuity payable by them. Watts v. Watts, 40 L. J., Ch., 388; 24 L. T., N. S., 120.

3. Upon motion under 5 Vict., c. 5, s. 4, ex parte, unsupported by any affidavit of special facts, and made by the mortgagees of reversionary interests in the stock or shares of certain railway companies, the Court restrained such companies until further order from permitting any transfer of such stock or shares. Re Locke, 18 W. R. 275.

IV. Distringas.

4. Distringas obtained in Exchequer, by proceedings in the Court of Chancery, discharged with costs. Williams v. England (Bank of), 2 Y. & Coll. 265; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 20.

5. Court will not entertain motion for directing Bank of England to remove a distringas from stock belonging to partnership firm on application of defendant, the surviving partner, even after his answer has been filed by defendant, denying charges in bill; but refused it with costs. Toulmin v. Copeland, 7 Price 631.

Court will not interfere to require bank to transfer money which they withhold, on having been served with process (while in force), on bill filed by representative of deceased partner against survivors of the firm, even for the purpose of paying the partnership debts. S. C. 6 Price 405.

6. A distringas was issued against the Bank of England, and served on the proper officer, with a notice that it was intended to prevent the transfer of the sum of stock mentioned in the notice. On motion to discharge the distringas, on the ground that no bill had been filed, it appearing from an affidavit that the distringas had been issued with a view to subsequently filing a bill in the Court of Chancery, and not in this Court:—Held, that the writ had been issued for a purpose which the Court ought not to sanction, and the distringas was discharged with costs. Fellones v. England (Bank of), Younge 385.

7. A party, who had purchased a reversionary share in certain stock, caused a distringas to be laid upon it, and afterwards filed a bill in Chancery to have his interest in the stock ascertained, alleging conflicting claims. The distringas not having been followed by any suit in this Court, was discharged with costs. Argent v. Scotland (Bank of), 1 Y. & Coll. 557.

8. Where a distringas was issued, and served upon the secretary of the Bank of England, accompanied by a notice that it was for the purpose of preventing the transfer and payment of stock and dividends, standing in the name of W. W., but no bill has been filed against the bank or W. W., the distringas was, under the circumstances of the case, set aside with costs. Scott v. England (Bank of), 2 Y. & J. 327.

9. A, for valuable consideration, takes a security upon a reversionary sum of stock, at a time when, by reason of the death of the person in whose name the stock stood, without legal representatives, no notice of the incumbrance could be given to the trustee of the fund. A., however, does not attempt by distringas or otherwise to perfect the security. Afterwards B., for valuable consideration and without notice of A.'s incumbrance, takes a security upon the same fund, and at the same time serves a writ of distringas on the Bank of England. B.'s security has priority over that of A. Etty v. Bridges, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 486; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 474; 7 Jur. 936.

10. Some time previously to the passing of the 5 Vict., c. 5, whereby the equity jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer was transferred to the Court of Chancery, a party sued out and lodged at the Bank of England a writ of distringas, in consequence whereof a restraint was put on the transfer of, and payment of the dividends upon, certain sums of stock standing in the bank books in the name of a deceased testator; but no bill was filed by such party for an injunction to stay the transfer. After the Act had come into operation, the same party, upon notice from the bank, presented a petition to the Lord Chancellor, under the 4th section of the Act, and obtained an injunction, ex parte, restraining the transfer and payment of the stock and dividends. The executrix thereupon moved to discharge the order granting the injunction. Motion granted, and held, that by the 4th and 5th sections of the Act, two concurrent remedies were substituted in the Court of Chancery for the single remedy by distringas before existing in the Court of Exchequer; but that it was not intended by the Act to place a party in a better situation than he would have been in if the Act had not passed, in which case, if he had sued out a second writ of distringas, the bank would have paid no attention to it. Order discharged with costs, the petitioner, when obtaining it, not having brought all the circumstances of the case under the consideration of the Court. Exp. Amyot, 1 Ph. 130; 6 Jur. 137.

1. Distringas discharged with costs where made applicable by the person who obtained the writ to stock which was not the particular stock mentioned in the affidavit on which the writ had been granted. Re Cross, 1 Dr. & Sm. 580; 8 Jur., N. S., 5; 31 L. J., Ch., 255; 7 L. T., N. S., 149.

C. obtained a distringas, accompanied by an affidavit that he was personally interested in a particular stock standing in the name of a person described, and applied the writ to another stock standing in the name of another person, the practice of the Bank of England being not to call for the production of the affidavit. C. became bankrupt, and a motion was made to discharge the writ:—Held, that the writ must be discharged with costs without serving the assignees. S. C. 10 W. R. 53.

2. The effect of a distringas is similar to that of notice to a trustee. Wilkins v. Sidley, 9 Jur., N. S., 888; 11 W. R. 897; 8 L. T., N. S., 760; 4 Giff. 442.

A trustee of stock having also a beneficial interest in an undivided moiety of the fund, assigned his moiety, by way of mortgage; and the mortgagee caused a distringas to be placed on a moiety of the fund. Afterwards, the trustee fraudulently sold out the other moiety, and absconded:—Held, that the moiety upon which the distringas had been placed, being at the time of the assignment subject to the equitable rights of the plaintiff, the cestui que trust was not relieved from such equity by the application of the distringas; and that the plaintiff was entitled to the same as against the defendant, the mortgagee; but considering that it was by his diligence that the fund was preserved, the mortgagee was not compelled to pay the costs of the suit. Ib.

Injunction. Notice in lieu of Distringas under Judicature Act. 3. A notice having been served on the Bank of England under Rules 4 and 7 of Order XLVI, to prevent the transfer of stock or the payment of dividends thereon without notice to the persons serving the notice, the bank gave notice to them that an application had been made to the bank to allow the transfer of the stock and to pay the dividends thereon, and that they should comply with the application, unless an order of the Court should be served on them within eight days. A motion was then made ex parte for an order to restrain the bank from permitting the transfer or paying the dividends:—Held, that the proper course was to grant an interim injunction over the next regular motion day, and that notice of the order must be served on the legal owners of the stock. Re Blakley's Trusts, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 549; 48 L. T. 776.

I. JURISDICTION OF COURT OF CHANCERY.

4. A judge of the Court of Chancery is not a judge of one of the Superior Courts of Westminster, within the meaning of the 14th section of the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. Miles v. Presland, 4 Myl. & C. 431. Affirming 2 Beav. 300.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction, under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14, to order moneys invested in the name of the accountant-general to stand charged with a judgment debt recovered at law against the party entitled to such funds. S. C. 2 Beav. 300.

5. Stock standing in the accountant-general's name to the separate account of a party against whom a judgment debt has been recovered, may be charged under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, with the debt, but the charging order must be made not by a judge in equity, but by a judge at common law, and although such order in terms charges the stock it affects only the interest of the debtor in the stock, and therefore does not interfere with the rights of prior incumbrances. Hulkes v. Day, 10 Sim. 41; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 21; 4 Jur. 1129.

Although courts of equity have not jurisdiction, under the statutes 1 & 2 Vict., c. 100, and 3 & 4 Vict., c. 82, to make an order to charge the stock standing in the accountant-general's name to the account of a party against whom a judgment debt has been recovered; yet they will, in the exercise of an ancillary jurisdiction, grant a stop order to prevent the stock being transferred before the proper charging order can be made by the common law judge. Ib.

6. An application for a charging order under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, and 3 & 4 Vict., c. 82, upon a fund in court need not be made to the judge in whose court the suit or matter is, in which the fund is standing. Nor is it material that the order is entitled as in a revived cause, although made before the order of revivor on the defendant. Hastings (Marquis) v. Beavan, 4 De G. F. & J. 316; 10 W. R. 206; 5 L. T., N. S., 734; 31 L. J., Ch., 546.

7. A judgment at law being given to be dealt with by a court of equity:—Held, that a charging order ought not to be obtained on such judgment without the leave of the Court of Equity. Spence v. Briscoe, 26 Beav. 599.

8. When a judgment has been recovered against a person interested in a fund of the Chancery division, a stop order will be granted to the judgment creditor on such fund, without a preliminary charging order having been obtained in the division of the High Court in which the judgment was recovered. Hopewell v. Barnes, 24 W. R. 629; 33 L. T., N. S., 777.

1. Upon a petition by a solicitor for a charging order on property preserved in an action marked "Chancery Division, Liverpool District Registry, Hall, V.-Ch.," which had been tried by a judge and jury at Liverpool:—Held, that the judge who had dealt with the substantial part of the case was the only judge who could deal with the application. Onen v. Henshaw, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 385; 47 L. J., Ch., 267; 26 W. R. 188.

II. WHEN GRANTED.

1. In General, 6632.
2. For Costs, 6632.
3. Rule as to Six Months, 6633.

1. In General.

2. A plaintiff obtained a decree directing that an account should be taken against the defendant of what was due from him, and that he should pay what was found due. The accounts were taken, and a certificate drawn up, finding a certain amount due from him; but before the certificate was confirmed, the plaintiff obtained a charging order against a sum of money directed to be paid out of court to the defendant in another suit:—Held, that this was not such a decree as was equivalent to a judgment at law under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 18, and the charging order was ordered to be discharged. Chadwick v. Holt, 4 W. R. 791; 2 Jur., N. S., 918; 26 L. J., Ch., 76.

3. A bill to charge lands under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, ss. 13, 18, with sums payable by virtue of a rule of court of common law held demurrable, on the ground that the party filing the bill was not the person to whom the money was payable under the rule, but only the person for whose benefit such money was payable. Crowther v. Crowther, 2 Jur., N. S., 274; 25 L. J., Ch., 511.

2. For Costs.

4. Courts of equity will carry into execution their orders and decrees for costs by charging the government stock of the debtor, under the provisions of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110; and for that purpose it is not necessary to give further proof of application for payment than is contained in the notice of the intended application to make the order for the charge absolute. Blake v. White, 3 Y. & Coll. 434; 3 Jur. 749.

5. Parties interested in a fund standing in the name of the accountant-general in one suit were ordered to pay the defendants in another suit their costs. These being taxed, and a minute having been left with the senior Master of the Common Pleas, the Court on petition made a charging order on the fund for such costs, and granted an interim stop order. Wells v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 204.

6. Under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 18, an order for payment of costs operates only as against purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors from the registration of the certificate of taxation. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 23 Beav. 484.

7. When a plaintiff's bill has been dismissed with costs, an order nisi charging railway shares belonging to the plaintiff with the amount of the defendant's costs, when taxed, will be made before taxation upon the application of the defendant. Burns v. Irving, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 291; 25 W. R. 66; 34 L. T., N. S., 752; 46 L. J., Ch., 423.

8. A decree declaring a plaintiff entitled to one-fifth of the proceeds of sale of chattels, and directing an account to be taken of what was due, and payment of such amount together with the costs of the action to him, does not entitle him to a charging order under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 18, or to a stop order against funds in court in another suit belonging to the same defendant. Widgery v. Tepper, Hall v. Tepper, 37 L. T., N. S., 297; 25 W. R. 872; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 364.

9. A Master's allocatur, and a fortiori a mere rule for taxation of costs, is not an order whereby money is payable, so as to operate as a judgment within 1 & 2 Vict., c. 113, s. 18. Shaw v. Neale, 6 W. R. 635; 6 H. L. Ca. 581; 27 L. J., Ch., 444; 4 Jur., N. S., 695.

3. Rule as to Six Months.

10. Seem, a judgment creditor, who has obtained an order charging the interest of his debtor in government stock, may, in a proper case, sustain a suit for the intermediate protection of the interest which he has so acquired, notwithstanding the six months prescribed by the stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14, have not expired. Bristed v. Wilkins, 3 Hare 235.

11. The proviso contained in the 14th section of the Act 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, that no proceeding shall be taken to have the benefit of the charge created under that section until after the expiration of six calendar months from the date of the charging order, does not prevent the creditor from obtaining a stop order to restrain the debtor from receiving dividends of stock accruing within the six months. Watts v. Jefferyes, 3 Macn. & G. 372; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 659; 15 Jur. 783.

The correct construction of the proviso is, that although no steps can be taken to enforce immediate payment of the debt by realising the security, yet that the judgment creditor may in the meantime, by force of the order, prevent the security given him by the statute from being defeated or diminished pro tanto, by stopping payment to the debtor of part of his security. Id.

12. Where a charging order had been obtained by a judgment creditor, upon funds reported to his debtor in the cause, the Court will, after the expiration of the six months from the date of the order, direct the funds to be transferred to the creditor upon motion, without a bill being filed. Burke v. Burke, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 174.

III. WHAT PROPERTY CHARGED.

13. A banking co-partnership, which made returns to the Stamp Office pursuant to 7 Geo. 4, c. 46:—Held, to be a public company not incorporated within the meaning of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14. Macintyre v. Connell, 1 Sim., N. S., 225; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 284; 15 Jur. 529.

1. As to the possibility of charging, under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, a part only of a sum of stock standing in the name of a debtor. See Stanley v. Bond, 8 Beav. 50; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 51.

2. Stock of a company standing in the name of a trustee is not affected by a charging order under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14, obtained by a judgment creditor of the trustee in respect of the trustee's own debt. Re Blakely Ordnance Co., 25 W. R. 111; 35 L. T., N. S., 617.

C. transferred 1,000*l.* stock of a company into the name of his son without any consideration, and merely to qualify him as a director of that company; to be transferred to C. on request; which was ultimately done. C. received the dividends on the stock. The son was a contributor to the B. company, to whom he owed 3,000*l.* The official liquidator of that company gave notice to the company of his intention to move for an injunction to restrain the son as owner of the stock, and that company from dealing with it. Thereupon the official liquidator of the B. company was informed of the true facts as to the ownership of the stock. The official liquidator of the B. company immediately afterwards obtained a charging order against the 1,000*l.* stock in the company:—Held, that that order must be discharged, not only on the ground of the notice, but also because the stock was not standing in the name of the son of C. "in his own right." S. C. nom. Re Blakely Ordnance Co., Coate's case, 46 L. J., Ch., 306.

[Of Married Woman.] 3. When a married woman was entitled, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, to the interest of certain stock, to her sole and separate use, without power of anticipation, and there were certain limitations over as to the principal, in favour of herself and her husband, the Court, upon petition by a judgment creditor, made an order, under 3 & 4 Vict., c. 105, charging the judgment upon the stock, without prejudice to the wife's right of receiving the interest during her coverture. Cartor v. Mahon, Fl. & K. 342; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 305.

4. A wife having property settled to her separate use, with restraint upon anticipation, concurred in a fraudulent mortgage of such property, concealing the restraint upon anticipation. The mortgagee obtained a judgment against her for the amount left, and a charging order to charge her next accruing dividend:—Held, that such charging order must be discharged: for in no case and by no device could the restraint upon anticipation be evaded. Stanley v. Stanley, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 589; 47 L. J., Ch., 256; 37 L. T., N. S., 777; 26 W. R. 310.

The mortgagee, having discovered the fraud, obtained from the married woman a warrant of attorney, entered up judgment thereon, and afterwards obtained a charging order on a dividend due to her the very day it accrued due:—Held, that this was a mere device to make her future income a security for the mortgage debt, and an attempt to do indirectly what could not be done directly; and that therefore the charging order must be discharged. Id.

IV. EFFECT OF AND PRIORITIES.

5. An order under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, and 3 & 4 Vict., c. 82, charging the stock standing in the name of the accountant-general, affects only the interest of the debtor, and does not interfere with the rights of prior incumbrancers. Hulkes v. Day, 10 Sim. 41; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 21; 4 Jur. 1125.

6. If a person beneficially entitled to stock standing in the names of trustees has a judgment recovered against him, and the judgment creditor obtains a charging order under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14, a mortgagee of the fund claiming under a mortgage (whereof no notice was given to the trustee) made subsequently to the judgment, but before the charging order, has priority over the judgment creditor. Scott v. Hastings (Lord), 4 Kay & J. 633; 5 Jur., N. S., 450; 6 W. R. 862.

A fortiori, such mortgagee has priority when the order is only an order nisi under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14. Id.

In such a case, the rule in Dearle v. Hall (3 Russ. 1), does not apply in favour of the judgment creditor. Id.

7. The 14th section of the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, gives to a charging order absolute upon stock held in trust for the judgment debtor, the same effect as a charge under his hand; and the object of the 15th section is only to prevent any new charge being effected after the charging order nisi has been obtained, and before it is made absolute. When the charging order is made absolute, the 15th section has performed its functions. But if the judgment debtor had assigned the stock before the date of the order nisi the assign might obtain a stop order before the order nisi was made absolute, notwithstanding the 15th section; for the real charge under a charging order is only acquired when it is made absolute. Warburton v. Hill, Stant v. Wickens, 1 Kay 470; 23 L. J., Ch., 633.

If a person, having notice of a previous assignment of a trust fund, take an assignment to himself of the same fund, he cannot obtain priority over the previous assign, whether the trustee had notice or not; and therefore, if a judgment creditor, at the time of making his charging order absolute, have similar notice, he is likewise unable to obtain priority. Id.

Where the fund is standing in the name of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery, the practice of the office is to enter a memorandum of every charging order left at the office; but such notice is not treated as any restraint nor as equivalent to a stop order. No entry is made of the notice of any other assignment. The accountant-general is not a trustee of the funds committed to him, but merely the agent of the Court. The trustees who have paid the fund into court, are the trustees of it until the Court has in some way dealt with it, and then the Court becomes the trustee. Therefore, notice to the accountant-general of an assignment of funds in his hands is of no avail against a stop order afterwards obtained by a subsequent purchaser without notice. Ib.

A. was entitled to a portion of a fund standing in the name of the accountant-general. B., a judgment creditor of A., had obtained an assignment from him of his interest in this fund. Subsequently to this assignment C., also a creditor of A., obtained a judge's charging order, which was made absolute. B. obtained a stop order subsequently to C.'s charging order being made absolute, and subsequently to B.'s stop order C. obtained a stop order also:—Held, upon petition, that B. was entitled to an order for payment to him of the fund, the effect of the charging order being merely to restrain the transfer during the interval between its being obtained visi and made absolute, and not giving priority over the assignment when made absolute, the prior stop order having been obtained by such assignee. S. C. 2 W. R. 365; 2 Eq. Rep. 441.

1. Pending a suit for the administration of a testator's estate, in which a decree had been made directing preliminary inquiries, a cestui que trust of a share of the proceeds of the residuary realty and personally assigned his share by way of security, and the assignee immediately gave notice to the trustees of the will. Afterwards the real estates were sold, and the proceeds paid into court to the credit of the cause generally. A creditor who had entered up a judgment against the cestui que trust subsequently to the assignment, obtained an order charging the fund in court, with respect to which the assignee had not obtained a stop order, or taken any other proceeding:—Held, that the judgment creditor did not thereby acquire a priority over him. Brearelliff v. Dorington, 4 De G. & Sm. 122; 14 Jur. 1101; 19 L. J., Ch., 331.

2. A charging order under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, ss. 14, 15, has no greater effect than an instrument of charge executed by the judgment debtor would have had. Re Onslow, 20 L. R., Eq., 677; 44 L. J., Ch., 628.

Therefore, where D., after the passing of the Infants Relief Act 1874, obtained judgment by default against O. for a debt which was in fact for money lent by him to O. during his infancy, and D. subsequently obtained a charging order upon a fund in court belonging to O.:—Held, that inasmuch as the debt on which the judgment and charging order were founded was void, the charging order was inoperative. Ib.

3. The order made by a court of law under ss. 132, 133, 134, and 135 of the Common Law Procedure Amendment Act (Ir.) 1863, to attach stock standing to the credit of a debtor in a cause in the Court of Chancery, does not per se operate as a seizure or a charge on the stock. Semble, the lodging of such an order with the accountant-general without obtaining an order of the Court of Chancery does not charge the stock. Semble also, that a conditional order does not attach the fund under the Common Law Procedure Act. A conditional order to charge funds in Chancery was obtained under the Common Law Procedure Act on the 30th of June, made absolute on the 8th of August, and lodged with the accountant-general on the 14th of November. A conditional order to charge the same fund was obtained in Chancery by another creditor, under 3 & 4 Vict., c. 105, on the 1st of August, lodged with the accountant-general on the 7th of August, and made absolute on the 13th of November:—Held, that the creditor who had obtained the order in Chancery was entitled to the fund in priority to the other creditor. French v. Balfre, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 63.

V. PRACTICE ON OBTAINING ORDER.

4. A judgment creditor had obtained a judge's order under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14, charging the annuity payable to his debtor out of a fund in a cause in this Court. The judgment creditor is entitled to a decree, upon a claim against the debtor, to charge the annuity with the judgment debt; but in order to make these charges effectual, a petition (which is of course) to be presented in the cause is necessary; and the claim was ordered to stand over, and ultimately one order was made on the claim and petition. Reece v. Taylor, 5 De G. & Sm. 480; 21 L. J., Ch., 463.

5. The 23rd and 24th sections of 3 & 4 Vict., c. 105, are to be read in connection, and therefore the charging order under the statute is first a conditional order ex parte to be made absolute, which last is the order contemplated by the 23rd section. Re Dunscombe, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 4.

6. A charging order made ex parte under 3 & 4 Vict., c. 105, s. 24 is conditional only, and the Court has power to direct service of it out of the jurisdiction. Re Gethin, Ex p. Nixon, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 512.

7. To obtain a charging order under the 3 & 4 Vict., c. 105, s. 23, it is not necessary that the judgment should be revived. Therefore the Court granted an order, on the petition of husband and wife on a judgment obtained by the wife dum sola, without its having been revived. Irwin v. Nesbit, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 125.

8. An application for a charging order needs not to be entitled in the particular matter to the credit of which the fund is standing, the order being valid if entitled in the matter of the acts which confer the jurisdiction. Hastings (Marquis) v. Beavan, 10 W. R. 206; 5 L. T. N. S., 734; 4 De G. F. & J. 316; 31 L. J., Ch., 546.

Such an order properly entitled will not be rendered void by being also entitled in a matter in which it was not necessary to entitle it at all. Ib.

Time.] 9. Upon judgment in an action declaring that the defendant is liable to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum, and decreeing payment to be made on or before that day three months, the plaintiff is at once entitled, under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14, to obtain a charging order upon stock and shares standing in the name of the defendant. Bagnall v. Carlton, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 130; 26 W. R. 71; 36 L. T. N. S., 730; 47 L. J., Ch., 51.

Service of Order.] 10. Service of a charging order visi upon the solicitor, and upon the brother, and at the last address of the person sought to be charged, is sufficient without an order for substituted service. Re Puragon and Spero Mining Co., 10 W. R. 76; 8 Jur., N. S., 11.

VI. MAKING ORDER ABSOLUTE.

1. After the order obtained by a judgment creditor, for charging the interest of his debtor in government stock, standing in the name of trustees, has been made absolute under the stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 15, the Bank of England is still bound to pay the dividends to the trustees, being the legal hands to receive them; and the trustees are to apply the dividends according to the equitable interest of the parties. Bristed v. Wilkins, 3 Hare 235.

2. A creditor recovered judgment against his debtor and issued a fi. fa. Shortly afterwards the debtor died. The creditor entered a suggestion on the record, entitling him to have execution against the executrix, and obtained a charging order nisi upon shares belonging to the debtor. After the order nisi had been obtained, but on the same day, a decree was made for administration of the debtor's estate. The order nisi not having been made absolute, the plaintiff in the administration suit applied for an injunction to restrain further proceedings by the judgment creditor:—Held, that an injunction ought not to be granted. Haly v. Barry, 3 L. R., Ch., 452; 37 L. J., Ch., 723; 16 W. R. 654; 18 L. T., N. S., 491.

A charging order, when made absolute, operates from the making of the order nisi. Id.

VII. COSTS.

3. After decree taken pro confesso in the cause against the defendant, an order was made in March 1844, on petition in the cause, and in the matter of the Act of Parliament, 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, that a large sum of stock, standing in the defendant's name, should stand charged with payment of a sum of 299*l.* (being the plaintiff's costs of the suit), and interest thereon, unless the defendant (who was out of the jurisdiction of the Court) should show good cause to the contrary, on the 2nd November then next; and the Bank of England was in the meantime restrained from permitting the transfer of the stock:—Held, that the defendant must pay the plaintiff his costs of the order, charging the stock with the sum of 299*l.* and interest, and of the subsequent application to show cause against the order being made absolute, notwithstanding the 299*l.* and interest had been paid previously to the 2nd November. Stanley v. Bond, 6 Beav. 423; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 51.

4. The costs of obtaining the charging order on stock, under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, where the amount with interest was paid before the order made absolute, as well as of a motion to try the defendant's liability for costs of obtaining the order, which failed, ordered to be paid by the defendant. Stanley v. Bond, 8 Beav. 50; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 51.

VIII. OTHER MATTERS.

5. The Court refused, on petition, to order a fund in court charged, under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14, with a judgment by a party to a suit, and to which the judgment debtor was entitled, to be paid over without his consent. Whitfield v. Prickett, 13 Sim. 259; 12 L. J., N. S. Ch., 84.

6. Property was settled on A. until bankruptcy, or until, by any act or default of A., or by any other ways, it should become vested in or the property of any other person. A creditor of A. obtained a judgment against him, and a charge, under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 14, on the fund:—Held, that his interest had thereby determined. Montefiore v. Behrens, 35 Beav. 95.

VI. Whether Real or Personal Estate.

7. The shares in the Chelsea waterworks company are personal property, and will therefore pass by a will not executed according to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds. Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & Coll. 268; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 58.

8. Shares in the Grand Junction Waterworks Company are pure personalty, and not within the Statute of Mortmain. Edwards v. Hall, 6 De G. M. & G. 74; 1 Jur., N. S., 1189; 25 L. J., Ch., 82.

9. A testator, who was entitled to a portion of a New River share, left all his property to J. H., in trust for purposes and legacies he should make in any codicil. The will was attested so as to pass real estate. The testator made a codicil, but it was not attested so as to pass real estate. The testator left no heir. The New River share was held real estate for all purposes, and the Court declared that J. H., as against the Crown, took it under the will beneficially. Davall v. New River Co., 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 299; 13 Jur. 761; 3 De G. & Sm. 394.

10. Semble, the shares in a commercial company possessing lands in a foreign country for the purpose of trade are not to be considered as real property. Exp. & Re Richardson, 3 Dea. 496; 1 Mont. & Ch. 43; 8 L. J., N. S., Bky., 27.

11. A canal was made under the authority of an Act of Parliament, the lands for that purpose were purchased and vested in a corporation, but the shares therein were to be deemed personal estate, and transmissible as such, and were to be conveyed by bargain and sale:—Held, that the shares did not bear the character of realty so as to make a bequest of them specific. Robinson v. Addison, 2 Beav. 515; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 369; 4 Jur. 647.

12. Where a company is formed by Act of Parliament for the purchase of lands to make a canal, and the Act declares that the shares "shall be deemed personal estate, and shall be transmissible as such":—Held, that though the profits arose out of the land, the shares were personal property, passing as such to the assignees, on the bankruptcy of a proprietor. Where an Act prescribes certain forms in the transfer of such shares:—Held, unless they are strictly complied with, the shares remain in the order and disposition of the bankrupt proprietor; the ordinary mode of transfer not constituting an equitable mortgage. And though the Act only expressly relates to transfers between third parties, yet it impliedly relates to where the company are the transferees. Exp. Lancaster Canal Co., Re Dilmorth, Mont. 116; 1 Dea. & Ch. 411.

1. The shares in the navigation of the river Avon, under the statute 10 Anne, are real estate, and subject to dower. Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. J. 652. See also House v. Chapman, 4 Ves. 542.

2. A parol agreement for the sale of railway shares is binding, for they are neither an interest in nor concerning lands within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds; nor goods, wares, or merchandises within the 17th section. Dunouff v. Albrecht, 12 Sim. 189.

3. A. agrees with B.'s broker for 600l. stock; the broker, according to usage, made an entry of this agreement in his pocket-book; it being no otherwise reduced into writing, is within the Statute of Frauds. Mussal v. Cooke, Pre. Ch. 533.

4. An investment of money in the purchase of stock, in the names of trustees, upon trust for the children of the settlor, he not having at the time sufficient property besides the money so invested, to pay his debts, is void under the 13 Eliz., c. 5, because, by the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 12, money or stock may be taken in execution; and therefore the effect of such a settlement would be to delay, hinder, or defraud the creditors of the settlor. Barraek v. McCulloch, 3 Kay & J. 110; 3 Jur., N. S., 180; 26 L. J., Ch., 105.

VII. Other Matters.

5. Stock not liable to the payment of debts, during the life of the proprietor, in any way except under a commission of bankruptcy. England (Bank of) v. Lunn, 15 Ves. 577.

6. A banking company, who were mortgagees of certain Spanish bonds, employed defendant to raise money upon them by deposit in his own name: the party with whom the defendant deposited them called upon the defendant for repayment, and, on default, sold the bonds, with the concurrence of the defendant, without the knowledge of the company, and paid the balance of the proceeds to the defendant. The company was afterwards compelled by their mortgagor to replace them or their value:—Held, that the defendant was answerable to the company for the market price of the bonds at the time of actual sale, and that he was not answerable for the value of the bonds at any other time. Gordon v. Pym, 3 Hare 223.

7. The plaintiff was a holder of 20,000 French rentes. The defendant resided in London, and dealt largely in foreign securities, and had contracted for the Prussian loan; he was also a partner with his brothers, who were bankers in Paris. The plaintiff employed the defendant to sell his rentes: the defendant, without the plaintiff's knowledge, purchased them for himself and his partners, but gave the plaintiff the market price; the plaintiff then purchased Prussian bonds of the defendant, and agreed that they should remain in his hands as a security for the purchase money, which remained unpaid; but no bonds were appropriated for the plaintiff. The defendant, however, had always in his hands bonds to a greater amount. The plaintiff afterwards directed the defendant to sell the bonds, and the defendant subsequently informed the plaintiff that he had sold them accordingly, and he gave the plaintiff credit for the alleged price. The plaintiff then purchased 115,000 rentes of the defendant, which he was to pay for on a future day, and the rentes were then to be transferred to him; but no rentes were set apart for the plaintiff, or identified as belonging to him. Before the day of payment arrived, the defendant, by the plaintiff's desire, sent an order to his partners to sell the rentes, and they subsequently informed the plaintiff that they had sold them accordingly, and gave the plaintiff credit for the alleged proceeds. The accounts between the plaintiff and defendant were afterwards settled, and the plaintiff paid the balance which appeared due from him to the defendant. Four years afterwards the plaintiff, having discovered that the 20,000 rentes had been purchased by the defendant and his partners, and that there was no appropriation on the two other purchases, filed his bill to have all the transactions set aside, and the Court decreed accordingly. Brookman v. Rothschild, 3 Sim. 153; 7 L. J., Ch., 163. Affirmed 5 Bli. N. S. 165; 2 Dow & Cl. 188.

I. STOCK JOBBING ACTS, TIME BARGAINS AND DIFFERENCES.

8. Bill in equity lies to recover back money paid on a bubble. Coit v. Woollaston, 2 P. W. 154.

1. A bill in equity lies to recover deposits paid by a shareholder in a joint stock company, where the project is a bubble. Green v. Barrett, 1 Sim. 45; 5 L. J., Ch., 6.

2. C. being indebted to G. in 1,000*l.*, agreed to transfer within a given time 100*l.* per ann. long ann., at the then price, and in the meantime pay G. the dividends, and that the debt of 1,000*l.* should constitute part of the purchase money. The stock was not purchased at the time, and there was a rise in the price of the stocks. The agreement held not usurious, or within the stock-jobbing Acts. Clark v. Giraud, 1 Madd. 511.

3. Promissory notes, given by stockbroker for the balance of an account of money advanced to him to be employed in stock-jobbing transactions, contrary to the stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 8, part of the consideration consisting of the profits on those transactions: proof under his bankruptcy was restrained to the residue, viz., the money received, which he had applied to his own use. Exp. Bulmer, Exp. Ellis, 13 Ves. 313.

4. The Stock Jobbing Act (7 Geo. 2, c. 8) only applies to "public" stocks and securities, and not to railway and joint stock shares; and therefore, as no penalty is attached to stock-jobbing dealings in such shares, a stockbroker is compellable to make full discoveries respecting them. Williams v. Trye, 13 Beav. 366; 18 Jur. 442; 23 L. J., Ch., 860; 2 W. R. 314; 2 Eq. Rep. 766.

5. Under the Act against stock jobbing, the six months in the first section means lunar months, and no discovery lies where the cause of action arose prior to the expiration of six lunar months. Windale v. Fall, 3 Bro. C. C. 11.

6. The Court will not interfere to relieve in respect of a speculative transaction upon the Stock Exchange, where the claim to relief amounts in effect to this, that the plaintiff has been duped by his fellow speculators into a transaction which has not turned out profitably for himself. Rees v. Fernie, 13 W. R. 6.

7. A., B., and C. were members of the Stock Exchange, according to the rules and customs of which there are two days appointed in a month for settling transactions relating to foreign securities, and, in case of a loan upon or a sale of such securities, the lender or seller has the right, in case of non-payment of the loan or non-completion of the purchase, either to sell or take them at their market value, the deficiency, if any, in the price being paid to the borrower or purchaser, and the surplus, if any, beyond the loan or purchase money, being paid by him to the lender or seller, who, if the borrower or purchaser is declared a defaulter, is bound to take the securities at a price fixed by the official assignees of the association. According to these rules and customs A. lent to C. money on the security of foreign railway shares, which were of the full value of the loan, and on each succeeding settling day the amount of depreciation or increase in the value of the shares was paid by C. or A. respectively to the other, till C. was declared a defaulter, when A. took the shares at the price fixed by the official assignees. C. was afterwards adjudged a bankrupt, and A. tendered a proof for the balance due to him in respect of the transaction, after deducting the price at which he had taken the shares. According to the same rules and customs B. agreed with C. to sell him 100 foreign railway shares for a certain sum. The transaction was not completed, but on each succeeding settling day the differences were paid by B. or C., as in A.'s case; and, on C. being declared a defaulter, B. likewise took the shares at their market value, and on C.'s bankruptcy tendered a proof for the balance due to him in respect of the said shares:—Held, that these were not gambling transactions, or illegal within 8 & 9 Vict., c. 109, s. 18, and that the proofs must be admitted. Exp. Phillips, Re Morgan, Exp. Marnham, 6 Jur., N. S., 1273; 9 W. R. 131; 2 De G. F. & J. 634; 30 L. J., Bk., 1; 3 L. T., N. S., 516.

8. The question of time bargains is, whether at the time of making the contract there was a bona fide intention to purchase or deliver shares. If there was such an intention, the contract is good; if there was not such an intention, the contract is an agreement by way of gaming or wagering within 8 & 9 Vict., c. 109, s. 18, and by that section is null and void. Barry v. Croskey, 2 John. & H. 1.

9. Time bargains in stock, though they may be "gaming or wagering," within the meaning of the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 109, relating to games and wages, are not so within the meaning of the 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106, s. 201. Exp. Ryder, 1 De G. & J. 317; 3 Jur., N. S., 1159; 26 L. J., Bk., 69.

10. The defendant employed the plaintiff, a stockbroker, to speculate for him on the Stock Exchange, knowing that for the purpose of carrying out his transactions the plaintiff would have to enter into contracts to buy or sell stocks and shares, and, in order to protect himself and the defendant, would have to enter into other contracts to sell or buy respectively. The plaintiff knew that the defendant never expected or intended to accept actual delivery of the stocks and shares which the plaintiff might buy for him, nor actually to deliver the stocks and shares that the plaintiff might sell for him. The defendant, nevertheless, knew that he incurred the risk of having to accept or deliver; but was content to run the risk in expectation and hope that the plaintiff would arrange so as to make nothing but differences payable to or by him; and unless that arrangement was made the defendant was, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, wholly unable to pay for or deliver the stocks and shares bought or sold. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for commission and indemnity against the liabilities incurred by the plaintiff on the Stock Exchange, with the authority and for the benefit of the defendant, the defendant pleaded that the claim was founded on gaming and wagering transactions, illegal at common law and under 8 & 9 Vict., c. 109, s. 18:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover both the commission and indemnity claimed. Thacker v. Hardy, 27 W. R. 158.

11. Where a person desiring to speculate on the Stock Exchange has instructed a broker to buy and sell stocks for him with the intention that he should only receive or pay "differences," and has authorised the broker to pay any losses for him, the broker is entitled to recover any sums which he has so paid for the principal, even though he has not entered into separate contracts on his behalf, but has appropriated to him parts of larger amounts of stock which he (the broker) has bought as a principal with the view of dividing them among different clients for whom he has been instructed to buy. Robinson v. Mollett (7 L. R., H. L., 802) distinguished. Exp. & Re Rogers, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 207; 43 L. T. 163; 29 W. R. 29.

II. SETTLING DAY.

1. By one of the rules of the London Stock Exchange, bargains in the shares of a new company are contingent on the appointment of a special settling day by the committee:—Held, that, if the appointment of a settling day has been obtained by fraud, the validity of contracts in relation to the shares of the company, entered into by persons who were not actors in or parties to the fraud, is unaffected. Exp. Ward, or Exp. Harris, Re Ward, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 356; 51 L. J., Ch., 752; 47 L. T. 106; 30 W. R. 560.

A member of the committee of the Stock Exchange who takes part in the appointment of a settling day is not in so doing acting in a judicial capacity, and is not, therefore, disqualified from acting by reason of his having a personal interest in the matter. Ib.

III. DEFAULTER.

2. The rules of the Stock Exchange as to defaulting members of the body are the rules of a domestic forum which have no influence on the rights of those who are not amenable, as members, to the jurisdiction of that body. They cannot, therefore, govern the rights of the general creditors of a defaulting member. Tomkins v. Saffery, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 213; 47 L. J., Bky., 11; 37 L. T., N. S., 758; 26 W. R. 62. Affirming S. C. nom. Exp. Saffery, Re Cook, 46 L. J., Bky., 34; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 555; 35 L. T., N. S., 715; 25 W. R. 218.

C. was a member of the Stock Exchange; he became unable to meet his Stock Exchange engagements, and he gave notice thereof to the secretary. In such a circumstance the rules of the Stock Exchange prescribed the course to be followed. The defaulter ceases to be a member of the body. Two members of the body act as official assignees of the defaulter, a meeting of the creditors is called, the defaulter (as he is required to do) makes his statement, and the assembled creditors having decided what is to be done, these official assignees carry the decision into execution. The committee of the Stock Exchange has the power to readmit the defaulter or to refuse him readmission. C. made his statement at the first meeting, declaring, at that time, that he had no debts outside the Stock Exchange. His Stock Exchange creditors then consented to accept a composition; and, to provide for a part of it, he, at the demand of the official assignees, gave them a cheque for 5,000*l.* then standing to his credit in the Bank of England. The official assignees obtained the money and apportioned it among the Stock Exchange creditors. He afterwards confessed to owing debts to a large amount to outside creditors, and was declared a bankrupt. The trustee in bankruptcy, on behalf of the general creditors, claimed from the official assignees of the Stock Exchange the 5,000*l.*:—Held, that he was entitled to claim it; for that what was done by C. amounted to a cessio bonorum, and constituted an act of bankruptcy. Ib.

Semble, the money was voluntarily paid with the view to give the Stock Exchange creditors an undue preference. Ib.

In the 167th rule of the Stock Exchange, that the assignees shall collect and pay "the assets" to their joint account at a banker's, the word "assets" means the whole of the defaulter's available property; and under rule 153 these assets are to be distributed exclusively to those creditors whose claims arise out of Stock Exchange transactions. Ib.

3. A creditor of a defaulter on the Stock Exchange who has taken the benefit of the private distribution of Stock Exchange assets, made by the official assignee of the Stock Exchange under its rules, is not precluded from afterwards taking ordinary legal proceedings for the recovery of his debt, though he must give credit for what he has received from the official assignee. Exp. Ward, or Exp. Harris, Re Ward, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 356; 51 L. J., Ch., 752; 47 L. T. 106; 30 W. R. 560.

4. A member of the Stock Exchange contracted with another member to purchase certain shares. Before completion the purchaser failed to meet his engagements, and was declared a defaulter on the Stock Exchange. By the rules of the Stock Exchange the price of shares, contracted to be bought or sold by such a defaulter, are to be fixed by the official assignee of the Stock Exchange, and the differences paid to or claimed from the assignee:—Held, that the price fixed by the assignee is substituted for the original contract, and is a liquidated sum due under the contract, and, therefore, that a bankruptcy petition may be founded upon a claim for such price. Exp. & Re Ward, 31 W. R. 112.

5. By the rules of the London Stock Exchange, when a member is declared a defaulter, the contracts for the sale and purchase of stocks and shares which have been made by him for the next settling or account day are closed by a person, called the official assignee, appointed by that body, at the market prices of the stocks and shares, the subjects of the contracts at the time of the default, and those members who on that footing owe differences upon their contracts with the defaulter, are bound by the rules, on pain of being themselves declared defaulters, to pay those differences to the official assignee. And the official assignee is bound by the rules to employ the moneys thus received by him in the first place in paying to those members to whom upon the same footing differences are due upon their contracts with the defaulter, the differences so due to them:—Held, that the moneys thus received by the official assignee, being an artificial fund created by the rules of the Stock Exchange, do not form part of the assets of the defaulter, and do not pass to his trustee in bankruptcy. Exp. Grant, Re Plumby, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 667; 42 L. T. 887; 28 W. R. 755.

Held, also, that, even if the payments made to the official assignee of a defaulter ought to have been made to the trustee in bankruptcy, yet, as the official assignee claimed them adversely, the trustee could not recover them from him. Id.

1. In General.

1. A purchase by brokers in pursuance of the order of a customer of shares in a projected railway company provisionally registered:—Held, not illegal, but a sufficient ground for the admission of a proof tendered by the brokers for the loss occasioned by the non-completion of the purchase by the customer. Exp. Barton, Re Charles, 1 De G. 292; 10 Jur. 442; 4 Rail. Ca. 371.

2. Sharebrokers, by direction of a customer, purchased shares in a projected railway company, the consideration for which purchase, it was agreed, should be paid on the delivery of the scrip. After the purchase, the brokers, by the direction of the customer, sold the same shares at a higher price, to be paid on the delivery of the scrip. The sharebrokers then became bankrupt. The company was amalgamated with another company, and the scrip in the amalgamated company was delivered. The customer was not allowed to prove against the estate of the bankrupts for the difference of the bought and sold prices. Exp. Norton, 11 Jur. 699.

3. A shareholder in an incorporated railway company instructed a stockbroker to sell his shares. The broker agreed with a jobber for the sale of them; but the name of the purchaser was not mentioned. The jobber had been instructed to purchase by B. (another broker), who, as the jobber knew, was not purchasing on his own behalf. B. afterwards requested time for completion, his principal not being ready; and the jobber granted the time on B. giving his own name as that of the principal. A deed of assignment was prepared from the vendor to B., who paid the price to the vendor, and took the deed of assignment executed by the vendor:—Held, upon a bill filed by the vendor, that B. was bound to execute the assignment, to procure himself to be registered, to pay the calls made since the execution of the assignment by the vendor, and to indemnify the vendor against future calls; and a decree was made to that effect. Wynne v. Price, 3 De G. & Sm. 310; 13 Jur. 295; 5 Rail. Ca. 466.

4. C. & Co. directed their brokers to purchase for them 200 shares in a company, and on the settling day forwarded to them the name of an infant transferee. Shortly afterwards the company was ordered to be wound up, and upon the application of the infant his name was removed from the list of contributories, and the names of the transferors substituted in its place. By a resolution of the committee of the Stock Exchange, the broker was ordered to indemnify the transferors:—Held, that C. & Co. must indemnify the brokers. Peppercorne v. Clench, 28 L. T. 666.

5. A., B., and C. each bought thirty shares in a company through the same country broker. Fifteen of the shares were sold by D. The brokers placed all the ninety shares in the name of an infant nominee. On the winding up of the company D. was made a contributory. The Court ordered A., B., C., and the brokers to indemnify D. Brown v. Black, 8 L. R., Ch., 939; 42 L. J., Ch., 814; 29 L. T. 362; 21 W. R. 892. Varying 15 L. R., Eq., 363; 42 L. J., Ch., 397; 28 L. T. 256; 21 W. R. 457.

2. Customs of Stock Exchange.

6. Where a vendor employs brokers to sell shares on the Stock Exchange, he gives them authority to sell according to the custom then prevailing, and cannot limit that authority by private instructions to them. Coles v. Bristol, 19 L. T., N. S., 403; 17 W. R. 105; 4 L. R., Ch., 3; 38 L. J., Ch., 81.

7. A purchase or sale of shares made by one who is not a member of the Stock Exchange, and made through a broker who is a member of that body, will be treated as made subject to the rules of the Stock Exchange. Nicholls v. Morry, 7 L. R., H. L., 530; 45 L. J., Ch., 575; 23 W. R. 663; 32 L. T., N. S., 623. Affirming 7 L. R., Ch., 733; 41 L. J., Ch., 767; 20 W. R. 929; 26 L. T., N. S., 12.

8. Persons employing brokers, members of the Stock Exchange, in transactions on the Stock Exchange, are bound by its customs. Hodgkinson v. Kelly, 37 L. J., Ch., 837; 6 L. R., Eq., 496; 16 W. R. 1078.

9. The practice of the Stock Exchange for a broker to deliver deeds of transfer in blank cannot prevail against the rule of law. Taylor v. Great East Indian Peninsular Railway Co., 5 Jur., N. S., 1087; 28 L. J., Ch., 701.

10. Four executors holding stock in their name directed their solicitor to sell the stock. The solicitor, in the name of his firm, gave to a stockbroker, whom the solicitor had employed in Stock Exchange speculations, directions to sell the stock. The stock was sold by the broker, and the solicitor returned to the stockbroker transfers of the stock, with receipts indorsed, signed by the four executors. The sale was completed, and the stockbroker sent to the solicitor a cheque for part of the purchase money of the shares, and carried the balance on the transaction to the credit of the solicitor in the account between them, which account was afterwards settled by a payment made to the stockbroker:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the stockbroker must be held to have had notice that the shares were not the property of the solicitor, and that, though the solicitor had from the executors authority to receive the purchase money, payment to him, by giving him credit in an account between them, was not sufficient to discharge the stockbroker, who remained liable to the executors for the balance. Pear-

The sale was made subject to the rules of the Stock Exchange, and the stockbroker alleged that by those rules the broker could recognise only the person employing him, and obey his directions as to the disposal of the proceeds of a sale:—Held, that the rules of the Stock Exchange applied only to the sale on the Stock Exchange, and not the subsequent transactions. Ib.

Held, also, that no such rule or custom was proved, and that no such rule or custom could be upheld. Ib.

1. An alleged usage of the Stock Exchange, relied upon as authorising stockbrokers who are entitled to sell stock or shares of a customer for the realisation and payment of money due to them by such customer, to take over to themselves, at the price of the day, stock or shares of the customer, for which there is an inadequate demand, or where a forced sale would lower the selling price:—Held, unreasonable, and incapable of being supported against a customer who was not proved to be acquainted with the existence of such alleged usage. Hamilton v. Young, 7 L. R., Ir., 289.

The plaintiff had been for many years engaged in speculative transactions in stocks and shares, and employed as stockbrokers the defendants, who had obtained loans for him on the security of bills of exchange, and by pledging shares. The defendants had obtained for the plaintiff from G. M. & Co., another firm of stockbrokers, a large loan on the security of shares and other property of the plaintiff, including 190 shares in the C. Mining Company. The plaintiff was also largely indebted to the defendants. They called on him to settle his account; and on his failing to make any arrangement with them, the defendants paid off the amount due on the plaintiff's account to G. M. & Co., and obtained from the latter firm a transfer of the securities which they held, including the 190 shares of the C. Mining Company, and on the next day, the defendants sent to the plaintiff a note of their sale, by his order, of the 190 shares of the C. Mining Company, at the price of the day, charging him commission for such sale. The defendants did not, in fact, sell the shares, but took the shares over to themselves at the price of the day. In an action by the plaintiff to set aside the transaction, the defendants relied on an alleged custom or usage of the Stock Exchange, entitling stockbrokers who have made advances to their customers, or who hold stock or shares of their customers as security for general advances, on default by a customer in paying the sums due to the brokers, to take over to themselves, at the market price of the day, such shares or stock, where an immediate sale of such shares or stock would be likely to lower their price. No proof was given that the plaintiff was aware of the existence of the alleged custom or usage, and he deposed that he was ignorant of it:—Held, that the custom or usage relied on was unreasonable, that it could not be supported, and that the transaction should therefore be set aside. Ib.

2. If A. sells shares in a company to a member of the Stock Exchange, and B. buys shares in the same company at a different price from another member of the Stock Exchange, and on the name-day B.'s name is given to A. as the purchaser of A.'s shares, and A. executes a transfer of his shares to B., and B. accepts the transfer and pays to A. the price for which B. originally bought the shares, the transaction constitutes a contract between A. and B. for the sale and purchase of the shares, which a court of equity will compel B. specifically to perform. Musgrave and Hart's case, 5 L. R., Eq., 193; 37 L. J., Ch., 161; 16 W. R. 247.

3. By the usage of the London Stock Exchange stockbrokers who have entered into contracts for the purchase of stock are, in the event of the insolvency of their principal, justified in immediately selling the stock. A principal is insolvent within the meaning of this rule when he is unable to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business. Lacey v. Hill, Cromley's claim, 18 L. R., Eq., 182; 43 L. J., Ch., 551; 22 W. R. 586; 30 L. T., N. S., 484.

Messrs. C., brokers on the London Stock Exchange, on behalf of H., entered into contracts for the purchase of stocks to be completed on the 15th July 1870. On the 12th July they wrote to H. to the effect that unless he paid them on the 15th a balance (which consisted of the difference between the contract price of the stock and its value at the market price of the day) owing to them from him they would be defaulters; but that if such payment were made, they would sell or continue the stocks as he thought fit. H. promised to pay, and directed them to deal with the stocks as they thought best, and they sold part and continued part. He did not pay on the 15th, but shot himself; on the next day a bank of which he was a partner stopped payment, and on the 19th he died. On the 16th Messrs. C. were (solely by reason of H.'s failure to pay them) declared defaulters on the Stock Exchange, and ceased to be members of that body, and, in accordance with the rules, all their transactions for H. were closed, and all the stocks they had continued for him were sold at the price of the day. In consequence of the value of the stocks having fallen, the balance appearing to be due to them from H. was thus largely increased. The stocks afterwards continued to fall in value. Messrs. C. afterwards paid 6s. 8d. in the pound on their Stock Exchange debts, and were readmitted as members of the Stock Exchange:—Held, that the sale was justifiable, both under the usage of the Stock Exchange (which entitles a broker to sell upon his principal becoming insolvent) and also because the continuation was only effected on the representation of H. that he would pay on the 15th. Ib.

Held, also, that although Messrs. C. had not paid their debts in full, they were entitled to prove against H.'s estate for the increased balance appearing due to them after the sales were effected. Ib.

In equity the liability of a principal to indemnify his agent is not confined to actual losses, but extends to all the liabilities of the agent incurred on behalf of the principal. Ib.

4. Stockbrokers who have with their own money purchased stock for a principal are, in the event of the death, bankruptcy, or insolvency of the principal, justified in immediately selling the stock. Under such circumstances, the stockbrokers have a claim against the estate of the principal for the balance due to them on the account, which balance is subject to deduction for any loss which may have been incurred by selling before the next settling day. Lacey v. Hill, Springour's claim, 8 L. R., Ch., 921; 42 L. J., Ch., 657; 21 W. R. 857; 29 L. T., N. S., 281. Affirming 28 L. T., N. S., 180.

A speculator on the Stock Exchange, having failed to pay the balance of his brokers' account against him when requested, and having died, and a bank, of which he was senior partner, having in consequence stopped payment, the brokers sold out stock which he had directed to be carried over, at a loss, but the stock had fallen still lower before the next account day. On a claim by them for the balance of their next account, which was resisted on the ground that they had broken their contract, and could not speculate as to what would have happened had they kept it:—Held, that their conduct at the most gave rise to a right of set-off for any damage resulting from it, and that, none being shown, their claim was good. Id.

Evidence was given of a custom of the Stock Exchange that where a principal who had bought for the account became bankrupt or died, leaving no person ready to take up his account, his broker might cover himself by selling out the shares or stock:—Held, that the custom was reasonable, and that the claim was sustainable on that ground also. Id.

3. Lien of.

1. Stockbrokers advancing to bankers, their customers, a specific loan upon specific securities, have thereon not only a specific lien in respect of such loan, but also a general lien in respect of whatever else may be due to them from the bankers on account of their general business transactions; the rule in such cases being that the general lien is not excluded by special contract, unless the special contract be inconsistent with it. Jones v. Peppercorne, 1 Johns. 430; 5 Jur., N. S., 140; 28 L. J., Ch., 153.

The circumstance that the securities, though treated by the bankers as their own, belonged, in fact, to third parties, if not known to the brokers when making the advance, does not affect their right to general lien. Id.

Bonds payable to bearer, and passing by delivery only, were deposited with bankers for safe custody, and the bankers afterwards fraudulently deposited them with their brokers as a security for money advanced, and became bankrupt:—Held, that the bonds were subject to the general lien of the brokers for all money advanced by them to the bankers, and not merely for the advance made upon the security of those particular bonds. Id.

4. Pledge by.

2. Scrip was issued in England by the agent of a foreign government, and such scrip purported to entitle the bearer, upon payment of 100*l.* in instalments, to receive a definitive bond for 100*l.* G. purchased scrip on the open Stock Exchange, and entrusted it to a broker, who pledged it to his bankers as a security for his private debt. All the instalments of the 100*l.* had been paid. In an action of trover by G. against the bankers for the value of the scrip:—Held, that he had, by purchasing the scrip and entrusting it to the broker, estopped himself from contending that it was not negotiable like a bank-note. Goodwin v. Roberts, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 476; 35 L. T., N. S., 176; 45 L. J., Exch., 748.

Held, also, that the scrip was in fact negotiable in the same manner as the bond itself would have been negotiable. Id.

3. The pledgee of railway stock is bound to return the identical stock pledged to him, and is not entitled to make a profit in the meantime by selling it and repurchasing other stock of the same kind at a lower price. A. and B., stockbrokers, borrowed, on behalf of the plaintiff, a sum of money, for a term of three months, from the defendants, who were also stockbrokers, upon the security of certain railway stock, which was transferred by the plaintiff into the name of one of the defendants' firm. At the expiration of the term the loan was repaid with interest, and the defendants, who, pending the loan, had sold the plaintiff's stock, purchased other stock, and retransferred a similar amount to the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to the amount of profit which the defendants had realised:—Held, that he was entitled to sue as principal in the transaction; that the defendants were not justified, either by law or by the custom of the Stock Exchange, in parting with the security during the currency of the loan, but were bound to return the identical stock pledged; and that he was entitled to recover from the defendants the amount of profit realised by their dealings with the stock. Langton v. Waite, 6 L. R., Eq., 165; 37 L. J., Ch., 345; 18 L. T., N. S., 81; 16 W. R. 508.

L. transferred railway stock to W., as security for a loan. When the loan was paid off, W. retransferred to L. similar stock to the same amount. L. afterwards discovered that W. had, during the period of the loan, sold the stock which L. had transferred to him, and had afterwards purchased, at a lower price, stock to the same amount, which stock he had, when the loan was paid off, transferred to L. L. then filed a bill alleging that W. was bound to retransfer the identical stock originally transferred to him, and that, as he could not do so, he was bound to account to L. for the profit made by the sale and repurchase. The bill contained an offer on the part of L. to retransfer to W. the stock which he had transferred to L. on W. accounting for the price of the stock which he had sold. Malins, V.-Ch. (see supra), made a decree in L.'s favour on the footing of this offer. It afterwards appeared that when he filed his bill he was unable to fulfil this offer, as he had previously sold the stock which W. had transferred to him. L. thereupon presented a petition stating these facts, and praying that he might be allowed to transfer to W. an equal amount of similar stock, or to account for its value. The Vice-Chancellor made an order in accordance with this prayer. On appeal:—Held, that the petition was inconsistent with the decree and ought to have been dismissed, and that as the plaintiff had by his own act made himself incapable of performing the offer in his bill and not stated the real facts on his pleadings the bill must also be dismissed. 8. C. 17 W. R. 475; 20 L. T., N. S., 337; 4 L. R., Ch., 402.

1. A. commissioned his broker to obtain a loan on security of bonds which he deposited with him for that purpose, and shortly afterwards the broker obtained the loan from B., a member of the Stock Exchange. A. subsequently gave his broker the money to redeem the bonds, but he applied a portion of it to his own use, and was unable to redeem the bonds, of which fact he informed A. It was then agreed that A. should advance the broker a sufficient sum, by way of loan, to enable him to redeem the bonds, and that if the broker redeemed the bonds upon a particular day, A. would call and give him a cheque for the amount to be advanced. The broker gave B. his crossed cheque (upon the faith and in the belief that it would be honoured by means of the cheque to be given by A.), and the bonds were delivered up to him. They were afterwards handed over to A., who obtained them by means of a trick, but he refused to give his cheque, and the broker's cheque was dishonoured.—Held, that A. was bound to make good to B. the representation which he had made to the broker, and upon the faith of which he had given his cheque to B.; and he was directed to pay him the amount due upon the bonds, or, in default, the securities to be delivered up to B. Mocatta v. Bell, 24 Beav. 585; 4 Jur., N. S., 77; 27 L. J., Ch., 237.

Held, also, that B. was not guilty of negligence in taking a crossed cheque, in accordance with the practice of the Stock Exchange, and delivering up the bonds, without first inquiring whether the broker had assets to meet the cheque. Id.

5. Notice of Trusts affecting Shares.

2. A stockbroker who is instructed to sell trust funds and to reinvest the purchase money, with actual notice of the trust, is a trustee of the proceeds of sale, and the customer employing him is entitled as against his trustee in bankruptcy to so much of the proceeds of sale as can be identified. Re Strachan, Ex p. Cooke, 46 E. J., Bky., 52; 35 L. T., N. S., 649; 25 W. R. 171; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 123.

3. Four executors holding stock in their name directed their solicitor to sell the stock. The solicitor, in the name of his firm, gave to a stockbroker, whom the solicitor had employed in Stock Exchange speculations, directions to sell the stock. The stock was sold by the broker, and the solicitor returned to the stockbroker transfers of the stock, with receipts indorsed, signed by the four executors. The sale was completed, and the stockbroker sent to the solicitor a cheque for part of the purchase money for the shares, and carried the balance on the transaction to the credit of the solicitor in the account between them, which account was afterwards settled by a payment made to the stockbroker.—Held, that, under the circumstances, the stockbroker must be held to have had notice that the shares were not the property of the solicitor, and that, though the solicitor had from the executors authority to receive the purchase money, payment to him, by giving him credit in an account between them, was not sufficient to discharge the stockbroker, who remained liable to the executors for the balance. Pearson v. Scott, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 198; 38 L. T., N. S., 747; 26 W. R. 796.

The sale was made subject to the rules of the Stock Exchange, and the stockbroker alleged that by those rules the broker could recognise only the person employing him, and obey his directions as to the disposal of the proceeds of a sale.—Held, that the rules of the Stock Exchange applied only to the sale on the Stock Exchange, and not to subsequent transactions. Id.

Held, also, that no such rule or custom was proved, and that no such rule or custom could be upheld. Id.

6. Action by Principal.

4. Brokers very often transfer stock without the principal being so much as mentioned, and yet he may maintain an action against the person to whom the stock was transferred. Lisset v. Reave, 2 Atk. 394.

5. J. caused a sum of South Sea stock, belonging to another person of the same name, to be transferred into his own name, and then into the name of a broker, for sale, and who accordingly sold it for him. In a bill against the representative of J. and the South Sea Company for satisfaction, the broker is not a necessary party. Harrison v. Pryce, Barnard. 324.

6. It is settled law that an undisclosed principal can sue in respect of a contract entered into in his behalf between stockbrokers, though by the rules of the Stock Exchange the brokers, as between themselves, are personally responsible. Langton v. Waite, 37 L. J., Ch., 345; 18 L. T., N. S., 880; 16 W. R. 508; 6 L. R., Eq., 165.

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF JOBBERS.

7. When a jobber purchases shares on the Stock Exchange, his contract is either himself to purchase the shares, or, in the alternative, to substitute the name of a purchaser who is competent and willing to purchase. His liability is, therefore, conditional in the first instance, but if he fails to give such a name, it becomes absolute. If, therefore, the name given is that of an infant, or of a person who has given no authority to use his name, the jobber is liable. Rennie v. Morris (13 L. R., Eq., 203) disapproved of. Nicholls v. Merry, 7 L. R., H. L., 530; 45 L. J., Ch., 575; 32 L. T. 623; 23 W. R. 663. Affirming 7 L. R., Ch., 733; 41 L. J., Ch., 767; 26 L. T. 12; 20 W. R. 929.

The period of ten days limited by the rules of the Stock Exchange, within which the seller may object to the name given, has application only to objections grounded on the pecuniary incapacity of the person named to perform the contract, not to his capacity and willingness to enter into it. Id.

The ten days' rule is to give time for the vendor to inquire into the solvency of the person so named, but is no bar to a claim of indemnity against the jobber upon its subsequently appearing that the party named was incompetent or unwilling to contract. Id.

If, therefore, the name given is that of one who had no legal capacity to accept the shares, though the time limited is allowed to go by without objection to him, the original contractor, the jobber, will remain liable. Id.

The rules of the Stock Exchange imply, that the name of the person given as that of the ultimate purchaser of shares must be that of one able and willing to purchase; and they are not satisfied if the name given is that of a non-existent person, a lunatic, an infant, a married woman, or a person who has not given authority for the use of his name. Id.

M. sold fifty shares in a company through his broker, a member of the Stock Exchange, to N., a stock jobber, and also a member. On the settling day N. passed to his broker the name of L. (which he had received from some other broker) as the purchaser. M.'s broker made no objection to L., and prepared a transfer to L. which M. executed, and the price for the shares was paid. Two years afterwards the company was wound up; M. was placed on the list of contributories and ordered to pay calls in respect of the shares. The transfer had never been registered, and L. was an infant:—Held, that the jobber had not performed his contract, inasmuch as he had not given to M. the name of a purchaser competent and willing to contract, and that he was liable to indemnify M. against the calls. Id.

1. By the custom of the London Stock Exchange, shares are to be transferred not later than the tenth day after the settling day fixed on by the parties; and the vendee's contract is to pass (i.e., to give to the vendor, within that time) the name of a person who will take a transfer of the shares; and the person whose name is so passed has a similar right, within the time, to pass the name of another person; and so on until the name of an actual purchaser of shares is passed to the vendor. This custom is legal, and when the proposed name has been given, and the transfer executed and paid for, privity of contract between the original seller and the ultimate purchaser is completely established. Sheppard v. Murphy, 16 W. R. 948; 2 Ir. R., Eq., 544.

2. Where shares not fully paid up are sold on the Stock Exchange, the vendor is not bound to accept as purchaser a foreigner resident abroad, who has not property in this country which may be made liable for calls. Goldschmidt v. Jones, 22 L. T. 220; 18 W. R. 513.

3. C., through his brokers, sold subject to the rules of the London Stock Exchange, to P. & Co., jobbers, certain shares in a limited company, with registration guaranteed. Before the setting day, A. & Co. passed to C.'s brokers the name of H., to whom C. executed a transfer and transmitted the share certificates, and from whose brokers, not from P. & Co., he received the purchase money. H. did not procure the transfer to be registered, notwithstanding P. & Co. used their best endeavours to compel him to do so, and the company being in the course of winding up, C. was settled on the list of contributories, and calls were made upon him. He died without having paid them, and it was suggested that his estate would be insufficient to pay them:—Held, first, that C., if living, could compel P. & Co. to pay the calls, and generally to indemnify him in respect of the shares. Cruce v. Paine, 37 L. J., Ch., 711; 17 W. R. 44; 6 L. R., Eq., 641; 19 L. T., N. S., 127. Affirmed 4 L. R., Ch., 441.

Held, secondly, that P. & Co.'s liability to C.'s executor was similar, and independent of the amount of C.'s assets. Id.

Where a purchase of shares on the Stock Exchange by a jobber is expressed to be "with registration guaranteed," the meaning of the contract is, that the jobber will either register them himself or will find a purchaser who will accept and register them. The giving in, therefore, by the jobber to the vendor's brokers of the name of a transferee, who is accepted by the vendor as purchaser, does not discharge the jobber until the transferee has actually registered the shares in his name; and if the transferee does not register, the jobber is bound to register in his own name, and must indemnify the vendor for any damage suffered by him through such omission to register. S. C. 38 L. J., Ch., 225; 4 L. R., Ch., 441; 17 W. R. 1033.

4. The exact contract or liability of a jobber on the Stock Exchange who has purchased shares for the next approaching settling day is, that on that day he will either take the shares himself, and be bound himself to accept and register a transfer and to indemnify the vendor, or to give the names of one or more transferees to whom no reasonable objection exists and who will accept and pay for the shares. And if he takes the latter course, and the names are accepted by the vendor, and transfers executed to them, and the transfers are taken and paid for by those transferees or their brokers, the liability to register the shares and indemnify the vendor is shifted to those transferees, and the jobber is relieved from all further liability; but the liability of the jobbers continues entire and unbroken until there is an acceptance of the purchases by the vendor, and an acceptance of the transfers by the purchasers or their brokers; and they are not discharged therefrom by merely paying the agreed price, and giving a name as that of the purchaser, if that name should be objectionable, or the person named refuses to accept the shares. Coles v. Bristowe, 19 L. T., N. S., 403; 17 W. R. 105; 4 L. R., Ch., 3; 38 L. J., Ch., 81.

When shares had been sold by jobbers without any express stipulation or condition, and therefore to all appearance in accordance with this usage, and the jobbers duly furnished the names of the purchasers, and paid the purchase money, and the vendor prepared and executed transfers to them which could not be registered by reason of the suspension and winding up of the company between the day of the contract and the settling day:—Held, that the vendor had no right to call for specific performance by, or to claim indemnity from, the jobbers. Id.

5. D. held shares in a company, which he agreed, through his broker, to sell to N., a dealer on the Stock Exchange. N. in due time gave the name of E. as the transferee, and the shares were transferred to him. The company was afterwards wound up; and as E. was an infant, D. was placed on the list as contributory in respect of these shares, and had paid 1,800*l.* for calls on them. D. commenced an action against N. to recover the 1,800*l.*, and N. then filed a bill against D. and the father of E., alleging that the father was the real purchaser of the shares and liable for any loss, and praying that the action might be restrained and that the questions might be decided in the suit:—Held, that D. ought not to be deprived of the opportunity of establishing his claim, and of recovering, if he could, against N., merely because another person might also be liable to pay the money, and might be the person who ultimately would have to pay. Nicholls v. Eaton, 23 L. T., N. S., 681; 19 W. R. 172.

1. The owner of shares in a company on which a considerable sum remained to be paid, sold them in the usual way to a stock jobber who, on name day, gave the name of a transferee who was subsequently proved to have been an infant. The vendor filed his bill against the jobber for an indemnification in respect of all calls on the shares. He also made an agreement whereby he undertook to pay to the liquidator of the company a given sum, to transfer the share to the liquidator, and to give him authority to sue and use his name in all proceedings against the jobber for the amount of calls due and all expenses incident to such proceedings, in consideration of which the liquidator was to do all in his power to procure a release for the vendor. In the meantime it had been decided by the House of Lords that in such a case as this the jobber is liable to the vendor. The jobber claimed the benefit of the agreement with the liquidator, and contended that the release operated in his favour, and that no more could be recovered from him than the liquidator was entitled to recover from the vendor:—Held, that as the object of the agreement was to enable the liquidator to enforce his claims against the jobber the latter could not claim the benefit of part of it without giving effect to the whole, and that consequently the agreement did not inure to his benefit. Heritage v. Paine, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 594; 45 L. J., Ch., 295; 34 L. T. 947.

2. The plaintiffs, who were jobbers on the Stock Exchange, having contracted to buy certain shares in a company which were standing in A.'s name, agreed to sell the same to the defendant's broker, who then did not disclose his principal's name. On the following settling day the defendant's name was given by the broker to the plaintiffs, and the purchase money was paid. The transfer was executed by A., but the defendant refused to execute it, alleging, that he never intended to take the shares in his own name, and that the broker had given his name for insertion in the transfer without his authority. The plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance of their contract with the broker, but before the cause came to a hearing the company was ordered to be wound up under the supervision of the Court:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for specific performance, a variation being, however, made in the decree by inserting a direction to the defendants to indemnify the plaintiffs against any calls. Paine v. Hutchinson, 37 L. J., Ch., 485; 3 L. R., Ch., 388; 18 L. T., N. S., 380; 16 W. R. 553.

3. The plaintiff, a holder of shares in a public company, agreed through his broker to sell them to a jobber for 202*l.* 10*s.* By the usage of the Stock Exchange, the transfer of the shares would not be made until a future day, and in the interval the shares might be again sold until a certain day, when the original buyer must name the person to whom the transfer was finally to be made. Accordingly, the shares were ultimately sold to the defendant for 145*l.* (a call having been made in the meantime), and the plaintiff executed and gave to the defendant a deed transferring the shares to him, the consideration named in which was 145*l.*, the difference being paid to the plaintiff by the jobber. The defendant never registered the transfer, and an order was made for winding up the company. The plaintiff was compelled to pay calls upon the shares, and filed a bill for specific performance and repayment, alleging, that there had been a purchase by the defendant for 202*l.* 10*s.*:—Held (reversing 6 L. R., Eq., 506), that the fact of the call having been made in the interval did not invalidate the contract. Hawkins v. Maltby, 3 L. R., Ch., 188; 17 L. T., N. S., 897.

But held, that the contract alleged by the bill was not proved. Id.

4. The plaintiff, a holder of forty shares in a company, agreed, through his brokers on the Stock Exchange, to sell that number to a jobber for 202*l.* 10*s.* The defendant subsequently directed his broker to buy 100 shares; and, in accordance with the custom of the Stock Exchange, the name of the defendant was passed to the plaintiff's brokers as the purchaser of the forty shares. The plaintiff executed a transfer deed of the shares to the defendant, the consideration afterwards inserted by the plaintiff's brokers being 145*l.*, which was the price the defendant had agreed to pay. The defendant paid to the plaintiff the 145*l.*, and received the deed and the share certificates, the difference between the 145*l.* and 202*l.* 10*s.* being paid by the jobber. The defendant never executed the deed, or registered the transfer, or repudiated the sale, and the company was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that there was a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant entitling the plaintiff to indemnity by the defendant. Hawkins v. Maltby, 4 L. R., Ch., 200; 38 L. J., Ch., 313; 20 L. T., N. S., 335; 17 W. R. 557.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

- I. IN GENERAL, 6645.
- II. INDORSEMENT OF BILL OF LADING. EFFECT, 6645.
- III. TERMINATION OF TRANSIT. WHAT IS, 6646.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Distinction between the doctrine of stoppage in transitu and the ordinary case of the vendor's lien. McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Ca. 309; 13 Jur. 265.

2. Injunction to restrain the sailing of a vessel, containing goods sold to a person who had become insolvent, but over which the plaintiff retained a right of stoppage in transitu, refused. A court of equity has not jurisdiction in any case to stop goods in transitu. Semble. Goodhart v. Lone, 2 Jac. & Walk. 340.

3. A bill in equity will lie to enforce a right of stoppage in transitu. Schotsmans v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 2 L. R., Ch., 332; 36 L. J., Ch., 361; 15 W. R. 537; 16 L. T., N. S., 189. And see Spalding v. Ruding, 6 Beav. 370; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 503; 7 Jur. 733.

4. If A. sends goods to B. from beyond sea to the use of B., and before these goods are paid for B. dies insolvent, A. cannot have his goods again; but if A. sends goods to a factor to dispose of to A.'s use, and he becomes a bankrupt, these goods are not liable to the debts of such bankrupt. Godfrey v. Furzo, 3 P. W. 185.

A tradesman in London, by order of a tradesman in the country, sends goods to the latter, who does not appoint or name the carrier; afterwards the carrier embezzles the goods; the trader in the country must stand the loss. Id.

5. Where consignee becomes insolvent, consignor has a right to stop goods at any time before they come to his hands. D'Aquila v. Lambert, 2 Eden 75; Ambl. 399.

6. Application to quash a writ of replevin, issued to try the right to stop goods in transitu, refused. Furrell v. Beresford, 1 Ball & B. 328.

7. Stoppage no payment at law or in equity, unless under special circumstances, and in case of mutual demands, where the balance only is the debt. Jeffer v. Wood, 2 P. W. 128.

8. A., being beyond sea, consigns goods to B., then in good circumstances in London, but before the goods arrive he becomes a bankrupt. If A. can, by any means, prevent the goods coming into the hands of B. or the assignees, it is allowable in equity; and B. or the assignees shall have no relief in equity. Wiseman v. Vandeputt, 2 Vern. 203.

9. If goods are delivered to a carrier to be delivered to A., and are lost by the carrier, the consignee only can bring the action; but if before delivery, consignor hears A. is likely to become a bankrupt, or is actually one, and gets the goods back again, no action will lie for the assignees of A. Snee v. Prescott, 1 Atk. 248.

10. The right of stoppage in transitu extends only over the goods themselves and the net proceeds of the sale thereof, and not over the policy moneys paid in respect of insurances effected by the vendee. Bernadson v. Strong, 37 L. J., Ch., 665; 3 L. R., Ch., 588; 16 W. R. 1025; 19 L. T., N. S., 40.

A merchant in Sweden contracted to sell timber to B. in England; B. chartered a ship to fetch the timber, and insured it. The timber was damaged during the voyage, and before it arrived in England B. had failed. The merchant in Sweden thereupon gave notice to the captain of the ship to stop the timber:—Held, that the merchant in Sweden was entitled as against the other creditors of B. to the proceeds of the sale of the timber, but not to money which had been paid for the damage under the policy of assurance. Id.

The vendor had received a dividend under the purchaser's bankruptcy, on condition that it should not prejudice his claim under the stoppage in transitu, and that if he recovered anything under the stoppage, the dividend should be returned, the vendor to be able to prove for the balance of his debt:—Held, that under the circumstances the vendor must return only the proportion of dividend assignable to the portion of debt recovered by him as above. Id.

Right analogous to.] 11. H. agreed to deliver 330 tons of bleaching powder to E. at the rate of thirty tons per month, E. paying for each delivery of thirty within one fortnight from that delivery. When only thirty tons remained to be delivered, E. made a declaration of his insolvency; H. retained the thirty tons; C., the creditors' trustee of E., demanded delivery of the thirty tons, which H. refused to do; and H. also returned E.'s debit note of 150*l.*, the price of the thirty tons:—Held, that H. had a clear right to refuse delivery, whether on the ground of a rescission of the contract, or in exercise of a right analogous to that of stoppage in transitu. Exp. Chalmers, Re Edwards, 42 L. J., Bk., 2; 21 W. R. 138. Affirmed 8 L. R., Ch., 289; 42 L. J., Bk., 37; 28 L. T. 325; 21 W. R. 349.

II. INDORSEMENT OF BILL OF LADING. EFFECT.

12. In equity, a transfer of goods for valuable consideration by a consignee for a limited purpose, does not destroy the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu, ultra the particular lien of the transferee. A. consigned goods of the value of 1,800*l.* to B., who transferred the bill of lading to secure 1,000*l.*; B. having become bankrupt, C., as B.'s factor, claimed, as against A.'s title to stop in transitu, a right to retain the whole in satisfaction of a general balance due to him from B.:—Held, first, that he was not entitled beyond the 1,000*l.*; and, secondly, that A.'s remedy against C. for the surplus was in equity. Spalding v. Ruding, 6 Beav. 376; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 503; 7 Jur. 733. Affirmed 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 374.

13. Where the consignee transfers bills of lading to a creditor, as a security for his debt, and the consignor stops the goods in transitu, the creditor may issue a fiat against the consignee on his original debt. Exp. Ashton, 2 Dea. & Ch. 5.

1. The forbearance or release of an antecedent claim is not a good consideration for an indorsement of a bill of lading, so as to defeat an unpaid vendor's right of stoppage in transitu. Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, 2 L. R., P. C., 393; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 538; 17 W. R. 468; 38 L. J., P. C., 30; 21 L. T., N. S., 33.

L. & S., carrying on business in London and at Hong Kong, as L., S., & Co., bought goods of L. and others, merchants at Manchester, to be shipped to their firm at Hong Kong. The goods were on a ten months' credit, and it was agreed that remittances of proceeds of the sales should be made from Hong Kong to meet the acceptances of L. & S. given for the price of the goods, on receipt of the bills of lading. L. & S. contracted for the carriage, and shipped the goods in a vessel which they engaged, and the bills of lading deliverable to their firm in Hong Kong, or their assigns, were signed by the master and handed over to L. & S., who accepted the draft of the vendors for the amount of the purchase. Before the goods or bills of lading reached Hong Kong, L., S., & Co., being insolvent, and pressed by two banking firms at Hong Kong, to whom they were largely indebted, in consideration of their debt to the bank assigned to them the "whole of their property, premises, and chattels, specified in a schedule thereto, with all the estate, right, title, interest, claim or demand of L., S., & Co. arising thereout or therefrom." The schedule enumerated "all goods and bills of lading, or other documents, for all goods now on the way hither." In pursuance of this agreement the bills of lading were indorsed and handed over to the banking firms, to whom the insolvent circumstances of L., S., & Co. at that time were well known:—Held, first, that a pre-existing debt was not a valuable consideration for the assignment, so as to defeat the right of the unpaid vendors to stop the goods in transitu. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the transitus had not ended before the arrival of the goods at Hong Kong, as the transitus continued while the goods were in charge of a third party, contracted with as carrier for the purpose of forwarding them. Ib.

2. The plaintiffs shipped goods to the order of Messrs. D., and received a receipt from them from the mate in charge of the vessel. Before the vessel sailed, and before the bill of lading had been given to the plaintiffs, Messrs. D. became insolvent, having previously indorsed the bill of lading to H. for valuable consideration, without the knowledge of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the plaintiffs had not parted with the control over the goods; and an injunction was granted to restrain the ship from sailing with the goods on board. Newton v. Hubbard, 2 W. R. 339.

3. The mere fact that the purchaser of goods has resold them, and that the bill of lading has been made out in the name of the sub-purchaser, does not put an end to the transitus, or destroy the right of the original vendor to stop the goods in transitu. Exp. Golding, Re Knight, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 628; 42 L. T. 270; 28 W. R. 481.

The rule being that effect will be given to a vendor's right of stoppage in transitu, so far as the exercise of that right will not interfere with the rights of third parties acquired for value, it follows that an unpaid vendor, who has given a valid notice to stop in transitu before his vendee has received the purchase money of the goods from his sub-purchaser, is entitled, on the principle of Spalding v. Ruding (6 Beav. 376), to have the original purchase money satisfied out of the unpaid purchase money of the sub-purchaser. Ib.

4. The purchaser of goods (shipped by the vendor) consigned them abroad, and indorsed the bill of lading to a bank as security for an advance. Afterwards and before the arrival of the ship the consignees sold the goods "to arrive" to sub-purchasers, to whom they were delivered. The purchaser having become bankrupt, the unpaid vendor gave notice to the master, after the sub-sales, but before delivery and before payment of the freight, to stop the goods in transitu. The consignees remitted the proceeds of the sub-sales to the bank, who, after repaying themselves their advance, handed to the trustee of the bankrupt the balance, which was less than the original purchase money:—Held, that the principles established by Re Westzinthus (5 B. & Ad. 817) and Spalding v. Ruding (6 Beav. 376; 12 L. J., Ch., 503) were applicable; that the right of stoppage in transitu was not at an end when the notice was given; and that the vendor was entitled to the balance after satisfaction of the bank's claim. Kemp v. Falk, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 573; 52 L. J., Ch., 167; 47 L. T. 454; 31 W. R. 125. Affirming S. C. sub nom. Exp. Falk, Re Kiell, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 446; 42 L. T. 780; 28 W. R. 785.

Exp. Golding (13 L. R. Ch. D., 628) approved and followed. Ib.

Observations on Slaney v. Heyward (2 H. Bl. 504) and Hammond v. Anderson (1 B. & P., N. R., 69). Ib.

Semble, that notice of stoppage in transitu given to a shipowner imposes no duty on him to communicate the notice to the master of the ship, and that it is not effectual until it is communicated to the master. Ib.

III. TERMINATION OF TRANSIT. WHAT IS.

5. Upon a question between the consignees of the bill of lading and the vendor, as to the right of the latter to stop in transitu, in the absence of any contradictory evidence, the bill of lading, stating that the agent of the purchaser shipped the goods by his order, is conclusive as to the fact of delivery to the purchaser. In such case the Court will not interpose on behalf of the vendor to protect the property pending litigation, but will leave the vendor to the assertion of his right at law. Meletopulo v. Ranking, 6 Jur. 1095.

6. The vendor sold several parcels of goods, and sent them by railway to be delivered to the purchaser; the expense of delivery was to be paid by the vendor. Part of the goods was delivered, when the vendor, having suspicions as to the solvency of the purchaser, directed the proper officer of the railway company not to deliver the rest:—Held, that the vendor had a right to stop in transitu. Exp. Cross, 1 F. N. R. 215.

7. The transitus of goods is not ended by delivery on board a ship chartered by the

A timber merchant in Sweden agreed to sell certain timber to L. & R. By the original contract the goods were to be delivered "free on board, payable by the buyers' acceptance of seller's draughts, at six months from date of bill of lading; shipment to London," etc.; the seller was to provide ships at rates not exceeding a certain limit. It was subsequently agreed that the buyers should themselves charter a ship to convey the timber to London. The buyers accordingly chartered a ship, and the goods were loaded on board of her. The bill of lading named the seller as the shipper, and the goods were deliverable in London to "order or assigns." The seller indorsed the bill of lading in blank, and delivered it to the buyers in exchange for their acceptance. The buyers deposited the bill of lading to secure an advance. The ship was obliged to put into Copenhagen, and there, the buyers having stopped payment before the acceptance became payable, the vendor caused a notice of stoppage in transitu to be served on the captain:—Held, that the transitus was not ended by delivery on board the ship, and that the notice was effectual. Id.

1. G. shipped linseed from Smyrna to W. in London by a general ship. W. having obtained the bill of lading, mortgaged the cargo, and subsequently, before the ship's arrival, became bankrupt. W.'s mortgagees, after the ship had arrived, obtained a delivery order for the linseed, and handed it to an officer on board the ship, who promised to deliver the linseed to them when he got it clear:—Held, that this did not amount to a constructive delivery of the goods, and that the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu remained. Coventry v. Gladstone, 37 L. J., Ch., 492; 6 L. R., Eq., 44; 16 W. R. 837.

The test of the consignor's right of stoppage is not whether the voyage is at an end, but whether there has been a delivery of the goods to the consignee. Id.

In order to create a constructive delivery, there must be a fresh agreement between the parties as to holding or delivering the goods. Id.

2. A., a merchant at Bahia, shipped at Bahia a cargo of sugar by the order and at the risk of B., of Glasgow, in a ship chartered by A. The charter party provided, that the ship should proceed "either direct or via Falmouth, Cowes, or Queenstown, for orders to a port in the United Kingdom, or to a port on the Continent (between certain limits), and deliver the cargo in conformity with the bill of lading." The bill of lading stated that the ship was "bound for Falmouth, Cowes, or Queenstown for orders," and that the cargo was to be delivered "unto order or its assigns." A. sent to B., the charter party, the bill of lading, endorsed 'to B. or order'; and the invoice, which stated that the cargo was shipped "for the account and risk of B., for Falmouth, Cowes, or Queenstown, for orders and a market." The ship arrived at Falmouth, and the master, in pursuance of written instructions from A., announced its arrival to A.'s agents in London, and asked them for orders. The agents applied to B. for instructions as to the destination of the ship; but before instructions were given B. became insolvent, and thereupon A.'s agents stopped the cargo:—Held, that the cargo had not been constructively delivered to B., that the transitus was not over, and that the stoppage was valid. Fraser v. Witt, 7 L. R., Eq., 64; 17 W. R. 92; 19 L. T., N. S., 440. And see Jameson v. Wills, 17 L. T., N. S., 380.

3. G. sold sixteen casks of oil by letter to the bankrupts, upon terms of payment by acceptance at thirty days' date. The oil arrived, and its arrival was notified to the bankrupts by the carrier; subsequently G. telegraphed to stop the delivery. The carrier gave notice to the parties to interplead:—Held, that the transitus ended with the notice of arrival of goods, and that the trustee in bankruptcy was entitled. Exp. Gouda, Re Milla, 20 W. R. 981.

4. A., a merchant in Liverpool, bought certain winches of yarn of B., in London, through C. who acted as broker for both parties, "To be taken immediately from the wharf in London and paid for by the buyers' acceptance at four months." B. sent an invoice of the goods to A., enclosing a bill of exchange for his acceptance, and on the same day C., acting as agent for A., directed the goods to be forwarded by rail to Liverpool. Upon their arrival there the railway company sent A. the usual advice note that the goods "remained there to his order and were then held by the company, not as carriers, but as warehousemen." A. did not accept the bill of exchange, but filed a petition for liquidation. B. having claimed the right of stoppage in transition as against the trustee under A.'s liquidation:—Held, that the acceptance of the bill of exchange was not a condition precedent to the passing of the property in the goods; and also that the goods on arriving at Liverpool had reached their final destination, and consequently that the transitus had ended. Exp. Cutting, Re Chadwick, 29 L. T., N. S., 431.

5. L. & S., carrying on business in London and at Hong Kong as L., S., & Co., bought goods of L. and others, merchants at Manchester, to be shipped to their firm at Hong Kong. The goods were on a ten months' credit, and it was agreed that remittances of proceeds of the sales should be made from Hong Kong to meet the acceptances of L. & S. given for the price of the goods, on receipt of the bills of lading. L. & S. contracted for the carriage, and shipped the goods in a vessel which they engaged, and the bills of lading deliverable to their firm in Hong Kong, or their assigns, were signed by the master and handed over to L. & S., who accepted the draft of the vendors for the amount of the purchase. Before the goods or bills of lading reached Hong Kong, L., S., & Co., being insolvent, and pressed by two banking firms at Hong Kong, to whom they were largely indebted, in consideration of their debt to the bank assigned to them the "whole of their property, premises, and chattels, specified in a schedule thereto, with all the estate, right, title, interest, claim or demand of L., S., & Co. arising thereout or therefrom." The schedule enumerated "all goods and bills of lading, or other documents, for all goods now on the way hither." In pursuance of this agreement the bills of lading were indorsed and handed over to the banking firms, to whom the insolvent circumstances of L., S., & Co. at that time were well known:—Held, that the transitus had not ended before the arrival of the goods at Hong Kong, as the transitus continued while the goods were in charge of a third party contracted with as carrier for the purpose of forwarding them. Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, 2 L. R., P. C., 393; 5 Moo., P. C., N. S., 538; 17 W. R. 468; 38 L. J., P. C., 30; 21 L. T., N. S., 33.

1. Where goods have been contracted to be sold to a vendee, delivery of such goods by the vendor on board a ship ostensibly belonging to a firm of which the vendee is a member, and of which ship he is sole registered owner, is a delivery of such goods to the vendee, so as to exclude the vendor's right of stoppage in transitu, if such ship is a general ship, and takes up the goods in course of one of its regular trips, even though the bills of lading, signed by the captain for such goods, should be made in favour of the vendee and his assigns, and one of such bills should be retained by the captain. Schotemans v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 2 L. R., Ch., 332; 86 L. J., Ch., 361; 15 W. R. 537; 16 L. T., N. S., 189. Reversing 1 L. R., Eq., 349; 12 Jur., N. S., 42; 35 L. J., Ch., 100; 14 W. R. 270; 13 L. T., N. S., Bky., 733.

2. An agreement was entered into between L., a merchant in London, and W., a manufacturer in Yorkshire, that W. should from time to time supply L. with goods, W. drawing upon L., and L. accepting bills of exchange for the invoice price of the goods. L. was to ship the goods to R. at Shanghai, for sale on L.'s account. On receipt of the bills of lading L. was to send them to R., to whose order they were to be made out. W. was to have a lien upon the bills of lading, and each shipment of goods in transit outwards, or in the hands of the consignee or any other persons, which lien, however, was to extend only to the particular shipment, and was to cease when the bills of exchange given for that shipment had been paid. No notice of this agreement was given to R. In pursuance of the agreement L. ordered a parcel of goods of W. The goods were packed by W.'s packer, who forwarded them by railway to London in bales marked for Shanghai, and addressed to a ship called the Gordon Castle designated by L., which was loading in the West India Docks for Shanghai. The freight to London was paid by W. The packer, in advising L. of the dispatch of the goods, told him that they were at his disposal. L. accepted a six months' bill of exchange drawn upon him by W. for the invoice price. The railway company, in advising L. of the arrival of the goods at their Poplar Docks Station, told him that they remained at his order and were held by the company as warehousemen at his risk, but added, "will be sent to the Gordon Castle." The goods were shipped on board that vessel. The bills of lading were by L.'s directions made out to the order of himself or assigns, but they were never delivered to him by the shipowners, inasmuch as he did not pay the freight. The ship sailed for Shanghai with the goods on board. A few days previously L. had stopped payment, and shortly after she had sailed he committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which he was adjudicated a bankrupt. The bills of lading were still in the possession of the shipowners in London, of whom they were claimed by W. and by the trustee in the bankruptcy. It was arranged that the goods should be sold by the agent of the shipowners at Shanghai, and the proceeds of sale paid to the person who should be entitled to them:—Held, that the agreement did not deprive W. of the right to stop the goods in transitu; that the transit was not ended till the goods arrived at Shanghai, and that the demand by W. of the bills of lading from the shipowners was an effectual stoppage in transitu. Consequently, that W. was entitled to have the bill of exchange satisfied out of the proceeds of sale. Exp. Watson, Re Love, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 35; 46 L. J., Bky., 97; 36 L. T., N. S., 75; 25 W. R. 489.

Held, also, that W. could have obtained an injunction to restrain L. from sending the goods to any other destination than Shanghai. Id.

Held, also, that the agreement, giving to W. a lien upon the bills of lading, etc., was not a bill of sale within the meaning of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 36. Id.

3. Goods were purchased of B. in London by A., residing at Falmouth. On the 27th of October 1876 B. delivered the goods for shipment on a steamer calling at Falmouth, and on the same day posted an invoice to A. On the 29th of October the steamer left London, and on the 31st arrived at Falmouth, where the goods were discharged on the quay and taken to the warehouse of C., who was the agent of the Steam Packet Company, and in the habit of holding goods landed from the steamers at the risk and subject to the order of the consignees, and also with the exclusive right as between himself and the Steam Packet Company of delivering goods to the consignees. On the 30th of October A. committed an act of bankruptcy by absconding from Falmouth, and on the 4th of November 1876 he was adjudicated bankrupt. On the 4th of November B. telegraphed instructions to C. not to deliver the goods:—Held, that the transitus had not ended on the arrival of the goods at Falmouth, and transfer to the warehouse of C., who, in the absence of instructions, held them as forwarding agent, and not as an agent for B. to keep the goods; and, accordingly, that the right of B., as unpaid vendor, to stop the delivery of the goods prevailed as against the claim of A.'s trustee in bankruptcy. Exp. Barron, Re Wordell, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 783; 46 L. J., Bky., 71; 36 L. T., N. S., 325; 25 W. R. 466.

Semble, that a wharfinger holding goods in transitu cannot turn himself into an agent for the consignee so as to put an end to the transitus without the express authority of the consignee. Id.

4. Manufacturers at Sheffield contracted to deliver goods free on board at Liverpool, and would have sent the goods thither in their own name but for a subsequent arrangement with the purchasers, under which the goods were loaded in trucks sent by the purchasers, and on their arrival at Liverpool were warehoused in the name of the purchasers' agents there:—Held, under the circumstances, that the transit was at an end in law when the goods were loaded in the trucks. Mercant Banking

Co. of London v. Phoenix Bessemer Steel Co., 46 L. J., Ch., 418; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 205; 25 W. R. 457; 36 L. T., N. S., 395.

1. G. & Co., merchants in America, shipped a number of bales of cotton to Liverpool "consigned to order, for account and risk of W. & Co., of Luddenden Foot." At the same time G. & Co. sent to B. & Co., their agents at Liverpool, the shipping documents and a bill drawn by G. & Co. for W. & Co.'s acceptance. On W. & Co. accepting the bill, B. & Co. handed to them the shipping documents, and by their direction delivered the cotton to the railway company to be forwarded to Luddenden Foot, but before the whole of the cotton was delivered there, W. & Co. had filed a petition for liquidation. G. & Co. thereupon claimed the right of stoppage in transitu over the remainder of the cotton:—Held, that by the terms of the contract between the parties, Liverpool was the place of destination for the cotton, and that the transaction between them was completed when W. & Co. accepted the bill drawn against the consignment, and the shipping documents were handed over to him. Exp. Blackburn, Exp. Gibbs, Re Whitworth, 33 L. T., N. S., 479; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 101; 45 L. J., Bky., 10; 24 W. R. 298.

At Luddenden Foot there was a railway siding constructed on the property of the company, but kept in repair at the expense of W. & Co., for whose sole use and convenience it was made. When trucks containing bales of cotton reached Luddenden Foot, they were generally placed on the siding, and thence conveyed across the main line of the railway to the mill of W. & Co. on the other side. Such of the above-mentioned bales of cotton as reached Luddenden Foot prior to the filing of the liquidation petition, were, with the exception of one truck load, which remained on the general siding of the company, placed on the railway siding. Others were immediately taken across to the mill and manufactured, the rest remaining upon the siding. Other portions of the cotton reached Luddenden Foot after the date of the liquidation petition:—Held, assuming that Liverpool was not the destination of the cotton, that the cotton which was placed upon the railway siding at Luddenden Foot had reached its ultimate destination; and also that, under the circumstances, the delivery of part of the cotton was a constructive delivery of the whole. Id.

2. A cargo of 114 tons of miscellaneous iron castings was consigned from Scotland to London on board a ship chartered by the vendor, the bill of lading being made out in favour of the purchaser or his assigns, he or they paying freight. After thirty tons of the cargo had been delivered to the purchaser, the vendor gave notice to stop the unloading of the ship. At this time only part of the freight had been paid to the master of the ship. Soon afterwards the purchaser filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver was appointed. The balance of the freight was paid by the receiver, and the remainder of the iron was placed in medio:—Held, that, inasmuch as it could not be supposed that the master intended to abandon his lien for the unpaid freight, the delivery of the thirty tons did not operate as a constructive delivery of the whole cargo, and that consequently the transitus was not at an end as to the remainder of the cargo, and the vendor's notice to stop in transitu was given in time. Exp. Cooper, Re McLaren, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 68; 48 L. J., Bky., 49; 27 W. R. 518; 40 L. T. 105.

3. Delivery of goods by the vendor to a carrier, even though the carrier be nominated and hired by the purchaser, is only constructive, not actual delivery to the purchaser, inasmuch as the contract with a carrier to carry goods does not make the carrier the agent or servant of the person with whom he contracts. Till the goods are in the actual possession of the purchaser, the transit is not at an end, and it makes no difference that their ultimate destination has not been communicated by the purchaser to the vendor. Exp. Rosevear China Clay Co., Re Cook, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 560; 48 L. J., Bky., 100; 27 W. R. 591; 40 L. T. 730.

A contract was entered into for the sale of some china clay to be delivered free on board at a specified port, and to be paid for by an acceptance of the purchaser. Afterwards the purchaser chartered a ship and gave notice to the vendors, who then delivered the clay on board the specified ship at the port agreed upon. The destination of the clay had not been communicated to the vendors. Before the ship left the harbour the vendors heard of the insolvency of the purchaser, and gave notice to the master of the ship to stop the clay in transitu. No bill of lading had been signed, nor had the purchaser given any acceptance for the price of the clay:—Held, by the chief judge, that so soon as the clay was delivered on board the ship the transit was at an end, and the vendors had no right afterwards to stop the clay in transitu. Held, by the Court of Appeal, that, the clay being in the possession of the master of the ship only as carrier, the transit was not at an end, and the notice to stop was given in time. Id.

SUNDAY.

1. An apprentice to a barber in Scotland, bound by his indenture "not to absent himself from his master's business on holidays and week-days, late hours or early, without leave," went away on Sundays without leave, and without shaving his master's customers:—Held, that the apprentice could not be lawfully required to attend his master's shop on Sundays for the purpose of shaving the customers, and that work, and all other sorts of handicraft, were illegal in England as well as in Scotland, not being works of necessity, or mercy, or charity. Phillips v. Innes, 4 Cl. & F. 234.

2. A charter of incorporation was granted to the company, on condition that no person should be admitted to a company's building or grounds on the Lord's day in consideration of any money payment, whether made directly or indirectly, unless the sanction of the legislature should be obtained. The company having obtained an Act of Parliament, authorising their directors to agree with the proprietors of any shares or stock for the conversion thereof into tickets of admission for life or years for such proprietor or his nominee, but providing that nothing therein contained should relieve the company from any condition contained in the charter, advertisements were issued by the directors, offering to accept the surrender of shares in exchange for tickets of admission for a term limited, to be made out to bearer, and to be available for Sundays as well as ordinary days:—Held, that the admission of any person on a Sunday, by means of such ticket as proposed, would occasion a forfeiture of the company's charter, and upon a bill filed by a shareholder, the company was restrained from accepting a surrender of any shares in exchange for such ticket of admission. Rendall v. Crystal Palace Co., 4 Kay & J. 326; 27 L. J., Ch., 397.

3. Where a prisoner has been arrested on a Sunday, a subsequent detainer by another party, without collusion, is not vitiated by the illegality of the original arrest. Hooper v. Lane, 6 H. L. Ca. 443.

Practice.] 4. In the time limited by the 28th Rule of the 16th Order of May 1845, Sunday is reckoned. Brenster v. Thorpe, 11 Jur. 6.

5. Under the 19th Order of 1828 (as amended in 1831), if there be no seal between the long vacation and the first day of Michaelmas term, the computation of a fortnight allowed for obtaining the Master's report upon exceptions to an answer for insufficiency, is not to begin until the first day of that term.

although the Vice-Chancellor may have been sitting during the interval, and may have then made the order of reference. When the fortnight would expire on a Sunday, the time is extended to the Monday following. Angell v. Westcombe, 1 Myl. & C. 48.

1. In the number of days for notice of the time and place of examining a witness, an intermediate Sunday is to be reckoned. McIntosh v. Great Western Railway Co., 1 Hare 328; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 283; 6 Jur. 464.

2. A conditional order may be served on a Sunday. O'Leary v. Cavanagh, Hay & J. 373.

3. Quære, whether in the computation of the six days allowed by the 5th General Order for referring exceptions, a Sunday, being the first of such days, is to be counted; but see the 13th Order of the 8th May 1845. Dalton v. Hayter, 1 Ph. 515; 14 L. J., Ch., 259; 9 Jur. 674.

4. If the 8th day after service of an order nisi for confirming a report is a Sunday, that day is not to be reckoned. Milburn v. Lister, 5 Sim. 565.

5. Subpœna served on Sunday irregular; attachment and injunction therefore set aside before appearance, on entering appearance with the registrar. Mackreth v. Nicholson, 19 Ves. 367.

6. Arrest under chancellor's warrant, for contempt of court, good on Sunday. Eap. Whitchurch, 1 Atk. 55.

7. In the language of the Court, bail are the gaolers of the principal; meane arrest by them good, even on a Sunday. Eap. Gibbons, 1 Atk. 239.

8. As to arrest under bankruptcy on Sunday. Eap. Kerney, 1 Atk. 54.

9. Denial on Sunday is not an act of bankruptcy. Eap. Preston, 2 Ves. & B. 312; 2 Rose 21.

10. Appearance on the 26th April; order on the 8th May, staying proceedings until security for costs should be given; security given on the 4th December; cause set down pro confesso on the 24th January, the 23rd being Sunday:—Held, irregular, the defendant having the whole of the 24th to answer. *White v. SUPPORT OF LAND.

See also RAILWAY, V. 2.

11. The right of a person to the support of the land immediately around his house is not in the nature of an easement, but is the ordinary right of enjoyment of property, and till that is interfered with he has no legal ground of complaint, although, in fact, something may have been done which (without his knowledge) has occasioned results that will afterwards affect his property. Backhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. Ca. 508.

12. A landowner has a right independent of prescription to the lateral support of his neighbour's land, so far as that is necessary to sustain his soil in its natural state, and also to compensation for damage caused either to the land or to buildings upon it by the withdrawal of such support. Hunt v. Peake, 1 Johns. 705; 6 Jur., N. S., 107; 29 L. J., Ch., 785.

Where houses of the plaintiffs were injured by mining operations of the defendant in adjoining land, which would have caused the soil to subside without the additional weight of the houses, a decree was made for perpetual injunction, and for compensation. Id.

Semble, also, that he may acquire by twenty years' enjoyment the right to lateral support for the additional weight of buildings erected on the land. Id.

13. The Court will interfere to restrain excavations which threaten danger to adjoining houses, though the actual resulting damage may be small. Dent v. Auction Mart Co., 35 L. J., Ch., 555.

14. Defendant stayed by injunction from pulling down his rooms to prejudice of plaintiff's rooms. Bush v. Field, Cary, 90.

15. A right to lateral support from adjoining land may be acquired by twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment for a building proved to have been newly built, or altered so as to increase the lateral pressure, at the beginning of that time; and it is so acquired if the enjoyment is peaceable and without deception or concealment, and so open that it must be known that some support is being enjoyed by the building. Dalton v. Angus, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 740; 50 L. J., Q. B., 689; 44 L. T. 844; 30 W. R. 191.

Semble, such a right of support is an easement within the meaning of the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2. Id.

Two dwelling-houses adjoined, built independently, but each on the extremity of its owner's soil and having lateral support from the soil on which the other rested. This having continued for much more than twenty years, one of the houses (the plaintiffs') was, in 1849, converted into a coach factory, the internal walls being removed and girders inserted into a stack of brickwork in such a way as to throw much more lateral pressure than before upon the soil under the adjoining house. The conversion was made openly, and without deception or concealment. More than twenty years after the conversion the owners of the adjoining house employed a contractor to pull down their house and excavate, the contractor being bound to shore up adjoining buildings and make good all damage. The contractor employed a sub-contractor upon similar terms. The house was pulled down, and the soil under it excavated to a depth of several feet, and the plaintiffs' stack being deprived of the lateral support of the adjacent soil sank and fell, bringing down with it most of the factory:—Held, that the plaintiffs had acquired a right of support for their factory by the twenty years' enjoyment, and could sue the owners of the adjoining house and the contractor for the injury. Bower v. Peate (1 L. R., Q. B. D., 321) approved. Id.

1. Where ancient buildings belonging to different owners adjoin each other there is a right of support from the building as well as from the land; and this right of support can be claimed under the provisions of the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71). The mere fact that the support is derived from property which belongs to an ecclesiastical corporation does not prevent the right of support being acquired under the Act. But the enjoyment of the right must have been open and not surreptitious to come within the provisions of the Act. Damage having been done by the wrongful acts of a contractor or his workmen, employed under a contract and specification, to a neighbour's vault, it was held, under the circumstances, that both the employer and contractor were liable for it, and judgment was given for the plaintiff, with costs against both defendants. Lemaitre v. Davis, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 281; 51 L. J., Ch., 173; 46 L. T. 407; 30 W. R. 860.

Implied Grant of.] 2. A conveyance of land to a railway company, for the purposes of the line, gives a right by implication to all reasonable subjacent and adjacent support connected with the subject-matter of the conveyance, and therefore, although in the conveyance to the railway company the minerals are reserved, the grantor is not entitled to work them even under his own land, in any manner calculated to endanger the railway. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Sprot, 2 Macq. H. L. Cas. 479; 2 Jur., N. S., 623. S. P. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Belhaven (Lord), 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 56; 3 Jur., N. S., 573.

On the same principle, if an owner of a house conveys the upper story, reserving all below, the purchaser will be entitled, on general principles, without stipulation, to prevent any damage to the walls underneath. Id.

But if B. grants a meadow to A. for grazing purposes, retaining the minerals and the adjacent land, and if A., having no warranty against subsidence, thinks fit to build a house on the edge of the meadow, and the house falls, he is without remedy against B., and has himself alone to blame for the consequences. Id.

If, however, the grant were made expressly for building purposes, there would then be an implied warranty of support, both subjacent and adjacent. Id.

In the case of a grant to a railway company for the purposes of the railway, if the line which divides the land granted from the land retained traverses a quarry, it may be that no adjacent support is necessary, and that the grantor may dig or remove the whole contiguous soil. Id.

But if the dividing line traverse a bog or bed of sand, it will be incumbent on the grantor to leave untouched such an intervening measure of lateral support as will prevent any part of the land granted from retreating. Id.

3. Whether a conveyance of land for the purpose of a railway being constructed thereon be voluntary or compulsory, every grant carries with it all that is necessary to the enjoyment of the subject-matter of it, and a certain amount of lateral support, being essential to the safety of the railway, is a necessary incident of the grant. The amount of support depends on the special circumstances of the locality; thus, if the railway crosses a river, then the abutments of the bridge will require a greater support than the other parts of the railway, and the conveyance will carry such support as an incident. Elliott v. North-Eastern Railway Co., 32 L. J., Ch., 402; 8 L. T., N. S., 337; 7 Jur., N. S., 6; 9 W. R. 172.

Certain reservations of minerals contained in a railway Act:—Held, not to vary the ordinary rule at common law as above stated. Id.

The principle that a grantor, knowing the purpose for which his conveyance is accepted, cannot derogate from his own grant, applies to a compulsory conveyance, under an Act of Parliament, to a company. S. C. 6 Jur., N. S., 817; 29 L. J., Ch., 808; 8 W. R. 603.

The Act is sufficient notice to the grantor of the purposes for which the conveyance is made. Id.

The principle that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant does not apply to an accidental state of circumstances—the flooded state of a mine, for instance—existing at the time of the conveyance. Id.

Therefore, where the owners of a drowned mine sold land to a railway company for the purpose of building a bridge, and the land sold derived additional support from the water in the mine:—Held, that the railway company was not entitled to restrain him from pumping out the water and restoring the mine to a working condition, although the mine had continued in its drowned state, and the works had been abandoned for forty years prior to the purchase. Id.

4. The corporation of L. put up a piece of land for sale in lots, the interest acquired by each purchaser being a right to a lease of the lot purchased by him, and he being bound to build upon the lot according to plans to be approved by the corporation. None of the lots were sold, and in July 1868 the plaintiff agreed for the purchase of one of the lots by private contract, subject to the original conditions. He furnished plans showing a foundation 10 feet 9 inches deep; but finding the subsoil unsafe he laid his foundation at a depth of 8 feet 3 inches to the knowledge of the corporation, whose officer inspected the operations and made no objections. In June 1869 the plaintiff's house was carried to the joists of the ground floor. In August 1869 the defendant purchased from the corporation the adjoining lot. In October 1869, when the plaintiff's house was nearly finished, the corporation granted him his lease. After this the defendant got his lease, and in 1881, wishing to carry his foundations lower than those of the plaintiff, excavated to a considerably greater depth and endangered the foundations of the plaintiff's house:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to restrain the defendant from excavating so as to let down the plaintiff's house, for that there was not enough in the special circumstances of the case to take away the right of support from the adjoining lands of the grantor which is implied in a grant of land for the purpose of building. How the case would have stood if the grants to the plaintiff and the defendant had been contemporaneous, or if the right of support claimed would have prevented the corporation from building in a reasonable way on the adjoining lot, quære. Rinby v. Bennett, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 559; 48 L. T. 47; 31 W. R. 222.

I. THE CONTRACT.

1. General Principles, 6654.
2. Consideration, 6654.
3. Statute of Frauds. Effect, 6654.
4. Sureties. Who are, 6655.

1. General Principles.

1. Seemle, there are three kinds of contracts of suretyship between which it seems important to distinguish : (1) Those in which there is an agreement to constitute, for a particular purpose, the relation of principal and surety, to which agreement the creditor thereby secured is a party; (2) those in which there is a similar agreement between the principal and surety only, to which the creditor is a stranger; and, (3) those in which, without any such contract of suretyship, there is a primary and a secondary liability of two persons for one and the same debt, the debt being, as between the two, that of one of those persons only, and not equally of both, so that the other, if he should be compelled to pay it, would be entitled to reimbursement from the person by whom (as between the two) it ought to have been paid. Duncan, Fox, & Co. v. North & South Wales Bank, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 11; 50 L. J., Ch., 355; 43 L. T. 706; 29 W. R. 763.

2. Seemle, guarantees may be divided into two classes, the one in which the consideration is entire, and the other in which the consideration is fragmentary, supplied from time to time, and therefore divisible. (1) An instance of the first is where a person enters into a guarantee that in consideration of the lessor granting a lease to a third person he will be answerable for the performance of the covenants. The moment the lease is granted there is nothing more for the lessor to do, and such a guarantee as that of necessity runs on throughout the duration of the lease. (2) The other where the consideration is supplied from time to time, it is reasonable to hold, unless the guarantee stipulates to the contrary, that the guarantor may at any time terminate the guarantee. Instances of the second class are more familiar. They are, where a guarantee is given, to secure the balance of a running account at a banker's, or a balance of a running account for goods supplied. Lloyd's v. Harper, 43 L. T. 481; 15 L. R. Ch. D., 290; 50 L. J., Ch., 140; 29 W. R. 452. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 217; 42 L. T. 218; 28 W. R. 419.

2. Consideration.

3. Undertaking by one person to pay the debt of another does not require a consideration moving between them. Exp. Minet, 14 Ves. 190.

4. Undertaking in writing to guarantee the debt of another is sufficient, within the Statute of Frauds, without stating any consideration as between the creditor and the surety. Exp. Gardom, 15 Ves. 286.

5. An agreement by C. & Co. to answer the draft of S. for repairs, will not give any right to another person in whose favour a draft or bill is drawn to proceed against C. & Co., there being no consideration between the drawee and C. & Co. Rattenbury v. Fenton, 3 Myl. & K. 505; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203.

Seemle, that if the agreement had gone on to state in whose favour the draft was to be drawn, there would have been an equity raised. Id.

There is no consideration between the purchaser and the vendor's creditor to entitle the latter to recover from the purchaser the amount of repairs done to the subject matter of the sale. Id.

6. A bond was vested in a trustee in trust, as to income, for a married woman for life, for her separate use, with remainder in trust for her issue; and in default of issue, in trust for such persons as the married woman alone, notwithstanding coverture, should by deed, or instrument in writing, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and to be attested by, two credible witnesses, appoint. The husband being indebted to his bankers, on the balance of an account current, the married woman deposited the bond with the bankers, with a letter signed by her to the effect, that in consideration of the bankers paying, or having already paid, the cheques of the husband, or otherwise advancing him sums of money, she thereby guaranteed the repayment thereof; and that she deposited, as a collateral security, the bond, which she undertook to assign to the bankers, on request:—Held, that the consideration was sufficient, and that the separate life interest of the wife was effectually charged; but that, the letter not having been executed and attested as required by the power, the Court would not, under the circumstances, give effect to it as an appointment. Thackwell v. Gardiner, 5 De G. & Sm. 58.

7. A surety, upon being informed that proceedings were contemplated against himself and his principal, stated by letter his intention to pay the debt:—Held, after his decease, that the letter was a promise to pay; that his undisputed right to payment was a sufficient identity of the plaintiff, whose address was not set out in the claim; and that the forbearance to sue was a sufficient consideration for the promise. Jones v. Beach, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 543.

8. A scrivener who is employed to examine into a title fails in his duty, by neglecting to make a thorough inquiry, etc., whereby his client is a sufferer; afterwards the scrivener agrees to make him satisfaction in another way. This agreement decreed in specie, though urged that there was no consideration. King v. Withers, Pre. Ch. 19.

9. C. having got into difficulties, four friends agreed to help him, and became liable for him on various bills, none of which were signed by all the four. By an agreement subsequently signed by the four friends, they appointed W. their joint solicitor, to act for them in all matters relating to the bills, with full authority to settle the same on the best terms he could, and, upon the amount being ascertained for which the liabilities could be discharged, they undertook to provide the same in the proportion of one-fourth each. W. failed to effect any settlement:—Held, that the agreement was not binding, inasmuch as the settlement in consideration of which it was made could not be effected. Ardeckne v. Howard (Lord), 27 L. T., N. S., 194; 20 W. R. 879.

3. Statute of Frauds. Effect.

10. As to engagement to pay the debt of another, requiring writing under the Statute of Frauds. Exp. Carr, 3 Ves. & B. 110.

11. Undertaking in writing to guarantee the debt of another sufficient, within the Statute of Frauds, without stating any consideration as between the creditor and the surety. Exp. Gardom, 15 Ves. 286.

1. One promises, if the widow of an intestate would permit him to be joined with her in the letters of administration, he would make good any deficiency of assets to pay debts:—Held, the promise was binding, and not within the Statute of Frauds. Distinction where a promise is to pay the original debt on the foot of the original contract, and where it is a new consideration; the former is within the Statute of Frauds, the latter is not. Tomlinson v. Gill, Amb. 330.

2. An agreement to guarantee a composition to all the creditors of a third person who should, before a day specified, sign a release to the debtors of their respective claims, being an agreement to pay the debt of another, is within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, and cannot, in the absence of fraud, be varied by a subsequent parol agreement. Emmet v. Dewhurst, 3 Macn. & G. 587; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 497; 15 Jur. 1115.

3. A surety, upon being informed that proceedings are contemplated against himself and his principal, states by letter his intention to pay the debt:—Held, after his decease, that the letter was a promise to pay; that his undisputed right to payment was a sufficient identity to the plaintiff, whose address was not set out in the claim; and that the forbearance to sue was a sufficient consideration for the promise. Jones v. Beach, 21 L. J., Ch., 543.

4. A testator appointed his son and three other persons his executors and trustees. The son disclaimed and renounced probate, and afterwards purchased a portion of the testator's property. The other legatees raised a claim for losses incurred by the trustees, and the son's solicitor wrote on his behalf to the claimants, agreeing to pay 300*l.* in satisfaction of the losses:—Held, that this letter was not within the Statute of Frauds, as an agreement to answer the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; and that it was not invalid for want of consideration. The claim was therefore allowed against the son's estate. Orrell v. Coppock, 2 Jur., N. S., 1244; 26 L. J., Ch., 269; 5 W. R. 185.

5. A board of health had been formed in a town. L. was its chairman. M., a contractor, had, under the orders of the board, formed a main sewer in the town, and, under the orders of the board, had purchased pipes which would be required to be used in making the connecting drains between certain private houses and the main sewer. The board had, under 11 & 12 Vict., c. 63, s. 69, given notice to the inhabitants of certain streets to make these connecting drains, the effect of the notice being that if the inhabitants did not make those connecting drains the board might make them and charge the expenses on the defaulting inhabitants. The notice was disregarded. No subsequent resolution was passed by the board. M. was about to take away his carts and working materials, when L. said to him, "What objection have you to making the connections?" to which M. answered, "None, if you or the board will order the work, or become responsible for the payment": and L. replied, "M., go on and do the work, and I will see you paid."

M. did the work, and, the board refusing to pay, sued L. for the amount:—Held, that the words of L. were properly left to the jury as evidence to sustain a claim against him personally, and that they did not constitute a promise to pay the debt of another, so as to come within the operation of the Statute of Frauds. Lakeman v. Mountstephen, 7 L. R., H. L., 17; 22 W. R. 617; 43 L. J., Q. B., 188; 30 L. T., N. S., 437.

When the promise is made to answer for the debt or default of a third person, and there is no actual, but only a supposed liability on the part of that third person, the promise is equally void, whether it is in writing or not. But where the promise is made in respect of a future contemplated liability on the part of a third person, such a promise is within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Id.

6. A., at the request of and on a verbal offer by B. to indemnify him against loss, joined with C. in a joint and several promissory note, which he was afterwards compelled to pay:—Held, that the offer to indemnify A. was not an agreement within the Statute of Frauds, s. 4, and, therefore, need not be in writing, and that A., having afterwards become the executor of B., was entitled to retain the amount paid by him on the note as a debt due to him from B.'s estate. Wildes v. Dudlow, 19 L. R., Eq., 198; 44 L. J., Ch., 341; 23 W. R. 435.

4. Sureties. Who are.

7. A. and B. give a joint promissory note, upon which money is lent by C. to them, and by them to D. B. becomes a bankrupt, and A. is obliged, after the bankruptcy, to pay the note:—Held, that he is not a surety for B., but that A. and B. are principal debtors or co-sureties, and therefore that A. could not prove for a moiety of the note against B.'s estate. Exp. Porter, 4 Dea. & Ch. 774; 2 Mont. & A. 281; 4 L. J., N. S., Bky., 86.

8. In the case of an ordinary money bond, there is no distinction upon the face of it between principal and surety. Secus, in the case of an indemnity bond, where the surety expressly stipulates for the act of his principal. Antrobus v. Davidson, 3 Meriv. 578.

9. Second tenant in tail joins in a mortgage and bond with the first, who receives the money lent:—Held, to be only a surety, and the real estate not liable in aid of the personal estate of the first, although he had joined in hopes to prevent a recovery. Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 251.

10. The drawer of a bill of exchange, though not strictly a surety for the acceptor, who is generally primarily liable, may be in the nature of a surety; but the drawer, if first liable by the real nature of the transaction, with reference to the distinction, whether the acceptor had effects or not, is to have relief as a "person liable" within the stat. 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 8. Exp. Yonge, 3 Ves. & B. 40.

11. The solicitor for the petitioning creditor, on the commission being superseded, writes to the bankrupt, "I am ready and hereby offer to allow and pay the costs" incurred by the bankrupt in petitioning for the supersedeas:—Held, that the solicitor was personally liable on this undertaking, and that the bankrupt might petition for an order on the solicitor to pay these costs, notwithstanding a subsequent commission had issued against him, under which he had not obtained his certificate, his assignees disclaiming all interest in the matter. Exp. Bentley, 2 Dea. & Ch. 578; 2 L. J., N. S., Bkly., 39.

1. By a deed executed in consideration of 9,000*l.*, purported to be paid to M. L. and H. E., by D. and H., M. L. granted to them an annuity for three lives, charged upon the estate of M. L., and further secured by the joint and several bond and warrant of attorney of M. L. and H. E., but with a stipulation that execution should not be issued on the judgment to be entered on the bond, until the annuity should be in arrear for forty days. The deed of annuity contained covenants for title, and further assurance by M. L., and a covenant to pay the annuity by M. L. and H. E. :—Held, upon the construction of this deed, that H. E. was merely a surety, and not a principal, it having been proved that the sum of 9,000*l.* was raised for the use of M. L., and, therefore, that a subsequent alteration in the contract, reducing the rate of the annuity from 20*l.* to 9*l.* per cent., upon the loan of a further sum of 1,000*l.* without the knowledge of H. E., discharged him from his liability as a surety. (Eyre v. Hollier, 11. & G. temp. Plunk. 250.) But this decision was reversed, the House of Lords holding that H. E. was a principal, and that the question whether a person is principal or surety in the grant of an annuity is to be determined on the terms of the instrument, and that no extrinsic evidence is admissible for that purpose. Hollier v. Eyre, 9 Cl. & F. 1; 2 Dr. & War. 590.

2. A. and B. desiring to borrow money of a bank, the bank refused unless C. would join to secure them; C. agreed to join, and A. B. and C. drew a cheque, and the money was paid to them :—Held, that this was a joint, and not a joint and several liability; that C. was in the nature of a surety only, and a bill against his estate, after his death, could not be supported. Other v. Iverson, 3 Drew. 177; 1 Jur., N. S., 568; 24 L. J., Ch., 654; 3 W. R. 332; 3 Eq. Rep. 562.

3. If a creditor, with the knowledge that a person is intending to be surety, accepts the instrument or security which pledges his liability, the rights of suretyship attach upon the transaction. Wythes v. Labouchere, 5 Jur., N. S., 499.

4. A. and B. were trustees. B. was guilty of a breach of trust. The trust fund was ultimately restored, and A.'s costs were directed to be paid out of B.'s estate. A. afterwards paid money on account of these costs, after the passing of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 97; and it was held that the money was paid by A. in the character of surety, and therefore that he was entitled, under the 5th section, to claim as a specialty creditor on account of it. Lockhart v. Reilly, 27 L. J., Ch., 54.

5. H. and W. were two of the directors of a banking company. It was agreed at a meeting of directors that H. should retire from being a director and shareholder on the terms embodied in a minute, as follows :—"H.'s shares to be taken at par. Release and indemnity may be arranged by the solicitors of the parties. (Signed), F. K., chairman." H. retired, and his shares were cancelled. W. was not present at the meeting at which this minute was passed, but was aware of the transaction, and expressed no disapprobation, though he did not act to ratify it. It was subsequently determined, under the winding up of the company, that the cancellation of H.'s shares was invalid, and that he was a contributory :—Held, that W. was not under any liability to indemnify H. against liabilities of the company arising after H.'s retirement. Exp. Walker, 2 Jur., N. S., 1216.

W.'s silence did not make the minute binding on him, and even if it had done so, as the indemnity was agreed to be given only on the footing of the validity of the surrender of H.'s shares, and that surrender was invalid, the obligation to indemnify would have failed with it. Semble. Ib.

The minute did not import a contract by the directors personally to indemnify H., but the indemnity was to be given by the company; and as the surrender of the shares to the company was void, no personal liability remained in the directors. Semble. Ib.

Quære, whether, if the directors had agreed personally to indemnify H., the same result would not have followed, the agreement to indemnify being based on the assumed validity of the surrender of H.'s shares. Ib.

6. A surety, who as such was indebted together with his principal upon a joint note, received from the holder a letter, stating that the holder was about to make the principal a bankrupt, but could not proceed without joining the surety, and asking whether the surety would join the principal in a fresh note payable jointly and severally. The surety's solicitor answered that the surety would in a post or two pay the amount and interest due on the joint security :—Held, that the contract was not changed, and that the surety had, neither at law nor in equity, rendered himself severally liable. Jones v. Beach, 2 De G. M. & G. 886; 22 L. J., Ch., 425.

Quære, whether the dicta in Thorp v. Jackson (2 Y. & Coll. 561) can be supported, and whether a joint loan creates in equity a joint and separate liability. Ib.

7. Surety by subsequent dealings with the creditor, held to have become a principal. Reade v. Lowndes, 23 Beav. 361; 3 Jur., N. S., 877; 26 L. J., Ch., 793.

Judgment having been obtained against A., a surety, he entered into a new arrangement with the creditor (irrespective of the principal debtor), by which execution was not to issue while he kept up certain policies for securing the debt :—Held, that A. became principal, and not surety, by the new arrangement, and that no subsequent dealing between the creditor and the principal debtor would annul it. Ib.

Therefore the creditor having afterwards taken the principal debtor in execution and discharged him without payment :—Held, that A. was not thereby released. Ib.

II. EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

1. Continuing Guarantee, 6657.
2. Limited Guarantee, 6658.
3. Lost Bonds, 6659.
4. Judgment recovered against Debtor. Estoppel, 6659.
5. Other Cases, 6659.

1. Continuing Guarantee.

1. Where a bond was given by a merchant to his bankers as a security for a balance and for future advances, to which A. was a party as surety, afterwards, the bond being defective, a fresh one was executed in a larger sum, as was alleged, to secure a floating balance, but in the common form, with interest, from the date of the execution, which was also signed by A., but the purpose was not explained to him:—Held, that he was liable only for the balance then actually due, subject to an account of payments subsequently made to the bankers by his principals. Walker v. Hardman, 4 Cl. & F. 258; 11 Bli. N. S. 229. And see 5 L. J., Ch., 39.

2. A guarantee to bankers for the repayment of bills, and any advances that might be made:—Held, to cease on death of one of the partners before the time to which it was expressed to extend, and that bills accepted before and payable afterwards were within it; and that the amount guaranteed could not be increased by any act of the continuing firm and customer, but might be diminished; and that the amount guaranteed in respect of the bills, was not, under the particular form of the guarantee, to be reduced by a balance due to the customer from the bank. Holland v. Teed, 7 Hare 50.

3. A father gave his son a promissory note for 2,000*l.*, which was indorsed by the son, and discounted by a banking company, who took from the father an agreement under seal, that in consideration of their discounting the note, certain deeds of the father's deposited at the same time should remain a security for all money due or to become due from the son to the company on any account whatsoever. At the date of the agreement the son owed the company 3,000*l.* upon a running account, and the amount was subsequently increased to 5,000*l.* The father having died:—Held, that the agreement was a continuing guarantee, and that the bank was entitled to prove against the father's estate, not only for the 2,000*l.*, the amount of the note, but for all sums due to them from the son. Burgess v. Eve, 41 L. J., Ch., 515; 13 L. R., Eq., 450; 20 W. R. 311; 26 L. T., N. S., 540.

Semble, that a general guarantee under seal may, under certain circumstances, be withdrawn upon the terms of paying all that may be due under it at the time of giving notice of withdrawal. Id

4. B. being indebted to the firm of W. and P. gave them a memorandum of charge on leasehold premises, subject to a prior mortgage. The memorandum charged the premises "with the payment of 100*l.* for goods delivered, or to be delivered, to me by you to that amount." The prior mortgage was afterwards transferred to the defendant. Between the date of the memorandum of charge and the transfer of the prior mortgage, W. and P. had delivered goods to B., and received cash from him on account to 120*l.*; but on the balance of account, just before the transfer the sum of 81*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* was due to W. and P.:—Held, that the security given by the memorandum of charge of 100*l.* and payment thereon did not expire upon the delivery of goods to the amount, but was a continuing security. Weston v. Empire Assurance Corporation, 19 L. T., N. S., 505.

5. A guarantee was given by a married woman entitled to separate estate to a trader, who supplied her husband with goods in the course of business, in the following words:—"In consideration of you, M., having, at my request, agreed to supply and furnish goods to C., I do hereby guarantee to you the sum of 500*l.* This guarantee to continue in force for six years and no longer." C. was at the date of the guarantee indebted to M. for goods supplied, and in consequence of a bill given by C. in respect of such goods having been dishonoured, M. had declined to supply any further goods without security:—Held, that the guarantee only extended to payment for goods supplied subsequently to its date. Morrell v. Cowan, 26 W. R. 90; 37 L. T., N. S., 586; 47 L. J., Ch., 73; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 151. Reversing 25 W. R. 808; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 166; 37 L. T., N. S., 122; 25 W. R. 808.

6. Certain of the directors of a company guaranteed personally to the company's bankers the drafts of the agent of the company to the extent of 1,000*l.*, and 1,000*l.* further, undertaking to provide the bankers with funds to meet the acceptances before maturity. The company kept a current account with the bankers, and the drafts of its agent were from time to time honoured and debited to this current account. One of the guarantors died, and his estate was under the administration of the Court. The company's current account had been constantly overdrawn; at the date of the testator's death it was overdrawn to the amount of 1,605*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*; and the company was now in liquidation:—Held, that the guarantees given were a continuing security not satisfied by the earlier credits in the current account, and that, therefore, the bankers were entitled to prove against the testator's estate for the sum of 1,605*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* and interest at 4 per cent. from the date of the testator's death. Re Booth, Browning v. Baldwin, 27 W. R. 644; 40 L. T. 248.

7. A guarantee the consideration for which is given once for all cannot be determined by the guarantor, and does not cease on his death. But as to whether a guarantee for future advances, which the party guaranteed is not bound to make, is not determinable by the guarantor, and whether it does not cease on notice of his death, quære. Lloyd's v. Harper, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 290; 50 L. J., Ch., 140; 43 L. T. 481; 29 W. R. 452. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 217; 42 L. T. 218; 28 W. R. 219.

In May 1863, a father, on the occasion of the admission of his son as an underwriting member of Lloyd's, addressed to the managing committee of that body a letter, by which he held himself responsible for all his son's engagements in that capacity. Lloyd's was then a voluntary association, governed by certain by-laws, under which a person once admitted a member could not be excluded from membership except in the event of his bankruptcy or insolvency. The association consisted of underwriting members, non-underwriting members, and subscribers. The practice of the underwriting members was to underwrite policies of marine insurance for the benefit of various owners of property, both members of the association and outsiders, but the policies with outsiders could only be effected through the agency of insurance brokers who were either members of or subscribers to the association.

The association as such incurred no liability on the policies underwritten by its members. In 1871 the society was incorporated by Act of Parliament, all the rights of the committee on behalf of the members being vested by the Act in the corporation. In 1876 the father died, and notice of his death was shortly afterwards given to Lloyd's. In 1878 the son became bankrupt, and thereupon ceased to be a member of Lloyd's:—Held: (1) That the guarantee was not determined by the death of the father or by the notice of it, but that his estate was liable in respect of engagements contracted by the son after his death. (2) That the guarantee extended to all engagements contracted by the son as an underwriting member of Lloyd's, whether with members or with outsiders. (3) That the committee of Lloyd's, and the corporation of Lloyd's as their successors, were trustees of the benefit of the guarantee for all the persons, whether members or outsiders, with whom the son had contracted engagements as an underwriting member, and that the corporation could maintain an action to enforce the guarantee against the father's estate for the benefit of all those persons; on the ground, as to the outsiders, that the brokers, through whom the son's engagements with them were contracted, were trustees for their principals of the right which they themselves had to call on their own agents, Lloyd's, to enforce the guarantee for their benefit. Ib.

2. Limited Guarantee.

1. Surety for indemnity to a limited amount, having paid to the extent of his engagement, entitled to dividends, upon proof by the creditor under the bankruptcy of the principal debtor, subject (see Exp. Turner, 8 Ves. 243) to a deduction of the proportion of dividend upon the residue of the debt proved beyond that for which the surety was engaged, supposing that expunged. The surety not entitled to the benefit of the proof against other estates upon a distinct security. Paley v. Field, 12 Ves. 435.

2. Surety by bond for advances generally, but under a limited penalty, is not liable beyond that amount. Therefore, paying that sum, he is entitled to a proportion of the dividends on the proof by creditor to a greater amount under the bankruptcy of the principal debtor. Exp. Rushforth, 10 Ves. 409.

Surety in bond may compel creditor to prove under bankruptcy of principal, and creditor will be a trustee of dividends for surety paying the whole; but party liable with others upon bill of exchange, cannot raise that equity by payment subsequent to proof of holder, until he has received 20s. in the pound. Id. 414.

It is a rule, that surety charged for the whole debt, and paying only part, has no equity to stand in the place of party paid. Id. 420.

3. A surety by bond for advances generally, but under a limited penalty, is not liable beyond the penalty; by paying the penalty, he is entitled to a proportion of the dividends from a proof by the creditors to a greater amount under the bankruptcy of the principal debtor; and a surety may compel the creditor to prove under the commission against the principal, and to become a trustee of the dividends for such surety having paid the whole. Exp. Wood, cor. Ld. Thurlow, Bridge Ind.

4. Where a limited guarantee has been given, and the limit has been exceeded by the guarantee, who afterwards receives from the estate of the principal debtor a dividend, the guarantor is entitled to the benefit of a proportional part of that dividend on the amount guaranteed, notwithstanding that the unpaid debt greatly exceeds the amount of such guarantee. Thornton v. McKean, 1 Hem. & M. 525; 1 N. R. 16; 11 W. R. 140; 32 L. J., Ch., 69.

Where the guarantee has recovered the whole sum guaranteed in an action against the guarantor, the right of the latter to file a bill for an account and payment to him of such dividends is not barred by the fact that he might have pleaded a set-off to that extent in the action, and omitted to do so. Ib.

Such a claim is not a "mere money demand" within the meaning of the principle which excludes suits from damages merely. Ib.

A surety gave to a creditor a guarantee to the extent of 5,000*l.*, against losses that might arise from advances to be made to his principal. Advances were made to the principal to an amount considerably exceeding 5,000*l.*, and after his death the creditor proved in an administration suit for the whole debt, and received dividends thereon. He afterwards recovered the 5,000*l.* in an action against the surety. Upon a bill filed by the surety:—Held, that he was entitled to be paid such a proportion of the past and future dividends as was received in respect of the 5,000*l.*, and that he had not lost his equity by not pleading a set-off to the action. S. C. 32 L. J., Ch., 69; 11 W. R. 140.

5. A guarantee to B. & Co. the payment of all goods supplied by them to H. until they received notice from C. of the discontinuance of the guarantee, "but so as A.'s liability under the guarantee should not at any time exceed 250*l.*" H. afterwards became bankrupt, and owed B. & Co. for goods 657*l.*, upon which sum they received a dividend in the bankruptcy. A. paid the 250*l.* under his guarantee:—Held, that A. was entitled to receive from B. & Co. a proportionate part of the dividend. Hobson v. Bass, 19 W. R. 992; 6 L. R., Ch., 792.

6. Four directors of a company, by way of security for any balance which might be due from the company to a bank, gave the manager of a branch of the bank their promissory note for 2,000*l.*, and the manager indorsed the note to the bank. The company was wound up. The bank proved in the winding-up for 3,659*l.* as due by the company to the bank, and was declared entitled to a dividend of 1,051*l.* on that sum. The bank afterwards brought an action against one of the makers of the note, who paid the bank 2,067*l.* for debt and interest due on the note:—Held, that the giving the note was in pursuance of an ordinary contract of suretyship, and that the surety who had paid the 2,067*l.* was entitled to receive from the bank a share of the dividend, bearing the same proportion to the whole dividend as the sum paid by him bore to the sum proved for by the bank. Gray v. Seckham, 7 L. R., Ch., 680; 20 W. R. 920; 27 L. T., N. S., 290; 42

L. J., Ch., 127. Affirming 41 L. J., Ch., 281; 26 L. T., N. S., 233.

3. Lost Bonds.

1. If bond is lost, equity will set it up against surety, as well as principal debtor. Sheffield v. Castleton (Lord), 1 Eq. Abr. 93.

2. Relief upon a lost bond against sureties, the principal being out of the jurisdiction, upon giving an indemnity against the demand of the plaintiffs, or persons claiming under them by virtue of the bond, and such costs, damages, and expenses as defendants may be put to by loss of the bond. East India Co. v. Boddam, 9 Ves. 462.

4. Judgment recovered against Debtor. Estoppel.

3. In the absence of special agreement a judgment or an award against a principal debtor is not binding on the surety, and is not evidence against him in an action against him by the creditor, but the surety is entitled to have the liability proved as against him in the same way as against the principal debtor. Exp. Young, Re Kitchen, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 666; 50 L. J., Ch., 824; 45 L. T. 90.

4. Where A. contracts to indemnify B. against a claim, and a judgment is obtained against B. in an action bonâ fide defended by him, and he pays the demand, A. cannot be heard to contend that the judgment was erroneous; the case is otherwise where there is no contract to indemnify, but only a claim to indemnity founded on a breach of trust. Gray v. Lewis, Parker v. Lewis, 8 L. R., Ch., 1035; 21 W. R. 923, 928; 29 L. T., N. S., 199.

5. Other Cases.

5. A surety not chargeable in equity further than he can be by law. Ratcliffe v. Graves, 1 Vern. 196.

6. Sureties relieved from the penalties of the bond in Chancery. Anon., Cary 12.

7. A petition by a solvent surety of an insolvent tenant to surrender or reduce the rents of certain premises, which had greatly diminished in value since the lease was made, was dismissed with costs. Semble, the general rule of equity by which a surety is supposed to be favoured more than the principal debtor, is erroneous. Re O'Neill's, San. & Sc. 686.

8. The 54th and 56th sections of statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, are not confined to mere personal obligations by the surety, but are applicable to cases where the property of the surety is assigned as collateral security for the debt of the principal. Maber v. Hobbs, 2 Y. & Coll. 317; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 12.

9. A surety is no more justified in placing the whole of his property out of the reach of liability to pay the debt than if he were the principal debtor. Goodricke v. Taylor, 2 De G. J. & S. 122.

10. The vendor of a trading concern guaran teed the net profit of the business sold, and of another business, in which the purchasers were also engaged, at a certain specified sum:—Held, that the guarantee applied to the profits made by the two concerns, after deducting the interest allowed on the amount of further capital advanced by the purchasers for the purpose of carrying on the concern. Kirby v. Wright, 2 Myl. & K. 131; Coop. temp. Brougham 215.

11. Extent of acceptance of bills by a surety. M'Fee v. Morris, 7 Jur. 387.

12. Injunction against securities obtained by one French emigrant against another, by arresting him when about to sail on the expedition against France, and under an obligation entered into in France as surety, which, according to the law of France, could not affect the person. Talleyrand v. Boulanger, 3 Ves. 447.

13. By an agreement between the Agra and Masterman's Bank, a Calcutta tea company, and their London agents, the bank granted a letter of credit, permitting the tea company to draw bills on the bank. The tea company undertook that the credit should provide for the outlay for the season's tea; that it would ship the whole produce of the season; that it would draw upon the London agents for the value of the produce, and forward to the bank the bills, with bills of lading, policy of insurance, and invoice of tea shipped; and that it would pay any balance which might appear due on the credit on or before a certain date. The London agents guaranteed to the bank that the tea company would perform its undertaking, "the terms of which we hereby confirm, holding ourselves responsible for the same." The tea company drew, in accordance with the letter of credit, several bills on the bank, which it accepted. Before any of them became due, the bank stopped payment, and was wound up, and its property transferred to the Agra Bank. The bills were not paid at maturity, but were afterwards paid either by the Agra and Masterman's Bank or by the Agra Bank. The tea company never performed any part of its undertaking except the drawing the bills, before mentioned, and became insolvent. The Agra Bank, relying on the guarantee, claimed to be a creditor, for the amount of the bills, against the estate of the London agents, who had executed a deed of inspectorship:—Held, that the fact of the Agra and Masterman's Bank stopping payment and being wound up did not excuse the tea company from fulfilling its contract; or release the guarantors from their liability; and that the claims of the Agra Bank must be admitted for the amount of such damage as it had sustained by the default of the tea company to fulfil its contract. Exp. Agra Bank, Re Barber, 39 L. J., Bky., 39; 9 L. R., Eq., 725.

14. A receiver, who had omitted to account regularly, became bankrupt, being indebted to the trust estate in a large sum, and for some time no steps were taken to have the accounts duly passed:—Held, that under the particular circumstances of the case, his sureties were not liable to pay interest on the balance found due from him, though he himself, if solvent, would have had to pay such interest. Semble, that in general the sureties of a receiver are answerable for such interest, as well as for such principal as the receiver himself is liable to pay. Dawson v. Raynes, 2 Russ. 466.

1. The sureties for a receiver are liable under the recognisance for the costs of an attachment against the receiver for not passing his account, and for all costs incurred in discharging him and appointing a new receiver. Mauvssell v. Egan, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 283; 3 J. & L. 251.

2. The sureties in the recognisance of the committee of a lunatic for his obeying the orders of the Lord Chancellor, with respect to the lunatic's estate:—Held, liable, on his making default, not only for the balance reported due from him, but also for the costs of the proceedings taken for enforcing the payment of such balance, although they may have had no notice of the default of their principal until after such proceedings taken. Re Lockey, 1 Ph. 509; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 164.

3. Where, in a suit against the principal and sureties to a bond, the sureties were held liable to make good a deficit of principal and interest, and costs were given against the principal, but not against the sureties:—Held, that the sureties were not to be liable for the costs by circuitry, under the bond. Berwick (Mayor) v. Murray, 3 Jur., N. S., 847; 26 L. J., Ch., 201.

4. The respondent advanced money to the appellant on a guarantee to be repaid "on the completion of six houses in accordance with a contract between myself and T." One of the terms of the contract was that the houses were to be built to the satisfaction of a surveyor, and payment was to be made upon his certificate. No such certificate had been given. In an action on the guarantee, brought by the respondent against the appellant, the jury found that, as a matter of fact, the houses were completed:—Held, that the respondent was entitled to recover, notwithstanding the absence of the certificate. Lewis v. Hoare, 44 L. T. 66; 29 W. R. 357.

5. A surety has no equity to restrain an action against him by the creditor on the ground that the creditor has instituted proceedings in equity under which he may obtain relief against the principal, in the absence of circumstances to prevent the surety from recovering over against his principal. Jackson v. Digby, 2 W. R. 540.

6. There may be cases in which a security will be rectified as against a surety, so as to make it conformable to his intentions. Spaight v. Corone, Edwards v. Spaight, 1 N. R. 550; 1 Hem. & M. 359.

7. On claim filed to have a fund provided by the executors of a surety who had died insolvent, and who had with his principal covenanted to pay 1,000*l.* in May 1858, the Court held that the executors ought to provide the fund. Atkinson v. Grey, 18 Jur. 282.

8. A mortgagee upon two estates, one of which was not to be had recourse to unless the other proved insufficient, instituted a redemption suit against the prior mortgagees of the other property, setting up various doubtful claims against them. The prior mortgagees offered a small sum of money for the purchase of her interests. She applied to the owners of the surety estate, offering either to sell to them on the same terms, or to allow them to continue the suit. They refused or neglected to do anything, and she then sold to the prior mortgagee:—Held, that under the circumstances the sale was binding on the owners of the surety estate. Aoland v. Gravener, 1 N. R. 350. And see 34 L. J., Ch., 474; 31 Beav. 482.

III. RIGHT OF SURETY TO SECURITIES.

9. A surety paying off the debt is entitled to the benefit of a security given without his knowledge by the debtor to the creditor, at a different time, to secure another demand in addition to that for which he became surety. Scott v. Knox, 2 Jones 778.

10. A surety is entitled to the benefit of all securities obtained by the creditor from the principal for the debt; and where a surety pays a debt secured by separate judgments obtained against himself and the principal, upon their joint and several bond, he may compel the creditor to assign to him the judgment obtained against the principal. Mara v. Ryan, 2 Jones 715.

11. Where a creditor recovered judgment on a bill of exchange (in which the plaintiff was joined as surety) against the principal debtor, and also against the bail in the action, and the surety "paid and satisfied" both judgments, and took assignments thereof:—Held, that he could not recover on the judgment against the bail. Armitage v. Baldwin, 5 Beav. 278.

12. A. brought separate actions against B. and C. for the payment of the amount of a joint and several promissory note given by B. and C., his surety, to A., and recovered judgment in both actions; A. issued out execution only against C., the surety, who thereupon paid the debt and costs. C. dying, his administratrix filed a bill against A. and B. for an assignment of the judgment obtained by A. against B., the principal debtor:—Held, that as the debt was discharged, the judgment was satisfied, and could not be enforced at law against B., and that a court of equity would not compel an assignment, and that judgment was only available at law for the costs of the action against the principal. Doubiggen v. Bourne, 2 Y. & Coll. 462; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 82; 1 Jur. 102; Youngs 111.

13. Upon the appointment of A. to the office of county treasurer, in 1831, he, together with four other persons, B., C., D., and E., entered into security by recognisance, whereby A. acknowledged himself indebted to the King in 7,000*l.* sterling; by the same instrument B. and C. acknowledged themselves to be jointly and severally indebted in 5,000*l.* sterling; and D. and E. in like manner in 2,000*l.* sterling. In the condition (which was that A. should duly account, pursuant to the 4 Geo. 4, c. 33) the instrument was described as "the foregoing recognisance." In 1837 A. resigned the office of treasurer, being a defaulter to the amount of 18,000*l.* and upwards, of which sum about 4,000*l.* was due to the Crown, and the residue to the county:—Held, that this was a recognisance securing a single sum of 7,000*l.* and no more:—Held, also, that 7,000*l.* British was the amount thereby secured, although the amount which the 4 Geo. 4, c. 33 required such treasurer to secure was 7,000*l.* Irish; and that upon payment of that sum by A. the principal, he was entitled to have the recognisance of himself and sureties vacated; but on payment of that sum by the sureties they were not entitled as against the Crown to the benefit of the recognisance acknowledged by A. the principal. Reg. v. O'Callaghan, 1 Ir. Eq. B. 439; Jon. & C. 154.

Sureties of a county treasurer, paying the amount of his recognisance, are not by reason of such payment entitled to priority over the Crown, there being a debt due by such treasurer to the Crown ultra the amount of the recognisance. Id.

1. B. became surety for S. by bond and several judgment of 1807; and S. afterwards became surety for B. to nearly the same amount by bond of 1814. A suit for the administration of B.'s assets having been instituted by a judgment creditor of 1816, decrees to account and for a sale were pronounced in 1822. S., having in 1821 been obliged to pay the debt for which he was B.'s surety, procured the creditors of 1807 to prove the debts under the decree:—Held, that they were entitled to be paid the sum reported due to them, but that they should assign their judgment against S. to a trustee for B.'s creditors. Peoples v. Stewart, Hayes 90.

2. As to the assignment of a judgment to a trustee for the benefit of a co-surety, see Scott v. Lowry, Hayes 95. n.

3. The plaintiff joined the testator as surety in a bond, which he paid after the death of the testator, taking assignment of the bond; he is only a simple contract creditor of the testator. Jones v. Davids, 4 Russ. 277.

4. The right of a surety who pays the debt, to the benefit of subsidiary securities belonging to the principal, is the common equity of the Court; therefore, where A. granted land to B., who covenanted to pay rent, and keep premises in repair, and C. executed a mortgage to A. to secure the performance of the covenants, a bill to foreclose (rent being in arrear) filed by A., who afterwards accepted a surrender of the land from B., dismissed; for the subsidiary fund to which C., as surety, was entitled to resort for indemnity being extinguished by A. accepting the surrender, C. was thereby deprived of his remedy over the land. Harberton (Lord) v. Bennett, Beat. 386.

5. A surety for part of a debt is not entitled to the benefit of a security given by the debtor to the creditor, at a different time, for another part of the debt. Wade v. Coups, 2 Sim. 155.

6. Where two persons execute a bond, the one as principal, the other as surety, and no other assurance is executed at the time, the surety paying the bond debt is a simple contract creditor only of the principal. Copis v. Middleton, T. & B. 224; 2 L. J., Ch., 82. S. P. Simpkins v. Poulet, 2 L. J., Ch., 81.

It is a general rule, that in equity a surety is entitled to the benefit of all the securities which the creditor has against the principal; the rule, however, must be qualified, by considering it to apply to such securities as continue to exist, and do not get back upon payment to the person of the principal debtor. Id.

Where a bond is given by principal and surety, and at the same time a mortgage is made for securing the debt, the surety, if he pays the bond, has a right to stand in place of the mortgagee. Id.

7. Sureties are entitled to the benefit of every security which the creditor has against the principal. Mayhew v. Crickett, 2 Swan 191; 1 Wils. 418.

8. Surety paying off specialty debts is to be considered as a specialty creditor. Robinson v. Wilson, 2 Madd. 434.

9. Surety for a receiver indemnified out of the balance due to him. Glossop v. Harrison, 5 Ves. & B. 134; Coop. 61.

10. The Court will not, sitting in bankruptcy, on behalf of the sureties of a bankrupt, direct a sale of mortgaged premises for payment of the debt secured by recognisance, or for payment of any other security except a mortgage. Exp. Usher, 1 Ball & B. 197.

11. A. and B. join in executing a bond and warrant to C., who entered judgment thereon, and issued execution against A.; he, being merely a surety, filed a bill to have judgment assigned upon payment of the debt, which was decreed. Hill v. Kelly, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 265.

12. A., being indebted to B., lodges several securities for money with him as collateral securities for the debt; A. afterwards borrows a further sum of money of B., for which C. becomes his surety; A. becomes bankrupt, and B. calls upon C. to pay the second debt. The securities in the hands of B. being more than sufficient to pay the first debt, C. shall have the benefit of the surplus in reduction of the second debt. Præd v. Gardiner, 2 Cox 86.

13. Executor, surety with testator for another, allowed to retain out of estate whole amount due on bond. Bathurst v. De la Zouch, Dick. 460.

14. Where the surety pays off debt in bankruptcy, he is entitled to have an assignment of the security to enable him to obtain satisfaction for what he has paid above his own share. Exp. Crisp, 1 Atk. 133.

15. Held, in bankruptcy, that after a voluntary discharge by agreement, the creditor cannot make use of a security against third persons where the effect would be to make the party discharged again liable, though in another form and in the shape of the demand of another person. Manson v. Stock, 6 Ves. 305.

16. Bill of surety in a bond, to have it assigned after having paid its amount, dismissed with costs, as useless. Gammon v. Stone, 1 Ves. 339.

17. Annuity bond forfeited when the grantor was discharged under an insolvent Act, which provided that future estate should not be discharged; the penalty, being less than the subsequent arrears, was allowed as the debt, and not only in favour of the purchaser of an annuity, but also of a co-obligor as surety, having compounded with the purchaser, and obtained possession of the securities, by repaying the money advanced with the arrears then due, being at that time less than the penalty. Butcher v. Churchill, 14 Ves. 569.

1. Assignment of bond to co-obligor who pays it, is of no use, since even the principal may plead payment to action in name of obligee; but action on the case lies, or perhaps indebitatus assumpsit. Woffington v. Sparks, 2 Ves. 569.

2. A. mortgaged his own estate, and his wife joined him in charging hers; this is a pledge, and the wife shall stand in the mortgagee's place. Partridge v. Powell, 2 Atk. 384. In Clinan v. Cooke (1 Sch. & Lef. 35) Lord Redesdale said this case was imperfectly reported by Atkyns.

3. Merchants in London agreeing to become sureties for a West Indian planter, on being secured by a conveyance of his plantation, in trust, with a covenant that they should be continued as consignees till the expiration of five years after the reimbursement of what they might advance:—Held, entitled to the benefit of this covenant. Whether a covenant to continue a mortgagee as consignee after payment of the debt is valid, quære. Bunbury v. Winter, 1 Jac. & Walk. 255.

4. A., together with B. and C., as his sureties, executed a bond to D., for securing 300*l.* and interest; the debt is paid by C., with the proper money of A., but C. neglects delivering up the bond to A. to be cancelled; C. afterwards procures this bond to be assigned as a collateral security for a debt of his own:—Held, that this assignment was a gross fraud in C., and a perpetual injunction was granted to restrain all further proceedings upon the bond. May v. Harman, 4 Bro. P. C. 156.

5. The principal in a bond being arrested gave bail, and judgment is had against the bail; on a bill by the sureties, who had been sued on the original bond, and paid the money, decreed the judgment against the bail to be assigned to them in order to reimburse them what they had paid with interest and costs. Parsons v. Bridgock, 2 Vern. 608.

6. A. is indebted by bond (in which J. is bound as surety), and also by simple contract, to B.; A. states an account of both debts with B., and makes a bill of sale for securing the balance, which proves deficient. On a bill by the surety, decreed the money arising by the bill of sale should be applied towards discharge of both debts in proportion. Perris v. Roberts, 1 Vern. 34.

7. As to the assignment of a bond or judgment to a surety who has paid the debt, see note to Kent v. Cantor, Wall. Lyn. 864.

8. The right of a surety to the benefit of the security held by the creditor is derived from the obligation of the principal debtor to indemnify his surety. Semble. Yonge v. Reynell, 9 Hare 809.

In a suit by A. against B. and C., a conveyance of an estate by A. to B. was declared void, and set aside for fraud, except as to an intermediate mortgage of the estate made by B. to D., to secure a sum of money lent by D. to B., and for which C. had joined B. as his surety in a bond and covenant to D.; and the decree also directed B. to redeem the estate, and procure its reconveyance to A., and, if he did not do so, gave A. the right to redeem, and to use the name of B. for that purpose, and to recover from B. the money which A. should pay to D. for such reconveyance; and the bill was dismissed against C. A. afterwards procured an assignment of D.'s mortgage to a trustee, and, in the name of the mortgagees, brought an action against C. on his covenant and bond:—Held, that if A. had redeemed D., the debt would have gone as against C.; that C., as the surety of B., would, on payment of the mortgage debt, be entitled to the benefit of the security held by D., such security not having been disturbed by the decree; that the charge of participation by C. in the fraud, whereby B. had been enabled to create the mortgage on the estate, was not a ground for depriving C. of such right; and that C. was, therefore, in a suit for an injunction to restrain A. from suing him on the bond and covenant, entitled to such relief. Id.

The circumstance of the dismissal, as against C., of the bill brought by A. against B. and C., which prayed that the mortgage debt might be paid by B. and C., was material to the case, though it was not alone conclusive, as it might well be that there might be no equity to compel C. to pay the debt, though C. might have no equity to be relieved from his legal liability to pay it. Id.

9. The contract of suretyship entitles the surety to require that his position shall not be altered by any arrangement between the creditor and the principal debtor from that in which he stood at the time of the contract, and it therefore entitles him, absolutely, to the benefit of all the securities, and for the debt which the creditor held at the time of the contract; it also entitles the surety at any time to require that the creditor shall enforce against the principal debtor not only all the remedies and all the securities for the debt which he has at the time of the contract, but also any securities for the debt which the creditor may have acquired subsequently to the contract, and which he holds at the time that the surety requires him to proceed. And as a person paying off a debt for which he is liable is entitled in equity to stand in the place of the creditor, and to have the benefit of the securities held by the creditor for such debt, so the surety, on paying off the debt of the principal debtor, is entitled to require from the creditor the benefit not only of the securities for the debt which the creditor had at the time of the contract of suretyship, but also of all the securities which he holds at the time he is paid off. But there is no implied duty in the contract of suretyship which requires the creditor to retain, for the benefit of the surety, securities, for the debt which he might subsequently receive from the principal debtor, and which, whilst the creditor holds them, the surety does not call upon him to enforce. And a creditor who, after the contract of suretyship, having taken a further security from the principal debtor, subsequently parts with that security, does not thereby either wholly or pro tanto release the surety. Newton v. Chorlton, 10 Hare 646; 2 Drew. 333.

10. Where two properties are mortgaged by A. to B. for distinct sums, and C. is surety for the one only, the right of B. to retain all the securities until repaid both debts over-rides the right of C. to have the benefit of the securities for that debt for which he is surety. Farebrother v. Wodehouse, 23 Bear. 18; 2 Jur.,

N. S., 1178; 26 L. J., Ch., 81; 5 W. R. 12. And see S. C. on appeal 29 L. J., Ch., 240.

The defendant lent A., at the same time, two sums of 2,000*l.* and 3,000*l.*, on distinct securities, and the plaintiff was surety for the first sum:—Held, that he, on paying the 2,000*l.*, was not entitled to have a transfer of the securities held for that sum until the defendant had also been paid the 3,000*l.* Ib.

1. S., in May 1850, assigned his interest in a fund in court to J. to secure payment of a loan, and a bond was at the same time entered into by S., and the petitioner and her brother as sureties, as a further security. All the parties resided at Calcutta. In consequence of the terms of the bond not having been complied with by S., a stop order, at the request of the petitioner, was in March 1853 obtained by J. The petitioner had, however, in February 1853, at Calcutta, on the demand of the attorney of J., paid the debt and interest. In May 1853 the stop order was, on the application of S., with the consent of J., discharged, but the mortgage deed remained in the possession of the agents of J. The residue of the fund belonging to S. was, by an order of December 1855, ordered to be paid over to his appointees, and thereupon the surety presented a petition, praying that so much of the fund as might be necessary might be sold and paid to her in satisfaction of her demand against S.:—Held, that the petitioner was entitled to the relief which she prayed, and that she had adopted the proper means to obtain redress. Allen v. De Lisle, 3 Jur., N. S., 928; 5 W. R. 158.

2. A. joined B. in a promissory note as surety for a moiety of a debt due from B. to C., with knowledge that the whole debt was also secured by a bill of sale of B.'s furniture. C., who was also B.'s landlord, took the furniture under a distress for rent which became due subsequently to the date of the bill of sale:—Held, that C. had precluded himself from appropriating the furniture to any other purpose than the debt for which it was given as a security, and that A. was entitled to be discharged to the extent of one-half of the value of the furniture. Pearl v. Deacon, 3 Jur., N. S., 1187; 26 L. J., Ch., 761; 1 De G. & J. 461; 5 W. R. 793. Affirming 3 Jur., N. S., 879; 24 Beav. 186; 5 W. R. 702.

A surety is entitled to the benefit of all securities taken by the creditor, whether he has notice of them or not. S. C. 24 Beav. 186; 3 Jur., N. S., 879; 5 W. R. 702.

3. D., a partner in a banking firm in New York, in which firm H. and two other persons were also partners, made two promissory notes in the name of H., D., & Co. payable to W. at a bank in New York. The notes came, by several indorsements, into the possession of I., a merchant at New York, and he, on presenting them at maturity for payment, found that they were dishonoured. D. had notice of the dishonour, and subsequently, in consideration of the amount of the notes, conveyed to I. land, which was declared to be intended as a security for payment of the notes and interest. H. being in England, the notes were indorsed to W., and he, in accordance with instructions, sued H. for the amount, and having received information that H. intended to leave the country, he caused him to be arrested. H. was discharged from custody on G. and F. becoming sureties in a bond to the sheriff, and they (H. having absconded) afterwards had to pay the amount of the judgment entered in the action against him. G. and F. then applied to W. for the mortgage executed by D., and were informed that he had nothing to do with it. On bill filed by G. and F. against W., I., S. H., and G. D.:—Held, that he was entitled to have the mortgage delivered up to him; to be paid the costs of the suit out of the amount of the judgment; and to recover against S. H. and G. D. the whole amount of principal, interest, and costs in respect of the notes. Goddard v. White, 6 Jur., N. S., 1364; 3 L. T., N. S., 313.

4. A creditor holding a mortgage for a guaranteed debt is bound to hold it for the benefit of the surety, so as to enable him, on paying the debt, to take the security in its original condition, unimpaired. Pledge v. Buss, Johns. 663; 6 Jur., N. S., 695.

Therefore, where a creditor held a mortgage for a debt for which the plaintiff was surety, and after the bankruptcy of the principal debtor, without notice to the surety released the assignees, and the bankrupt's estate, in consideration of the conveyance to him of the equity of redemption:—Held, that the surety was discharged, and that it was not enough for the creditor to allow in account the dividends released, and to give a new charge on the mortgaged premises. Ib.

The rights of a surety, with respect to securities, extend to securities taken after the contract of suretyship. Ib.

5. D. and P., under a covenant in a mortgage deed, paid the premiums on a life-policy forming part of the security, as sureties. By a contemporaneous instrument, to which they were not parties, the equity of redemption was assigned in trust for the benefit of the creditors of the mortgagor, and D. signed the trust-deed as a creditor. The mortgage was paid off, and the policy was sold by the trustee of the creditor's deed, under a power contained therein. A creditor's suit being instituted:—Held, that the creditors were not entitled to take the money produced by the sale of the policy, without making payment in satisfaction of the premiums paid by D. and P. Aylwin v. Witty, 30 L. J., Ch., 860; 9 W. R. 720.

6. A surety being entitled to all collateral securities, the creditor is bound to preserve them, and if through his negligence they are lost the surety is discharged. Strange v. Books, 11 W. R. 983.

7. A. was tenant for life of lots 1 and 2, to which B. was entitled in remainder; B., and A. as his surety, mortgaged lot 2, B. alone covenanting to pay. By a contemporaneous deed, B. conveyed his interest in the other lot on trusts to indemnify A. as his surety: A. paid large sums for interest on the mortgage:—Held, that he was entitled to the benefit of the deed of indemnity only, but not to stand in the place of the mortgagee on lot 1. Cooper v. Jenkins, 32 Beav. 337; 1 N. R. 383.

8. A surety guaranteed the sufficiency of a security covering part of the principal's debt:—Held, that the release of his guarantee did not necessarily vacate the security. Wagh v.

Wren, 1 N. R. 142; 11 W. R. 244; 7 L. T., N. S., 612.

1. A surety who pays off a debt for which he became answerable, is entitled to all the equities which the creditor could have enforced, and that, not merely against the principal debtor, but also against all persons claiming under him. Drew v. Lockett, 32 Beav. 499; 9 Jur., N. S., 786.

In 1858 L. mortgaged real estate to E., and D. joined in that mortgage as surety for L. Subsequently thereto, L. further mortgaged the same estate to C., and in 1854 and 1855 executed several other mortgages to S., who then had notice of the first mortgage. In 1858 the first mortgage was transferred to S. The legal estate in the property comprised in that mortgage and the subsequent mortgages afterwards became vested in S. A portion of the real estates had been sold by E., and S. claimed a priority over D. in respect of the unsold part of the property. On a bill by D., to ascertain the priorities of the several incumbrancers:—Held, that D. was entitled to the unsold realty in priority to S. S. C. 11 W. R. 843; 8 L. T., N. S., 782.

A. mortgaged his estate to C., and B. became A.'s surety for the debt. Afterwards A. mortgaged the estate to D., who had notice of the first mortgage. The first mortgage was subsequently paid off, partly by B., the surety, but D. got a transfer of the legal estate:—Held, that the surety had still priority over D. for the amount paid by him under the first mortgage, as surety for A. Id.

2. A surety is not entitled to have an assignment of the principal security, unless he pays the debt in full. Ewart v. Latta, 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 983.

3. A creditor who holds several securities for his debt, partly given by the principal debtor and partly by a surety, must retain all securities given by the principal debtor for the benefit of the surety, and if he neglects to do so, he discharges the surety. Merchants' Bank of London v. Maud, 18 W. R. 312. And see 19 W. R. 312.

4. The Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 97, s. 5, applies to a contract entered into before the passing of the Act, provided a breach of it has taken place, and payment has been made by the surety after the passing of the Act. Re Cochran, 16 W. R. 324; 17 L. T., N. S., 487; 5 L. R., Eq., 209; 37 L. J., Ch., 293.

In 1854 W., as surety, joined in a bond with C. The Act was passed in July 1856. In December 1856 the condition of the bond was broken, and W. paid the amount due on the bond in January and April 1857:—Held, that W. was entitled to rank as a specialty creditor of C. Id.

5. One of the makers of a joint and several promissory note, who was a surety for the other, effected an insurance on the life of the latter, with his privity and concurrence, for an amount equal to that secured by the note. The principal died, having appointed the surety his executor, and the surety received the insurance money:—Held, that to the extent to which it was not required for indemnifying the surety, it ought to be applied in payment of the debt. Lea v. Hinton. 5 De G. M. & G. 823.

6. In 1863 A. effected a policy on his own life for 2,000*l.*, which he mortgaged to the assurance company to secure 1,000*l.*, and shortly afterwards he effected a second policy for 1,000*l.*, which he mortgaged to the company to secure 500*l.* In 1865 he again mortgaged the first-mentioned policy (together with a further policy which was afterwards forfeited) to the company to secure 1,500*l.*, and B. became his surety for the repayment of the last-mentioned advance. In 1865 A. became bankrupt, and the company recovered judgment for 1,500*l.* and costs against the surety. B. had paid 1,000*l.* under this judgment, and A.'s wife had paid to B. 450*l.* out of her separate estate to reimburse him for his loss. In 1867 A. died; and in a suit instituted by B. against the company and A.'s assignee to recover out of the balance due to A.'s assignee in respect of the two subsisting policies the amount which B. had paid as surety:—Held, that B. was entitled to have the securities marshalled, and to be paid the whole amount of his loss by the company, before anything was paid to A.'s assignee in respect of either policy; and further, that the payment made by A.'s wife out of separate estate did not affect B.'s rights as against A.'s assignees. Heyman v. Dubois, 25 L. T., N. S., 558; 13 L. R., Eq., 158; 41 L. J., Ch., 224.

7. C., as surety for D., gave to B., in 1847, a mortgage security for various specified sums, and also for such moneys as B. should pay in respect of moneys borrowed by D. from E. The deed stated that B. was liable as a surety for the repayment of these moneys to E.; but, in fact, he was under no legal liability for them, though he considered himself under a moral liability to see that they were repaid:—Held, that the deed could not stand as a security to B. for moneys paid in respect of the debt to E. Lake v. Brutton, 2 Jur., N. S., 839; 25 L. J., Ch., 842. Affirming 18 Beav. 34; 18 Jur. 412; 23 L. J., Ch., 294.

Previously to the execution of the deed of 1847, D. had deposited with B. a policy of insurance as security for part of the moneys which were afterwards secured by that deed. Shortly after the execution of that deed, D. assigned to C. property (not including the policy) by way of indemnity against his liabilities as surety. It appeared that C. at that time did not know of the existence of the policy. In 1848 D. formally assigned the policy to B. as a collateral security for the money secured by the deed of 1847. In 1850 B., with the approbation of D., deposited the policy with E. as security for the debt due to him from D. C. having paid off the money for which he was liable as surety under the deed of 1847 claimed the policy:—Held, that whether the doctrine in Newton v. Chorlton (10 Hare 646) (as to the right of a surety to securities taken by the creditor of the principal debtor after the suretyship has been entered into being defeated by an assignment of those securities before the surety pays the debt), were correct or not, the surety was entitled to the policy, for that the creditor had a security upon it when the suretyship was entered into, which security was merely perfected by the subsequent assignment; and that E., who took the policy with notice of the suretyship, took subject to the rights of the surety. Id.

Quere, whether, if E. had taken without such notice, he would have been protected. Ib.

Held, also, that the right of the surety to the benefit of the creditor's security on the policy was not lost by his taking an express indemnity on certain specified property of the principal debtor, not including the policy, he not being at the time aware of the existence of that security. Ib.

Quere, whether, if he had known of the existence of the security on the policy, his taking a specific indemnity not including the policy, would have barred his right to it. Ib.

1. The rules as to a surety's right to securities do not apply where the only suretyship is created by indorsing and discounting a bill of exchange. Duncan, Fox, & Co. v. North & South Wales Bank, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 88; 48 L. J., Ch., 376; 27 W. R. 521; 40 L. T. 371.

A., a member of a firm, pledged his separate estate to a bank to secure to the bank the balance for the time being owing to the bank from the firm. Afterwards the firm accepted bills of exchange which were indorsed to and discounted for B. by the bank. The firm became bankrupt, and the bills were dishonoured at maturity. The bank having demanded of B. payment of the amount due on the bills, B. claimed to be a surety for the firm in respect of the bills, and to be entitled as such surety to the benefit of the securities held by the bank:—Held, that B., as indorsee of the bill of exchange, was a principal debtor to the bank and not entitled to any such right of suretyship as he claimed. Ib.

Held, also, that if the law of suretyship applied A. and B. were co-sureties for the firm, and that A. had the prior right to require B., as a principal to the bill, to contribute to relieve him. Ib.

2. A surety, who has obtained from the principal debtor a counter-security for the liability which he has undertaken, is bound to bring into hotchpot, for the benefit of his co-sureties, whatever he receives from that source, even though he consented to be a surety only upon the terms of having the security, and the co-sureties were, when they entered into the contract of suretyship, ignorant of his agreement for security. Steel v. Dixon, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 825; 50 L. J., Ch., 591; 45 L. T. 142; 29 W. R. 736.

3. In December 1854 S. assigned certain premises and a policy of assurance to secure the repayment of a sum of 200*l.* advanced to him by W., and interest. The proviso for redemption was that, on payment of the money, W. would reassign the premises and policy unto S., his executors, administrators, or assigns, or as he or they should direct. F., by the same indenture, as surety, covenanted, for himself only, with W., that while the 200*l.* or any part should remain owing he would pay the interest and premiums, and he also assigned a policy on his own life, and covenanted to pay the premiums. W., at four different periods between May 1856 and May 1866, advanced moneys amounting to 530*l.* to S. on the security of the same premises. S. made default in the payment of interest. W. died in 1878, and his executors made a demand upon F. for all arrears, which he paid, and he also paid the premiums on the policy of S.:—Held, that F. was entitled to have a transfer of all the securities on paying what was due upon the mortgage of December 1854. Williams v. Owen (13 Sim. 597) not followed. Newton v. Chorlton (10 Hare 646) followed. Forbes v. Jackson, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 615; 51 L. J., Ch., 690; 48 L. T. 722; 30 W. R. 652.

4. A., B., and C. executed to D. a mortgage of B.'s lands (comprised in the petition for sale) and of C.'s lands, to secure 2,914*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, of which 900*l.* was B.'s debt, and the remainder C.'s debt. The mortgage contained a proviso that, as between A., B., and C., A. was a surety only, and that B. and C. respectively were sureties only for portion of the said sum; yet, with regard to D., they were to be considered as principal debtors, so as not to be released by time being given to any other or others of them, or by any act or omission of D., whereby, as sureties only, they would be released. B. subsequently executed to D. two other mortgages of the lands comprised in the petition. A. having paid D. the full amount of the debt secured by the first mortgage, claimed to stand in D.'s place for 900*l.*, being B.'s debt, and the moiety of 2,014*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, being C.'s debt, for which both he and B. were joint sureties, and to be placed on the final schedule on foot of, and in the priority of, the first mortgage:—Held, first, that A.'s claim was valid, and that he was not estopped by the special proviso of the mortgage from relying on his equitable rights of surety. Re Kirkwood, 1 L. R., Ir., 108.

Held, secondly, that a surety joining in a mortgage is entitled on paying off the original mortgage debt to get the benefit of all the securities held by the original mortgagee, without paying off subsequent mortgages. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the doctrine of tacking is applicable only in the case of an existing debt. Ib.

5. A person who became surety for a limited amount of a debt has, on paying the amount for which he is liable, all the rights of a creditor in respect of that amount, and is entitled to share in the security held by the principal debtor for the whole debt. Goodwin v. Gray, 22 W. R. 312.

6. On the 3rd of March, goods belonging to C., lying at the St. Katherine Dock in the custody of the Docks Company, were bought by D., as broker for buyers and sellers, for B. & Co., without disclosing the names of his principals, and D. indorsed to them the delivery order he had obtained from the sellers on the representation of B. & Co. that the goods were wanted for immediate shipment. They, however, pledged their interest in the goods to the plaintiffs, and indorsed the order to them. On the prompt day, the 18th of March, the plaintiffs' clerk lodged the order at the London office of the docks company, with this memorandum, "Hold within to our order, and have warrants made out as soon as possible." He was told that the warrants would be ready with the goods on the 20th of March. Three hours later a messenger from the office reached the warrant office at the dock house with a notice that the order had been lodged. Meanwhile B. & Co. had stopped payment, and D. being so informed, and having no notice of the plaintiffs' title, on the same day paid C. for the goods, and through a clerk, who reached the dock house before the messenger had arrived, obtained at the warrant office a warrant for the goods in the name of C., who indorsed the same to D., and gave him a second delivery order. The first delivery order was returned to the plaintiffs by the docks company, who refused to act upon it. In an action by the plaintiffs, claiming as against the docks company, C., and D., to be entitled to the goods:—Held, that D. was the surety, and B. & Co. the principal debtors; that, in the circumstances of the case, the unpaid vendor's lien had passed to D.; that the title to the goods was in D. Imperial Bank v. London & St. Katherine Docks Co., 5 L. R., Ch. D., 195; 46 L. J., Ch., 385; 36 L. T. 283.

IV. APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

1. Where a man paid into his banker's a joint promissory note, payable on demand, signed by himself and another party as his surety, of which the amount was carried to his account as money, and afterwards paid in at different times money more than sufficient to cover the amount, but drew out more than he paid in:—Held, that the surety was not entitled to have the subsequent payments of the principal debtor applied first in payment of the note, not being a party to the accounts between him as his banker. Exp. Whitworth, Re Mayor, 2 M. D. & De G. 164.

2. The respondent M., was the surety in a bond for the payment by G., the collector of taxes, etc., of all the taxes, etc., to be collected for the year 1842, to E., the receiver-general. At the date of the bond G. was in arrears for taxes collected in 1841. M. appointed one S. to collect the taxes for the year 1842, which he did as to a great part. Upon E. pressing G. for payment of the arrears of 1841, G. went to S. and asked him for 3,000*l.* to remit to the receiver-general. S. did so, taking that amount out of a chest in which he placed the moneys received in the collection of taxes. G. converted that sum and another sum of 2,000*l.*, other part of the taxes of 1842, into paper money, and transmitted it to E., but did not appropriate it to the taxes of 1842, and E. appropriated it to the arrears of 1841:—Held, that it was not necessary that G. should assent to that appropriation; and that the surety, M., was bound by the appropriation of the remittance by E. to the arrears of 1841; and that M. was liable on the bond to make up the deficiency of the year 1842. Jamaica (Att.-Gen.) v. Manderson, 12 Jur. 383.

3. A. and B. entered into a joint and several bond for securing a sum of money advanced to A. by his bankers. After the execution of the bond, and before it became due, A. paid money to the bankers, and he continued to draw upon them until his banking account was overdrawn. Some years afterwards, an account was settled between A. and the bankers, in which the whole money secured by the bond was treated as remaining due from A. The bankers then took a warrant of attorney from A. for securing payment of the balance found due upon the settlement, by instalments at distant periods. Several of the instalments were paid, but A. became bankrupt before the whole debt was liquidated. It being proved that B. was privy to the settlement of accounts between A. and the bankers, and to the arrangement respecting the warrant of attorney:—Held, first, that B. was not discharged by the time given to A.; and, secondly, that the bond was not discharged by the course of payment, the money paid by A. to the bankers being applicable to the banking account, and the bankers being entitled to hold the bond and warrant of attorney as distinct securities. Tyson v. Coar, T. & R. 395.

4. A customer borrowed from his bankers 2,000*l.*, which was placed to the credit of his current account, and to secure the debt gave them ten promissory notes payable at intervals of a week, a surety undertaking that in the event of the notes not being paid to secure the amount due. On the first five due dates, the sums represented by the first five notes respectively were debited by the bankers to the customer in the current account; and on each of the first two due dates enough cash was paid in to the account in the course of the day to liquidate the amount of the note. On the remaining three days the balance throughout the day was against the customer. The amounts of the last five notes were not entered by the bankers in the account at all. The payments in to the credit of C. to his current account and to another special account after the last note became due, were sufficient to cover up all debits up to and including the last note; but the accounts were during all this time overdrawn:—Held, that the bankers were bound to apply all moneys paid in first to the notes secured by the surety which had fallen due; and that the debt was, moreover, discharged, on the principle of Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 605). Kinnaird v. Webster, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 139; 48 L. J., Ch., 348; 27 W. R. 212; 39 L. T. 494; 27 W. R. 212.

5. Repayment of a sum given by bankers to a customer for the purpose of constituting a parliamentary qualification, on an understanding that it was to be returned:—Held, not a payment on his general account so as to discharge a surety. Wythes v. Labouchere, 5 Jur., N. S., 499; 3 De G. & J. 593.

6. A payment by a surety must be appropriated in accordance with his intention, and cannot be controlled for the benefit of the principal. Wagh v. Wren, 1 N. R. 142.

W. and his wife deposited with a banking company the title deeds of real estate, to which the wife was entitled under her father's will, to secure a running account not exceeding 2,000*l.* The father of W. gave the following guarantee to the bank: "I beg to say that the deeds lodged by my son are good for the amount of the arrangement with him, otherwise I will guarantee the same." The father subsequently paid a portion of the amount due on the security, and received back his guarantee:—Held, that the security was not thereby vacated so as to affect the surety. S. C. 11 W. R. 244; 7 L. T., N. S., 612.

7. Death of Surety, 6680.
8. Other Cases, 6681.

1. By giving Time.

1. A. and B. entered into a joint and several bond for securing a sum of money advanced to A. by his bankers. After the execution of the bond, and before it became due, A. paid money to the bankers, and he continued to draw upon them until his banking account was overdrawn. Some years afterwards an account was settled between A. and the bankers, in which the whole money secured by the bond was treated as remaining due from A. The bankers then took a warrant of attorney from A. for securing payment of the balance found due upon the settlement by instalments at distant periods. Several of the instalments were paid, but A. became bankrupt before the whole debt was liquidated. It being proved that B. was privy to the settlement of accounts between A. and the bankers, and to the arrangements respecting the warrant of attorney:—Held, first, that B. was not discharged by the time given to A.; and secondly, that the bond was not discharged by the course of payment, the money paid by A. to the bankers being applicable to the banking account, and the bankers being entitled to hold the bond and warrant of attorney as distinct securities. Tyson v. Cox, T. & R. 395.

2. Where sureties are bound after a certain time's demand, creditor may make arrangements with debtor for time, etc., prior to that interval, so that it does not interfere with sureties' recourse back on debtor. Prendergast v. Devey, 6 Madd. 124.

3. By giving time to the principal, the grantee of annuity exonerates the surety for past and future arrears. Eyre v. Bartrop, 3 Madd. 221.

4. Creditor giving time to debtor without notice to surety releases him, and injunction granted to restrain proceedings against him at law. Ireland (Bank of) v. Beresford, 6 Dow 233.

5. A. guarantees the payment of any goods to be supplied by B. to C. between the 2nd April 1814, and the 2nd April 1815; C. having accepted bills for the amount of the goods delivered, which B. permits him to renew when payable without any communication to A. on the subject of such renewal:—Held, that A. was discharged from his guarantee by virtue of the rule that a creditor giving further time to the principal debtor, without the consent of the surety, releases the surety; and that although it was proved that the renewal was given only in consequence of C.'s inability to pay, and that no injury could accrue to A., the surety being himself the fit judge of what is or is not for his own benefit. Samuel v. Howarth, 3 Meriv. 272.

6. Creditor may sue surety first: if he sues principal first and gives time, surety is discharged. Wright v. Simpson, 6 Ves. 734.

7. Holder of a bill giving time to the acceptor discharges the drawer. Exp. Wilson, 11 Ves. 410.

8. Creditor sues the principal by direction of the surety, but without his privity agrees to stay execution, the surety is discharged. Rees v. Berrington, 2 Ves. J. 543.

9. Oblige in a bond with a surety, without communication with the surety, takes notes from the principal, and gives further time, the surety is discharged. Fordyce v. Ford, 2 Ves. J. 539.

10. A creditor giving the principal debtor further time for payment discharges the surety. Nisbet v. Smith, 2 Bro. C. C. 579.

11. Where the surviving obligee in joint and several bonds extended the time of payment of the bonds for three years, and on a further advance took a collateral security, reserving his right against the executors of the deceased obligee, but the arrangement was concealed from them:—Held, that by such indulgence they were discharged. Oakeley v. Pasheller, 4 Cl. & F. 207; 10 Bli., N. S., 548.

12. It is a general rule that a creditor may give time to a principal debtor without prejudicing his right against the surety, provided he expressly reserves such right. Circumstances may, however, prevent that rule from having effect. Owen v. Homan, 4 H. L. Ca. 997; 17 Jur. 861.

13. A. and B. were indebted as principal and surety to C. B. dies, and C. in a creditors' suit obtains a decree against his estate. Afterwards C. sues A., and takes a judgment by arrangement, giving time, without the knowledge of the surety:—Held, this did not discharge the surety. Jenkins v. Robertson, 2 Drew. 351; 23 L. J., Ch., 816.

14. The obligee of a bond having placed himself in such a position with regard to the principal debtor, that he could not demand payment of the bond until a certain agreement entered into with third parties had been carried into effect:—Held, that this was such a giving of time to the principal debtor as discharged a surety to the bond. Cross v. Sprigg, 2 Macn. & G. 113; 2 H. & Tw. 233; 14 Jur. 634; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 528.

15. Where there are two co-sureties, and the creditor grants a further loan to his principal debtor, and takes a new security for that and the former loan, and gives further time to him and one of the sureties only, without specially reserving his remedy against the other surety, he by so doing discharges the latter. Vyner v. Hopkins, 6 Jur. 889.

16. A creditor, having the security by bond of a third person for the due accounting of an agent, settles accounts with that agent and takes from him a bond for the balance found to be due, and bills at different dates for the amount of the bond and the interest thereon, until the last of the bills should fall due; and at the same time stipulates that he is at liberty at any moment to proceed on the original security :—Held, that this was not a discharge of the surety. Lindsay v. Downes (Lord), 2 Ir. Eq. R. 307.

1. A father gave a bond to secure the repayment in four years of a simple contract debt due by his son. Upon the death of the father the creditor commenced proceedings against his estate for the recovery of the debt, but afterwards stayed those proceedings upon obtaining from the son, who was heir to the father, and the widow, who was his personal representative, a joint bond for the payment of the same debt by instalments :—Held, that the estate of the father as surety was discharged, both on the ground of time given to the son, and because the second bond was to be considered as given in substitution for the first. Clarke v. Henty, 3 Y. & Coll. 187; 2 Jur. 918.

2. By the old French law in Canada, a surety is not discharged by the mere giving of time by the creditor to the debtor; but any transaction which may suspend, though only for a time, the right of the creditor to sue the debtor, shall be a discharge to the surety, unless it can be shown that the surety might, during the suspension of that right, sue the debtor in his own right, which by the old French law he may, under some circumstances, do, before payment of the debt by himself: and where a debtor, in consideration of his default or inability to make good his engagements, accepted bills drawn on him by his creditors, it was :—Held, that this was such a temporary extinction of the demand, while the bills had to run, as to discharge the surety, it being considered that the surety could not himself sue the debtor, though apparently insolvent, during that time. Bellingham v. Frere, 1 Moo. P. C. 333.

3. Where action in replevin is by agreement referred to arbitration, and without consent or privity of surety in bond time for award is enlarged, surety becomes discharged. Bowmaker v. Moore, 7 Price 223.

Court will grant injunction to restrain landlord from proceeding at law on assignment of replevin bond against the sureties, if there has been an agreement to refer, and a reference between landlord and tenant (the debtor) without concurrence of surety, whereby performance of condition of bond (to proceed with effect) has been suspended. S. C. 3 Price 214.

4. A surety is not discharged by the creditor's taking from the debtor a cognovit in an action he had brought against the debtor, with a stay of execution until a day earlier than that on which judgment could have been obtained in the regular course. Hulme v. Coles, 2 Sim. 12.

5. A court of equity will not relieve a surety by bond upon the ground of the creditor having given time to the principal debtor, unless there has been an express and positive contract between them for that purpose. Heath v. Key, 1 Y. & J. 434.

6. The liability of a surety in a bond is not discharged by the delay of the creditor in suing for the debt, or by the circumstance of the principal debtor afterwards executing to the creditor another bond for a larger sum. Eyre v. Everett, 2 Russ. 381.

7. It is not every alteration of his position by the act of the creditor that discharges the surety. To have this effect, the alteration must be such as interferes for a time with his remedies against the principal debtor. Tucker v. Laing, 2 Kay & J. 745.

Where the creditor knew that the surety was negotiating a loan for the principal debtor, for the purpose of paying off therewith the debt for which the surety was liable, and thus getting rid of such liability, and the creditor promised the debtor to give him further time, and this induced the surety to desist from his attempt to raise the money :—Held, that the surety's liability to the creditor was not discharged. Id.

A letter written by the agent of a bond creditor to the principal obligor, giving him eighteen months further time to pay the bond, upon condition of his paying off at once the arrear of interest, and keeping down the interest to accrue in future :—Held, a mere promise without consideration, and not binding; and therefore that a co-obligor, who had joined in the bond as surety only, was not thereby discharged. Id.

8. Indorsees of bills of exchange as a security for a floating balance due on the accounts between them and the drawer, had notice that the acceptance was for the drawer; they afterwards entered into an agreement with the latter that the existing debt should be liquidated by the drawer building for them ships, and should, in the meantime, be secured by a policy of assurance :—Held, first, that time was thus given to the principal debtor, and the surety was released in equity, if not at law also. Davies v. Stainbank, 6 De G. M. & G. 679.

Held, secondly, that a creditor who holds a floating guarantee for a surety, cannot, without the surety's consent, give time to the principal debtor as to a portion of the debt, without reserving the creditor's rights against the surety, and yet hold the surety liable for that portion. Id.

Held, thirdly, that whether the acceptor could or could not sue, by way of defence to an action by the holders of the bills, the giving of time by them to the drawer, he was not bound to do so, but might (at the risk of costs) defend the action on other grounds, and also institute a suit for equitable relief and for an injunction to restrain the proceedings at law; though if the matter had been pleaded at law, and the court of law had adjudicated on the plea, the case might have been different. Id.

9. If an intention to give what is in effect time be declared by a written agreement, in order that the right as against the surety may be reserved, it is necessary that such a reservation be declared also in writing. Wyke v. Rogers, 1 De G. M. & G. 408; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 611.

A. and B. (principal and surety) became bound to C. in the payment of 400*l.*, of which sum, by an arrangement between A. and B., 120*l.* were paid to the latter. B. repaid to C. that sum before the time limited by the bond for the payment of the 400*l.*, and C., after that time, accepted from A. a promissory note, payable at two months, for the remainder, on a parol agreement (which was proved) that the note was not to be considered as given in discharge of or as substituted for the bond. A died insolvent. On a bill filed by B. against C. for a declaration, that under the circumstances he might become released and discharged from the bond, and for an injunction to restrain C. from proceeding in an action which he had commenced for the recovery of 280*l.*, the remainder of the 400*l.* :—Held, that the surety was not discharged, and that there was no case for the interference of a court of equity. Id.

1. A creditor, upon giving time to his principal debtor, may reserve his rights against the surety, and this without communicating the arrangement to the surety. Webb v. Hewitt, 3 Kay & J. 438.

2. A creditor may suspend his rights for ever against the principal debtor, yet preserve his rights against the surety. Green v. Wynn, 38 L. J., Ch., 76; 19 L. T., N. S., 553; 17 W. R. 72; 7 L. R., Eq., 28. Affirmed 38 L. J., Ch., 220; 20 L. T., N. S., 131; 17 W. R. 385; 4 L. R., Ch., 204.

A debtor executed a deed under the Bankruptcy Act 1861, s. 192, which amounted to a cessio bonorum, and contained a general release from his creditors, followed by a proviso reserving any rights they might have against any other persons in respect of any debt due by the debtor either alone or jointly with any other person :—Held, that a surety for interest only on a debt thereby released was not discharged from payment of interest which had accrued due since the date of the release. Id.

3. The holder of a security who agrees with the principal to give time to the surety by so doing discharges the surety. Overend, Gurney, & Co. v. Oriental Financial Corporation, 31 L. T., N. S., 322; 7 L. R., H. L., 348. Affirming 7 L. R., Ch., 142; 41 L. J., Ch., 332; 20 W. R. 253; 25 L. T., N. S., 813; 24 L. T., N. S., 774; 19 W. R. 869.

The holder of a security is, in dealing with the security, affected by knowledge acquired after taking it as to which of the parties liable upon it is principal, and which is surety. Id.

A financial company, by agreement with an agent, accepted bills of exchange which were discounted by a discount company for the agent, he guaranteeing payment. The discount company was not at the time aware of the relations between the acceptors and the agent, but was informed before the bills matured that the agent was principal, and that the acceptors were sureties. After this, the company agreed with the agent not to press the acceptors for payment until certain other bills became due :—Held, that the acceptors were thereby discharged. Id.

If after a right of action accrues to a creditor against two or more persons, he is informed that one of them is a surety only, and, after that, he gives time to the principal debtor without the consent and knowledge of the surety, the rule as to the discharge of the surety applies. Id.

Merely giving an additional security by a principal will not discharge a surety, but if the giving of such security is really a consideration for giving time to the principal, it will do so. Id.

Seem, that to reserve a creditor's right against a surety there must be a distinct expression of intention to reserve it. Id.

2. Concealment and Misrepresentation.

4. A party relying on his ignorance of facts must show, not only that he had not the information, but that he could not, with due diligence, obtain it. Wason v. Waring, 15 Beav. 151.

The plaintiff, a surety, sought to set aside a deed executed in 1848, on the ground that he had been released by a transaction between the principals in 1842, of which he was ignorant in 1848. It appeared that he had made inquiries in 1845, and was referred to persons who could give him the information, but neglected to do so until the end of 1849, when he obtained it :—Held, that having in 1845 the means of acquiring the knowledge, he must be deemed to have had it in 1848, and his bill was dismissed. Id.

5. A surety is not of necessity entitled to receive without inquiry, from the party to whom he is about to bind himself, a full disclosure of all the circumstances of the dealings between the principal and that party. If he requires to know any particular matter of which the party about to receive the security is informed, he must make it the subject of a distinct inquiry. An obligation to a banker by a third party to be responsible for a cash credit to be given to one of the banker's customers is not avoided by the fact, that, immediately after the execution of the obligation, the cash credit is employed to pay off an old debt due to the banker. If the surety intends to rely upon such a fact for his defence as showing that there was a previous agreement between the banker and the customer to deal with the credit in a particular manner, to which he, if he had known it, should not have consented, he must bring such a defence before the Court by putting it on the record. Hamilton v. Watson, 12 Cl. & F. 109.

6. Quære, how far is it the duty of the creditor to communicate to a surety any arrangements between the creditor and principal debtor, which do not appear on the instrument creating the contract of suretyship. Espey v. Lake, 16 Jur. 1106.

7. Where the surviving obligee in joint and several bonds extended the time of payment of the bonds for three years, and, on a further advance, took a collateral security, reserving his right against the executors of the deceased obligee, but the arrangement was concealed from them :—Held, that by such indulgence they were discharged. Oakeley v. Pasheller, 4 Cl. & F. 207; 10 Bl. N. S. 548.

8. If a banking company agree that, upon receiving the guarantee of a particular person, they will advance a certain sum of money for the purpose of securing to the creditors of a trader a composition, and setting up the trader in business again; and at the same time the company, being themselves creditors of the trader, enter into a secret arrangement with him, by which they secure to themselves repayment of the difference between their composition and the full amount of their debt; this is a fraud upon the guarantor and upon the creditors who execute the composition deed on the faith of the ostensible agreement, and the guarantor may sustain a bill in equity to set aside the guarantee. Pendlebury v. Walker, 4 Y. & Coll. 424.

1. A. covenanted to convey certain estates to B., free from all incumbrances, except those specified, B. and C. covenanting, as principal and surety, to secure the payment of an annuity to A. It afterwards appeared that part of the estates were subject to a mortgage, not included in the specified incumbrances, the existence of which had not been discovered to C., and which A. alleged he had forgotten at the time:—Held, that C. was discharged from his liability as surety. Willis v. Willis, 14 Jur. 404; 17 Sim. 218.

2. An injunction having been obtained to restrain proceedings in an action on a bond in which the plaintiff had joined as a surety, on the ground of misrepresentation on the part of the obligee, and a deviation by him, with the concurrence of the principal obligor, from the terms of the contract on which the bond was founded; and it appearing on the evidence that there was reason to suppose that there had been such misrepresentation and deviation, although the evidence was not conclusive on the point; the Court refused, on motion, to dissolve the injunction, or to put the plaintiff on the terms of bringing the money into court. Allan v. Inman, 7 Jur. 433.

3. Without saying that in every case a creditor is bound to inquire under what circumstances his debtor has obtained the concurrence of a surety, it may safely be stated, that if the dealings are such as fairly to lead a reasonable man to believe that fraud must have been used in order to obtain such concurrence, he is bound to make inquiry. In some cases wilful ignorance is not to be distinguished in its equitable consequences from knowledge. Owen v. Homan, 17 Jur. 861; 4 H. L. Ca. 997; 1 Eq. Rep. 370.

The creditor must make a full, fair, and honest communication to the surety of all circumstances connected with the transaction to which the suretyship is to be applied, which are calculated to influence the discretion of the surety in entering into the required obligation. S. C. 3 Macn. & G. 378; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 314; 15 Jur. 339.

How far is the creditor responsible for the misrepresentation or non-communication of material circumstances by the debtor, where there is no communication between the creditor and the surety, and particularly in a case where the creditor desires his debtor to procure the suretyship contract, and abstains from all communication with the surety, quære. Ib.

The general law being that the creditor discharges a surety by any dealing or arrangement with the principal debtor without the surety's assent which at all varies the situation, rights, or remedies of the surety, will the surety be discharged in a case where the creditor precludes himself by covenant from suing the debtor except in certain events, those events not comprising all that might reasonably stimulate the creditor to sue if his power or discretion were unfettered, and what would be the effect in such a covenant of a reservation to the creditor of a power to sue the debtor, if required to do so by the surety, quære. Ib.

Assuming that if the remedies are reserved against the surety the liability of the surety is not discharged by an arrangement between the creditor and debtor which does not alter the rights and position of the surety in regard to the creditor or debtor, it must still in each case be considered whether the arrangement between the creditor and debtor did in law or equity affect the surety and his rights, and whether the reservation of the remedy against the surety is such as that the liability of the surety may be enforced to its full extent, consistently with the compact between the creditor and debtor. Ib.

In the case of a bond given by one of several joint debtors, the legal effect of which is to merge the simple contract debt, can this effect be controlled by the parties agreeing by a separate instrument, that such bond shall be deemed a collateral security only, and that all remedies shall remain for the simple contract debt as if the bond had not been taken, quære. Ib.

4. Notice to a creditor when his debt is contracted that the relation of principal and surety exists between his co-debtors is sufficient to affect him with the consequences of that relation without any further acceptance of it on his part. Wythes v. Labouchere, 3 De G. & J. 593; 5 Jur., N. S., 499.

But it is not a consequence of that relation that the creditor, without any inquiry on the part of the surety, should acquaint him with every circumstance affecting the credit of the debtor, or of any matter unconnected with the transaction in which he is about to engage which may render it hazardous, the principles applicable to insurances not applying to such a case. Ib.

A customer being desirous of obtaining an advance from his bankers on the credit of a surety employs solicitors for that purpose, who are also the ordinary solicitors of the bankers, but are not employed by them in the transaction in question. The solicitors, however, give information to the bankers as to the sufficiency of the surety, and debit them with the costs of preparing the instrument of suretyship:—Held, that they could not be regarded as having acted for the bankers from the beginning, so as to affect the bankers with notice of any concealment or misrepresentation on the part of the customer towards the surety. Ib.

A concealment on the part of a creditor must be of some material part of the transaction itself between the creditor and his debtor to which the suretyship relates. Ib.

5. It is settled that there must be something amounting to fraud to enable a surety to say, that he is to be released from his contract on account of misrepresentation or concealment. Pledge v. Buss, Johns. 663; 6 Jur., N. S., 695.

6. A surety who executes a bond on a misrepresentation by the obligee of a material fact is entitled to relief. Blest v. Brown, 3 Giff. 450; 8 Jur., N. S., 187; 5 L. T., N. S., 663. Affirmed 8 Jur., N. S., 602; 10 W. R. 569; 6 L. T., N. S., 620.

Therefore, where a surety was induced to execute a bond on a representation by the obligee that the principal was not indebted to him, which statement was untrue, the Court directed the bond to be cancelled. Ib.

Where a bond by a surety purported to guarantee the payment of flour, to be supplied by the obligee (of a specified quality), in order to enable the principal debtor to execute a contract, and the obligee designedly supplied inferior flour, so that the contract was annulled, the obligor is entitled to have the bond cancelled. Id.

1. Where an obligee at the time of the execution of a bond concealed a material circumstance from a surety under it:—Held, that such concealment was sufficient to absolve the surety from all liability. Stiff v. Eastbourne Local Board, 19 L. T., N. S., 408; 17 W. R. 68.

An injunction having been granted by the Vice-Chancellor, to restrain an action on a bond against a surety, on the ground that when the bond was entered into a material fact was concealed from the surety, the Court of Appeal discharged the injunction, on the ground that the defence was equally open at law by way of plea. S. C. 17 W. R. 428; 20 L. T., N. S., 339.

2. A debtor induced a lady, to whom he was engaged, to become security for a debt. After the marriage, she insisted that she had been imposed upon:—Held, that the only duty of the creditor (who was aware of the relation between the parties) towards the lady was, to see that she had proper professional assistance, and that any fraud or misrepresentation of the debtor in the transaction, of which the creditor had no notice, did not affect his security. Cobbett v. Brock, 20 Beav. 524.

3. Where parties are contracting, either of them, unless he is under a duty to the other, may keep silence even as to facts which he believes would be operative on the mind of the other; if, however, one of them has made a statement which he believes to be true, but which in the course of the negotiation he discovers to be false, he is bound to correct his erroneous statement. Davies v. London & Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 8 L. R., Ch. D., 469; 47 L. J., Ch., 511; 38 L. T., N. S., 478; 26 W. R. 794.

In some cases, such as contracts between solicitor and client, there is a duty to make entire disclosure. In others, such as contracts of partnership, everything material must be disclosed. There is no such duty in the case of a contract of suretyship, but nevertheless very little said which ought not to have been said and very little omitted which ought to have been said will suffice to avoid the contract. Id.

The officers of a company, believing that the retention of money by one of their agents amounted to felony, directed his arrest. Certain friends of his came to the officers of the company and proposed to deposit a sum of money by way of security for any deficiency. On the same day the company was advised that the acts of the agent did not amount to felony, and the directions for the arrest were withdrawn. Later in that day the friends of the agent had a second interview with the officers of the company, and agreed to deposit a sum of money as security for his defaults, no mention being made of the withdrawal of the directions for the arrest. The sum of money was afterwards deposited with trustees on an agreement for the security of the company:—Held, that the change of circumstances ought to have been stated to the intending sureties, and that the agreement must be rescinded and the money returned to the sureties. Id.

Held, that even if the agreement was illegal as compounding a felony, the Court would interfere in a case where the money was actually in the hands of trustees, and pressure had been exercised. Id.

3. Breach of Duty by Creditor.

4. A. became surety for B. to C. for a sum "for value received by a draft at three months date." C. (without the concurrence of A.) at once paid the amount to B., instead of giving the draft at three months:—Held, that the agreement had been varied, and that the surety was therefore discharged. Bonsor v. Cox, 6 Beav. 110. Affirmed 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 260; 8 Jur. 387.

And see S. C. 4 Beav. 937; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 895; 5 Jur. 164.

In the same case A. agreed to join B. as his surety on a joint and several bond, upon receiving from him a counter-bond of indemnity; the original bond was executed by A. only, and it did not appear that the obligee had taken any pains to procure its execution by B. the principal debtor:—Held, that A., the surety, was discharged on that ground also. Id.

5. The defendant agreed to sell two ships to a company, to be paid partly in bills of exchange accepted by the company; with liberty of the defendant to freight one of the vessels. The plaintiff agreed to indorse the bills by way of surety. Shortly afterwards the defendant, assuming to act as agent of the company, dispatched one of the vessels to Constantinople, laden on his own account, with munitions of war, for the Circassians, who were at war with Russia. This was not known either to the company or to the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant having exposed the ships to extraordinary risk, it amounted to a release of the plaintiff from his liability. Burke v. Rogerson, 12 Jur., N. S., 635; 14 L. T., N. S., 780.

6. B., as principal, gave to his partner, C., a bond, which was executed by L. as surety, indemnifying him from all loss from the partnership business, it being stipulated by the articles of partnership that the business should continue for five years; that in case either partner should retire, and the other be desirous of continuing the business, the continuing partner might take the retiring partner's share of the partnership assets at a valuation; and that if at the expiration of the partnership term either of the partners should be desirous of carrying on the business, and should neglect or refuse to purchase his partner's share in the assets at a valuation as above mentioned, then the assets should be realized, the partnership debts paid out of the proceeds, and the surplus proceeds divided between the partners according to their interests. At the expiration of the partnership term neither of the partners retired from the business, but, without consulting L., continued to carry it on for about twenty months longer, at the end of which time C. retired, leaving the whole partnership assets in the hands of B., by whom the business was continued till B.'s bankruptcy, about three months afterwards. B. then absconded, leaving the concern insolvent, and C. was compelled to liquidate the liabilities of the partnership:—Held, that inasmuch as by the articles of partnership the partnership ought to have been wound up at the expiration of the term limited by the articles, it was not competent to C. to agree to its continuance without the consent of L., and yet to hold L. liable as surety upon the bond, and that C. therefore was not entitled to put the bond in force against L. Small v. Currie, 18 Jur. 781; 23 L. J., Ch., 764; 5 De G. M. & G. 141; 2 Eq. Rep. 639.

1. Where a bond creditor, by agreement with his debtor, takes interest on his debt by anticipation, a court of equity will restrain an action on the bond, whether brought against the principal or the surety. Blake v. White, 1 Y. & Coll. 420; 14 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 48.

2. A contractor undertook to perform certain works, and it was agreed that three-fourths of the work, as finished, should be paid for every two months, and the remaining one-fourth upon the completion of the whole work:—Held, that the sureties for the due performance of the contract were released from their liability, by reason of payments exceeding three-fourths of the work done, having, without the consent of the sureties, been made to the contractor before the completion of the whole work. Calvert v. London Dock Co., 2 Keen 638; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 90; 2 Jur. 62.

3. Upon the eve of a sale by a sheriff, a surety gave a written guarantee for payment of the judgment debts by instalments, in consideration of the judgment creditors consenting to postpone the sale under the execution. It turned out that the consent of another person was necessary in order to prevent the sale, and in consequence the sale took place. The surety gave notice that the consideration having failed, the guarantee was at an end. Representations were made on behalf of the judgment creditors when they took the guarantee, that they had power to stop the sale, and it would be stopped:—Held, that the surety was entitled to have the guarantee delivered up to be cancelled. Cooper v. Joel, 1 De G. F. & J. 240; 27 Beav. 313.

4. Corn factors supplied flour on credit to a baker, on his executing to them, with a surety, a bond, the condition of which, after reciting that the baker had entered into a contract for the supply of bread to the army, was that the bond was to be void if the baker should deliver to the corn factors his bills on the Government as he drew them, and if he and the surety should make good the amount to become due to the corn factors. The corn factors supplied flour, but not of the quality specified in the Government contract, which was vacated on that account:—Held, that the corn factors could not as against the surety allege ignorance of the terms of the contract, and that the surety was discharged. Blest v. Brown, 4 De G. F. & J. 367.

5. Landlords advance money to their tenant on a joint note of himself and a surety; they afterwards take a security for this and another sum advanced at the same time, by an assignment of furniture of the tenant by way of mortgage:—Held, that, by taking the furniture under a distress for rent in arrear, they discharged the surety. Pearl v. Deacon, 1 De G. & J. 461; 3 Jur., N. S., 1187; 26 L. J., Ch., 761; 5 W. R. 793. Affirming 24 Beav. 186; 3 Jur., N. S., 879; 5 W. R. 702. Followed in

Coates v. Coates, 3 N. R. 355; 33 L. J., Ch., 448; 9 L. T., N. S. 795; 10 Jur., N. S. 532; 12 W. R. 634.

6. A surety, by a note for a floating balance due to bankers from a customer:—Held, released by the bankers crediting the customer with the full amount of the note without advancing the money at the time. Archer v. Hudson, 7 Beav. 551; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 880; 8 Jur. 761. Affirmed 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 211.

7. A surety, who has contracted to become so on the understanding that he is to be co-surety with another, is wholly released in equity if the intended co-surety does not execute. Evans v. Bremridge, 8 De G. M. & G. 100; 2 Jur., N. S., 311; 25 L. J., Ch., 334; 4 W. R. 350. Affirming 2 Kay & J. 174; 2 Jur., N. S., 134; 25 L. J., Ch., 102; 4 W. R. 161.

One of two intended co-sureties executed a deed for the repayment of moneys to be advanced to the principal debtor, on the understanding that the money would not be advanced until the deed was executed by the other surety. The deed was never executed by the other surety, and no notice of his failure to execute was given by the creditor to the executing surety, until after the principal debtor had made default and become insolvent:—Held, that the executing surety was entitled to be discharged in equity from every part of the debt, and (varying so much of the decree as ordered the deed to be delivered up to be cancelled), to have an injunction to restrain all proceedings under it. Id.

Held, secondly, that he had not lost his right by setting up this defence at law by equitable plea, to which the covenantees demurred in such a way as might leave the equitable ground untouched. Id.

8. Equity will not relieve a surety against execution of a common law judgment upon a bond, on the ground that the principal has not executed the bond. Cooper v. Evans, 15 W. R. 609; 36 L. J., Ch., 431; 4 L. R., Eq., 45.

A coal agent entered into an agreement, under seal, with the coal owners, for the proper discharge of his duties. A joint and several bond of even date by the coal agent and two sureties, for the performance of this agreement, was prepared and executed by the sureties, but not by the principal. The agreement being broken, an action was brought against the sureties for the penalty of the bond, and judgment recovered. On a bill filed in equity by a surety to stay execution of the judgment:—Held, first, that as the sureties might have had the benefit of the agreement under seal, they were not discharged by the non-execution of the bond by the principal debtor, and secondly, that the doctrine of principal and surety is the same at law and in equity, and the question was therefore decided by the judgment at law. Id.

4. Variation of Contract.

9. A, B, and C. carried on business in co-partnership for a term, which would expire on the 19th of February 1807, under articles which empowered A., in case of his death during the term, to bequeath his share of the trade in favour of his wife or children. S., a customer of the bank and a surety, covenanted that they, or one of them, would pay to A., B., and C., the survivors or survivor of them, etc., all sums which, on or before or until the 19th of February 1807, should become due from the customer to A., B., and C., the survivors or survivor of them, etc. A. died, having bequeathed his share of the concern to his executors, in trust for his children; the business continued to be carried on under the same firm as before, and his executors interfered in the management, and shared in the profit. At the time of A.'s death, the balance due from S. to the bank was upwards of 14,000*l.*; after that time, S. continued his dealings with the bank in the same manner as previously, paying in more than 14,000*l.* within a few weeks after A.'s death, but drawing out during the same period a larger sum, and these subsequent dealings were contained in the same account with the preceding dealings, and some years afterwards S. became insolvent, being indebted to the bank in a balance of 19,000*l.* and upwards:—Held, that the partnership, which carried on the business after the death of A., was a new partnership; that the surety's covenant did not extend to cover sums advanced to the customer by the bank after A.'s death; that the balance due at A.'s death from the customer was to be considered as discharged by the payments subsequently made by him to the bank. Pemberton v. Oakes, 4 Russ. 154; 6 L. J., Ch., 35.

1. A creditor took, as security for his debt, bills of exchange drawn and indorsed by a surety, and accepted by the principal debtor. After those bills were dishonoured, the creditor drew accommodation bills on and which were accepted by the principal debtor, but were paid by the drawer when at maturity. On a bill filed by the surety to restrain an action subsequently brought against him on the bills which had been dishonoured, the Court allowed the action to proceed, but stayed execution. Quare, whether the surety was discharged by the subsequent transactions which, without his knowledge, took place between the creditor and the principal debtor. Mackintosh v. Wyatt, 8 Hare 562.

2. The rule as to the liabilities of sureties in a bond is the same in Scotland as in England, viz., that they are not to be discharged from their obligation unless the contract between them and the obligees is varied by a positive contract between the obligees and the principal, without notice to the sureties. Creighton v. Rankin, 7 Cl. & F. 325.

3. Creditor having, among other securities, a bond with a surety, taking a mortgage from the principal debtor, and agreeing to receive the residue by instalments, secured by a warrant, etc., without prejudice to any security he now holds; injunction granted against suing the surety. Boulbee v. Stubbs, 18 Ves. 20.

Composition with reserve of the remedy against sureties valid, but must plainly appear. Ib.

4. The firm of H., B., & Co., consisting of M. H., and J. B., being indebted to their bankers, F. & Co., J. B., a partner in the firm of H., B., & Co., procured S. H., a married woman having separate property, to join with him as surety in certain promissory notes to F. & Co. Afterwards H., B., & Co., being considerably indebted to F. & Co., dissolved partnership, and by articles of agreement between M. H., J. B., and the bankers, it was arranged that the business should be carried on by J. B. alone, that M. H. should be released from the debt of the bankers, and that J. B. should pay the debt by monthly instalments, and the remedies of the bankers against the sureties of H., B., & Co., were expressly reserved:—Held, that the sureties were not released by this arrangement between the bankers and H., B., & Co., and that the bankers were entitled to have a receiver appointed of the rents of certain estates to which S. H. was entitled for her separate use for life. Owen v. Homan, 13 Beav. 196; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 549; 14 Jur. 821; but the order for a receiver was discharged, S. C. 3 Macn. & G. 378; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 814; 15 Jur. 339. But see 4 H. L. Ca. 997; 17 Jur. 861; 1 Eq. Rep. 370.

The general law being that the creditor discharges a surety by any dealing or arrangement with the principal debtor, without the surety's assent, which at all varies the situation, rights, or remedies of the surety, quare will the surety be discharged in a case where the creditor precludes himself by covenant from suing the debtor except in certain events, those events not comprising all that might reasonably stimulate the creditor to sue if his power or discretion were unfettered, and what would be the effect in such a covenant of a reservation to the creditor of a power to sue the debtor, if required to do so by the surety. S. C. 3 Macn. & G. 378; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 814; 15 Jur. 339.

Assuming that if the remedies are reserved against the surety the liability of the surety is not discharged by an arrangement between the creditor and debtor which does not alter the rights and position of the surety in regard to the creditor or debtor, it must still in each case be considered whether the arrangement between the creditor and debtor did in law or equity affect the surety and his rights, and whether the reservation of the remedy against the surety is such as that the liability of the surety may be enforced to its full extent consistently with the compact between the creditor and debtor. Ib.

In the case of a bond given by one of several joint debtors, the legal effect of which is to merge the simple contract debt, can this effect be controlled by the parties agreeing by a separate instrument that such bond shall be deemed a collateral security only, and that all remedies shall remain for the simple contract debt as if the bond had not been taken, quare. Ib.

5. If A. take a joint bond from B., C., and D., and then accept the notes of B. and C. in discharge of the bond, D., as a surety, is no longer liable. Skip v. Edwards, 9 Mod. 438. S. C. nom. Skip v. Huey, or Wilcox v. Edwards, 3 Atk. 91.

6. The liability of a surety in a bond is not discharged by the delay of the creditor in suing for the debt, or by the circumstance of the principal debtor afterwards executing to the creditor another bond for a larger sum. Byre v. Everett, 2 Russ. 381.

7. A father gave a bond to secure the repayment within four years of a simple contract debt due by his son. The father died, leaving the son his heir, and the creditor commenced proceedings against his estate for the recovery of the bond debt, but subsequently took a fresh bond from the son and the personal representative of the father, conditioned for paying the same debt by instalments, the creditor at the same time retaining the original bond:—Held, that the original bond was discharged; first, on the ground that the father was only surety for the son, and that the creditor, by giving time to the principal debtor, had discharged the surety; and, secondly, because the second bond must be considered, under the circumstances, as having been given in satisfaction of the first. Clarke v. Henty, 3 Y. & Coll. 187; 2 Jur. 918.

1. A variance in the agreement to which a surety has subscribed, which variance has been made without the surety's knowledge or consent, and which may prejudice him, or amount to the substitution of a new agreement for a former one, will discharge the surety, though the original agreement, notwithstanding such variance, may be that on which the liability is substantially incurred. Bonar v. Macdonald, 3 H. L. Ca. 227; 7 Bell. App. Cas. 379; 14 Jur. 1077.

A. became surety for B.'s conduct as a clerk in a bank. B. was subsequently appointed to a better situation in a branch of the same bank, and A. extended his suretyship to this new situation. B. afterwards, while remaining in the same situation, undertook on having his salary raised to become liable to one-fourth of the losses on discounts. A communication of this new arrangement was made to A. B. allowed a customer considerably to overdraw his accounts, and thereby the bank lost a sum of money:—Held, that the surety could not be called on to make good this loss, though it fell within the terms of the original agreement, as the fresh arrangement was the substitution of a new agreement for the former one, and it was thereby discharged. Id.

2. By a decree in a creditor's suit U. was declared to be a specialty creditor on the estate of R. It appeared that the claim of U. against R. was in respect of a debt due by S., and for which R. had become surety. After the decree U. sued S., and took a judgment by arrangement for payment of the debt by instalments without the knowledge or consent of R.:—Held, that his so doing did not discharge the estate of R. Jenkins v. Robertson, 2 Drew. 351.

3. A surety is bound only to the letter of his engagement; if that engagement is altered in a single line, no matter whether it be altered for the benefit of the surety, or whether the alteration be innocently made, the surety has a right to say the contract is no longer that for which he engaged to be the surety, and he is entitled to be relieved from the engagement. Blest v. Brown, 8 Jur., N. S., 602; 10 W. R. 569; 6 L. T., N. S., 620.

4. A. and B. were indebted to C. on a joint and several promissory note, A. as principal, B. as surety. A. deposited with C. a policy of assurance as a collateral security for the debt. C. died, appointing D. his executrix. A. became bankrupt; D. proved for the balance of the debt against A.'s estate, and, without communicating with B., surrendered the policy to the insurance office for value:—Held, that B. was not thereby discharged from his original liability. Coates v. Coates, 33 L. J., Ch., 448; 9 L. T., N. S., 795; 3 N. R. 355; 10 Jur., N. S., 532; 12 W. R. 634.

Where a testator bequeathed the residue of his property to his widow and executrix for her life, and she released the surety for a debt due to her husband's estate from payment of all interest on the debt:—Held, to extend only to her life interest in the principal moneys due in respect of the debt. Id.

5. Sureties in 1842 covenanted with a corporation that M., who had been appointed treasurer to the corporation under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 58, "should well and truly pay to the corporation, or to their successors, all such sums of money as M. should or might recover or receive, in virtue of his appointment as treasurer as aforesaid, during the whole time of his continuing in the office in consequence of the said election, or under any annual or future election of the said council to the said office." At the time of his appointment the office was an annual one, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 58; but in 1843 was passed the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 89, which by s. 6 repealed that enactment as inconvenient and unnecessary, and directed that the treasurer should "thenceforth hold his office during the pleasure of the council for the time being":—Held, by the House of Lords, that there was not such a variation of tenure of the office as to discharge the sureties, and that the change from an annual to a perpetual appointment during pleasure was provided for by the words of the bond, "annual or other future election." Dobie v. Berwick-on-Tweed (Mayor), Renton v. Same, Onnald v. Same, 2 Jur., N. S., 743; 25 L. J., Q. B., 383; 4 W. R. 738.

6. A., B., and C. contracted with a company to execute certain works on given terms. D. and E. gave a bond, as their sureties, for the performance of the contract. A. and B. retired from the partnership, and F. was substituted. Afterwards, disputes arose between the company and C. and F. as to the conduct of the works, and various transactions took place by which the terms of the contract were varied, and during which the company paid to C. and F. certain moneys which it had been agreed originally should be paid to A., B., and C. D. and E., the sureties, were no parties to these transactions, and gave no express consent, but they had been the solicitors of A., B., and C. in the original contract, knew of all the subsequent transactions, and acted as the solicitors of C. and F., and as such solicitors, prepared many of the documents required for such transactions. The company having brought an action on the bond against the sureties, for breach of the contract, they filed this bill to restrain the action:—Held, that the sureties were not discharged, and that the action could not be stopped. Woodcock v. Oxford & Worcester Railway Co., 1 Drew. 521.

7. B., as principal, gave to his partner, C., a bond, which was executed by L. as surety, indemnifying him from all loss from the partnership business, it being stipulated by the articles of partnership that the business should continue for five years; that in case either partner should retire, and the other be desirous of continuing the business, the continuing partner might take the retiring partner's share of the partnership assets at a valuation; and that if at the expiration of the partnership term either of the partners should be desirous of carrying on the business, and should neglect or refuse to purchase his partner's share in the assets at a valuation, then the assets should be realized, the debts paid out of the proceeds, and the surplus divided between the partners according to their interests. At the expiration of the partnership term neither of the partners retired, but, without consulting L., continued to carry it on for about twenty months longer, at the end of which time C. retired, leaving the whole partnership assets in the hands of B., by whom the business was continued till B.'s bankruptcy, about three months afterwards. B. afterwards absconded, leaving the concern insolvent, and C. was compelled to liquidate the liabilities of the partnership:—Held, that inasmuch as by the articles the partnership ought to have been wound up at the expiration of the term limited by the articles, it was not competent to C. to agree to its continuance without the consent of L., and yet to hold L. liable as surety upon the bond; and that C., therefore, was not entitled to put the bond in force against L. Small v. Currie, 5 De G. M. & G. 141; 18 Jur. 731; 23 L. J., Ch., 746; 2 Eq. R. 639; 2 W. R. 213.

Held, secondly, that whether that circumstance would afford a defence to an action on the bond or not, a court of equity would restrain the obligee from proceeding in such an action. Id.

1. The contract of suretyship entitles the surety to require that his position shall not be altered, by any arrangement between the creditor and the principal debtor, from that in which he stood at the time of the contract, and it therefore entitles him absolutely to the benefit of all the securities, for the debt which the creditor held at the time of the contract; it also entitles the surety at any time to require that the creditor shall enforce against the principal debtor not only all the remedies and all the securities for the debt which he has at the time of the contract, but also any securities for the debt which the creditor may have acquired subsequently to the contract, and which he holds at the time that the surety requires him to proceed. And as a person paying off a debt for which he is liable is entitled in equity to stand in the place of the creditor, and to have the benefit of the securities held by the creditor for such debt, so the surety, on paying off the debt of the principal debtor, is entitled to require from the creditor the benefit not only of the securities for the debt which the creditor had at the time of the contract of suretyship, but also of all the securities which he holds at the time he is paid off. But there is no implied duty in the contract of suretyship which requires the creditor to retain, for the benefit of the surety, securities for the debt which he might subsequently receive from the principal debtor, and which, whilst the creditor holds them, the surety does not call upon him to enforce. And a creditor who, after the contract of suretyship, having taken a further security from the principal debtor, subsequently parts with that security, does not thereby either wholly or pro tanto release the surety. Newton v. Chorlton, 10 Hare 646; 2 Drew. 333.

2. A principal debtor and his surety, being entitled to two shares in a fund in court, assigned them to a creditor to secure a debt. The creditor assigned the debt of the trustees of his marriage settlement, but no notice of the assignment was given to the surety, nor was any stop-order obtained by the trustees. Afterwards the solicitor of the creditor in an unauthorised manner obtained the payment out of court of the fund of the principal debtors without the knowledge of the creditor or of the surety:—Held, first, that as between the parties, neither the creditor nor his trustees were bound by the act of the solicitor. Secondly, that the assignment of the debt without notice was no discharge of the surety. Wheatley v. Baston (Collins's case), 1 Jur., N. S., 1124; 24 L. J., Ch., 727; 7 De G. M. & G. 261; 3 W. R. 296, 540; 1 Jur., N. S., 222; 3 Eq. Rep. 859, 865.

3. In and prior to 1866, W. and L. partners in trade executed two joint and several bonds to the trustees of S.'s will to secure the repayment with interest of two sums of money advanced to them. In 1869 W. retired from the firm, and in pursuance of an agreement, assigned by deed all his share and interest in the firm to L., who covenanted to indemnify him against all the trade debts and liabilities. The trustees had notice of this deed. L. carried on the business with C. till 1871, when they filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement. The trustees proved under the liquidation for the balance of the principal and interest then due on the bonds, attended and voted at all the meetings of the creditors, who agreed to accept a composition. The trustees were also parties to the composition deed, by which they gave time to L. and C. for the payment of the balance due on the bonds. W. filed a bill praying for a declaration that, under the circumstances, he was absolutely released from all liability under the bonds:—Held, that the retirement of W. with a covenant of indemnity with the knowledge of the trustees had altered his character of principal into that of surety; that the subsequent acts and conduct of the trustees had effected a complete novation of the bond debts; and, consequently, that W. was entitled to the relief which he sought. Wilson v. Lloyd, 21 W. R. 507; 42 L. J., Ch., 559; 16 L. R., Eq., 60; 28 L. T. 331.

4. A. was security for B. on a joint and several bond to Z. Title deeds of B. were deposited with Z. as a collateral security for payment of the debt and interest secured by the bond. A., on a given day, offered to pay Z. the amount due on having B.'s title deeds delivered up to him. This was refused by Z. Subsequently Z. lent B. the title deeds to enable him to come to an arrangement with A., his surety, as to paying off the amount of the bond, on an undertaking to return them to Z., which he had done:—Held, that this was not such a dealing with the principal as discharged the surety from the debt and interest due on the bond. Bushell v. Collett, 6 L. T. N. S., 20.

5. On the 15th February 1831 A. and B. dissolved partnership, A. leaving in the business, to be continued by B., the amount of his share. On the same day B., as principal, and F., as surety, executed a bond for payment to A. of 5,000*l.* on the 15th August following, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. On the 21st February 1831, without the privity or consent of F., A. and B. agreed that the whole of the debt due by the latter to the former should, as to 1,000*l.*, be paid within a year, and as to the residue within the five years, by equal half-yearly payments, with interest. In May 1855 B. was adjudicated bankrupt, and under the bankruptcy A. or his assignee received dividends. In February 1856 A. commenced an action against the representatives of F. to recover a large sum and interest, and thereupon a bill was filed to restrain the proceedings, and an injunction was granted. On the hearing the Court directed that the injunction should be made perpetual, that A. should enter up satisfaction on the judgment obtained (by consent) against F.'s estate, and that A. should pay all the costs at law and in equity. Wright v. Sanders, 3 Jur., N. S., 504; 5 W. R. 644.

1. In 1872 a company was formed to purchase and work a going concern, consisting of railway tire and steam-roller works, and the vendor accepted part of the purchase money in fully paid-up shares, called vendor's shares. The vendor guaranteed to the shareholders a dividend for the first five years upon the called-up capital for the time being at the rate of 10 per cent., and that if in any one of the five years the profits should not equal a dividend of 10 per cent., he would pay the amount required to make the profit equal such dividend; and that, if he did not on demand pay such amount, the company might sell his "vendor's shares," and apply the proceeds in satisfaction of such amount. The business was carried on at a loss from the first, and in 1874 the directors, who had the widest powers of management, shut up the railway tire department, which comprised four-fifths of the whole concern. In 1875 there were no profits at all, and the directors called upon the vendor under his guarantee to pay an amount sufficient to make up the dividend of 10 per cent., and, on his refusal, commenced an action to enforce payment:—Held, that the guarantee was given upon the implied condition that the company should carry on the whole concern as it existed at the first, and that, the company having broken the contract on its part, the vendor was discharged from his guarantee. Brown & Co. v. Brown, 35 L. T., N. S., 54.

Held, also, that the vendor was, under the circumstances, entitled to an injunction to restrain the company from selling his "vendor's shares." Ib.

5. Laches of Creditor.

2. A creditor whose debt is secured by a warrant of attorney, having received promissory notes from the debtor and two sureties, and afterwards entered up judgment and taken the goods of the debtor, and without the knowledge of the sureties withdrawn the execution, has discharged the sureties; but a subsequent promise to pay the debt by one surety, knowing that the execution has been withdrawn, renews his liability. Mayhew v. Crickett, 2 Swan. 185; 1 Wils. 418.

3. A tenant's recognisance was executed at the same time as his lease, but was not inrolled for four years after. The tenant in the meantime became insolvent and incumbered his property:—Held, that the neglect to inrol the recognisance, when the lease was executed, did not discharge the surety. Quere, whose duty is it to inrol the recognisance. Jephson v. Maunsell, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 38, 132.

4. A surety to the East India Company discharged by payment of a balance to the principal under an erroneous settlement by the officer of the company without their authority or knowledge. Law v. East India Co., 4 Ves. 824.

5. By the civil law, sureties are not discharged from their liability to satisfy the creditor, though the benefit of a hypothec of the debtor is lost by the laches of the creditor to enforce his demands. Macdonald v. Bell, 3 Moo. P. C. 315.

6. A. was bound jointly and severally with B. the trustee of a bankrupt's estate in Scotland to the extent of 1000*l.*, that B. should faithfully discharge the duties of his office. Commissioners, according to the practice in Scotland, were afterwards appointed by the creditors, to superintend the conduct of the trustee in the management of the estate. B. having been found a defaulter to the amount of 1,000*l.*, the bond is put in suit against A., who alleges in his defence the general negligence of the commissioners, and their connivance at fraudulent acts of B.:—Held, that A. was not discharged from his obligation by the alleged neglect of the commissioners. McTaggart v. Watson, 10 Bli., N. S., 618; 3 Cl. & F. 525.

7. If, by neglect of the creditor, the benefit of some of the securities for the debt is lost, the surety is pro tanto discharged. Capel v. Butler, 2 Sim. & S. 457; 4 L. J., Ch., 69.

8. A. borrowed from B. 1,000*l.*, to secure which A., and W. as his surety, in 1841 mortgaged to B. their reversionary third shares of a fund in court. B. obtained a stop order. In February 1846, B., on his marriage, assigned the debt to trustees, who did not obtain a new stop order, nor was notice of the assignment given to W. In December 1846, C., who was the general solicitor of B., presented a petition on A.'s behalf, setting out the mortgage in such a way as not to show that W. was merely a surety, and containing a statement that 500*l.* had been paid to B. by A. in part discharge of the debt, and praying for payment out of court of A.'s share. C. instructed counsel to appear and consent for W. and B., and the order was made without the knowledge of either W. or B., or B.'s trustees:—Held, by the Vice-Chancellor, that W.'s share was discharged, on the grounds that a surety is entitled to notice of the assignment of the debt, and that the fund primarily liable had been lost by the neglect of the trustees in not obtaining a new stop-order. But held, on appeal, First, that there is no such rule as that a surety is discharged by the omission of the assignee of the debt to give him notice of the assignment. Secondly, that the trustees of the settlement owed no duty to W. to obtain a new stop-order on A.'s share, and that although their omission to do so might make them liable to their cestuis que trustent, it gave no right to W. Thirdly, that the fact of C. being B.'s general solicitor did not enable him to bind B. as against third parties in such a matter as the petition, and that B. was not bound by the statements contained in the petition, nor subjected to any equity by the order made upon it. Fourthly, that the share of the surety was liable for any deficiency of the primary security not attributable to the default of the creditor, and that the fact of the deficiency being occasioned by the act of the Court of Chancery made no difference. Wheatley v. Bastow, 1 Jur., N. S., 222, 1124; 24 L. J., Ch., 727; 7 De G. M. & G. 261; 3 W. R. 296, 540; 3 Eq. Rep. 859, 865.

1. Where, through negligence on the part of a creditor, a security, to the benefit of which a surety is entitled, is not properly perfected, the surety is discharged to the extent of the security lost. Strange v. Pooks, 9 Jur., N. S., 243; 8 L. T., N. S., 789; 4 Giff. 408; 2 N. R. 507.

Repayment of a sum of money was secured to the lender by a bond of the borrower and his surety, and by a mortgage of the equitable life interests of the borrower and his wife in certain settled real estate, accompanied by policies of assurance. The lender assigned the debt. No notice of the mortgage or of the assignment was given either by the lender or the assignee to the trustees of the settlement, and the latter sold the estate under a power. The surety's indemnity against his principal in respect of the life-estates having thus become lost by the negligence of the creditor:—Held, that the surety was entitled to be relieved to the extent of the security lost. Ib.

2. By an agreement between bankers, a customer, and a surety, the surety guaranteed the balance due or to become due from the customer, subject to a limit and to a proviso empowering the surety at any time to determine by notice his liability as to subsequent dealings. The customer afterwards obtained a loan from the bank beyond the limit of the guarantee on a warrant of attorney, and simultaneously with it a second agreement was entered into between the bankers, the customer, and surety, that the warrant of attorney should not prejudice or affect the former agreement, and that the bank would, at any time when requested by the surety, enter up judgment and issue execution. The bank omitted to file the warrant of attorney, and the customer became bankrupt:—Held, that by the omission to file the warrant of attorney the surety was discharged. Watson v. Alcock, 4 De G. M. & G. 242; 17 Jur. 568; 22 L. J., Ch., 858; 1 Eq. R. 231; 1 W. R. 359; 1 Eq. Rep. 231.

Held, also, that the surety who had pleaded to an action on the guarantee, and then filed a bill for an injunction, had put the bank to unnecessary costs, and could only be relieved in equity on paying the costs at law subsequent to the declaration. Ib.

3. It is very questionable whether the sureties of the bond usually given by an official assignee in bankruptcy to the chief registrar and another registrar of the Court for the proper performance of his duties would be discharged from their suretyship by the neglect of the creditors' assignees in the bankruptcies in which he acted, to exercise that supervision over his conduct which by the statutes and rules in bankruptcy it is their duty to do. The bond seems to be given to the registrars, and not to the creditors' assignees as obligees, for the express purpose of preventing the negligence of the assignees having that effect. Dawson v. James, 1 Kay 280; 23 L. J., Ch., 434; 2 W. R. 213; 2 Eq. Rep. 230.

In such a case the negligence, in order to discharge the sureties, must amount to connivance at the official assignee's getting the fund into his hands improperly, or must be so gross as to be equivalent to a wilful shutting of the eyes to the fraud which he is about to commit. Ib.

4. A surety guaranteeing the honesty of a person employed is not entitled to be relieved from his obligation because the employer fails to use all the means in his power to guard against the consequences of dishonesty. Black v. Ottoman Bank, 8 Jur., N. S., 801; 10 W. R. 871; 6 L. T., N. S., 763.

The mere passive inactivity of the person to whom a guarantee is given, his neglect to call the principal debtor to account in a reasonable time, and to enforce payment against him, do not discharge the surety; and the rule at law and in equity is the same, that there must be some positive act done by him to the prejudice of the surety, or such degree of negligence as to imply connivance and amount to fraud. Ib.

B. executed a bond, by which he bound himself in 5,000*l.* as surety for P., and guaranteed that P. should honestly discharge his obligations to O.; the bond to remain in force till P. should have rendered a just account of his charge, and full payment and satisfaction to O. P. misappropriated funds of O. In an action by O. on the bond, B. pleaded that O. was guilty of negligence and want of due care in checking and properly examining the accounts of P., and that he was thereby released and discharged from the bond. O. replied that the conditions of the bond did not limit B.'s liability to such acts of dishonesty by P. as might have been prevented by the exercise of care and diligence:—Held, first, that O. did not by this replication admit the duty to check the accounts of P. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the plea was no defence to the action. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the securities placed in the hands of P. by O. before the date of the bond, and left in his hands after the date of the bond, were just as much intrusted to him after that date as if they had been delivered after that date. Ib.

5. As between principal and surety, if the primary security proves worthless, whether it was so originally or whether it becomes so afterwards, the surety is not discharged, unless the loss or deficiency of the original and primary security was occasioned by the act of the creditor. Hardwick v. Wright, 35 Beav. 133.

6. A creditor who holds several securities for his debt, partly given by the principal debtor and partly by a surety, must retain all securities given by the principal debtor for the benefit of the surety, and if he neglects to do so, he discharges the surety. Merchants' Bank of London v. Maud, 18 W. R. 312. And see S. C. on appeal 19 W. R. 657.

6. Release of Debtor.

7. In general a release to the principal is in equity a release to the surety, but if the surety has, previously to the release given by the creditor, paid part of the debt, and given a security for the remainder, the general rule will not apply, but the creditor, notwithstanding the release, will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, retain his right against the surety. Hall v. Hutchons, 3 Myl. & K. 426; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 45.

1. Holder of a bill of exchange discharging the acceptor by receiving a composition cannot come upon the drawer. Exp. Wilson, 11 Ves. 410.

2. B. and C. were jointly bound as sureties for A.; D., the wife of A., charged her separate estate to indemnify B. from all losses, etc. The whole loss was borne by B. alone, who afterwards, without the concurrence of D., released C., his co-surety:—Held, that D.'s separate estate was thereby released from the moiety of the losses. Hodgson v. Hodgson, 2 Keen 704; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 5.

3. If a creditor execute a deed of compromise with the principal debtor, he thereby discharges the surety. Not so if it be stipulated in the deed of composition that the remedies against the sureties shall be reserved. Parol evidence of the understanding of the parties to the deed that the remedies against the sureties should be reserved, cannot be admitted. Exp. Glendinning, Buck 517. Exp. Carstairs, id. 560. And see S. C. 1 Rose 130.

4. A. B. entered into a bond as a surety; the creditor subsequently took from the principal debtor a promissory note for the amount, payable in two months, but afterwards, in consequence of the insolvency of the debtor, sued A. B. on the bond. A. B. then filed his bill to restrain the action, on the ground that he was discharged from liability by the giving of the promissory note; the creditor, by his answer, denied that such was the effect of the transaction, and on the hearing an inquiry was directed in respect of the circumstances under which the promissory note had been given. The Master reported that, though there was not any written or any distinct parol agreement between the parties, yet that there was a general understanding that the giving of the note was not to affect the bond:—Held, on further directions, that under these circumstances there was no case for the interference of a court of equity. Wyke v. Rogers, 1 De G. M. & G. 408; 21 L. J., Ch., 611.

A transaction, which would otherwise operate as a release of a surety, will not have that effect if the remedy against the surety is reserved; and the question in the above case was, there being no special ground for equitable relief, whether an agreement to reserve the rights against the surety really existed:—Held, on the evidence, and the Master's report founded on it, that such an agreement did exist, and also that parol evidence was admissible to prove it. Id.

5. The doctrine of equity that a discharge of the principal debtor operates to release the surety from all liability, may be displaced by the conduct of the surety, who by further contract with the creditor, rendered himself liable as a principal debtor, and thus lost the benefit of any subsequent dealings between the creditor and the person originally the principal debtor. Reade v. Lowndes, 23 Beav.

361; 26 L. J., Ch., 793; 3 Jur. N. S., 877; 30 L. T. 28. See also S. C. 80 L. T. 110.

6. When the creditor gives a release to the debtor, he cannot reserve any right against the surety, because the debt is gone at law. Webb v. Hewitt, 3 Kay & J. 438.

An agreement between a bond debtor and his creditor that the latter shall take all the debtor's property, and pay his other creditors 5s. in the pound, though not a discharge of the bond by way of accord and satisfaction, because not under seal, still operates in equity as a satisfaction of the debt; and it is not possible in equity, upon such a transaction, to reserve any rights against the surety, and any attempt to do so would be void, as being inconsistent with the agreement. Id.

7. It is not universally necessary, in order to reserve on a trust deed remedies against sureties, that the reservation should be expressed in the deed. Exp. Harvey, 4 De G. M. & G. 881; 23 L. J., Bky., 26.

A firm was holder of a joint and several note made by a father and son. The son assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, who were expressed to be parties, and to be named in a schedule, and the deed purported to contain an absolute release of the debts without any reservation of their rights against sureties. One of the trustees was a partner in the firm, and the deed was executed by him and the other trustees, but not by any other creditor. It was also executed by the son, with the privity and concurrence of the father. Upon its execution as an act of bankruptcy, an adjudication was pronounced against the son:—Held, that even assuming the father to have joined in the note as a surety merely, and the partner to have executed the deed as a creditor, and not merely as a trustee, the father's liability was not discharged. Id.

8. A banking company whose chief office was in London, but who had offices and carried on business in Australia, made advances at the request of M. and R. to C., the agent of M. and R. in Australia, upon bills of exchange drawn by him upon M. and R. These bills were dishonoured by M. and R., who had entered into a deed of composition with their creditors, which was executed on behalf of the banking company. Dividends had been received under this deed by the banking company, who had brought an action in Australia against C. for the amount of their advances upon the bills, and damages for their non-acceptance. Injunction granted restraining the banking company from proceeding in this action, they having been distinctly informed that the bills were drawn by C. as agent for M. and R., whom they had relieved by executing the deed and taking a dividend thereunder. Objection as to jurisdiction overruled, the chief office and domicile of the banking company being in London, where also the deed had been executed, and all the arrangements made. Walker v. Brooks, 4 W. R. 347.

9. Semble, that if a creditor release by deed one of two sureties, who are jointly and severally liable, the other is also discharged. Evans v. Bremridge, 2 Kay & J. 174; 2 Jur. N. S., 134; 25 L. J., Ch., 102; 4 W. R. 161. And see 4 W. R. 350; 25 L. J., Ch., 334; 2 Jur. N. S., 311.

The dicta to the contrary in Exp. Gifford, (6 Ves. 805) have not been followed. Id.

1. When a creditor releases the principal debtor at the request of the surety, and upon a representation made by him, which turns out to have been founded in mistake, the surety cannot claim, as against the creditor, the benefit of the doctrine that release of the principal releases the surety. Scholefield v. Templer, 1 Johns. 155; 5 Jur. N. S., 619; 28 L. J., Ch., 452. Affirmed 4 De G. & J. 429.

A surety concurs with the principal debtor in suggesting to the creditor, who is pressing for his money, to accept a transfer of a mortgage, which the debtor knows to be fictitious, but the surety believes to be genuine. Subsequently, at the solicitation of the surety, and in reliance on the pretended transfer (which the surety suggests as the reason for releasing him), and in the belief that such transfer is a valid mortgage security, the creditor releases the surety, and erases his name from the securities; upon the faith of which release the surety's friends advance him money, for the purpose of relieving him from all other liabilities. Upon discovery of the fraud:—Held, first, that the creditor was entitled to be restored to all his rights as against the surety, in the same manner as if the latter had never been released, nor his name erased from the securities. Id.

Held, also, by the Vice-Chancellor, that the creditor was entitled to such relief only upon the terms of repaying to the surety's friends the sums lent by them, with the right of standing in their place against the surety; but on appeal, the provisions in their favour were struck out, and the decree made simply without prejudice to their rights. Id.

Held, also, that the same result would have followed had the case been considered upon the mere grounds of mistake. Id.

The circumstance that the surety's remedies against his principal were suspended by the erasure of his name from the securities:—Held, not to release him from his suretyship, that erasure having been upon a misrepresentation made, though innocently, by himself. Id.

2. B. accepted a bill of exchange as surety for A., and subsequently, in consideration of further time given him (B.) for payment, covenanted by deed to pay what was due on the bill with interest, and at the same time assigned a policy as further security:—Held, that an entire acquittal of debts given to A. by all his creditors did not release B. Defries v. Smith, 10 W. R. 189.

3. It is a rule of law that a creditor may suspend his right for ever against the principal debtor, and yet preserve his rights against the surety. When a debtor executed a deed which contained a release from his creditors, followed by a proviso reserving any rights his creditors might have against any other persons in respect of any debt due by the debtor, either alone or jointly with any other persons:—Held, that a surety was not released. Green v. Wynn, 17 W. R. 72; 7 L. R., Eq., 28; 38 L. J., Ch., 76; 19 L. T., N. S., 553. Affirmed 38 L. J., Ch., 220; 20 L. T., N. S., 131; 17 W. R. 385; 4 L. R., Ch., 204.

4. A deed of assignment contained a clause providing that it should not affect any surety nor any security which any of the creditors might have, but if such security should be enforceable against the debtor or his estate, then the creditor (unless he should consent to abandon his security) should be entitled to receive dividends upon so much only of his secured debts as might remain after such security should have been realised, or after credit should have been given for the full value thereof; and a creditor, holding a policy of assurance at that time valueless, proved for the full amount of his debt and received a dividend thereon:—Held, that there was no evidence of the creditor's intention to abandon his security. Parker v. Anglosea (Marquis), 25 L. T., N. S., 482; 20 W. R. 162.

7. Death of Surety.

5. B., being hired as clerk to A. & Co., but not for any definite period, C. and D. joined with him in a bond to secure his duly accounting for his assets. C. died, and his executrix gave written notice to A. & Co. that she would no longer remain security. A. & Co. communicated this notice to B., and required and obtained from him the bond of another surety. D. died, and also the new surety, and four years and a half after death of C., B. died, when deficiencies were found in his accounts subsequent to the notice:—Held, executrix of C. had no equity to restrain A. & Co. from proceeding at law on bond. Gordon v. Calvert, 4 Russ. 581; 2 Sim. 253.

6. A guarantee was determinable by six months' notice. The guarantor died, leaving as his executor the debtor on whose behalf the guarantee was given. The creditors to whom the guarantee was given continued to make advances to the debtor, knowing that there was no personal estate to answer the guarantee:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the creditors were not entitled to the benefit of the guarantee for their advances subsequent to the death. The death alone did not determine the guarantee. Harries v. Fawcett, 8 L. R., Ch., 866; 29 L. T., N. S., 84; 42 L. J., Ch., 502; 21 W. R. 762. Affirming 28 L. T., N. S., 182; 21 W. R. 504; 15 L. R., Eq., 311.

7. Held, that a joint security given by three partners to a bank, to cover advances to be made to them, was, as to future advances, determined by the death of one partner, as to the estates of such partner comprised in the security; and that a heritable bond given by the heir of such partner within a year after his death, and over the estates of the father, to secure payment of future advances by the bank, was void under the Scotch Act of 1661, as a bond given by an heir, for payment of his own debts, within a year after the death of the ancestor. Scotland (Bank of) v. Christie, 8 Cl. & F. 214.

8. A. desiring to become an underwriting member of Lloyd's, B. gave a guarantee to the committee of that body on behalf of A., in which he held himself responsible "for all his engagements in that capacity":—Held, that the guarantee was not determined by the death of the guarantor or by notice of his death. Calvert v. Gordon (3 M. & R. 124) followed. Lloyd's v. Harper, 43 L. T. 481; 16 L. R., Ch. D., 290; 50 L. J., Ch., 140; 29 W. R. 452. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 217; 42 L. T. 218; 28 W. R. 419.

Held, also, that the guarantee extended to all engagements entered into by A., as an underwriter, both with the members of Lloyd's and other persons. Id.

When the guarantee was given Lloyd's was a voluntary association, managed by a committee, to whom the guarantee was given. A few years after the members of this association were incorporated by a special Act of Parliament under the name of Lloyd's, and the rights of the committee were vested in the corporation:—Held, that the committee, and the corporation as their successors, were in the position of trustees for all persons with whom A. had entered into engagements as an underwriter, and were therefore entitled to maintain this action. Id.

8. Other Cases.

1. The recognisance of a surety for a tenant will not be put in suit, unless an attempt has been made to enforce the rent from the tenant by attachment, or it is shown that such a proceeding would be useless. Newman v. Mills, 1 Hog. 291.

2. Where, on default of the receiver, and discharge under the Insolvent Act, the plaintiff not appearing, although served with notice, his surety paid the amount to the solicitor, which was proved by affidavit:—Held, that such payment was insufficient, and a motion to discharge the recognisance of the surety refused; but, on a subsequent notice on the plaintiff to show cause, on his not appearing the order made. Mann v. Stennet, 8 Beav. 189; 9 Jur. 98.

3. The 12th section of the 1 Vict., c. 54, enabling the treasurer of a county to apply to the Court of Chancery by motion, to vacate the recognisances of himself and his sureties, upon his investing in Government securities a sum equal to that secured by the recognisances, applies only to those cases where the party continues to be treasurer at the period of making the application. Therefore, a petition presented under the twelfth section by a person who had resigned the office of county treasurer before the passing of the above Act was dismissed. Re Callaghan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 448, n.

In cases of principal and surety, circumstances may arise where payment of the entire sum by the principal would not discharge the sureties. Id. 450, n.

4. A creditor pending an action on a guarantee against a surety, who contests the question of his liability, proves the debt under a commission of bankrupt against the principal debtor, and, by his signature, enables the bankrupt to obtain his certificate, though the surety had given him notice not to sign it: the surety is not thereby discharged from his liability on the guarantee. Broune v. Carr, 2 Russ. 600.

5. An annuity granted by A. to B. was secured by a covenant by C., a surety, to pay the annuity in case A. made default, and by a judgment for 2,100*l.* entered up against A. and C. The annuity remained unpaid from January 1823, A. having left the country; and in February 1824 C. became bankrupt, and afterwards obtained his certificate. C. having died, B. filed a bill to have the arrears of the annuity paid out of his real and personal estates:—Held, that neither the value of the annuity nor the sum due on the judgment was provable under C.'s commission, and therefore that his certificate was not a bar to the plaintiff's demand. Johnson v. Compton, 4 Sim. 37.

6. The liability of sureties in a replevin bond is limited to the amount of the rent in arrear at the time of the distress and costs, and they are not liable for subsequent rent; and, therefore, where on the trial of an action of replevin, a verdict was taken by agreement between the plaintiff in the action and the avowant for the penalty of the bond, subject to reference, not only as to the amount of the rent due at the time of the distress, but of the rent then due, and also of certain penal rents, the sureties being no parties to such agreement, and the arbitrator awarded damages to the full amount of the penalty of the bond, the Court:—Held, that the sureties were entitled to be relieved from the bond, it appearing that the rent originally distrained for had been fully paid before the trial of replevin. Ward v. Henly, 1 Y. & J. 285.

7. G. grants a lease of a farm to C. O. D. for fourteen years, C. D., father of C. O. D., joining in such lease and covenanting for the payment of the rent and performance of the covenant by C. O. D.; and the lease contains provisions for re-entry on non-payment of rent, and determination of the lease at the end of the first seven years on giving six months' previous notice. G. gives notice in writing that he shall require C. O. D. to deliver up possession of the premises held by him under a lease determinable as therein mentioned, and such notice is given full six months before the expiration of the seven years. G. permits C. O. D. to remain in possession and dies, and after his death the rent becomes in arrear and breaches of covenant are committed. G.'s representative then files a bill, claiming to be a specialty creditor in respect of the rent due against the estate of C. O. D., and against C. D. as his surety:—Held, that the notice was sufficiently in accordance with the terms of the lease to put an end to it so far as C. D., the surety, was concerned, and the bill dismissed with costs. Giddins v. Dodd, 4 W. R. 377; 3 Drew 485; 25 L. J., Ch., 451.

8. The discharge of a debtor by the acceptance of a composition under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, s. 126, is a discharge in bankruptcy by operation of law, and only releases the debtor himself, but does not release any person jointly bound with him. Exp. v. Re Jacobs, 31 L. T., N. S., 745; 44 L. J., Bk., 34; 10 L. R., Ch., 211; 23 W. R. 251.

Therefore, when the acceptor of a bill of exchange filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement, and the creditors duly passed resolutions accepting a composition from him, and the holder of the bill voted in favour of the composition:—Held, that this did not operate to release the drawer. Id.

9. If a surety of a bill assents to its being renewed, he is not discharged. Torrance v. British North America (Bank of), 5 L. R., P. C., 246; 29 L. T. 109; 21 W. R. 529.

II. Rights of Debtor and Surety.

1. Indemnification of Surety, 6681.
- II. Interest on Payment by Surety, 6684.

I. INDEMNIFICATION OF SURETY.

1. Surety, having paid defendant for fear of arrest, shall recover same in Chancery. Anon., Cary 19.

2. The testator as principal, and his son as surety (being successive tenants for life) joined in granting an annuity, and as a collateral security gave a joint and several bond and warrant, conditioned that if the annuity was in arrear the annuitant might issue execution against the father during his life, and after his death against the son. Both having died, the son's executor paid several gales of the annuity:—Held, that he could recover only the principal sums so paid, and no interest upon them against the father's assets. But a fund of the father's having been originally assigned to secure the annuity, which became part of his assets and produced interest, the son's executor was recouped to the full amount of the bond and interest. Caulfield v. McGuire, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 164; 2 J. & L. 141.

3. A. is principal in a recognisance of 5,000*l.*, and B. and C. sureties. A. afterwards jointures his wife, before marriage, in some lands, without notice either to the wife or her friends of this recognisance, and devises his real and personal estate to B., one of his sureties, and dies. First, the personal estate of A., the principal, shall be applied towards the recognisance; then his lands devised, the devisees being a volunteer; next the paraphernalia of the wife of A., the principal; and lastly, the two sureties shall contribute to make up the deficiency. Tynt v. Tynt, 2 P. W. 542; Mos. 192.

4. Bond creditor shall have the benefit of all counter bonds as collateral security given by debtor to surety. Mauve v. Harrison, 1 Eq. Abr. 93.

5. Principal and surety, on a note payable by instalments; after one payment became due, principal discharged under the Insolvent Debtors Act. Bill by creditor, and decree against surety and him, to have remedy over against effects of the principal for the first money due on the first payment, and the common decree for the rest. O'Carrolls' case, Ambl. 61.

6. The obligor of several bonds, in which A., his solicitor, joined as surety, conveyed certain real property to A., upon trust to sell, and out of the proceeds of the sale to pay the bond creditors. The creditors did not execute, nor had any notice of the deed:—Held, that the deed was a mere deed of agency, and not binding in favour of the creditors; but that A. was entitled to retain the estates conveyed to him until he should be discharged from his liability as surety under the bonds. Wilding v. Richards, 1 Colly. 655; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 211.

7. A. is bound for B., and has a counter bond. Equity will compel B. to pay the defendant, though A. is not sued. Ranelagh v. Hayes, 1 Vern. 190.

8. A surety under an annuity deed, redeeming the annuity subsequent to the bankruptcy of the grantor of the annuity, is entitled to the benefit of the grantee's proof under the grantor's commission, and to proceed by action against the grantor, who had obtained his certificate for the arrears of the annuity subsequent to the commission. Watkins v. Flannagan, 3 Russ. 421; 1 G. & J. 199; 6 Madd. 280. And see S. C. at law, 3 Barn. & Ald. 186.

9. Surety in a bond for the bankrupts, after the bankrupts obtain their certificate, joins with them in a new bond to the representatives of the creditor, and the old bond is delivered up to the surety:—Held, that this was not equivalent to payment by the surety so as to enable him to prove under the commission. Exp. Sergeant, 1 G. & J. 183. Affirmed 2 G. & J. 23.

10. Where a judgment on a joint and several bond has been obtained against one of the obligors only, and the co-obligor pays the debt, the judgment is not thereby extinguished; and the co-obligor having obtained an assignment of the judgment is a specialty creditor against the estate of the other. Kent v. Canter, Wall. Lyn. 364. See S. C. id. 366. n.

11. Second tenant in tail joins in a mortgage and bond with the first who receives the money lent:—Held, to be only a surety, and the real estate not liable in aid of the personal estate of the first, although he had joined in hopes to prevent a recovery. Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 251.

12. The Court will not, sitting in bankruptcy, on behalf of the sureties of a bankrupt, direct a sale of mortgaged premises for payment of the debt secured by recognisance, or for payment of any other security except a mortgage. Exp. Usher, 1 Ball & B. 197.

13. Surety for a receiver indemnified out of the balance due to him. Glossop v. Harrison, 3 Ves. & B. 134; Coop. 61.

14. Surety depositing money, and indemnifying against expense, etc., may compel creditor to go against principal, and even to prove under commission of bankruptcy for benefit of surety. Wright v. Simpson, 6 Ves. 734.

Holder of bill of exchange may be compelled to prove under bankruptcy of acceptor for benefit of drawer. Id.

15. A. was indebted on bond to B. B. died, leaving C. his sole next of kin, who obtained letters of administration of his estate. The estate of B., after all debts, etc., were paid, left a clear residue exceeding the amount of the bond debt. A. became surety for C. by joining in promissory notes, C. became an insolvent debtor, and A. was compelled to pay the notes. C. died, and then the assignee under his insolvency took out letters of administration de bonis non of B., and sued A. on the bond:—Held, that A. might set off the sums which he had been compelled to pay as surety for C. against the bond debt. Jones v. Mossop, 3 Hare 568; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 470; 8 Jur. 1064.

16. A surety who compounds a debt for which his principal and himself have become jointly liable, and takes an assignment of that debt to a trustee for himself, can only claim, against his principal, the amount which he has actually paid. Reed v. Norris, 2 Myl. & C. 361; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 197; 1 Jur. 233.

17. Settlement by a husband, of money, in trust to pay the interest to the wife during her life, with a proviso against anticipation. The husband joins with a surety in a covenant to pay an annuity, secured by an assignment by the wife of the interest to become due, and of the principal sum in the event of there being no children of the marriage :—Held, the surety not entitled to any remedy in equity under the assignment, in respect of his payment of the arrears of the annuity recovered against him by an action upon the covenant, although he had no notice of the proviso against anticipation in the settlement ; a charge of fraudulent concealment not being sufficiently established ; and even if fraud had been fully made out against the wife, it seems it would not be sufficient to support the assignment, which would be to give her a power of alienation against the intention of the settlor. Jackson v. Hobhouse, 2 Meriv. 488.

1. B. was a surety for A., in a joint bond to C. and D., for 180,000*l.* conditioned to pay 90,000*l.* with interest at 5 per cent. By a counter bond of equal date, A. was bound to B., in a like penalty, with condition to indemnify B., his heirs, executors, etc., from payment of the said 90,000*l.* and interest, and from all damages he might sustain on account of the non-payment of the said sum, and interest. After the deaths of A. and B., the executors of B. were called upon, and did pay to C. and D. 22,000*l.* on account of the principal, and several large sums for interest on A.'s debt. In a suit for the administration of A.'s estate, the Court allowed the executors of B. to come in as creditors for the several sums so paid by them, and for interest on the 22,000*l.*, but not for interest on the several sums of money paid for interest on the original debt. Rigby v. Macnamara, 2 Cox 415.

2. The case in which a surety has a right to sue his principal in equity, to be discharged from his liability, is where the creditor has a right to sue his debtor, and refuses to exercise that right, semble. Padwick v. Stanley, 9 Hare 627 ; 16 Jur. 586.

3. A surety may in equity compel his principal to relieve him of his liability by payment of the debt. Antrobus v. Davidson, 3 Meriv. 578.

4. The East India Company having compelled payment from a surety in India by their power over him as one of their servants, without an account or proceeding against the principal, though solvent, and otherwise under harsh circumstances, he was restored to the same situation by a decree for repayment, with interest at 5 per cent., upon giving security for repayment in case in a future suit by the company he should be held liable ; the Court would not, upon the circumstances, give Indian interest. Law v. East India Co., 4 Ves. 825.

5. If A. borrows money for B. on a mortgage of his estate, the covenant in the mortgage deed to pay the money will bind him for whom it is borrowed. The mortgagor may file a bill against his debtor to have his estate disencumbered, and so may every surety against his principal, for he shall not be put to his indebitatus assumptit. Lee v. Rook, Mos. 318.

6. A. bound with his father for the debts of the father, who enters into a statute to the son to pay the debts, and indemnify the son ; one of the creditors delivers up his bond, and takes a mortgage from the father. The son shall not set up the statute to defeat the mortgage. Legriell v. Barker, 2 Vern. 39.

7. A necessary consequence of a reservation in a composition deed of a creditor's remedies against a surety is the continuance of the surety's right to be indemnified by the principal debtor, and this right will not be held to be abandoned unless a contract to abandon it is proved. Therefore, where one of the creditors who acceded to a composition deed was also a residuary legatee of a surety for the compounding debtors to another creditor, and one of the compounding debtors happened to be the surety's executor :—Held, that the residuary legatee's accession must be taken to have been in respect of his direct debt only, and did not preclude him from insisting on the surety's residuary estate being indemnified by the debtors. Close v. Close, 4 De G. M. & G. 176.

8. A person appointed in a cause to be receiver of the rents of a testator's estate was entitled to some shares of that estate by descent, and had acquired others by purchase. By deed he gave to his sureties, by way of indemnity, a security on the descended shares, expressly excluding the purchased shares, but without any expression of an intention to exonerate them from such liability as they might by law be subject to. The receiver became bankrupt, being considerably indebted to the estate, and the assignees sold his purchased shares. On further directions it was declared that the descended and the purchased shares were liable to make good to the other part owners under the will so much of the balance due from the receiver as the sureties were not liable for ; and from this declaration there was no appeal :—Held, that the sureties had, for the sums paid by them, the same lien on the receiver's shares as the other part owners would have had, and that they had not, by taking the security on the descended shares, lost this right as against the purchased shares. Brandon v. Brandon, 3 De G. & J. 524 ; 5 Jur., N. S., 256 ; 28 L. J., Ch., 147.

9. D. and P., under a covenant in a mortgage deed, paid the premiums on a life-policy forming part of the security, as sureties. By a contemporaneous instrument, to which they were not parties, the equity of redemption was assigned in trust for the benefit of the creditors of the mortgagor, and D. signed the trust-deed as a creditor. The mortgage was paid off, and the policy was sold by the trustee of the creditor's deed, under a power contained therein. A creditor's suit being instituted :—Held, that the creditors were not entitled to take the money produced by the sale of the policy, without making payment in satisfaction of the premiums paid by D. and P. Aylwin v. Witty, 30 L. J., Ch., 860 ; 9 W. R. 720.

10. A., one of three sureties who had become bound to the extent of 2,000*l.* to a corporation for the due accounting of the office of its treasurer, B., received formal notice from the corporation that B. was a defaulter, and on the next day took from B. a deposit note of a bank for 2,300*l.*, which had been placed in the bank by B., one month previously, in the name of his daughter. On a bill filed by the corporation against B., who had absconded, and the three sureties, to make good the amount found due by B., ultra the 2,300*l.* :—Held, establishing the liability of the sureties, that the circumstances under which A. received the 2,300*l.* were such as ought to have induced him of make inquiry, and that, having neglected to do so, he was bound to restore that amount, with interest, after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mayor) v. Murray, 7 De G. M. & G. 497; 3 Jur., N. S., 847; 26 L. J., Ch., 201; 5 W. R. 208.

1. The plaintiff accepted a bill for the accommodation of B. R. afterwards compounded with his creditors, who executed a release in which the holder of the bill concurred, under a secret understanding between him, the plaintiff, and B. that his rights against the plaintiff should not be prejudiced. R. died, appointing the plaintiff his executor. The plaintiff, at the request of R.'s widow, renounced probate, and allowed her to take out administration, in consideration of which, she and her brother gave him a memorandum, undertaking to indemnify him against all his liabilities as surety for R., on several instruments, and under the accommodation bill, but not beyond the amount of the assets. The holder of the bill pressed the plaintiff for payment, the plaintiff paid him, and filed a bill against Mrs. R. and her brother for indemnity out of the assets:—Held, that however the case might have stood apart from the memorandum, Mrs. R. had thereby estopped herself from treating the plaintiff's payment to the bill holder as voluntary, and not made in satisfaction of a legal liability, and that she had therefore no defence to the suit; and that although the demand against her brother might be of a legal and not of an equitable nature, yet as he was surety in respect of a demand which, as against his principal, was the proper subject of a suit in equity, he was properly made a party to the suit. Atkins v. Revell, 1 De G. F. & J. 360.

2. A surety, who in an action by the creditor has omitted to plead by way of set-off the receipt by the creditor of dividends from the debtor's estate, is not precluded from establishing his title to such dividends in equity. Thornton v. McKean, 1 N. R. 16; 11 W. R. 140; 32 L. J., Ch., 69; 1 Hem. & M. 525.

3. A. became surety for payment of two promissory notes upon which his son was liable. He died before the notes were due, and the son being unable to pay them, the trustees of A.'s will borrowed money sufficient for the purpose, and paid the amount due for principal and interest on such notes. By his will A. made his son one of his residuary legatees:—Held, that the son, or his share in the testator's estate, was bound to make good to such estate, in addition to the principal paid by the trustees on account of such notes, interest upon the sums for which the notes were originally made. Willes v. Greenhill, 30 L. J., Ch., 808; 9 W. R. 217.

4. A surety for a mortgagor, who pays part of the mortgage, is entitled, as against the mortgagor, to a charge on the estate. Gedye v. Matson, 25 Beav. 310.

5. A surety having paid the debt of his principal is entitled to rank as a simple contract creditor for the amount, and, if made executor, to retain it out of the assets of the principal against all other creditors of equal degree. Boyd v. Brooks, 34 L. J., Ch., 605; 13 W. R.

419; 12 L. T., N. S., 38; 5 N. R. 258. Affirming 34 Beav. 7.

6. A surety on a bond to secure a money debt, was secured by another bond of indemnity entered into by the principal debtor's father, who had died, having devised property specifically upon trust to pay the debt. The creditor having applied to the surety, the surety had recourse to the executors, who said they had no funds in hand, and that they were unable under the will to raise the money by sale of any portion of the testator's estate, except under a decree of the Court:—Held, that the surety, though he had not actually paid anything, was entitled to maintain a bill against the executors for administration, payment of the debt, and indemnity. Woodbridge v. Norris, 6 L. R., Eq., 410; 16 W. R. 965.

Held, also, that it was not necessary that the bill should be filed on behalf of all the creditors. Ib.

7. A banking company, at the request of D., a speculator in cotton, issued a letter of credit, authorizing C., a merchant at Bombay, to draw upon them to the amount of 23,150*l.*, the drafts to be accompanied by bills of lading of cotton to be delivered on their acceptance of the drafts. A similar letter of credit for 50,000*l.* was issued to C., at the request of W., another speculator in cotton. C. accordingly drew drafts under the first letter of credit to the full amount, and under the second letter of credit to the amount of 33,635*l.* The first set was accepted by the banking company, which received the corresponding bills of lading. The second set was not presented till after the banking company had stopped payment, and was therefore not accepted. The first set was dishonoured:—Held, that C. could only prove against the company for the amount of the several bills, after deducting the value of the cotton which was sold, and the proceeds received by C. & Co. Re Barnard's Banking Co., Coupland's claim, 39 L. J., Ch., 287; 5 L. R., Ch., 167; 21 L. T., N. S., 807.

8. An indenture was made between A., B., C., and D., which recited the bankruptcy of A., and that he had entered into a composition, with the sanction of the Court of Bankruptcy, to be paid by instalments secured by promissory notes, and that B., C., and D. had agreed to secure the payment of the last two of the notes upon being indemnified against any loss in respect of their liability on foot of the notes. The deed witnessed that, in pursuance of the agreement, and in consideration of the liability of B., C., and D. on foot of the notes, and in order to indemnify them from any loss in respect thereof, A. charged his stock in trade, and all his real and personal estate, with payment of the amount of the two last instalments of the notes, and gave them powers of attorney, of entry and sale; and out of the proceeds, and after payment of costs, to retain any moneys which they should pay, or should be liable to pay, in respect of the notes; and A. covenanted to indemnify B., C., and D. against payment of the notes. B. was a creditor of A., and took notes signed by A., B. C., and D., for the composition. E., another creditor, took similar notes, and handed them over before they were due to B., in payment of a debt due by himself to B.:—Held, first, that the deed was confined to the liability of the sureties, and did not convert the simple contract debts of A. into specialty debts. Caldwell v. Parker, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 519; 17 W. R. 955.

Held, secondly, that B. was only a simple contract creditor in respect of notes given to him. Id.

Held, thirdly, that he was a specialty creditor in respect of the notes given to E. Id.

II. INTEREST ON PAYMENT BY SURETY.

1. A surety having paid the whole amount of a recognizance, and having been allowed to use the recognizance for the recovery of contribution from his co-surety, he is not thereby entitled to recover interest thereon. Salkeld v. Abbott, Hay. & J. 110.

2. Surety cannot prove for interest due and paid subsequent to commission under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 52. Exp. Wilson, 1 Rose 187.

3. By deed A. agreed to charge certain property with all sums that B. should pay as surety for a third party, and also agreed that B. should insure her life, and that the costs of such insurance, and the payments for keeping the same on foot, should be paid out of the property charged; and she directed the trustees to make the necessary payments for effecting and keeping on foot the policies. The trustees did not make the payments, but the policy was kept on foot by B.:—Held, that he was entitled to interest thereon at 4 per cent. Hodgson v. Hodgson, 2 Keen 704; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 5.

4. Where sureties joined as co-obligors in a bond, one who had been compelled to pay the amount with interest, was not entitled to carry on interest upon such payment against the personal representative of his co-surety. Contribution decreed, but without interest either on the consolidated sum or the principal money paid. Quære, whether as against the principal debtor or his representative, such payment carries interest in the absence of express agreement. Ongé v. Truelock, 2 Moll. 42.

5. A. as principal and B. as surety joined in granting an annuity for the life of C., and A. assigned to trustees a policy of insurance upon his own life, upon trust to permit C., after the death of A., out of the money insured or the interest thereof, to receive the annuity, and A. and B. executed their joint and several bond conditioned to secure the punctual payment of the annuity. The executors of A. received the amount of the policy, and invested it upon Government securities. The executor of B. was compelled to pay C. an arrear of the annuity:—Held, that as against the general assets of A. the executor of B. was not entitled to interest on the money so paid by him; but that he was entitled, as against the sum insured and the interest thereon, to be put in the same situation as if it had been duly applied in payment of the annuity, and therefore to be repaid thereout the money advanced by him with interest. Caulfield v. Maguire, 2 J. & L. 141; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 164.

6. A. covenants to indemnify lands settled on B. from certain debts, the interest of which B. is afterwards obliged to pay: B. is entitled under the covenant to come against the estate of A. for the sums so paid for interest, together with interest thereon. Fergus v. Gore, 1 Sch. & Lef. 107.

7. Two persons having jointly and severally granted an annuity, and mutually covenanted that each should pay one moiety, and indemnify the other against all "actions, suits, costs, charges, damages, demands, sums of money, and expenses," which might be incurred by reason of the non-payment thereof; one, who, on the insolvency of the other, had made payments on account of his moiety, is not entitled to interest on such payments. Bell v. Free, 1 Swan. 90; 1 Wils. 51.

8. In cases of bond debt, interest is computed only to the commission. In the case of principal and surety, if principal become bankrupt, the surety cannot prove for interest paid by him after date of the commission. Francois v. Rucker, Ambl. 674.

III. Co-Sureties.

- I. Contribution and Extent of Liability, 6684.
- II. Release of Co-Surety, 6686.

I. CONTRIBUTION AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

9. A. mortgaged house to B., and C. and D. were his sureties; money being due for interest, C. paid it to prevent suit. D. lent A. money on equity of redemption, on which C. requested him to include debt, in consideration money, which he did:—Held, that C. shall have his demand first satisfied. Beckett v. Booth, 2 Eq. Abr. 595.

10. Where sureties joined as co-obligors in a bond, one who had been compelled to pay the amount with interest, was not entitled to carry on interest upon such payment against the personal representative of his co-surety; contribution, decreed, but without interest either on the consolidated sum or principal money paid. Quære, whether as against the principal debtor or his representative, such payment carries interest in the absence of express agreement. Ongé v. Truelock, 2 Moll. 42.

11. Where one obligee is sued by the custom of London, his co-sureties shall contribute: so, by the custom of London, where a surety pays a debt, he shall maintain an action against the principal, though he has not counter bond. Laver v. Nelson, 1 Vern. 456.

12. Suit by one surety against another for contribution, the representatives of another surety who died insolvent ought to be parties. Hole v. Harrison, Rep. temp. Finch. 15.

13. The doctrine of contribution among sureties is not founded in contract, but is the result of general equity on the ground of equality of burden and benefit. Dering v. Winchelsea (Lord), 1 Cox 318.

1. On a bill filed by a surety against his co-surety and the principal, for a contribution from the co-surety, in respect of money actually paid by the plaintiff for the principal, it is not necessary to prove the insolvency of the principal; otherwise, where the principal is not a party to the suit. Lanson v. Wright, 1 Cox 275.

2. A surety who pays the debt of his principal has the same rights against his co-surety that he has against the principal. Woods v. Creaghe, 2 Hog. 50.

3. Discharge of surety by creditor has not the effect of a discharge of the principal without reserve, and, therefore, a co-surety is not discharged. When it is ascertained what each of the co-sureties has paid beyond his proportion, the equity as between them is arranged upon the principle of contribution for excess. Exp. Gifford, 6 Ves. 805.

4. Where several persons are sureties for the payment of one sum of money, though by distinct instruments, and one pays more than an equal share of that sum, he may have contribution from his co-sureties; but if it be arranged by contract, which it may be, that each surety shall be answerable only for a given portion of one sum of money, in such case there is no right of contribution among the co-sureties. The case of Dering v. Winchelsea (Lord) (1 Cox 318) considered. Pendlebury v. Walker, 4 Y. & Coll. 424.

5. Where sureties are bound by different instruments, for equal portions of a debt due from the same principal, and the suretyship of each is a separate and distinct transaction, there is no right of contribution between them. Corpe v. Tynnam, T. & R. 426.

6. A surety by recognisance who pays the whole amount into court, when pressed with Crown process, is entitled to use the Crown securities, in order to levy a moiety from his co-surety, provided he share with his co-surety the benefit of any counter security he may have taken from the principal. Latouche v. Pallas, Hayes 450.

7. Right of contribution between co-sureties exists, whether by separate instrument, or by the same instrument. Mayhew v. Crickett, 2 Swan. 185; 1 Wils. 418.

8. No contribution in favour of one surety against another; his engagement according to the bond and parol evidence (which was held admissible) being, not as co-surety, but without the privity of the other; as a distinct collateral security, limited to the default of payment by the principal and the other surety. Craythorne v. Spinburne, 14 Ves. 160.

Right to contribution as between co-sureties: whether by the same or several instruments, whether prior or not, and whatever their number, depending rather upon a principle of equity than contract, except as upon the implied knowledge of that principle. Ib.

Right of contribution among co-sureties limited by the extent of their respective contracts; as where they are for different sums. Ib.

9. When one of several sureties has paid the principal debt, and some of the co-sureties are insolvent, he is entitled as against the solvent sureties to be repaid their numerical shares of what he has paid with interest from the time of payment, although the instrument does not contain any express indemnity so as to carry interest as on a specialty. And the insolvent sureties must pay their own costs of being brought before the Court to the final hearing of the cause. Hitchman v. Stewart, 3 Drew. 271; 1 Jur., N. S., 839; 24 L. J., Ch., 690; 3 Eq. Rep. 838.

Five persons become sureties in four bonds, the principal debtor becomes insolvent, and one surety is called on to pay, and does pay in respect of the whole default, and files a bill for contribution against the representatives of one of the sureties, the others being insolvent. It is objected by the defendants that the remaining sureties should be parties, and they are made parties by amendment. A reference is ordered as to sums paid and money due; and on the question of costs, and whether the plaintiff is entitled to interest on the money he has paid:—Held, that each party must pay his own costs, and that the plaintiff is entitled to interest from the time of payment. S. C. 3 W. R. 464.

10. A bond was executed by a principal and two sureties. One of the sureties compounded with his creditors, and by the terms of the bond the moneys secured became immediately payable. After this the plaintiff entered into a separate bond to become liable for the whole amount; and upon the principal becoming insolvent, the creditor sued the plaintiff and obtained payment of the amount due. The plaintiff filed a bill against the other surety in the first bond for contribution:—Held, upon the parol evidence, that a co-suretyship was intended by the parties; but, that even if the defendant had not known of the plaintiff's suretyship, the plaintiff would still have been entitled to contribution as against him. Whitting v. Burke, 10 L. R., Eq., 539. Affirmed 6 L. R., Ch., 342.

11. In a decree against sureties who were jointly and severally liable, the Lord Chancellor refused to make any declaration for contribution between them equally. Berwick (Mayor) v. Murray, 3 Jur., N. S., 847; 26 L. J., Ch., 201; 7 De G. M. & G. 497; 5 W. R. 208.

12. Five directors of a company gave their joint and several bond to a bank to secure repayment with interest of a loan made by the bank to the company. By an agreement between five persons interested in the company of the first part, and the five directors of the second part, after reciting the bond, it was agreed that, in pursuance of an agreement made upon the treaty for the loan by the bank, the liability of the several persons, parties thereto of the second part, under the bond, should be borne and discharged by the ten several persons parties thereto in equal shares and proportions, and that each of the several persons parties thereto would indemnify the other nine against all actions, etc., in respect of the loan by the bank or in respect of the bond. The company was ordered to be wound up, and the bank recovered judgment against the obligees of the bond for the whole amount of principal and interest due thereunder. One of the guarantors had become insolvent. On a bill by two of the guarantors, who had under the judgment paid more than their proportion of the sum secured by the bond against the other eight guarantors to enforce a ratable contribution from them in respect of the principal, interest, and costs recovered under the bond:—Held, that all the solvent guarantors were liable to contribute ratably in respect of the whole amount recovered under the bond, and that the extra liability arising from the insolvency of one of the guarantors was not to fall upon the defendants to the action at law. Dallas v. Walls, 29 L. T., N. S., 599.

The bank made a further advance to the company upon the personal security of three of the directors. Five of the guarantors for the amount secured by the bond signed an agreement that they would join the three directors in guaranteeing repayment to the bank of the further advance in equal proportions with the three directors. One of the five who signed this agreement stated by his affidavit that his signature (if he did sign) was obtained "on the express engagement and understanding" that the agreement should be signed by all the guarantors for the sum secured by the bond:—Held, that the words "express understanding" were utterly unmeaning, and that the Court would never pay any attention to a statement that something was done on an express engagement, unless the engagement was spoken to in a manner which was admissible in evidence. Ib.

1. Where some only of a body of directors have given a guarantee, they are primarily liable, unless the other directors adopt it. Re Dover, Deal, & Cinque Ports Railway Co., Exp. Londesborough (Lord), 1 Eq. Rep. 271.

2. A., B., C., and D., at request of E., who was in pecuniary difficulties, had joined with E. as sureties in various promissory notes and bills of exchange, but in no one instance had they all four joined. A. was liable to a larger amount than B., C., and D. The creditors of E. pressed for payment, and A., B., C., and D. employed W., a solicitor, to enter into arrangements with the creditors on their behalf, and the following agreement was drawn up by W. and signed by A., B., C., and D.:—"We, the undersigned, being jointly liable as guarantors upon certain bills of exchange given in favour of E., authorize W. to act for us as our joint and several solicitor in all matters concerning those bills, and we further authorize W. to take such proceedings as he may think fit to recover the amount of such bills from E. In carrying out the terms W. will negotiate to settle the above upon the best terms he can. As, however, between the parties themselves, the following is the basis of the arrangement inter se: Upon the amount being ascertained for which the liabilities can be discharged, the parties to this arrangement undertake to provide the same in the proportion of one-fourth each, and all sums recovered from E. are to be brought into account and repaid to such parties in proportion to their existing liabilities, or to the amounts respectively found by them." In a suit by A. for contribution:—Held, that upon the true construction of this agreement, the parties did not intend to alter their existing liabilities and to take the entire liability upon themselves in equal shares, but only to advance the requisite money in the first instance in equal shares; and that, consequently, their ultimate rights and liabilities were not thereby varied. Arce-deckne v. Howard, 45 L. J., Ch., 622.

3. Sureties in a recognizance contribute in proportion to the amounts for which they were respectively originally bound. Re MacDouglas, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 269.

4. When one of two sureties has paid the full amount of a receiver's recognizance, he is entitled to use the recognizance for the purpose of recovering, out of the estate of his co-surety, not only one-half of the sum so paid by him, but also interest thereon from the date of payment. Re Swan, 4 Ir. R., Eq., 209.

5. C. being indebted to D., four of his friends joined him in signing and giving four promissory notes to secure the payment to D. of the sum of 13,000*l.* and interest. D. effected three policies on the life of C. for, in the aggregate, 10,000*l.* In 1867, Lord H. of E., one of the co-sureties, having been sued by D. on the notes, paid, with the assistance of his father, the Earl of E., the 13,000*l.* and interest by a mortgage of estates which were settled upon the Earl for life with remainder to Lord H. of E.; and the Earl, having paid the premiums and kept the policies on foot, in September 1871, shortly after the death of C., obtained an assignment from D. of the policies and received the 10,000*l.* from the insurance office. A., another of the four sureties, died. His estate, which was stated to be insolvent, was being administered by the Court, and Lord H. of E. brought in a claim against it for contribution in respect of the sum paid to D. on the notes:—Held, that under all the circumstances of the case, Lord H. of E. and his father, the Earl, must be treated as one person, and that the claim for contribution would be allowed, but only after Lord H. of E. had brought into account, as a set-off, the moneys which were received on the three policies assigned to the Earl, credit being first given for the premiums and other moneys which had been paid in reference to the transaction. Re Arcedeckne, Atkins v. Arcedeckne, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 709; 48 L. T. 725; 53 L. J., Ch., 102.

6. A surety, who has obtained from the principal debtor a counter security for the liability which he has undertaken, is bound to bring into hotchpot, for the benefit of his co-sureties, whatever he receives from that source, even though he consented to be a surety only upon the terms of having the security, and the co-sureties were, when they entered into the contract of suretyship, ignorant of his agreement for security. Steel v. Dixon, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 825; 50 L. J., Ch., 591; 45 L. T. 142; 29 W. R. 735.

II. RELEASE OF CO-SURETY.

7. Where two or more sureties contract severally the creditor does not break the contract with one of them by releasing the other. The contract remaining entire, the surety in order to escape liability must show an existing right to contribution from his co-surety which has been taken away or injuriously affected by his release:—Held, in an action upon a guarantee, that a plea to the effect that M. was the defendant's co-surety, and had been released in consideration of a new guarantee given to the plaintiff, constituted no defence: the plea nowhere averring or implying that the liability was joint, or that the defendant became surety on the faith of M.'s co-suretyship, or that any right of contribution had arisen against M. which had been taken away or injuriously affected, or that the defendant had suffered any damage or injury by the substitution described. Ward v. National Bank of New Zealand, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 755; 52 L. J., P. C., 65; 49 L. T. 315.

1. Semble, if a creditor release by deed one of two sureties who are jointly and severally liable the other is also discharged. Exp. Gifford (6 Ves. 805) not followed. Evans v. Bromridge, 2 Kay & J. 174; 2 Jur., N. S., 134; 25 L. J., Ch., 102; 4 W. R. 161. And see 4 W. R. 350; 25 L. J., Ch., 334; 2 Jur., N. S., 311.

I. CONTRACTS.

2. The defendant sued at law on an indemnity bond; the plaintiff filed this bill for an injunction, without offering to make any recompense for the damage actually sustained; the bill was dismissed. Godbolt v. Watts, 2 Anstr. 543.

3. A recommendation by letter of the education of infants, with an assurance that the writer was willing to go himself towards its object as far as a certain sum, construed to be a promise to pay that sum for the purpose. Dowell v. Wilson, Coop. temp. Brougham 504.

4. Upon the occasion of a bond being executed by A. and B. to secure money lent to A., the title deeds of an estate purchased by A. were deposited with B. as an indemnity against his liability upon the bond; the legal interest in the estate was likewise conveyed to B., and it was agreed that he should also hold it as an indemnity. After the death of B. his executor delivered up the title deeds to A. upon a false representation by him that the bond had been paid off:—Held, that a conveyance of the legal estate could not be compelled until the indemnity was worked out, and that the lien upon the title deeds remained. Tyson v. Cox, T. & R. 395.

5. Covenant to save harmless decreed in specie; to wit, the principal was decreed to indemnify the surety. Ranelagh v. Hayes, 1 Vern. 189.

6. A. covenants to indemnify lands settled on B. from certain debts, the interest of which B. is afterwards obliged to pay: B. is entitled under the covenant to come against the estate of A. for the sums so paid for interest, together with interest thereon. Fergus v. Gore, 1 Sch. & Lef. 107.

7. Covenant by a third person to indemnify the husband against wife's debt, a good consideration. Compton v. Collinson, 2 Bro. C. C. 377.

8. Two persons having jointly and severally granted an annuity, and mutually covenanted that each should pay one moiety, and indemnify the other against all "actions, suits, costs, charges, damages, demands, sums of money, and expenses," which might be incurred by reason of the non-payment thereof, one who on the insolvency of the other had made payments on account of his moiety, is not entitled to interest on such payments. Bell v. Free, 1 Swan. 90; 1 Wils. 51.

9. A life estate and a reversionary term having been mortgaged together, the reversioner, who was the principal debtor, settled other lands upon trusts, giving to the owner of the life estate (the surety) a more complete indemnity than he would have been entitled to under the ordinary rules of equity:—Held, that the owner of the life estate could not (to reconp himself the interest which he had paid on the mortgage debt) claim the benefit both of the indemnity deed and of the mortgage of the reversionary term held by the creditor. Cooper v. Jenkins, 1 N. R. 333.

A. was tenant for life of lots 1 and 2, to which B. was entitled in remainder; B., and A. as his surety, mortgaged lot 2, B. alone covenanting to pay. By a contemporaneous deed, B. conveyed his interest in the other lot on trusts to indemnify A. as his surety: A. paid large sums for interest on the mortgage:—Held, that he was entitled to the benefit of the deed of indemnity only, but not to stand in the place of the mortgagee on lot 1. S. C. 32 Beav. 337.

10. Where, for providing for payment of bills, a third person charged certain property for the benefit of acceptor by way of security, alleging it to be sufficient in value above incumbrances, but which turned out to be otherwise:—Held, that the acceptor was entitled to have so much as he had paid, and interest, as the property was insufficient to pay, raised and paid out of the general estate of the deceased third person. Ingram v. Thorp, 7 Hare 67.

11. The payee of two promissory notes being about to sue the maker, the brother of the maker agreed to pay 200*l.* to the payee in trust for E., or 6*l.* 10*s.* per quarter, so long as the 200*l.* should be unpaid, so that the notes should be suspended and rendered inoperative so long as the brother continued to pay 6*l.* 10*s.* a quarter to the payee; and on payment of the 200*l.*, all claim on the notes to cease, and the same to be given up. The brother not having paid the 6*l.* 10*s.* to the payee for two quarters, but having paid these sums to E., the cestui que trust (as the latter admitted), the payee brought his action upon the notes against the maker:—Held, in error, reversing the judgment of the Queen's Bench, that the agreement could not be pleaded in bar to the action upon the note, but might be the subject of a cross-action. Held, in equity, that the agreement must be construed as a contract by the brother to provide for E. the annuity of 25*l.* or the gross sum of 200*l.*, as a substitute for the two notes, and by the payee that the two notes should thenceforth be only as security for the performance of such contract; and not as an agreement, under which the original right of the payee against the maker would revive on any failure of the quarterly payments by the brother; that the brother was entitled to the specific performance of the agreement in equity, not on the ground of the circuitry of cross-actions which the rule of law occasioned, but on the ground that this Court, by modifying its decree, could give to all parties the benefit of the agreement, whilst a court of law, being unable so to modify its judgment, could not give to one party the benefit of the agreement, without depriving another party altogether of such benefit. Beech v. Ford, 7 Hare 208.

1. On the retirement of S., a director of a banking company, the board of directors passed a resolution to take back his shares at par, and that he should retire and be indemnified in a form thereafter to be prepared. The company was subsequently ordered to be wound up, and the Court decided that the transactions on the retirement of S. were invalid, and that he was a contributory. Before the winding-up, W., another director, had paid money to satisfy the claims of creditors, and the Master made a call upon all the contributories for the payment of this money to the creditor of W., but the Vice-Chancellor discharged that order so far as respected S.:—Held, upon appeal, that the retirement and cancellation of his shares having been declared invalid, S. was not entitled to any indemnity, and must contribute towards the call. Exp. Walker, 2 Jur., N. S., 1216; 26 L. J., Ch., 261.

2. W. and S. by deed assigned to J. P. all moneys to which they might become entitled from a certain railway company upon trust to secure the due payment of the sum of 5,000*l.* advanced by J. P., "and also of all other sums which might thereafter become due from W. and S. by the said J. P., whether in respect of principal, interest, discount, commissions, or otherwise howsoever." The 5,000*l.* mentioned in the deed was paid off, but J. P. was afterwards compelled to pay 5,000*l.* under a guarantee for W. and S. The appellants, as execution creditors, afterwards attached a sum of money due from the railway company to W. and S. J. P. had given notice of the assignment to the railway company:—Held, that the deed of assignment included not only advances made by J. P. to W. and S., but also money paid by him under his guarantee for them, and was not affected by subsequent letters offering additional security for the guarantee. Dumbell v. Isle of Man Railway Co., 42 L. T. 745.

3. Father on binding his son apprentice, gives a bond for 1,000*l.* for his son's fidelity; the son embezzles 200*l.*, which the father pays, but desires his master not to trust his son any more with the cash; the master does trust the apprentice again with the cash, and is negligent in calling him to account; the son embezzles 1,000*l.* more; the father is liable, but not to answer more in the whole than 1,000*l.*, including the first 200*l.* Shepherd v. Beecher, 2 P. W. 288.

4. By an agreement and a policy of insurance the defendants agree to reimburse the plaintiff any pecuniary loss, to the amount of 1,000*l.*, which he might sustain by reason of any such fraud or dishonesty of A. in connection with his employment by the plaintiff, as should amount to embezzlement, and should be committed and discovered during the continuance of the policy. The policy provided (among other things) "that the employer shall, if and when required by the company, but at the expense of the company, if a conviction be obtained, use all diligence in prosecuting the employed to conviction for any fraud or dishonesty, as aforesaid, which he shall have committed, and in consequence of which a claim shall have been made under this policy, and shall, at the company's expense, give all information and assistance to enable the company to sue for and obtain reimbursement by the employed or his estate of any money which the company shall have become liable to pay:—Held, that the prosecution of A. for embezzlement was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action upon the policy. London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Fearnley, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 911; 43 L. T. 390; 28 W. R. 893.

II. WRONGDOERS.

5. The principle that no rights of indemnity and of contribution exist as between wrongdoers is confined to cases where the transaction is actually illegal or void, or where the fraud is so great that on moral grounds the Court will not entertain a suit for the relief of the malfeasors. The principle is further limited to cases where the fraudulent or illegal transaction is itself the basis of the claim, and does not apply where the transaction, though leading to that which is the basis of the claim, is separable from it. Power v. Hoey, 19 W. R. 916.

The Court refused to grant an injunction until the legal right had been established. Att.-Gen. v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co., 30 Beav. 287; 8 Jur., N. S., 583; 31 L. J., Ch., 329; 10 W. R. 167.

7. Seemle, that a telegram, if properly identified, is equivalent to a letter. Coupland v. Arrowsmith, 18 L. T., N. S., 755.

8. A telegram company in London made an arrangement with the defendants, being two individuals in Australia, for the transmission of messages, in which certain words were used as short expressions of the names and addresses of the principal customers; and the defendants were described as agents of the telegram company. In a little time the parties quarrelled, and one of the defendants came to England to carry on an independent telegram business with his partner in Australia, and sent circulars to the customers of the telegram company, mentioning that he had their cyphers. On motion to restrain him from using the cyphers:—Held, that there was nothing confidential in the cyphers, and that he was entitled to use them. Reuter's Telegram Co. v. Byron, 43 L. J., Ch., 661.

9. On a subpoena from the Court of Bankruptcy to produce all telegrams sent by the bankrupt from a certain date, the secretary of the post-office was ordered to produce the documents sought for, the Court intimating that such subpoenas should be prepared so as to meet the convenience of the officials. Re Thomas Smith, 7 L. R., Ir., 286.

I. CREATION OF.

1. Surrender of a copyhold to the use of A., B., and C., and their heirs, equally to be divided betwixt them and their heirs respectively: this held by two judges a tenancy in common, by reason of the apparent intent of the surrenderor, against the opinion of Holt, C. J., who thought it a joint tenancy. Fisher v. Wigg, 1 P. W. 14.

2. Tenants in common may be of unequal but not of uncertain shares. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin (Lord), 2 Ves. 74.

In deeds which receive their operation from the statute of uses, the words "equally to be divided" make a tenancy in common. Sed sevis in common law conveyances. In Rigden v. Vallier, 3 Atk. 731; 2 Ves. 252, Ld. H. said, that though deeds to uses must be construed like common law conveyances as to words of limitation, yet he saw no harm in construing them otherwise, as to words of regulation and modification of an estate, as the words "equally to be divided" are. G., being seised of a gavelkind estate, by deed poll, in consideration of natural love to his wife and children, granted to his daughters, M. and H., the rents of his lands, equally to be divided between them, paying 5*l.* to their mother for life, and after her decease to hold to his said two daughters and their heirs, equally to be divided between them. This creates a tenancy in common, whether the instrument be considered as a deed or a will. Ib.

3. Notwithstanding the leaning of late to a tenancy in common, an interest given to two or more, either by way of legacy or otherwise, is joint, unless there are words of severance, as "equally among," etc., or an inference of that sort arises in equity from the nature of the transaction, as in partnership, a joint mortgage, etc. Morley v. Bird, 3 Ves. 628.

4. On articles previous to the marriage of W. with R., the father of W. bound the whole of the farm of, etc., as a marriage portion to his son W., along with R., the one half of said farm to be the right, title, and interest of the issue, whether son or daughter, if begotten on the body of R. by W. The issue take as tenants in common. Taggart v. Taggart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 84.

5. A. having been indebted to the estate of

B., in a sum of money, but from which he had been discharged under a commission of bankruptcy, voluntarily executed to C., the widow of B., a bond for the payment of part of such debt, for the use of herself and children, but at her disposal. Two years afterwards A. executed to C. another bond for the payment of the remainder of such debt, for the use and benefit of herself and children only, in what proportion among the latter she may think proper to direct, but for no other use, purpose, or intent whatsoever:—Held, that the principal, after the widow's decease, became payable among the children, in such manner, and in such proportions, as she should direct, and the widow having made an exclusive appointment in favour of two of her children, it was held that such appointment was void, and that all the children took as tenants in common. Though generally speaking an instrument must be construed by the provisions contained in it, and not by anything dehors, yet under the circumstances of this case:—Held, that the Court might call the language of the second bond into aid in construing the effect of the first. Where there is a general power of appointment among children, and the appointment from any circumstance becomes void, the children take as tenants in common. Fowler v. Hunter, 3 Y. & J. 506.

6. Settlement to permit "all and every the children to take rents, etc., to them and their heirs for ever," they are joint tenants, not tenants in common. Stratton v. Best, 2 Bro. C. C. 233.

7. Though the words "equally to be divided," in strict settlement at common law, have never been determined, barely of themselves, to make tenancy in common, yet it has been settled that they do so in a will, both with regard to real and personal estate. Owen v. Owen, 1 Atk. 494.

8. A testator, by will, gave to two persons the privilege of purchasing his warehouse, etc., and they, by a joint letter written to the trustees of the will, signified their acceptance of the privilege; but no conveyance was ever executed:—Held, that the Court was at liberty to receive evidence of the acts of the purchasers, showing that they considered themselves entitled as tenants in common. Harrison v. Barton, 7 Jur., N. S., 19; 30 L. J., Ch., 213; 9 W. R. 177.

9. Leaseholds were conveyed to trustees, and it was declared, that when the settlor's eldest son attained twenty-one, they should be in trust for him, and that the same should be assigned accordingly; but so that the settlor's wish that his other children "might be allowed by the eldest son to participate with him in the same," should be observed by him:—Held, that the younger children were entitled to equal shares with the eldest as tenants in common. Liddard v. Liddard, 28 Beav. 266.

10. A. having a mortgage for years, devises, after his debts paid, all his personal estate to his two daughters, equally to be divided between them. After the debts paid, the daughters purchase the equity of redemption and inheritance of the mortgaged premises to them and their heirs; this is a tenancy in common, and not a joint tenancy. Edwards v. Fashion, Pre. Ch. 332.

1. To establish a tenancy in common by use and enjoyment, acts of ownership by all the alleged tenants in common, in various parts of the lands indifferently, must be proved. Tiedall v. Parnell, 14 Ir. C. L. R. 1.

2. Parol evidence, to be admissibly to show that a contract to purchase apparently as joint tenants was in reality a contract to purchase as tenants in common, must be confined, as evidence to vary an instrument is, to facts in pais, as distinguished from statements of intention. Harrison v. Barton, 7 Jur., N. S., 19; 30 L. J., Ch., 213; 9 W. R. 177.

A. directed that his two sons should have the option of purchasing his property at a specified price upon signifying in writing within a certain time their acceptance of the privilege. The sons wrote a joint letter signifying their acceptance of the option to purchase. No conveyance was executed, but instructions were given, and a draft prepared for a conveyance to the sons as tenants in common. Voluntary settlements were simultaneously executed by the sons, each giving an option to the trustees of such settlement to invest the moneys in purchase of a moiety of the property; and after the death of one of the sons, his widow received the rents of a moiety of the property:—Held, that notwithstanding the joint nature of the contract contained in the letter, the legal presumption of a joint tenancy was refuted by the circumstances, and that the property was taken by the sons as tenants in common. Ib.

3. Two sisters carried on business as farmers. They had a joint account at their bankers' and an establishment and purse in common. They invested part of their money in the purchase of consols, in their joint names, and they had a balance due to them on their banking account, besides a sum due to them from their bankers on deposit notes:—Held, on the death of one, that the two sisters were joint tenants of the consols, and tenants in common of the balance and of the deposit notes. Bone v. Pollard, 24 Beav. 283.

4. Where stock has been purchased in the joint names of two, out of money standing to their joint account in a bank, it is not necessarily to be considered in equity as held in joint tenancy; but the origin of the money, and the acts and intentions of the parties, may be looked to, and a conclusion in favour of a tenancy in common drawn from the circumstances. Robinson v. Preston, 4 Kay & J. 605; 4 Jur., N. S., 186; 27 L. J., Ch., 395.

Two sisters being tenants in common of real estates, had money arising from the rents standing to their joint account in a bank. Part of the money was, from time to time, invested in the purchase of stock, in the joint names, and part on mortgage, the mortgaged premises being conveyed to them as tenants in common. Each sister, by will, affected to dispose of her share of the stock:—Held, that they were entitled to the stock as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Ib.

By Will.] See WILL.

II. OUSTER.

5. Ejectment is not maintainable by one tenant in common against another, without actual ouster. Prince v. Heylin, 1 Atk. 494.
VOL. VII.

6. There can be no ouster between tenants in common in possession, and, therefore, if one takes more than his share of the rents the only remedy is account either by action under the statute of Anne, or by bill in equity. Denys v. Shuckburgh, 4 Y. & Coll. 42; 5 Jur. 21.

7. When two persons are tenants in common of a field, the merely putting, by one of them, a lock upon the gate, not shown to be kept locked, will not constitute an ouster so as to enable the co-tenant in common to maintain trespass against the other. There must, for such a purpose, be other circumstances attending the act. Jacobs v. Seward, 5 L. R., H. L., 464; 41 L. J., C. P., 221; 27 L. T., N. S., 185.

In order to enable one tenant in common to maintain trover against another, there must not merely be a carrying away of the property, but such a carrying away of it as will disable the party complaining from having the lawful use or benefit of the property, or there must be the destruction of it. Ib.

8. If, after an ouster of the rest, one tenant in common or joint-tenant continues in possession of the whole for twenty years, it is a bar. Story v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Atk. 632; 1 Ch. Ca. 34.

9. The plaintiff's mother and the defendant were tenants in common in fee. She died in 1851, and her interest descended on the plaintiff her heir (an infant.) The defendant, who had previously occupied the estate, continued in possession, and thenceforward excluded the plaintiff. The plaintiff attained twenty-one in 1857:—Held, that the defendant was accountable to the plaintiff for the whole period, and ought to be charged with an occupation rent. Pascoe v. Swan, 27 Beav. 508; 5 Jur., N. S., 1235; 1 L. T., N. S., 17; 29 L. J., Ch., 159.

III. ACCOUNT.

10. Tenant in common of manor shall have account of manor from one in possession. Capell v. Myrns, Cary 16.

11. J. having a devise in common with P., whom he survived, took possession of two houses, and enjoyed them; he was decreed to account as far back as the death of P. Prince v. Heylin, 1 Atk. 493.

12. If a lease for years, worth 200l. a year, belong to two co-parceners, and one of them, upon a false suggestion that the fine of 250l. was to be paid for the renewal of it, obtain an assignment of the other's moiety for consideration of 20l., equity will set aside this conveyance, and order the assignee to account for a moiety of the profits. Evans v. Hoskins, 9 Mod. 83.

13. Mortgagee of the share of one tenant in common of a mine may maintain a bill for an account against the mortgagor and the co-tenants in common. On a bill for an account of the dealings and transactions of a mining partnership, it is not necessary to pray for a dissolution of the concern. Bentley v. Bates, 4 Y. & Coll. 182; 9 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 30; 4 Jur. 552.

14. A., being at the time abroad, became a tenant in common with B., and died fifteen years afterwards, without having been during that period in England, and being all the time ignorant of her right as tenant in common; B. continued all along in possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the premises:—Held, that B.'s possession did not amount to an ouster; and that A.'s representative could sustain a bill for an account against B., without previously recovering the possession. Johnson v. Burslem, 2 L. J., Ch., 168.

1. There can be no ouster between tenants in common in possession; and, therefore, if one takes more than his share of the rents, the only remedy is account either by action under the statute of Anne, or by bill in equity. Denys v. Shuckburgh, 4 Y. & Coll. 42; 5 Jur. 21.

2. A., on behalf of herself and her infant children, filed a bill against B., who was tenant in common with her husband C., alleging that on his death B. entered into receipt of the entire rents, claiming the whole, and kept possession of the title deeds, for want of which the plaintiffs could not proceed at law; and praying that they might be put in possession of C.'s moiety, and an account of the rents of it since his death, and for the title deeds. A. did not make affidavit that the deeds were not in her possession:—Held, that such affidavit is not necessary in a case where the plaintiffs have a right to sue in equity aliunde, and that a demurrer for want of it was bad in substance, that the demurrer not stating specifically the parts of the statement or relief to which it applied, was bad in form; that though the bill could not be sustained for an account between tenants in common, yet that the infant plaintiffs were entitled to such account against the defendant; and that the mother being co-plaintiff was no misjoinder. McCarthy v. Hatch, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 206.

3. Mere occupation by one of several tenants in common of an estate, if unaccompanied by exclusion, does not make him liable for rent to his co-tenants. McMahon v. Burchell, 2 Ph. 127; C. P. C. 457. Varying 3 Hare 97.

A tenant in common occupying the premises held in common, not excluding his co-tenants in common, is not chargeable by such co-tenants with an occupation rent. S. C. 5 Hare 322.

4. A tenant in common of a farm may sustain a suit in equity for an account against his co-tenant, who has alone occupied it and cultivated it, for a moiety of the profits. Leake v. Cordeaux, 4 W. R. 806.

5. Where one co-tenant receives more than his share of the rents of a property, his co-tenant can compel an account, and payment, by suit in equity. Montgomery v. Swan, 9 Ir. Ch. Rep. 131.

6. Two, being tenants in common, one entered into possession in 1827, with the consent of the other, upon an understanding that he should pay an occupation rent when called upon to do so. The tenant in possession died in 1839. The survivor claimed six years' rent:—Held, that the claim must be allowed, and that 4 Anne, c. 16, was not repealed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Henderson v. Eason, 10 Jur. 821; 15 L. J., Ch., 457; 15 Sim. 303. S. C. on appeal 2 Ph. 308.

7. Where there were two tenants in common, one of whom (the plaintiff) was an infant when his title accrued, and the other (the defendant) had been in actual occupation of the property at the death of the infant's mother, the former tenant in common, and had continued in such occupation during the infancy of the plaintiff:—Held, that the occupation of the defendant was an entry on the estate of the infant, and therefore that he was liable to account for rents and profits under 4 Anne, c. 16, although he had not received any rent, and that he must pay an occupation rent. Pascoe v. Swan, 5 Jur., N. S., 1235; 1 L. T., N. S., 17; 29 L. J., Ch., 159; 27 Beav. 508.

Held, also, that the defendant was entitled to an allowance for permanent improvements, proportionate to the improvements made. Id.

IV. INJUNCTION.

8. The Court will restrain one tenant in common from the wilful destruction of the common property, but where a railroad company had obtained a lease from five out of six tenants in common, and had, contrary to the wishes of the remaining tenant in common, constructed a railroad on the property which at law had been held to be an ouster, the Court refused to interfere by injunction to prevent the dissenting tenant in common removing the rails, etc., though the rent agreed to be paid by the company was three times the former rent. Durham & Sunderland Railway Co. v. Wain, 3 Beav. 119; 4 Jur. 764.

9. A husband, seised in right of his wife, concurred with the other tenants in common in a partition of estate and mines, but no fine was levied. He died in 1828; after which his widow acquiesced in the arrangement, and took the benefit of it. She and her lessee afterwards proceeded to get coal under the land awarded to other parties, and defended that proceeding on the ground that the husband's acts were invalid, and that the parties were still tenants in common of the whole. The Court restrained her by injunction. Maden v. Veivers, 5 Beav. 503; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 38.

V. OTHER MATTERS.

10. Possession of some owners is possession of all. Exp. Machell, 2 Ves. & B. 216; 1 Rose 447.

11. Where two persons are joint owners of a lake, with a common right of sailing, fishing, floating timber, etc., such right is not indivisible; but either may, without the consent of the other, alien the whole or any portion of his right, even where it is merely appurtenant to the land. But if the effect of such alienation was to deprive the co-owner of the full enjoyment of his moiety, such co-owner could maintain an action for the regulation of his enjoyment, as he could if there had been no alienation. What amounts to an excessive use of his right by a joint owner of a lake, quære. Menzies v. Macdonald, 4 W. R. 625; 2 Jur., N. S., 575; 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 463.

TENDER.

- By Contractor for Works. See WORK AND LABOUR.
- Of Petitioning Creditor's Debt. See BANKRUPTCY, X. xxiv.
- Tender of Demand and Offers to Settle. Effect of on Costs. See PRACTICE (COSTS)—MORTGAGE, XIX. IV. 4.

What amounts to.] 1. In the case of a tender, if the party to whom it is to be made says, "You need not make a tender to me, as I will not accept it," it is considered as made. Wallis v. Glynn, 19 Ves. 380; Coop. 284.

2. The plaintiff tendered rent to the defendants, his landlords, with the words, "Here is your quarter's rent"—Held, that this did not require the landlord to make any admission as to the amount due, as a condition of its receipt, and was therefore a good tender. Jones v. Bridgman, 39 L. T. 500.

3. A lessee, after certain supposed breaches of covenant, tendered money as rent. The lessor refused to receive it as rent, but finally did accept it, though protesting that he took it not as rent under the lease, but as compensation for the occupation of the premises merely, and that he did not mean to waive, but expressly reserved, the right of re-entry:—Quære, whether if there had been any forfeiture by breaches of covenant, this acceptance of the money was a waiver of them. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Ca. 672; 6 W. R. 523; 4 Jur., N. S., 903; 27 L. J., Q. B., 321.

4. A tender accompanied by a protest is valid. Sweeney v. Smith, 38 L. J., Ch., 446; 7 L. R., Eq., 324.

A shareholder in a company formed for working patents owed 40l. to the company in respect of calls on his shares. He sent a cheque for that amount to the secretary, accompanied with a letter, which began thus:—"Herewith I forward a cheque for 40l., being the amount of the call made upon me for twenty shares which I hold in the company." Then followed a protest against the payment, on the ground that certain patents which had been sold to the company were invalid; and the letter concluded in these terms:—"I request that you will enter this my protest in the records of the company, and further, that this money be held in trust by the directors (each of whom I shall hold responsible for repayment of the same) until the question of the vendor's patent right has been settled":—Held, that this was a good tender of payment, and that the concluding words of the letter imposed no obligation or liability on the directors. Id.

5. A trader who, under a trader debtor summons, had signed an admission of a debt, went to his creditor with the amount of it in his pocket in money, and told the creditor that he had come for the purpose of paying that amount. The creditor said it was no use, as it was too late, and that the debtor must see the creditor's attorney:—Held, that the production of the money was dispensed with, and that there was a good tender. Exp. Danks, 2 De G. M. & G. 936; 22 L. J., Bk., 73.

Upon an adjudication of bankruptcy founded on failure to comply with the 82nd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, the onus is upon the petitioning creditor of proving that there has been no payment or tender. Id.

Quære, in such a case, whether the tender need be made with the same strictness as would be required to support a plea of tender in an action. Id.

6. Circumstances may make that amount to a tender in equity, which was not pleadable as such at law, e.g., a tender in bank notes, during the restriction as to the issue of cash, semble. Biddulph v. St. John, 2 Sch. & Lef. 534.

Estoppel by.] 7. When a declaration shows substantially a contract, and a tender in compliance with it, the plaintiff is not estopped from contending for the true interpretation of the contract by the fact that he has also set out in his declaration an alternative case of a tender which would not have been a compliance. M'Connel v. Murphy, 5 L. R., P. C., 208.

Between Mortgagor and Mortgagee.] 8. If the mortgagor tenders the money to the mortgagee, and he refuses it, his interest shall cease from that time, and he ought not to keep the pledge. Manning v. Burgess, 1 Ch. Ca. 29.

9. As to a tender of mortgage-money, there ought to be reasonable notice of paying it in, and, if the tender be insisted on, to stop interest, the money must be kept dead from that time, because the party is to be always ready, six months' notice being given to pay in the mortgage-money at H.: though this be not the place mentioned in the proviso of the deed, yet where money was lent in town, and no objection made to the notice, no reason for a personal tender, or to make a man carry a great sum to a person in the country. Gyles v. Hall, 2 P. W. 378.

10. Interest on mortgage not stopped, but on a proper tender and notice. Garforth v. Bradley, 2 Ves. 678.

11. Tender of payment by mortgagor to agent of mortgagee, and refusal to accept, and twenty-four years thereafter suffered to elapse without demand from mortgagee of principal or interest; payment of principal or interest for whole decreed, under the circumstances. Meade v. Bandon (Earl), 2 Dow 268.

12. Where covenants are inserted in a deed of assignment on the part of a mortgagee, he may refuse to take the principal and interest, though tendered, till he has advised with his attorney on the safety of executing the assignment, being entitled to reasonable time. Wiltshire v. Smith, 3 Atk. 89; 9 Mod. 441.

Other Matters.] 13. If an agent does not render his accounts within a reasonable time, he must bear the costs of a suit instituted to have the accounts taken, and it will not be any excuse for him that he offered to pay on account a gross sum, which it turns out would have covered all that was due from him. Collyer v. Dudley, T. & R. 421.

14. Where, upon order of dividend, assignees forward to creditor a bill for the amount of his dividend, but creditor rejects it, because he claims more than is offered (namely, full payment, without allowing the assignees a set-off, which they claimed against him, and the amount of which, together with the sum tendered, made up the amount of dividend declared on creditor's proof), and the proceeds of the bill are received by one assignee, and by him invested at interest: the creditor was held, after twenty years and upwards, entitled to the fund, and all interest made by it. Exp. Holford, 4 Dea. & Ch. 798; 2 Mont. & A. 289.

1. An active step taken in a cause by defendants in contempt is not rendered valid by the subsequent tender of the costs of the contempt. Where, therefore, defendants in contempt, having put in answers which were excepted to, obtained the previous order, and afterwards tendered the costs of the contempt, the order was discharged for irregularity. Taylor v. Sheppard, 1 Y. & Coll. 99; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 7.

2. An averment in an answer of defendant being ready to pay, where his obligation was to offer payment, is no defence against the demand for an account. Stratford v. Aldborough (Lord), Beat. 239.

3. In creditors' suit, the plaintiff's solicitor refused to attend accountant-general with Master's report, unless a contribution was made to him of one shilling in the pound; on motion, he being ordered to attend, on payment to him of 6s. 8d. each creditor, and his claims disallowed, the costs thereof were allowed to such as had tendered him the 6s. 8d., but not otherwise. Shortley v. Selby, 5 Madd. 448.

Every heir has a right to inquire by what means and under what deed he is disinherited; and, before he had established his title at law, he may go into equity to remove terms out of the way, which would prevent his recovering there; and may also have a production and inspection of deeds and writings in equity. Harrison v. Southcote, 1 Atk. 539.

13. Real estates were devised to a trustee upon trust, on a given event, to convey them to certain parties, upon one of them electing which he would take. A party, in whom, as satisfied mortgagee at the date of the will and death of the testator, a satisfied mortgage term in one of the estates was, was held bound to execute a deed of surrender of the term to the trustee, and the cestui que trustent were held not to be necessary parties thereto. Pool v. Pass, 1 Beav. 600; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 325.

2. When Attendant by Implication, and Resulting Trust for Heir.

14. Purchase of the fee-simple in the name of the purchaser, and of terms in the name of a trustee, with an intervening reversion of eleven days, and a reservation of rent, etc., to the vendors: the terms are terms in gross, not attendant upon the inheritance. Scott v. Penhoullet, 1 Bro. C. C. 69.

15. A., possessed of a term of 500 years in B. acre, afterwards purchases the fee-simple in C.'s name, and devised B. acre to J. in fee; but the will is not attested by three witnesses; the term shall not pass, because attendant on and part of the inheritance. Whitchurch v. Whitchurch, 2 P. W. 236; Gibb. Eq. Rep. 168; 1 Stra. 619; 9 Mod. 124.

16. A woman who is cestui que trust of a term, having the inheritance in her, marries and dies; the term shall attend on the inheritance, and not go to the husband as administrator of the wife. Best v. Stamford, 2 Vern. 520; Pre. Ch. 252; 1 Salk. 164; 2 Freem. 288.

1. A man purchases land, and takes the fee in his own name, and an assignment of a term in a trustee's name: the term shall attend the inheritance, though not said in the assignment it should do so. Tiffin v. Tiffin, 1 Vern 1; 2 Ch. Ca. 49, 55. S. P. Douse v. Percival, 1 Vern. 104.

The custom of London shall not prevent the attendance of a term on the inheritance. S. C. 1 Vern. 2.

2. The attendancy of terms on the inheritance is regulated by the discretion of the courts. Nurse v. Yerrorth, 3 Swan. 612.

3. Covenant to convey legal estate will be considered in equity as actually conveyed, and the term attendant only upon the inheritance. Cooke v. Cooke, 2 Atk. 67.

4. A., being possessed of a term of 1,000 years in the lands of Y., bequeathed it to K., charged with an annuity of 182l. for M. K. conveyed the lands in mortgage, subject to the annuity, and afterwards purchased the fee in those lands. There was no declaration of trust that the term should attend the inheritance:—Held, that the term, though mortgaged, became attendant upon the inheritance, though there was no express declaration to that effect. Scott v. Knox, L. & T. 381; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 397.

5. Where the term and freehold would, if legal estates, merge, being vested in the same person, the term in equity in such case is construed to attend the inheritance, unless there be a declaration or other act to evince an intention to sever them. Kelly v. Power, 2 Ball & B. 253.

6. Where term would merge by its union with the inheritance in the same person, if he has in the one the legal, and in the other the equitable estate, the term will attend the inheritance. Capel v. Girdler, 9 Ves. 509.

7. When purposes of trust of a term are satisfied, the term belongs in equity to the owner of the inheritance, whether declared by the original conveyance to attend the inheritance or not. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 270.

8. Devise to trustees for ninety-nine years upon the trusts thereafter expressed, and after the expiration, or other sooner determination of the said term, in strict settlement; the term, no trust being declared, decreed to attend the inheritance, according to the limitations of the will, and no resulting trust for the heir upon the apparent intention to devise immediate estates subject to the term, not future estates expectant on its determination. Sidney v. Shelley, 19 Ves. 352; Coop. 206.

9. Term raised for a particular purpose: when that purpose is answered, the term shall be in trust for the heir. Levet v. Needham, 2 Vern. 139.

One devises lands to trustees and their heirs, in trust to receive the rents until his son shall come to twenty-one, and to pay one-third thereof to the testator's wife in lieu of dower, and out of the other two-thirds to raise portions for his daughters, and devises all to his son William when twenty-one, in tail, remainder to B. and C. The wife dies. The son dies before twenty-one, and without issue. Resolved, the wife's interest determined by her death, and her third shall not go to the executors until her son would have attained twenty-one: resolved, the remainders over to A., B., and C. are good, though the son died before twenty-one: resolved, the daughters' portion being raised, the residue of the term shall go to the heir as an interest undisposed of by the will; but it will vest in the heir as a chattel, and, on his death, go to his executor until testator's son should have come to twenty-one. S. C. 2 Vern. 138.

10. A., by will, gives lands to trustees for terms, remainder to T. Lord Foley and E. Foley for life. The trusts of the terms were for payment of scheduled debts, and to make an allowance to Lord Foley and E. Foley. The debts being stated to be paid, a trust results to the tenants for life. A demurrer by the trustees to a bill by creditors for an account as having no interest, therefore overruled. Davidson v. Foley, 2 Bro. C. C. 203.

11. Wherever land, etc., which would descend to heir-at-law is devised for purposes which law will not suffer to take effect, the heir-at-law shall have the benefit of the interest so devised as undisposed of, whether testator intended he should have it or not. Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow 194.

12. If, in voluntary deeds and wills, there is no declaration of trusts of term, they result to donor; but, secus, if for valuable consideration, and in nature of contract for benefit of wife and issue. Brown v. Jones, 1 Atk. 190.

3. Protection by.

13. Purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, by taking an assignment of a term attendant, may protect himself from mesne incumbrances. Willoughby v. Willoughby, Amb. 282.

14. An attendant term is a creature of equity to protect real estates, and keep them in their course. Id. 283.

At law there is no difference between an attendant term and a term in gross. Id.

Before stat. 21 Hen. 8 tennor was in power of the owner of the freehold; since then the tennor in trust is affected as the owner of the inheritance shall think fit. Id.

A bonâ fide purchaser without notice, if the term is in a trustee, may use it to protect or recover the possession; so if the term is in himself. Id.

The term will protect against all intermediate incumbrances. Id.

15. Testator devised an estate to several persons for their lives successively, with power to grant leases, under certain restrictions. The first tenant for life grants a lease to a person who had no notice of the power, or that the lessor was tenant for life only. A subsequent tenant for life brings an ejectment against the lessee, on the ground that the lease was not made according to the power. The Court will not prevent the lessee from setting up an old outstanding term created by the testator. Goleborn v. Alcock, 2 Sim. 552.

1. An attendant term having been vested in the wife of the owner of the inheritance, as the administratrix of the trustee, and her husband becoming bankrupt, his assignees agree to sell the estate, and file a bill for specific performance of the agreement, pending which suit the husband dies:—Held, that the widow was not entitled to dower; that she was to assign the terms of the purchaser; and that he was bound to accept the title. Mole v. Smith, Jac. 498.

2. Right of mortgagees to the benefit of a term attendant on the inheritance, though the term was not assigned, nor the inheritance conveyed to them. Buckinghamshire (Earl) v. Hobart, 3 Swan. 201.

3. A. purchases of a man who had committed an act of bankruptcy, but without notice thereof; afterwards a commission is taken out, and, there being a term standing out in trustees, the assignee brings a bill against them and the purchaser, to have the bill assigned to him: bill dismissed. Wilkes v. Bodington, 2 Vern. 599.

A purchaser without notice shall not be hurt in equity, not only where he has got a prior legal title, but where he has a better right to call for the legal estate than another who has obtained an incumbrance prior to his title. Id.

4. Where lands escheat to the King, he shall have the benefit of a term to attend the inheritance. Bodmin v. Vandebendy, 1 Vern. 357; Pre. Ch. 65; 2 Ch. Ca. 172.

Court will not entertain bill by dowress to set aside an outstanding term as against a purchaser, though he had notice. Id.

5. In Att.-Gen. v. Sands (Hardr. 481; 2 Freem. 129; 3 Ch. Rep. 33) it was held, that the trust of a term attending on the inheritance was not forfeited by the felony of the cestui que trust, because it was no more than an accessory to the inheritance, which was not forfeited. It is not denied, however, that where a term is attendant upon the inheritance, and the King extends the inheritance, he shall have a right to the term. Nicholls v. How, 2 Vern. 389.

6. Tenant by curtesy shall have the aid of equity against a trust term assigned in trust to attend the inheritance. Snell v. Clay, 2 Vern. 324.

7. A mere trustee of an outstanding term cannot avail himself of it for the purpose of establishing a priority. Shaw v. Neale, 6 H. L. Ca. 581; 4 Jur., N. S., 695; 27 L. J., Ch., 444.

II. LIMITATIONS OF.

1. Entail of and Absolute Interests, 6696.
2. Remainders, 6697.

1. Entail of and Absolute Interests.

8. Term pur autre vie may be limited to one and his heirs, and may be entailed and descend, though a term for years cannot. Finch v. Tucker, 2 Vern. 184.

9. The trust of a term cannot be entailed. Ireland v. Payne, Poll. 25.

10. The trust of a term is limited to W. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to the heirs of the body of B., and for want of such issue to the executors of W.:—Held, that it vests in B. Tatton v. Molineaux, Poll. 24.

11. Term assigned in trust for baron and feme for their lives, remainder in trust for the heirs of the body of the feme by the baron. Baron and feme die. The term shall go to the heir of the body of the feme by baron, and not to her executor or administrator, the words "heir of the body" being a good descriptio personæ. Peacock v. Spooner, 2 Vern. 195; 2 Freem. 114. Sed quære, see note there. Id.

12. Where term is assigned in trust for husband for life, and then to trustees for raising an annuity for wife, and then to heirs male of husband begotten on wife. On death of husband and wife, the heir male takes by purchase, and it is not assets. Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 509.

13. One possessed of a term for years, on his marriage, assigns it to trustees in trust for himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainders to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband. They have a son. This is a good limitation to the heirs of the body of the wife, and they are words of purchase and not of limitation. Dafforne v. Goodman, 2 Vern. 362; Pre. Ch. 96; 2 Freem. 23.

One possessed of a term for years, in consideration of a marriage, assigns it to trustees in trust for himself for life, remainder in trust for the children of the body of the wife. This shall be intended for the children of the wife by this marriage, and not to let in her children by another husband. Id. 363.

14. A long term of years is assigned upon trust for A. for ninety-nine years, if he lived so long, and then to his wife for her life, remainder to the heirs of A. begotten on his wife. The whole term does not vest in A., but, after the death of him and his wife, shall go to all their children equally. Ward v. Bradley, 2 Vern. 23.

15. A., on his marriage, assigns a term for 1,000 years, in trust for himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of his body of the husband and wife, remainder to the husband's right heirs. The wife dies, leaving issue; the whole term vests in the husband, and he may assign it. Webb v. Webb, 1 P. W. 132; 2 Vern. 668.

16. A., seised in fee, demises to B., his executors, etc., for ninety-nine years, in trust for himself and his wife for their lives, and the life of the survivor, and after the death of the survivor, in trust for the heirs of their two bodies; and in default of such issue, then in trust for the heirs of the body of the husband; and in default of such issue, then in trust for the heirs of the survivor of the husband and wife. Husband and wife have issue a son, and the husband dies, and then the son dies in the lifetime of the mother, without issue; the mother administers to her husband and assigns the term to the defendant. Decreed, her assignee well entitled, and that the term should not go to the heir of the husband as attendant on the reversion. Hayter v. Rod, 1 P. W. 360.

17. In this case an absolute term of ninety-nine years, limited to C., amongst other limitations of a real estate under a will was with reference to the true construction of the several parts of the will, considered not as an absolute term, but as determinable on the death of C. Coryton v. Helyar, 2 Cox 340, cited Burr. 923, 1631.

1. Term settled in trust for wife, if she should so long live, and after her decease in trust for her husband, if he should so long live, and after his decease in trust for the heirs of the body of the wife by her husband, their executors, administrators, and assigns, and for default of such issue remainder over. The husband died, never having had any issue, and the wife survived him:—Held, that the term was not vested in the wife, and that the words "heirs of the body" were not words of limitation but purchase; and the lease was directed to be deposited in court for the benefit of all parties. Hodgeson v. Bussey, 2 Atk. 89; 9 Mod. 236.

The words, "if A. B. shall so long live," are an affirmation implying a negative, that if he did not live so long the remainder should go over. Ib.

Words of limitation are improperly used in terms for years. Ib.

"Heirs of the body" here means the heir of the body living at the death of the husband, or born in a reasonable time after. Ib. 92.

Term settled in trust for wife for life, and after her decease in trust for husband for life, and after his decease in trust for the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband, their executors, administrators, and assigns; and for default of such issue, remainders over:—Held, that the words "for want of such issue" are the same as for want of such son or such daughter; for the word "such" confines it to such issue as is meant by the words "heirs of the body." 8 C. 2 Atk. 92.

2. Trust of a chattel real for S. for life, and immediately after her death, for the "heirs of her body," with limitations over; the whole interest vested in S. Theobridge v. Kilburne, 2 Ves. 233.

3. A marriage settlement, after reciting that it had been agreed that a cottage, etc. (which the husband held for the remainder of a term of 2,000 years), should be settled on the husband for life, and after his decease on the wife for life, by way of jointure, and after their several deceases on the issue of the marriage, and in default of issue on W. C. and his heirs, executors, etc., assigned the cottage to a trustee for the remainder of the term in trust, to permit the husband to receive the rents for so many years of the term as should expire in his lifetime, and after his decease in trust to permit the wife to receive the rents during her natural life, and after their several deceases to permit the heirs of the body of the husband begotten on the body of the wife to receive the rents so many years of the term as should expire in the life or lives of him, her, or them respectively, and after the several deceases of the husband and wife, and in default of issue of the body of the husband and wife, as before limited, to permit W. C., his heirs, executors, etc., to receive the rents for all the residue of the term:—Held, that the term vested in the husband absolutely under the first limitation. Bartlett v. Green, 13 Sim. 218; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 149; 6 Jur. 1099.

Leaseholds settled on Trusts of Freeholds.]
See SETTLEMENT, XVI. II.

2. Remainders.

4. Limitation of term to several persons not in being one after another is good. Goring v. Bickerstaffe, Poll. 31.

5. Possibility of trust of term may be disposed of to one in being. Ib. S. P. Veisy v. Pinnell, Poll. 44.

6. The trust of term is limited to one for life, and after to his eldest issue male; it is a good remainder, and the feoffment of tenant for life will not destroy it. Cotton v. Heath, Poll. 26.

7. Remainder of freehold is limited to H. in tail male, remainder to C. in tail male, and there being then a term for years of the same estate in being, that term is limited to H. and his issue male, so as if H. comes to be El. of A., then the term is limited to C. and his issue male:—Held, a good limitation to C. Norfolk's (Duke) case, Poll. 223.

8. Where a trust of a term is limited to be assigned to the issue of J., upon request, and no request or assignment made, and J. dies, the administrator of J. is entitled to the trust. Warman v. Seaman, Poll. 112.

9. The trust of a term limited to J. for life, then to E. for life, then to L. for life, then to the first and other sons of L., to be begotten on the body of M., the remainders, etc., with remainders over. All limitations after that to L. for life, sons of L. not being born, are void. Sed quere. Apprice v. Flower, Poll. 27.

10. A., seised in fee by deed and fine, conveys the lands to the use of trustees for seventy years, if A. so long live, remainder to trustees for 3000 years, and, after the death of A., then to his son B. Whether the remainder to B. is good? Penhay v. Hurrell, 2 Vern. 373; 2 Freem. 258.

III. ENLARGEMENT INTO FEE SIMPLE.

11. An annual rent of merely nominal amount, e.g., three shillings, is not "a rent having no money value" within s. 65, sub-s. 1 of the Conveyancing Act 1881, even though it may have in practice not been regularly paid, those words meaning, rather, a rent which, when received, has no money value. Re Smith and Stott's Contract, 48 L. T. 512; 31 W. R. 411.

IV. SURRENDER.

12. The case made by the bill was this. It alleged title, under several instruments, to certain real estates settled thereby, one of such deeds creating a term to raise a sum of money not yet raised. It alleged possession on receipt of the rents in some of the defendants; and that they had possession of some of the deeds; and that they had given notice to tenants not to pay rent to the plaintiff, and threatened to distrain; it alleged that the trustee of the term refused to assign it to the plaintiff. It prayed, among other things, a declaration that under certain of the instruments the plaintiff was entitled to the estates; and that on payment of the money to be raised by the term, by him, he was entitled to a surrender or assignment of the term:—Held, that there was an equity for that relief, if for no more, and the bill was not therefore demurrable. Saunders v. Richardson, 2 Drew. 128; 18 Jur. 714.

TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN.

THAMES.

Piers.] 1. Where there is some convenience afforded to the public, the conservators of the Thames have, subject to the sanction of the Board of Admiralty, such a right to erect piers or landing-places at such points and in such manner as they think fit, that their discretion is conclusive on the question of nuisance to the navigation; and the Court cannot restrain them upon any ground arising out of the balance of convenience and inconvenience. Att.-Gen. v. Thames (Conservators), Brewery Co. v. Same, Clothworkers' Co. v. Same, Thornton v. Same, 8 Jur., N. S., 1203; 11 W. R. 163.

The requirements of s. 62 of the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 133, under which the conservators, when they obstruct any free public stairs, are bound to erect others in their stead, is a condition subsequent, and the Court will not restrain the obstruction of the public stairs until other stairs are constructed. Ib.

The conservators having a right to obstruct the stairs in the first place, the remedy, if afterwards they do not erect others equally convenient, is by mandamus. Ib.

The Court, distinguishing the right of access to a public right of way itself, will restrain the conservators from depriving any person, having a right of access to the river from his own land, of such access. Ib.

But if such access is merely hindered by the impediment which the conservators' works cause to all persons navigating the river, the Court will not interfere, although the land-owners may suffer substantial damage thereby. Ib.

2. Under the Thames Conservancy Act 1857, the conservators of the Thames were empowered to erect piers at any convenient place, of such form and construction as they should deem advantageous to the public, and causing the least obstruction to the navigation. The plans were to be first approved by the Admiralty:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere by injunction at the suit of the attorney-general, on the ground of the alleged inconvenience of proposed piers, or, at most, that it could only interfere where it was shown that the piers would be entirely useless. Att.-Gen. v. Thames (Conservators), 1 Hem. & M. 1; 1 N. R. 121.

The statute directed, that, whenever the conservators should remove or obstruct the free use and enjoyment of any public stairs or landing-places marked by the Waterman's Company, they should erect equally convenient stairs or landing-places in substitution for them:—Held, that the substitution of new stairs or landing-places was not a condition precedent to the removal or disturbance, and that where the conservators had prepared plans for piers which would interfere with such old stairs without showing any adequate provision in substitution for them, the Court would not assume that the duty would be neglected, and would not interfere at the suit of the attorney-general to restrain the works until proper substitutes should be provided for the old stairs. Ib.

3. The Temple Pier, erected under a licence from the conservators of the Thames, determinable by seven days' notice, was purchased and managed by a company. The Metropolitan Board of Works, under the provisions of the Thames Embankment Act of 1862 (which incorporates the Lands Clauses Act of 1845, with the additional provision that the word "lands" shall include easements and interests in land, and which gives express power to alter and divert piers), altered and diverted the pier temporarily, to enable them to prosecute the embankment works, yet not so as to interrupt the use thereof; and proposed eventually to build, as nearly as might be at the same spot, a new pier in the place of the old one. The conservators refused to grant any licence to the company with respect to the proposed new pier:—Held, that the Metropolitan Board were not taking or permanently using any land or easement belonging to the company, and consequently were not bound to comply with the terms of the 84th section of the Lands Clauses Act before dealing with the pier in the manner mentioned. Temple Pier Co. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 11 Jur., N. S., 337; 34 L. J., Ch., 262; 13 W. R. 535; 12 L. T., N. S., 369.

4. The city of London by licence granted a company permission to form a floating pier on the Thames, such pier to remain during pleasure, and to take tolls on all passengers landed at the pier. Under the powers conferred upon them by the Thames Embankment Act 1862, the Board of Works took the floating pier from the company, and agreed to pay them a certain sum and to construct a new landing-stage in lieu of the old pier, and to appropriate it in perpetuity to the benefit of the company. The Thames Embankment Act 1868 purported to give validity to this agreement. On a bill by the conservators of the Thames (in whom all the estate of the city of London in the bed, soil, and shores of the river had become vested by the Thames Conservancy Act 1857) to restrain the company from continuing in possession of the landing-stage constructed in lieu of the old pier:—Held, that the company was entitled to the use of the pier only on sufferance, and at the pleasure of the conservators of the Thames; that the Board of Works had no power to convert the licence at pleasure into an irrevocable licence; and that the Act which purported to give a validity to the agreement between the company and the Board of Works did not affect the rights of the conservators of the Thames. Thames (Conservators) v. South Eastern Railway Co., 24 L. T. 246.

Held, also, that their proper remedy was by bill in equity, and not by ejectment. Ib.

Wharf-owners.] 5. A wharf-owner, who has not any special easement or privilege over the bed or soil of the river, but only the common right of passage to his property, has neither an easement over nor a right in land, within the enlarged definition given to that word by the 4th section of the Thames Embankment Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict., c. 93). Macey v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 10 Jur., N. S., 333; 33 L. J., Ch., 377; 12 W. R. 619; 10 L. T., N. S., 66; 3 N. R. 669.

A person so situated, therefore, whose land is not taken, but whose right of passage is injuriously affected by the works authorized by the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 93, has no right to compensation before those works are proceeded with; but, having regard to the provisions of that Act, and of the various Acts incorporated therewith, his right to compensation arises when his damage is completed, and his remedy is under the 68th section of the Lands Clauses Act, or by arbitration alone. Ib.

Where damage is occasioned to a party whose premises are not entered upon, but are injuriously affected by the exercise of the powers given by the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 93, and for which damage compensation is required to be made, the payment, ascertaining, or depositing of the amount of compensation is not a condition precedent to the commencement of the works which occasion the damage. Ib.

1. The owner of a wharf and warehouse on the north bank of the Thames, projecting into the river for forty feet, and thereby having a west as well as a south frontage on the river, was accustomed to moor barges on the west side of his wharf, and to load them from openings in the side of his warehouse. The conservators of the Thames gave to the owners of the adjoining wharf, on the north-west side of the plaintiff's wharf, a licence to construct an embankment which would cut off his immediate access to the river on his west frontage:—Held, that by the Thames Conservancy Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 147, s. 53, the conservators appointed under that Act have a power to grant a licence to a riparian proprietor to make an embankment in front of his own land abutting on the river; but though such licence might be the owner's justification so far as the public right of navigation was concerned, it would not authorize a licensee, being a riparian owner, to embank in front of his own land so as injuriously to affect the land of another riparian owner. Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 35 L. T., N. S., 569; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 662. Reversing 10 L. R., Ch., 679; 33 L. T., N. S., 146; 44 L. J., Ch., 747, and affirming 44 L. J., Ch., 408; 23 W. R. 689; 32 L. T., N. S., 479.

The power granted to the conservators under 20 & 21 Vict., c. 147, s. 53, is qualified and restricted by the provisions of s. 179. Ib.

Purpresture.] 2. On an information of the attorney-general, at the relation of an individual, and a bill by the relator, the Lord Chancellor granted an injunction ex parte, on affidavits, to restrain a purpresture in the river Thames, and it appearing that there had been no previous writ of ad quod damnum, and that an indictment in the King's Bench was depending against the defendants for the same act, Lord Chancellor refused to dissolve the injunction before the trial of the indictment, notwithstanding there were some affidavits on the part of defendants, stating that the act complained of was beneficial to the navigation; it was also held, that it was immaterial to whom the soil belonged, it not being competent either to the Crown or to a subject, to use it for any purpose amounting to a nuisance. Att.-Gen. v. Johnson, 2 Wils. 87.

Licences.] 3. No play can lawfully be acted for hire, gain, or reward, within twenty miles of London, without the authority of letters patent from the king, or of a licence from the lord chamberlain; and no such letters patent, or licence, can be granted so as to authorize the performance of plays at any place except within the city or liberties of Westminster, or where the king may happen to reside. An agreement, therefore, for a partnership in acting plays at a theatre situate within twenty miles of London, but not within the city or liberties of Westminster, or in the place of the king's residence, is one to which the Court will not give effect. Erving v. Osbaldeston, 2 Myl. & C. 53; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 161; 1 Jur. 60.

4. The Court refused to seal a patent for representing Italian operas, because the provisions for carrying it on were by agreement with the lord chamberlain, his executors and administrators, and the right to the patent was not sufficiently connected with the property in the house. Not sufficient for the party applying merely to answer objections, but he must lay a proper case. Upon such application the Court will take care that the king is not deceived, or his object disappointed, and will represent the whole to the king, but will not decide upon the merits of the various claimants. Essential to the complaint of an old market against a new one set up near it, that the old is competent in the accommodation of the public; so here the old proprietors must be able to keep it up properly, the accommodation of the public being the principal thing. Earp. O'Reilly, 1 Ves. J. 112.

5. By the 26 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 1, the Crown was authorised to grant letters patent for establishing and keeping a theatre in Dublin; and, by s. 2, it was enacted that no person should, for hire, act any play in any theatre in Dublin, except in such theatre as should be so established by letters patent, under the penalty of forfeiting 300*l.* for every such offence, to be sued for by the common informer. Under this statute, the Crown granted letters patent to H., authorising him, during a certain time, to keep a theatre in Dublin, and his Majesty prohibited and forbid all persons whatsoever during the term that they presume to keep open, in any manner, any theatre in Dublin, and therein to act any play, unless they should be thereunto authorised by His Majesty:—Held, that the patentee could not maintain a bill for an injunction to restrain unauthorised persons acting plays in a theatre in Dublin, for the keeping of which no patent had been granted. Such a bill can only be maintained upon the ground of interest in the plaintiff; and unless he can sustain an action in the case, the injunction cannot be supported. Calcraft v. West, 2 J. & L. 123; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

Bowes and Stalls.] 6. W., in 1816, became, under an order of the Court, purchaser of the Opera House, and was in possession as equitable owner until possession was delivered to

C. in 1821. No assignment of the terms of years for which the premises were held was made to W., but the same were vested in T., who, in 1821, on behalf of and by the direction of W., assigned the terms to C. (who was mortgagee of the premises), but "subject to the right of possession of W., his executors, etc., to the box numbered 124, usually occupied by him, or his or their nominees, not exceeding in number six persons nightly, during the remainder of the several terms granted by the indenture, and of the terms covenanted by the indenture to be granted." In 1823 W. assigned his leasehold or other interest in the Opera House and other property to H. W., in trust for the benefit of his creditors, and he, as such trustee, or his solicitor, received the rents and profits of the opera box numbered 124, to 1838, and his solicitor continued to receive the rents to 1850. In 1823 C. filed a bill for specific performance of the contract of 1821, and in 1829 a decree was made to that effect, and it declared that he was entitled to the leasehold premises of the Opera House, to the rents, and to a renewal at the cost of W. C., from 1821 to 1845, paid the rents of the box to, or permitted the same to be received by, H. W. or his solicitor, by virtue of the reservation in the assignment of 1821. In 1845 the assignees of C. sold the Opera House to L. for the residue of the terms subsisting by virtue of the covenants for renewal in the indenture of 1821. In the contract for sale the indenture of 1821 was noticed, and it was provided that it should be subject to such rights to boxes as the premises were then subject to. A renewed lease was granted in 1845. L., from 1845 to 1850, paid the rents of the box to the solicitor of H. W., or persons claiming under him; but since 1850 he had refused to pay any rent for such box. In 1855 the plaintiff was appointed a new trustee under the deed of assignment by E. W. of 1823. By the renewed lease of 1845 L. was restrained from disposing of boxes for more than one year, except forty-one boxes, to be selected within five years, which he was at liberty to dispose of at pleasure, but after that period provision was made for his acquiring, with the assent of the lessors, the right of disposing of other boxes. In May 1856 L. assigned the lease of 1845 to the defendant, who, as alleged, had notice of the plaintiff's claim to the box. On a bill filed by the plaintiff for a declaration that he was entitled to the box, or to an equivalent in money for the residue of the renewed term of 1845:—Held, by the Vice-Chancellor, that he was entitled to such declaration, and that it was no defence to the bill to say that, inasmuch as the assignee of the lease had disposed of the forty-one boxes, a decree in the terms of the prayer of the bill would, in effect, compel him to dispose of more than forty-one boxes, and therefore render him liable to a forfeiture of the lease:—Held, on appeal (affirming that decision), that the defendant refusing to make compensation in money or otherwise, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought. Helling v. Lumley, 5 Jur., N. S., 301; 28 L. J., Ch., 249. Affirming 4 Jur., N. S., 868; 6 W. R. 758.

1. An owner of a theatre by deed in 1839, for valuable consideration, covenanted to confirm to certain debenture-holders the privilege of free admission to a theatre. A. was entitled as a debenture-holder to the benefits of the deed, but subsequently lost his debenture. Afterwards B. became lessee of the theatre, with notice of the deed:—Held, that A. was not entitled specifically to enforce against B. the privilege of free admission created by the deed. Malone v. Harris, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 33.

2. The lessee of a theatre held it under a lease in which he covenanted not to convert it to any other use than for acting or performing operas or theatrical entertainments. He demised certain boxes and stalls to a sub-lessee, reserving power of access for the purpose of repairing; the sub-lessee covenanted only to use the same for the purpose of viewing and hearing the operas and other entertainments. The underleases contained covenants for quiet enjoyment. The lessee demised the theatre for a term of three months for the purpose of holding religious meetings. To enable three meetings to be held, the stalls were covered with a flooring, the division between the boxes removed, and other temporary structural alterations made:—Held, that a trespass had been committed by the lessee and persons claiming under him in thus entering upon the sub-lessee's boxes and stalls without his licence, and the conversion of the theatre for other than theatrical purposes was a derogation from the grant and a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Leader v. Moody, 44 L. J., Ch., 711; 20 L. R., Eq., 145; 23 W. R. 606; 32 L. T. N. S., 422.

3. Trustees acting for the shareholders or rentallers of a theatre, called the Queen's Theatre and Opera House, who had obtained a feu right to the site, granted in 1858 a disposition of the ground and buildings to one J. B., subject, inter alia, to the burden of a perpetual annuity of 2l. per share to each rentaller of the said Queen's Theatre and Opera House, and to the successors or assignees of them; and it was further declared that each of the said rentallers, or the assignee or successors of such, should at all times be entitled, inter alia, to free admission to the auditorium of the said Queen's Theatre and Opera House; also declaring that J. B. should not convert the said theatre to any other use; and that he should keep it open for performance six months in each year. There was no stipulation as to insurance of the theatre or as to the rebuilding of it in case of destruction by fire or otherwise. In 1865 the theatre was entirely destroyed by fire, and was rebuilt by J. B.'s trustee and called by another name. In 1875 it was again entirely burnt down and again rebuilt. From 1865 to 1879 the theatre, under the new name, was twice sold, but in each case the conveyance was granted subject to the "real burdens, conditions, provisions, declarations, and others," specified in the original disposition of 1858, and especially under the burden of payment of the annuities to the rentallers, and of allowing "these parties the privileges to which they are entitled." The privilege of free admission was enjoyed by the rentallers for fourteen years after the destruction of the first theatre. In 1879 disputes arose as to the validity of the rentallers' right to, inter alia, the privilege of free admission. The trustees maintained that the rentallers were entitled under the disposition of 1858 and the succeeding conveyances to the same privileges in the new theatre which they had in the first :—Held, that the privileges conferred on the rentallors by the original dispositions—other than the payment of the annuities, which was constituted a real burden—rested only on the personal obligation of the original disponent, and were confined to the theatre then in existence, and that the subsequent deeds, to which the rentallors were not parties, were not intended to, and did not, confer on them any new right. Scott v. Howard, 6 L. R., App. Cas (Sc.), 285.

Covenants in Lease of.] 1. A lease of the opera house contained covenants on the part of the lessee, first, not to use the house for any but purposes of a theatrical kind, and "to use his best endeavours to improve" the house for that purpose. The house was closed at the end of the season of 1852, and was not opened at all during the following year :—Held, that this was not a breach of the covenant. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Ca. 672; 4 Jur., N. S., 903; 27 L. J., Q. B., 321; 6 W. R. 523.

A second covenant was, not to grant away, assign, dispose of, etc., the stalls or boxes "for any longer period than one year or season." On the 21st of December 1851, the lessee leased certain boxes for one year, to commence from March 1852. On the 1st of August 1852 he made another lease of the same boxes to a different person, with this habendum, "from the 1st of February now next ensuing, or from such subsequent day during the year upon which the theatre shall be opened, and thenceforth for the full term of one year, to be computed from that day" :—Held, that this was not a breach of the covenant. Id.

And a third covenant was, "not to charge nor incumber the theatre, or the income thereof, or the terms hereby granted, by mortgaging the same, or granting any rent-charges, or any other incumbrance whatever." The lessee was greatly in debt. In respect of his debts, he granted warrants of attorney, one of which was to secure payment of bills not due, and another provided that it was a concurrent security, with an indenture therein recited, that judgment was to be entered up when the grantee thought fit, and to be registered. Judgments were signed against him on those warrants of attorney, and upon judges' orders, and registered :—Held, that no breach of this covenant had been committed. Id.

Contract with Dramatic Author.] 2. Contract with the proprietors of a theatre not to write dramatic pieces for any other, legal; as similar restraint of a performer would be; not resembling a covenant restraining trade generally. Morris v. Coleman, 18 Ves. 437.

Covenant restraining trade within particular limits, or partners from carrying on the same trade for their private benefit, legal. Id.

Other Cases.] 3. The Court will entertain a bill to compel partners to act according to the provisions of instruments into which they have entered; and where it will interfere for that purpose, will take care that the decree shall not be defeated by anything done in the meantime. Thus, where, in 1812, the then proprietors of Covent Garden Theatre executed a deed, by which they covenanted and agreed that the profits of the theatre should be exclusively appropriated to particular purposes, and that the treasurer for the time being should be irrevocably directed so to apply the profits; and in 1822, parties then entitled, under the former proprietors, to seven-eighths of the theatre, entered into an agreement, which provided, in some respects, for a different application of the profits, and otherwise affected the rights of a party interested in the remaining eighth, who was not consulted on the subject; the Court, upon a bill filed by that party, for the specific performance of the covenants and agreements contained in the deed of 1812, appointed a receiver. Const v. Harris, T. & R. 496.
